JANUARY OIL PRODUCTION FIGURES--The decline in crude oil production and export in the country has been attributed to the worsening condition of the world oil market. A statement issued by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation said that crude oil production for the month of January amounted to 54,387,595 barrels while the amount of oil exported during the month was 45,390,617 barrels. The figures represented an average daily production rate of 1.75 barrels [as heard] with that of export at 1.46 million barrels compared to the preceding month. The statement added that while a decrease of 2 percent in production and 8 percent in export was recorded, the posted prices for the Nigerian crude oil remained constant throughout the month under review. FALKLAND'S NEGOTIATIONS URGED--Nigeria has urged the British and Argentine governments to enter into a negotiation aimed at resolving their long standing dispute over the Falkland Islands. In a statement issued in Lagos yesterday, the government advised that care must be taken in the negotiation for the interest of the inhabitants of the island, including their right to determine their own future. It pointed out that Nigeria gives full support to the UN Security Council resolutions which among other things, called for a negotiated settlement of the matter in dispute. Successive Nigerian governments, the statement added, have attached the greatest importance to the United Nations organization and in particular its resolutions which aim at peaceful resolutions of crises. SEMINAR HELD IN DAR ES SALAAM ON PALESTINE PROBLEM

Salim's Opening Speech

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Daniel Mshana]

[Text] THE international community has been called upon to support the struggle of the Palestinian people for the sake of global justice, peace anu security.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Ndugu Salim Ahmed Salim said this yesterday morning when opening a one-day seminar at the University of Dar es Salaam seeking to enlighten Tanzanians on the problem of Palestine.

He said international efforts in support of this objective were indispensable and within each state lies the task of sensitising and mobilising public opinion towards that important goal.

However, Ndugu Salim noted, that the seminar was taking place at a time when there was a dramatic escalation of the provocative and repressive policies of the Israeli occupationist authorities in the West Bank.

This latest development coupled with earlier illegal measures of Israel to annex the Syrian Golan Heights as well as other measures calculated to consolidate Israeli occupation of the Arab lands, were illustrative of the real danger to peace and security in the Middle East, Ndugu Salim said.

He said the Palestinian people have not only been denied their inalienable right to self-determination, but they have been uprooted from their homeland, dispossessed of their lands and properties, and rendered refugees living in abject poverty and squalor.

"There was time when attempts were made to deny the fact of their very existence as people, like the chilling remarks of the late Prime Minister of Israel, Mrs. Golda Meir who asked: "Who were the Palestinians?", Ndugu Salim pointed out.

He said the formation of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) in 1964 had been a turning point for Palestinians because through their resistance, they have effectively preserved their identity as people and made the world to recognise them.

Ndugu Salim told the seminar participants that in consideration of the Middle East and Palestinian questions, two parallel developments merit particular mention.

First, the actions and policies of Israel. The annexation of the Golan Heights like the unilateral move to annex Arab Jerusalem represent Israel's policies of outright expansionism in total violation of United Nations decisions and international law.

The UN has rightly condemned these actions, but clearly a more firm international, response to meet this challenge was required.

The other development, Ndugu Salim said, was the evolution of the Palestinian people's struggle. In the aftermath of the 1967 and 1973 wars, the PLO had developed into an authentic liberation movement and succeeded in gaining major diplomatic victories, he added.

He explained that the successes of the Palestinian resistance has been a source of great inspiration to the national liberation movements in Africa.

But the solidarity that prevails between PLO and the African liberation movements also emanated from the knowledge that there existed a mounting collaboration between Pretoria and Tel Aviv.

Final Session

[Excerpt]

THE seminar seeking to enlighten Tanzanians on the problem of Palestine ended in Dar es Salaam last night with a call on African countries which broke diplomatic relations with Israel to cut the commercial ties as well.

In one of the resolutions, the seminar said progressive countries should stop all kinds of contact with Israel as a necessary and logical demonstration of disapproval to Israel's actions.

The seminar also saluted the Palestinians in the "occupied territory" for resisting Israeli repression, denounced the regime for killing defenceless civilians inside and outside Israel. The United States, in particular, and western Europe in general were condemned for supporting Israel and condoning its crimes against the opinion of the international community.

The seminar reaffirmed its "total support to the Palestinian Liberation Organisation (PLO), as the legitimate representative of people of Palestine and their aspirations — the cardinal one being the establishment of an independent state in their home land".

During the debate, an 85-year old man narrated how the Israeli nation evolved from the blues and condemned the US for being responsible for crimes committed by Israel against the Palestinians.

Ndugu Aristotle P. Matis, once a member of parliament for Arusha, said he was born and grew up in Palestine before coming to Tanzania.

He said he witnessed Jews first coming to Palestine, claiming they were coming back to their historical homeland. The movement, he said, was "very ruthless in character and had American support from the very start".

The US should shoulder all the blame for injustices and suffering of the Palestinians who, he said, were reduced to animals by Jews who established Israel in 1948. "Who are the Palestinians in Israel? They are nothing completely. They are treated like animals, like beasts".

People who had never witnessed injustices, and crimes committed by Israel to Palestinians, he said, could hardly understand what he was talking about.

He dismissed as "rubbish" claims that Palestine historically belonged to Jews, saying he was in Palestine when the view was being propagated.

"God made only one meeting to allocate Palestine to the Jews and forgot the rest of us! Where did he meet them?" he asked amidst cheers.

Jews, he explained, have a religion "that knows and favours them only".

A representative of Beirut-based Centre for Palestine Studies, Ndugu Samir Geries, said Palestine was for 13 centuries under muslim rule — first Arabs and later Turkish — and Jewish settlements were allowed by Ottoman Turks in the past century.

Supporting Ndugu Matis, Ndugu Geries said if transitory occupation of Israel by Jews was to give them a "historic right" to that country, "then it may be urgued that the Arabs, who occupied Spain continuously for 800 years, could claim that country, while the Italians could claim the British Isles and the Red Indians demand the withdrawal from the Americas of all those who settled in the western hemisphere and now call themselves Americans, Canadians and Latin Americans.

If all nations were to adopt the strange zionist logic, the world would be in utter chaos; and the present international system would be shaken from its very foundations", he said.

POWER SUPPLY IN MWANZA TO 'IMPROVE CONSIDERABLY'

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 30 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Nestas Kageuka]

[Text] POWER supply is to improve considerably in Mwanza town in the coming few days following the rehabilitation of one of the three generators which broke down at the Nyakato power plant, Deputy Minister for Water and Energy, Ndugu Edgar Maokola Majogo said in Mwanza yesterday.

He told reporters after he visited the Nyakato power plant as well as the one at Mwanza town, that he had been assured by the two foreign technicians rehabilitating the three generators that one of them would be ready by the end of this month.

The Deputy Minister said that once the generator was completed, it was anticipated that Mwanza town power supply would return to normal and people would be able to get their supply without interruptions.

He said that the repaired generator would increase power supply in the town to about eight megawatts, almost enough to meet the town's demand. At present power supply stands at five megawatts forcing TANESCO to ration electricity to industries and domestic use.

Ndugu Maokola Majogo who is on a routine tour of the ministry's projects in the region said that the rehabilitation of other two generators would continue until all of them were completed.

After completion of the repairs, he added, work would start on rebuilding the foundations of the generators to avoid future breakdowns.

Meanwhile, authorities in Mwanza region will meet soon with industrialists to consider when the various industries here including the Mwanza Textile Mill would resume working following the completion of the repairs.

A number of industries were forced to close down, sending their workers on compulsory and unpaid leave after the breakdown of the three generators at the Nyakato power station early this year.

DISTRICTS TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR RUNNING DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 30 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] THE re-establishment of district authorities is aimed at widening the decentralisation policy from regional to district levels.

This was said in Dar es Salaam yesterday at a press conference by the Deputy Principal Secretary in the Prime Minister's Office responsible for Local Government and Co-operatives, Ndugu J.O. Max.

He said under the new decentralisation policy all districts would be responsible for the running of development activities, which include health services, education, revenue collection and development planning.

At present all the planning and funding of districts are done by Regional Development Directors.

Ndugu Max said there would be 80 district authorities to be headed by the District Executive Directors.

He said the Prime Minister's Office last December conducted a one-month course at the Mzumbe Institute of Development Management (IDM) in Morogoro to prepare the prospective directors. The course was attended by 120 participants.

He said most of the participants to the course were the present District Development Directors (DDD's). However only 80 out of the 120 participants would be selected regardless of one's previous background.

He also said 60 prospective district treasurers were attending a two-month course at IDM and that another batch of 60 would be admitted after this course.

Ndugu Max said the treasurers will be fully equipped with the District Council Financial Memorandum to enable them to keep clean books of accounts.

He said a similar course with different syllabi would be conducted for district planning officers.

On press reports that regional and district development offices would cease to exist, Ndugu Max said "it is not true that the RDD offices will close down, but those of the DDDs will. However, the RDD offices will have nothing to do with the operations of the district authorities."

MAX SAYS BILLS FOR REESTABLISHMENT OF COOPERATIVES TO BE TABLED

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text] THE re-establishment of co-operative societies will go hand-in-hand with the formation of a new corporation to handle auditing, supervision and inspection of books of accounts of co-operative societies, it was announced in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

The Deputy Principal Secretary in the Prime Minister's Office, Ndugu John Max told pressmen that bills for the re-establishment of co-operative societies and for the formation of the "co-operative audit and supervision corporation" would be tabled before the National Assembly which begins its seating in Dodoma on April 20.

Alongside with the two bills, the Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal, will table a bill seeking to amend the Tanzania Rural Development Bank Act of 1971 in order to allow co-operative societies and unions subscribe for shares of the bank, Ndugu Max said.

The co-operative societies act would repeal and replace the Co-operative Societies Act of 1968 to make better and more comprehensive provisions with regard to the establishment, constitution and functioning of the co-operative societies in conformity with the government's decision to strengthen co-operatives, he said.

Ndugu Max said the bill introduces a new section which provides for the act to apply throughout the country — it presently applies only to Tanzania Mainland.

The objectives of co-operative societies contained in the proposed act are; to accelerate the building of socialism, to foster the development of co-operative farming, to satisfy the cultural needs of their members and to improve the material living conditions of their members.

Ndugu Max said under the new structure of co-operatives, the act would provide for three levels of co-operative societies which would be formed. These are; the primary society, the co-operative union and the federation of co-operative unions.

It is envisaged under the act that a primary society might be formed for a village where it is economically viable, otherwise it may be formed for two or more villages.

A co-operative union may be formed for a region and where it is economically viable, for a district or districts, Ndugu Max said.

Functions of secondary societies (co-operative unions) include; the marketing of agricultural products or natural products, the distribution of agricultural inputs to primary societies, the provision of finance for the purchase of agricultural products, the operation of services for the transportation of agricultural products and other commodities.

The deputy principal secretary said among functions of the "apex organisation" (federation of co-operative unions (Washirika) include to provide, organise and supervise effective centralised services for the co-operative movement and for co-operative education and training and in particular the co-ordination of economic plans for member societies.

Other functions of Washirika would be to ensure efficiency and uniformity on the conduct of the business of its member societies, to carry on, encourage and assist in educational and advisory work relating to co-operative enterprise, to reduce operating costs by arranging group bonding of co-operative society employees and also to provide consultative services to member societies.

Ndugu Max said various types of co-operative societies can be formed. These include societies for rural development, industrial co-operative societies — covering artisans, craftsmen's and contracting societies, co-operative societies for producers of natural products as well as building constructions and housing societies — savings and credit societies and consumer societies.

NBC TO STREAMLINE FOREIGN BRANCH IN DAR ES SALAAM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 29 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

THE National Bank of Commerce (NBC) will streamline its Foreign Branch in Dar es Salaam, involving the opening up of foreign sections at all other NBC branches in the city in order to serve the customer better.

A statement issued over the weekend by the NBC Chairman and Managing Director, Ndugu Amon Nsekela, said the move would take effect from April 1, this year.

He said effective from the date, outward mail transfers and drafts would be issued directly at all NBC branches in the city and not necessarily the Foreign Branch.

These, he added, would be processed at a branch where the respective customer maintains an account.

However, the signatures on these payment instruments will continue to be verified at the Directorate of International Operations.

Telegraphic transfers will continue to be routed through the Foreign Branch where test keys are centralised with the exception of a few which are maintained at other branches.

Ndugu Nsekela also said that encashment of travellers' cheques would immediately be handled at the customer's branch while effective from April 8, processing of letters of credit would be handled at Masdo House and Clock Tower Branches.

He added that by June 1, Bank House and City Drive branches were expected to start processing letters of credit for their own customers.

He said all accounts with less than 40 per cent business content should have been transferred out of the Foreign Branch by July 1 while suitable a place was being sought for an extension of the Foreign Branch to deal with external accounts.

The move is part of the Bank's broader exercise to decentralise its services in a bid to improve operations.

TANZANIA, MOZAMBIQUE APPROVE TECHNICAL COOPERATION PROGRAM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Tanzania and Mozambique yesterday reviewed the 1981/82 implementation report and approved the 1982/83 programme of action for economic and technical cooperation as provided by the Permanent Joint Commission for Co-operation.

In a joint communique issued in the city at the end of the session, the two sides agreed to stress on development of balanced trade, as well as increase in technical co-operation in the fields of health, education, agriculture, natural resources and ministry.

This is particularly true with the drawing up of a concrete programme of action for 1982/83 in various sectors in accordance with the capabilities of both countries, the communique said. This was observed as an outcome of the accumulated experiences in the bilateral cooperation since the formation of the joint commission.

The communique said after the two sides reviewed the progress achieved in various areas of co-operation, they noted the positive implementation of all decisions adopted during the sixth session held in Maputo in March last year, adding, however, that much more could have been achieved in some areas.

The joint Commission covers trade, industry, finance, transport, communications, public works and agriculture.

Others are natural resources, education, health, information and culture, livestock, diplomatic and consular affairs.

The meeting agreed that the eighth session of the commission be held in Mozambique in the first quarter of 1983.

Members of the 12-man Mozambican delegation leave Dar es Salaam this morning for a three-day tour of the northern tourist circuit and a visit of small scale industries and the General Tyre Company in Arusha. They return to Dar es Salaam on Friday.

EDUCATION REVIEW COMMISSION SUBMITS REPORT TO NYERERE

[Text] The Presidential Education Review Commission yesterday submitted its final report to President Nyerere in Dar es Salaam, calling for major changes in the country's educational system during the next 20 years.

The report, compiled into two volumes with a total of 504 pages, is a result of 17 months of intensive research by the Commission which was appointed in November 1980 to review the country's education and recommend a future education programme for the country.

The report, submitted to Mwalimu at his Msasani residence calls for a new structure starting 1985. The proposed structure envisages six years of primary education, three years and two years of first and second phase Ordinary Level secondary education respectively, two years of Advanced Level secondary education and three years in institutions of higher learning.

According to the Commission, the present education set-up which involves seven years of primary education, four years of Ordinary Level secondary education, two years of Advanced Level secondary education and three years of University training, left much to be desired.

The commission felt that the current system which has been in force since independence in 1961, did not take into account various intervening programmes in the country's education system, such as a year of military training in national service camps, two years of working prior to joining higher learning institutions and in other cases one year of internship programmes.

The Commission which was headed by the Minister for Minerals, Ndugu Jackson Makweta, has proposed that the provision in the Musoma Resolution requiring Form Six leavers to work for two years prior to joining higher learning institutions, be scrapped off.

It said students who would qualify to join higher learning institutions but fail to do so within two years time, would be deemed to have forfeited their right.

The Commission proposed that such students would only be allowed to join the institutions upon passing special examinations prepared by respective institutions.

On university education, the Commission has proposed that the University of Dar es Salaam be expanded to enable it have an annual student enrolment of 10,000 from the present in-take at slightly over 2,000 students a year.

It has recommended that the Faculty of Agriculture, Forestry and Veterinary Science of the University of Dar es Salaam, be made an independent university as soon as possible.

It called upon the Government to establish a training hospital for the University of Dar es Salaam's Faculty of Medicine.

The Commission also called for the introduction of University Studies by Correspondence (USC) which would be conducted under the aegis of one of the country's universities.

The Commission further recommended that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare in collaboration with the Ministry of Health should prepare a programme for the introduction of day-care centres in the country.

The Ministry of National Education, the Commission said, should prepare a comprehensive curriculum for the centres and formulate plans for the training of the teachers.

On ways to reduce the burden on the government in meeting education costs, the Commission recommended that in future students at all levels, should pay for their stationery, board, food and travel expenses. The government, it said, should only meet tuition expenses.

It recommended that students in institutions of higher learning, who would not be able to meet the expenses, should get loans from the Government, payable upon completion of their courses.

The Commission toured all Mainland regions to seek views of education officers and members of the public.

The Commission also visited several countries in Africa, Europe and Asia where they discussed structures and systems of education in those countries.

The 13-member Commission, was split up into four working committees education expansion; curriculum development and evaluation; administrative structure and recruitment; welfare and remuneration of teachers.

The commission members also split into three working group which reviewed educational systems in Africa, Europe and the Far East. [as published]

At yesterday's ceremony, Ndugu Makweta told Mwalimu that the Commission's work attracted great response and expectation. It is made up of "ideas from the people and every word we have used in formulating these recommendations has been very carefully considered".

The report, however, has only been printed but it is yet to be adopted as a government document, Ndugu Makweta said.

MBEYA DEVELOPMENT BODY ENDORSES EXPANSION OF MUNICIPALITY

[Excerpt]

THE Mbeya Regional Development Committee has endorsed recommendations for an 87 per cent expansion of the area of the municipality to allow for a 20-year development plan for the town.

The recommendations to be sent to the Prime Minister's Office for authorisation note that the municipality areas will be extended by 81 square kilometres bringing the total area to 175 square kilometres.

Areas recommended for inclusion in the municipality are Uyole Itenzi and Salanga villages, the western side of the Uyole Agricultural Centre, Iwambi West, and Loleza mountains to the north.

The expansion will provide for 30,000 residential plots bringing the total number of plots to 62,300 in the area according to Shihata reports.

In a heated debate over the expansion, the Mbeya Rural Member of Parliament, Ndugu Patrick Sina said if the municipality has failed to care for existing boundaries how could it care for the expanded ones.

The Chairman of the Committee, Ndugu Kingunge Ngombale Mwiru said although the municipality has failed to care for existing boundaries, it is essential to expand so as to make room for future development projects.

He said that over and above the increase in industries the working force would also be increased from 101,000 to 300,000.

Ndugu Ngombale Mwiru who is also the Regional Commissioner warned officers in the municipality against greedy tendencies particularly over the new villages being included in the township.

LINKS BETWEEN EXTENSION, RESEARCH FARM SERVICES TO RESUME

Lusaka DAILY NEWS in English 29 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Tanzania intends to re-introduce links between extension and research agricultural services disrupted during the decentralisation exercise in the mid-70s, Agriculture Minister John Machunda has said.

Professor Machunda was speaking in Dar es Salaam at the week-end, during discussions with an Indian agricultural scientist, Dr. M. S. Swaminathan.

He said the re-organisation reflected the Government's awareness that professionalism in the agricultural sector should be given high priority for increased production.

The Minister pointed out that under-investment in agriculture had contributed to Tanzania's food problems. "Ours is an agricultural oriented economy and by under investing we can't expect our economy to advance," he added.

The Indian researcher who arrived last Saturday for a four-day visit as a guest of the Government said India's years of experience showed that a sound research programme was necessary to sustain a dynamic agricultural production.

Dr Swaminathan gave a public lecture at the Institute of Finance Management in Dar es Salaam yesterday on "Strategy for Agricultural Development."

He leaves for Morogoro Region today where he will visit the Ilonga Agricultural Research Station at Kilosa and the Faculty of Agriculture and Forestry of the University of Dar es Salaam.

Before returning to India on Wednesday, Dr Swaminathan is expected to pay courtesy calls on President Nyerere and Prime Minister Cleopa Msuya.

SURVEY SHOWS MANY POULTRY RAISERS 'BARELY SURVIVING'

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 28 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Emma Faraji and Patrick Mwanukuzi]

[Text] DAR ES SALAAM poultry keepers are finding the going rather tough in the face of acute chicken feed shortfalls over the past one year, and some have already abandoned the business.

A two-week survey by the Sunday News has shown that many seasoned poultry keepers are barely surviving, with egg production having fallen by as much as 50 per cent because of poor-quality chicken feed.

According to informed sources, the problem apparently stems from difficulties in obtaining vital ingredients like fishmeal by the National Milling Corporation (NMC) which commands 99.9 per cent of the chicken feed market in the country.

NMC Animal Feed Manager F. Shoo told this newspaper that 1981 was the worst in the country's animal feed production, forcing prices of raw fishmeal to rise from 7/25 to 60/- per kilo within one year.

Still, the supply of the commodity was hard to come by, and the NMC's traditional supply centres in Kigoma and Mwanza were last year supplying the corporation only 100 tons a month instead of the required 400 tons.

As a result, NMC resorted to alternative feed ingredients like amino-acid composites, but with serious repercussions on hatchability.

Ndugu S.A. Somji, for instance, said during the survey that hatchability at his Mbezi beach farm was down to 25 per cent instead of the usual 80 to 85 per cent.

According to Ndugu Somji, 1,000 layer birds could normally produce between 650 to 700 eggs a day, but production was now down to a mere 250 eggs a day.

A seasoned poultry keeper, Ndugu John Kasidi, has said meanwhile that he was finding it rather difficult to maintain his 5,000 layer birds which now laid only 1,000 eggs instead of the 10,000 eggs he usually got in good years.

Ndugu Kasidi, who entered the business in 1961 in Malya, is now in Dar es Salaam. He said the parent stock and layers both required a regulated and consistent feed formula.

Many poultry keepers interviewed felt that producing their own feed would prove rather costly, and said this would subsequently push up consumer prices even further.

But, the National Agricultural and Food Corporation, which runs a chick farm at Kigamboni in Dar es Salaam plans to establish its own feed plant to meet its needs.

Chick Farm Manager M. Munubi said during the survey that the feed production unit would give some 3,000 tons of feed a year — which is just enough to run the farm at optimum production.

He said the farm was now experiencing difficulties in getting sufficient feed, as a result of which both broilers and layers at the farm were not getting the required complete meal for fattening them — either for meat or egg production.

Ndugu Munubi said egg production at the farm was down by 50 per cent, and feared that the situation was particularly bad for smaller poultry keepers who could easily be crowded out of business.

Private chicken feed formulators, however, seem to have found a way out of the crisis, and are churning out what they believe to be "required formula".

One such dealer, Micky Ndalu, has said he produced about 50 bags of complete feed a day from a formula developed for him by a veterinary science expert, and later checked in Dar es Salaam laboratories.

He said it was not always easy to get the ingredients, but added he always maintained a "complete meal" formula from, among other things, fishmeal, simsim and sunflower oil seed cake, premixes (including minerals and vitamins) and maize grain. He declined further details on his formulation.

NMC uses, among other ingredients, vitamins, trace-minerals, maize grain, fish-meal and one of the oil seed cakes (cotton, simsim or sun-flower).

In another development, a sampled survey has revealed that egg and chicken consumers are having to pay more and more for the commodities.

A tray of eggs which sold for 65/- only last December is now fetching between 90/- and 110/-. This compares badly with prices in the last two years, at a mere 30/- a tray.

Hoteliers are hardest hit with the consumer price increases. Some of them have had to cut back on dishes requiring eggs.

The New Africa Hotel in the city is now paying some 100/- a tray, up from 60/- a few months ago. Hotel Manager F. Shao says the hotel required a minimum of 120 trays a day, and it has had to cut back on dishes that require egg ingredients.

Agip Motel, which usually buys chicken meat, has equally been affected by poor egg and broiler production. The hotel which normally bought 250 kilos of meat a day is now having to put up with between 150 to 200 kilos.

Efforts to get adequate supply and demand statistics from the Ministry of Livestock Development over the period proved fruitless. A livestock Development Ministry official incharge of the poultry section, Ndugu M.R. Mgema, said actual figures were hard to come by as the ministry was still making an attempt to compile them — using the 1973 records of the defunct "Wafugaji wa Kuku Co-operative (WAKUKO) as a base.

However, a promotion manager with the Tanzania Livestock and Poultry Farmers Association (Sauti ya Wafugaji Tanzania) has said efforts were in hand to compile a census of keepers, layers and broilers and the country's demand for eggs and broilers.

TIPER RESUMES FUEL OIL PRODUCTION AFTER THREE-MONTH STOPPAGE

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text] The Tanzanian and Italian Petroleum Refining Company Limited (TIPER) last Saturday resumed production of fuel oils after a three-month stoppage occasioned by major maintenance work conducted on the refining installations.

Normal maintenance on the installations takes 40-50 days, and this is done every 18 months. But this year two main furnaces had to be reconstructed and the work took slightly longer than usual, according to TIPER Managing Director, Mr V. Cognigni.

He explained that the furnaces had been running for 16 years and the pipe materials had naturally burnt out and were in need of replacement.

Mr. Cognigni assured fuel oil clients, mainly industries and large ships holders, that supplies would now be flowing as normal.

TIPER has plans to produce some 600-700 metric tonnes of fuel oil per day this year, which works out to a total production of 171,400 metric tonnes per year.

Countrywide fuel oil demand for this year is estimated at 164,400 metric tonnes. The surplus from TIPER is normally exported.

The quantity of fuel oil produced by the refinery is largely dependent on the type of crude oil being processed at any given time as the residue percentages vary from one type of crude to another.

Efforts to get the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation (TPDC) officials yesterday proved fruitless.

TPDC are responsible for the distrubution of fuel oils and other petroleum products for the country and several firms in Dar es Salaam have claimed that they had incurred losses due to fuel oil shortages.

According to earlier press reports, the Friendship Textile Mills (URAFIKI), for instance, had by last week lost some 7.5 million/- due to lack of fuel oil to power their boilers.

Other industries which reportedly suffered production cut-backs were the Tanganyika Dyeing and Weaving Mills (SUNGURATEX) of Pugu Road in Dar es Salaam; Aluminium Africa; the Tanga Steel Rolling Mills; the Wazo Hill cement plant in Dar es Salaam; the Mwanza Textile Mills (MWATEX) and General Tyre (East Africa) Limited of Arusha.

MSUYA INAUGURATES JAPANESE-BUILT BRIDGE IN DAR ES SALAAM

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 21 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

PRIME Minister Cleopa Msuya yesterday inaugurated an ultra-modern 65m/- Selander Bridge along Bagamoyo Road in Dar es Salaam.

The Bridge was constructed one month ahead of schedule by a Japanese construction firm Kajima. The bridge is to ease traffic flow to and from the city centre.

Works Minister Samwel Sitta describe the bridge as yet another technological feat from which the country's construction industrian draw useful lessons.

Speaking before Ndugu Msuya formally cut the tape signalling the opening of the bridge, Ndugu Sitta said the Government had learnt a lot from the Japanese experts who have constructed the four carriageway bridge.

He said most of the lessons learnt involved work and financial procudures. "It is the intention of my ministry to investigate further on what we have learnt from this project, and propose to the Government on what we could emulate," he added.

The minister said that Kajima had offered some of its construction equipment to the Tanzania Government in addition to others which the government had bought.

The equipment include a pile driver, asphalt paver, two rollers a crane as well as a crusher. An asphalt plant and a generator have been bought by the government, he said.

Ndugu Sitta expressed hope that the newly acquired equipment would contribute a lot to the strengthening of the country's construction capacity, especially in modernising Dar es Salaam roads.

He said the construction of the new bridge was part of efforts to ease congestion in Dar es Salaam roads. Other completed projects include the Port Access and Pugu Road projects.

Ndugu Sitta said although the Port-Pugu Road projects had eased traffic congestion, there was need to expand Bagamoyo and Morogoro roads to further smoothen traffic in the city.

However, he said this would depend on the state of the country's economy. He commended outside donors for their assistance towards modernisation of the country's efforts to modernise her roads.

The 75.75-metre bridge, built on reiforced concrete, is supported by sideway pillers (abutments) and rests on a foundation made of iron pipes pressed deep into the soil for between 22 and 29 metres. It can safely bear traffic of 45-ton vehicles, the Minister said.

The major parts of the bridge were completed in September and traffic started flowing smoothly on the four-lane dual carriageway.

Last month Ndugu Sitta said the Ministry and the Japanese firm were considering possibilities of assigning local technicians trained on site some follow-up projects of a smaller magnitude, though no specific projects had been identified.

However, it had been agreed that two engineers from Kajima would remain behind to assist the local technicians in the initial stages of working on a follow-up project.

The Japanese Ambassador to Tanzania Mitsuo Asaba said at the ceremony that the project had added a new phase in the history of Tanzania's development. "The traffic development has a political and economic significance," he said.

He praised Tanzanian workers who worked with Japanese technicians saying that their eagerness to learn enabled completion of the project without accidents.

Others who attended the ceremony included the President of Kajima Corporation R. Ishikawa, Senior Managing Director of Nippon Koei, K. Nakamura — whose firm supervised the project — Tanzania's Ambassador to Japan, Ndugu Hassan Diria and the Mayor of Dar es Salaam, Ndugu Ramadhan Nyamka.

SUBMERGING OF MAZIWI ISLAND ELIMINATES TURTLE NESTING SITE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Daniel Mshana]

[Text]

THE most important nesting site for turtles in East Africa, tiny Maziwi island, north of Pangani town in Tanga region, has been submerged in water, marine researchers said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Two research officers with the Tanzania Fisheries Institute, Ndugu Jimmy Yonazi and Ndugu B.A.S. Mwamoto told the Daily News that reports that the island was no longer visible reached the Fisheries Directorate in Dar es Salaam late last year.

The two researchers subsequently dispatched there to ascertain the reports, found the former island totally encroached.

Furthermore, the researchers could not trace any turtle nests and the people along the Pangani coastline confirmed they no longer observed turtle activities along the beaches.

Ndugu Mwamoto said that although there was virtually no statistics on which to quantify the turtle population in former Maziwi island, its disappearance has robbed the country the most important single nest ground in East Africa.

He said the research work done by a marine expert Mr. J. Frezier in 1974 revealed three species as resident breeders on the island: the oliver ridley (lepidochelys olivaces) which actually had no reported nesting area along the East African waters other than the Maziwi. The green turtle (chelonia mydas) had almost half of its entire East African population nesting on the island while the hawksbill (eretmochelys imbricata) was estimated to constitute half of its entire family on the island.

Ndugu Mwamoto explained that Tanzania has lost a lot following the submerging of the island.

He said the turtles are locally farmed for their edible meat. On the average, a mature green turtle may produce 100 kilogrammes of flesh steak which if sold at the current price of beef steak would fetch some 3,500/-.

Furthermore, the average turtle shell at the local tourist market may sell at 3,000/- implying that a single turtle would be worth about 6,000/-.

The researchers argued that Tanzania could have easily realised 6,000,000/- annually from sale of 1,000 turtles.

This monetary value was in addition to the tourist attraction that the turtles have in marine reserves, hence good source of foreign exchange. Some turtle products are said to contain curative properties, they added.

They said the disappearance of Maziwi was a process of more than two years, and should raise experts to study the present beach erosion along the Kunduchi Beach Hotel, Africana Village Hotel, the Rungwe Oceanic Hotel and other significant islands in the Tanzania coastal waters such as Pemba and Zanzibar. No human being was living on the former Maziwi island, which was run by the Fisheries Division of the Ministry of Natural Resources and Tourism.

GOVERNMENT APPROVES DISCONNECTION OF TELEPHONES OF TPTC DEBTORS

[Excerpt]

THE government has sanctioned the disconnection of telephones to indebted customers of the Tanzania Posts and Telecommunications Corporation (TPTC).

The Minister for Communications and Transport Ndugu John Malecela told Shihata in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the move was aimed at recovering 145m/- owed to TPTC by customers embracing government departments, public organisations and individuals.

An official of TPTC later told the Daily News that the amount represented outstanding bills for the past 10 months alone.

But according to the Shihata dispatch, Ndugu Malecela said TPTC might be forced to reallocate its services to potential customers now on the waiting list if bills for disconnected services would not have been paid by April 30.

Customers would further face possible prosecution in case of default. The move would also cover diplomatic missions and international organisations based in the country, the dispatch said.

The official refused to disclose the names of TPTC's big debtors because of what he called "customer confidentiality".

However, TPTC had two types of arrangements for telephone bills payment — the composite account system and the individual account scheme, he explained.

Under the composite system, an organisation elected to settle invoices for its various telephone installations as one account and disconnection followed non-payment of bills for two consecutive months of charging, he explained.

Most government departments and a few organisations, he said, were under this arrangement. Their combined areas was 48m/- he revealed.

The balance of 97m/- was owed under the individual account scheme, he said, adding that some public organisations had rang up TPTC headquarters asking to be spared from the mass disconnections, "but the question is: Until when?"

Ndugu Malecela directed TPTC to make sure that all telephone bills were in future settled within the prescribed time.

NBC TO BE RESTRUCTURED IN NEXT FISCAL YEAR

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text]

THE organisational set-up of the National Bank of Commerce (NBC) will be restructured in the next financial year (1982/83) following several decentralisation measures recently endorsed by its Board of Directors to improve the bank's services.

The measures include the establishment of two more directorates at the head office and the setting up of "area offices" to take over the authority and decisions hitherto vested into the head office.

A statement issued by the NBC Chairman and Managing Director, Ndugu Amon Nsekela in Dar es Salaam yesterday, said the bank's present organisational structure had become obsolete in view of the rapid growth of the bank, and had led to the deterioration of discipline, efficiency, honesty, promptness, accuracy and cleanliness.

The new directorates to be established at the head office will be for corporate services and for executive office. Each will be headed by a director.

The director of corporate services would take charge of the bank's buildings and works matters, maintenance and administrative services and printing and central stationery stores while the director of the executive office would be in charge of the central secretariat, public relations, and organisation and systems departments.

Under the decentralisation measures, NBC will be divided into six banking areas (area offices), each under an assistant general manager with jurisdiction over a number of administrative regions headed by regional managers, Ndugu Nsekela said.

The areas are: Nyanza area (Mara, Kagera and Mwanza regions) headquartered at Mwanza; northern area (Singida, Arusha and Kilimanjaro regions) — Arusha; central area (Kigoma, Tabora, Dodoma and Shinyanga regions) — Tabora; southern highlands area, (Iringa, Mbeya and Rukwa regions) — Mbeya.

Others are: Southern area (Mtwara, Lindi and Ruvuma regions) — Mtwara; and the eastern area headquartered at Kibaha, covering Tanga, Morogoro, and Coast regions and the NBC branch in Zanzibar as well as all branches in Dar es Salaam Region apart from the big five branches in the city.

The five big branches in the city will report anything above their powers directly to the general manager or an appropriate director at the head office, Ndugu Nsekela said.

The NBC managing director said in his statement that several functions including inspection, internal audit, fraud investigation, manpower development and corporate services would be decentralised to the area offices to enable the bank respond responsibly to its mission, objectives and policies.

He said with the establishment of area offices and appointment of assistant general managers for the area offices, board area committees — answerable to the board of directors — would be established.

Ndugu Nsekela said the essence of decentralising the NBC was to increase the scope for management development and mobility, maximise efficiency and to give to each assistant general manager in the area offices command of his area without jeopardising the purpose and integrity of the NBC as a whole.

To that end, he said, the Board had instructed that a firm of local consultants, working with the bank's organisations and systems department, be commissioned to recommend appropriate effective management controls to check the performance of decentralised units and advise the Board.

INTERMITTENT STOPPAGES CAUSE LOSSES FOR TANGA CEMENT PLANT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 16 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text]

INTERMITTENT stoppages have incurred the Tanga Cement factory losses amounting to some 102 million/-, an equivalent 83,200 tonnes of forgone production since the beginning of this year.

The 800 million/- plant which is now undergoing repairs has had to stop production thrice since January, and yesterday recorded the 52nd day of stoppage since then.

The factory's General Manager, Ndugu Jesper Blou told the Daily News in a telephone interview from Tanga yesterday that the plant would, however, resume production sometime next week.

He said the factory had been on and off due, partly to power failure and mechanical breakdowns.

The plant was first stopped on January 22, this year, for almost 40 days to allow technicians to relay bricks in the kiln.

The relaying of the bricks covered 24 metres of the kiln, he said, adding that the bricks got worn out fast because of temperature fluctuations following power failures

Ndugu Blou said that the plant was switched off again on March 1 only to close a few hours later.

The kiln was started yet again on March 3, and operated for three days only. Since then, the plant has been idle, he explained.

Ndugu Blou said technicians were also repairing a seal between the kiln and the smoke chamber. The work is expected to be ready by next week.

The General Manager said efforts were, however, being made by both the Tanzania Electric Supply Company Limited (TANESCO) and his factory to find a permanent solution to power failures.

In September last year, the plant was paralyzed for over two weeks for lack of dynamites used in quarries. The material is imported.

The plant, which serves mainly Arusha, Singida, Kilimanjaro, Lindi and Mtwara regions, started commercial production in December, 1980.

TPCC TO INCREASE PRODUCTION FOLLOWING KILN REPAIR

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text]

THE Tanzania Portland Cement Company (TPCC) plans to raise output to more than 300,000 tonnes this year following major overhauls to kiln number two.

TPCC General Manager, J. Rwoga, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the projected rise in output was much higher than that recorded last year when the company produced 247,500 tonnes.

Ndugu Rwoga said kiln number two, which had ground to a halt last March, became operational last month with assistance from the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA).

Major modifications of the kiln, involving replacement of 11 out of its 49 metres and repair on the raw and cement mills, were undertaken.

As a result, the General Manager explained, all the three kilns were now operating, but not at full capacity to give the kilns longer life.

Kiln Number One had a rated capacity of 110,000 tons a year while Kiln Number Two was rated at 160,000 tonnes, Kiln Number Three was rated at 250,000 tons per annum, he said.

Ndugu Rwoga pointed out that the three kilns would operate at rated capacities based on daily clinker supplies of 350 tonnes, 500 and 800 tonnes, and operate 300 days in a year.

He said that it was always considered more economical to produce less than rated capacity for the plant to have a longer life.

Between July and February, this year, TPCC had produced 173,000 tonnes, of cement compared to 151,000 produced during the same period, last year.

The General Manager said his firm set a target of producing 148,000 tonnes of cement between July and December last year but managed to reach an output of 134,400 tonnes.

This represented 91 per cent of the target or 78 per cent of the rated capacities of phases one and three which were operational during that time.

Ndugu Rwoga said TPCC had set a target of 350,000 tonnes this year (July, 1981 and June, 1982). The target was 67 per cent of the rated capacity of all the three kilns, that is 520,000 tonnes.

However, he said there were signs of failing to achieve the target. On account of inadequate supplies of gypsum from Makanya and Mkomazi mines and due to necessary repairs to be carried out on phases one and three in the near future.

Ndugu Rwoga said that TPCC is in the process of re-laying the bricks (refractories) in kilns One and Three and it would take about three weeks on each kiln.

The stoppage of the kilns while relaying refractories would reduce TPCC's production by about 25,000 tonnes. The first consignment of the refractories has arrived while the rest are expected soon from West Germany.

He also pointed out that inadequate supplies of gypsum, led to fluctuation in the cement production starting last month when supplies of the materials dropped from 1,000 tonnes daily to 600 tonnes.

On cement pricing, Ndugu Rwoga said effective November 7, last year, the Price Commissioner had introduced a new price structure with TPCC and Tanga Cement selling their product to Saruji Trucking Company at an ex-factory price of 655/- per tonne and 1,093/- per tonne respectively.

The Saruji Trucking Company in turn sold the cement to Regional Trading Companies and government projects at 1,217/- per tonne and 1,354/- retail.

Ndugu Rwoga explained that this mean TPCC and Tanga Cement Factory sold cement directly to the customers on behalf of the Saruji Trucking Company. The difference in prices offered by TPCC and Tanga plant were worked out on the basis of freight equalisation, he added.

TPCC supplies cement to all regions except Kilimanjaro, Arusha, Singida regions which are supplied from Tanga, Mtwara and Lindi regions are mostly supplied with cement coming from Mozambique.

MINISTER URGES PUBLIC ENTERPRISE MANAGERS TO MINIMIZE COSTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

MANAGERS of the country's public enterprises have been urged to minimise construction costs, and choose appropriate technology to help solve Tanzania's economic problems, Finance Minister Amir Jamal said yesterday.

Addressing members of the Finance Management Association of the Faculty of Commerce and Management at the University of Dar es Salaam yesterday, Ndugu Jamal noted that inadequate or faulty planning had cost the country much, and would continue doing so if the managers were not committed in this regard.

"I regret to say that public enterprise managers have shown a great deal to insensitivity towards the question of construction costs and towards the securing of appropriate technology", he said.

The Minister explained that the various areas of production and distribution in the country could be helped or hindered depending on how far the departments or organs concerned displayed insight and understanding of the underlying productive forces.

"I do not include in the category of productive forces, those gentlemen, and perhaps ladies as well, who move in prestigious vehicles with impressive briefcases containing papers", Ndugu Jamal said.

He added: "I have in mind the two-wheel cart pusher, or the mechanic on his bicycle with the tool-kit behind on the carrier, or the man with the pick-up doing a hundred odd jobs in a week".

The Minister cautioned that none of the latter "and thousands more in the villages", should be frustrated in any way. "Government's regulating departments have an overriding obligation to ensure that everything is done to enable them produce the utmost they can", he added.

The Minister told the association's members that Tanzania had serious economic problems including a growing recurrent account deficit which could level at three billion shillings at the end of this financial year.

"Next year, it threatens to be higher still, because our revenues are not increasing proportionate to our costs of running various services as was the case for the first 17 years of our independence", he said.

Ndugu Jamal outlined the tasks ahead of Tanzanians for economic survival and recovery. They include:

- Reduction of all operating and administrative costs in each organisation. He said the aim is to give a good price to the grower, economic prices to the consumer and to build up adequate reserve.
- Allocation of the meagre resources available to remove
- Closing down temporarily those activities which cannot be sustained because of non-availability of inputs so that the limited available resources could be chanelled to the more critically needed production of essential goods and services.
- The need for comprehensive scrutiny of all government recurrent expenditure to ensure that it remained "more or less static in real terms", and
- Breaking the vicious circle the country is caught in. "It will only be broken when we produce more than we consume and invest the saving thus made in equipping ourselves for even greater production".

SOCIAL WELFARE OFFICIAL SAYS LAWS ON DESTITUTES MUST BE REVIEWED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

PARTY and government leaders should draw programmes to educate beggars and discourage them from flocking into towns.

Assistant Commissioner for Social Welfare in the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, Ndugu M. Ndaka said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the beggar problem has remained unsolved because township rules on destitutes established many years ago were not effectively implemented.

For instance, he cited cap. 105 empowered town and city councils to make by-laws to rehabilitate the disabled persons, but, he added, "nothing was done about it."

This law, he explained also empowered regional and district authorities to round up the beggars in towns and send them to their villages to work with their fellow villagers.

However, Ndugu Ndaka said it was high time the laws on destitutes were reviewed. He said that it was unfortunate that the problem of beggars was left to the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare alone.

The Ministry, he said, was responsible for the disabled beggars who needed assistance but the able ones were under the towns or city councils' jurisdiction.

The Commissioner called for cooperation from public institutions, regional, district and village authorities in rehabilitating the beggars.

In Dar es Salaam, he said, some 80 beggars were rounded up in January this year and repatriated to their homes in Singida, Dodoma, Shinyanga, Mwanza and Tabora.

The number shot up to 125 last month, twenty of whom were children. These, Ndugu Ndaka said were also sent back home.

Beggars were expected to be rounded up yesterday evening and sent to their homes by rail today at 6 p.m. Ndugu Ndaka said yesterday that arrangements to send the beggars home had been finalised adding: "We will round them up this evening, (yesterday) and send them by rail tomorrow" (today).

MSUYA URGES USE OF EXPERTS IN PLANNING VILLAGE, FARMS' EXPANSION

[Excerpt]

THE Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, yesterday directed district and regional Party and government leaders to seriously involve agricultural experts in planning the expansion of villages' communal farms and setting of yield targets to ensure that increased acreage went at par with increased yield per acre.

Ndugu Msuya said this at the start of his three-day official visit of Coast Region, when he addressed CCM and village leaders of Marumbo and Kitonga villages in Kisarawe District at two separate meetings during his tour of the villages.

He said that although the peasants had responded positively to the call to boost their farming and plant crops which were suitable in their respective areas, there was a danger that their efforts to increase acreage would be wasteful, if the farms were not cultivated in accordance with agricultural expertise.

Ndugu Msuya said that the district and regional authorities should mobilize all agricultural experts who were now attached to the district and regional develpment directorates, the crop authorities and village managers who were agriculturalists towards that goal.

The Prime Minister said that agricultural experts should be able to advise the villagers on suitable crops for a given land, the best seeds and its proper storage, better ways of planting, fertilizers and to be able to estimated the target of the yield per given acre.

He said that the second phase in Tanzania's agricultural production efforts should be to adopt expertised agriculture to ensure that the efforts of the peasants were not spent on nothing.

The Prime Minister, who commended the two villages for their efforts to re-double their agricultural activities, warned that it would be useless to increase the acreage of their farms while the yield per acre remained stagnant or went down.

Citing the United States and Japan from which Tanzania has been importing foodstuff for sometime now, Ndugu Msuya said that these countries managed to "feed us" not because they cultivated large chunks of land but "because they have managed to increase their yield per acreage due to application of agricultural expertise".

At Marumbo and Kitonga villages the Prime Minister, who was accompanied by the Coast Regional CCM Chairman, Ndugu Masudi Fikirini Mtandika; the Regional Commissioner, Ndugu Moses Nnauye and the Minister for Justice, Ndugu Julie Manning, was shown cassava, orange, and coconut farms.

CROP AUTHORITIES EXPLORING WAYS TO REDUCE OVERHEAD COSTS

[Article by Habib Nyundo]

[Text]

CROP authorities are exploring ways to reduce their overhead costs in response to President Nyerere's call to pay peasants at least 60 per cent of export earnings.

This has been revealed in Dar es Salaam by the Economic Advisor to the President, Professor S.M. Mbilinyi.

Ndugu Mbilinyi told Shihata at the weekend that the President's call meant that crop authorities had to cut their running costs and increase efficiency.

He said some of the authorities were already engaged in "self-examination" to identify possible areas in which costs could be reduced. He cited the Tanzania Cotton Authority (TCA) as having gone a step forward in that respect.

During his recent tour of Mbeya Region, Mwalimu directed crop authorities to reduce their running costs so as to pay more money to the growers.

The President advised the authorities to set aside at least 60 per cent of the world market proceeds from crops for payment to peasants.

Professor Mbilinyi however pointed out that the cost-reduction exercise by the crop authorities would begin in earnest only after work on updating the books of accounts of the authorities was 'completed.

"The Ministries of Agriculture and Finance are co-ordinating efforts to update these books which are well behind schedule", he said.

On how producer prices are fixed, Ndugu Mbilinyi said the Marketing Development Bureau (MDB) of the Planning Division in the Ministry of Agriculture considers, in the case of food crops, the costings of the producer and that of the parastatal concerned.

It also reviews the prevailing local market situation and its prospects as well as considering the world market prices for the crops and the index of the standard of living in the country.

He said the MDB submits its report to the Minister for Agriculture who, with the Price Commission, prepares a paper to be presented to the Economic Committee of the Cabinet for final approval.

On export crops, the MDB focuses its attention on the world market prices and their trends. It scrutinises handling costs of crop parastatals and those of the producer and gauges the reaction of the producer with previous prices.

The Minister for Agriculture, Professor J.B. Machunda, has said the President's directive to the crop parastatals would be used as a yardstick to measure their marketing efficiency.

He conceded that there was a wide gap between producer prices and export prices, but emphasised that it was his Ministry's policy to maximize producer prices and cut overhead costs.

As part of the policy, Ndugu Machunda said, all direct costs involving extension staff under the crop authorities would be paid by the Ministry from next financial year.

Informed sources in the Ministry of Agriculture later explained that in an effort to reduce over head costs, the crop parastatals would review their staff position, transport, storage and processing facilities. Possible measures would include lay-offs, the sources added.

MSUYA SAYS GOVERNMENT AIMS TO BUILD STRATEGIC FOOD RESERVES

[Excerpt]

THE Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, yesterday said Tanzania's agricultural production should be made more stable in order to prevent food shortages.

Food crops production in the country is still 'fragile', he noted, adding this led to shortages in the vent of bad weather.

He was addressing bishops who met yesterday at the St. Joseph Cathedral Parish Hall in Dar es Salaam to discuss the contribution of the Church in fighting the current food shortage in the country.

The Premier explained that lack of a systematic method of cultivating crops suitable for a particular area over successive season, shortage of basic farm implements and non-utilisation of modern farming techniques led to fragile agricultural production.

Tanzania's farming should have a firm and stable base so that the country's peasants were not at the mercy of violent weather changes, he said.

The country should go for irrigation both at large and small scale so that the available arable land was fully utilised, the Premier said.

He said the present shortage of food was made serious by the failure of some of the erstwhile self-sufficient villages to feed themselves.

The country had, as a result, to procure and distribute food to such areas whereas in the past food was only bought by the National Milling Corporation (NMC) for distribution in urban areas and in institutions.

The number of those who depended on food distributed by the NMC had increased, he explained.

The Prime Minister said, for example, that food had to be sent to Dodoma Rural District between now and the harvesting period. In Kondoa, about 25 per cent of the people in the district depend on marketed food.

In Mpwapwa District, food was being needed for 35 per cent of the residents, he said.

Ndugu Msuya said that Tanzania had to prevent post-harvest losses and improve transport so that more food was available for the people. He said the Government's objective was to build strategic food reserves to store food harvested in the bountiful seasons for use when the harvest was bad.

He asked the bishops to assist villages around church agricultural projects so that they too improved their farming.

Inviting the Prime Minister, The Tanzania Episcopal Council Chairman, Bishop Mario Mgulunde, said the Church had various agricultural projects in a number of regions in the country.

These are at Tabora (cassava farming), at Rulenge, Mtwara, Musoma and Dodoma (irrigation), at Njombe (modern livestock keeping).

Ndugu Mgulunde asked for government permission for the Church to build storage facilities in villages and strategic areas, and to purchase food from the growers and the NMC for distribution to those in need of it.

They also asked the Government to allow them to install grinding mills in villages and urban areas where the people needed them. Permission was also sought for the distribution of food from anywhere in the country to areas hit by the current shortage.

TANZANIA, USSR ISSUE COMMUNIQUE CONDEMNING PRETORIA

[Article by Daniel Mshana]

[Excerpt] Tanzania and the Soviet Union have called for concerted political and economic pressure by progressive forces the world over to force Pretoria regime to accept a just settlement of the Namibian independence question.

A communique issued in Dar es Salaam yesterday at the end of a week-long visit to Tanzania by a five-man delegation of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR expressed the two countries' unflinching support to the Namibian people under SWAPO's leadership in their struggle against racist Pretoria's illegal occupation of their country.

The two sides called for the imposition of comprehensive sanctions against Pretoria and intensification of political pressure against the regime and its patrons.

The Soviet Parliamentary delegation, headed by a Vice-President of the Presidium of the Soviet Union, Ndugu Ivan P. Kalin, highly appreciated the prominent role played by Tanzania in the liberation struggles in southern Africa and in the Non-Aligned Movement, the communique said.

The Soviet and Tanzanian parliamentarians also stated in the communique their resolute support to the just struggle in the world against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism, and called for the equitable restructuring of the lopsided international economic relations.

On bilateral relations, the two sides noted with satisfaction the development of Soviet-Tanzanian relations in the political, cultural and economic spheres.

The communique said the two sides agreed to expand the existing ties between the USSR Supreme Soviet and the Tanzania National Assembly as an important factor in cementing the Tanzania-Soviet relations.

The Soviet parliamentarians, the communique said, expressed appreciation over Tanzania's efforts in strengthening the national economy, education and health protection.

The Tanzanian parliamentarians also noted with appreciation the Soviet Union's contribution to the consolidation of world peace and its invaluable assistance to the southern African liberation struggle.

The delegation which arrived in the country on March 12 visited Dar es Salaam, Kilimanjaro and Arusha regions.

They also met President Nyerere and Premier Cleopa Msuya.

The delegation's talks with Mwalimu touched on various world issues, Africa and the liberations struggle in southern Africa.

According to a State House statement, the leader of the delegation, Ndugu Ivan Kalin, delivered a special message to Mwalimu from the President of the Soviet Presidium, Ndugu Leonid Brezhnev.

RICE HARVEST TERMED 'MAJOR STEP' TOWARD FOOD SELF-SUFFICIENCY

[Article by Paul Chintowa]

[Excerpt] The 260 million/- Dakawa Rice Irrigation Project in Morogoro Region is expected to yield between 6,000 and 7,000 tonnes of paddy during the 1981/82 season, the Project Manager, Ndugu Moses Kisugite, said over the weekend.

Ndugu Kisugite said the project, launched ten years ago, has a target of producing more than 14,000 tonnes of rice in the long run.

He was briefing the visiting Vice-Premier of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ndugu Kong Jin Tae, who toured the 2,000 hectare farm and the proposed site of the Agricultural Institute for the Non-Aligned Countries in East, Central and Southern Africa.

The National Agricultural and Food Corporation (NAFCO) which owns the farm was able to cultivate only half of the farm area this season, he said.

Ndugu Kisugite said the harvest, the first since the project took off in 1975, was a major step toward the country's goal of self-sufficiency in food. He attributed the success to the strong cooperation between the people of Tanzania and the DPRK.

He told the Vice-Premier that NAFCO was now putting final touches to the farm's rice mill which, on completion, would be able to mill more than five tonnes of paddy per hour.

He said the project was launched in 1975 through technical assistance from the DPRK after a countrywide survey for a suitable paddy farming area.

The project which is now being supervised by a team of British experts is financed by the World Bank, the African Development Bank (ADB), the Tanzania Investment Bank (TIB) and the Tanzania Government and is the country's largest farm after the Mbarali state farm in Mbeya Region.

CATA PROPOSES TEMPORARY CLOSURE OF SOME PROCESSING PLANTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 16 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] The Cashewnut Authority of Tanzania (CATA) has proposed the temporary closure of some of its processing factories and run others at half capacity in order to minimise an expected loss of 98 million/- in its operations this year.

The proposal, drawn by an emergency board meeting in Dar es Salaam recently has been sent to the Ministry of Agriculture for consideration, a CATA official said in Mtwara over the weekend.

The official, Ndugu E.G. Moyo, informed a recent meeting of the Regional Development Committee (RDC) at Masasi that the proposals stemmed from a shortfall in the crop and world market trends this season.

He said the authority expected to purchase 69,600 tonnes of raw cashew from peasants but field reports showed that only about 40,000 tonnes would be obtained at the end of the season.

Ndugu Moyo told the meeting that besides the shortfall, the price of processed cashew had fallen by almost 34 percent and that of cashew kernel oil by 40 percent against last year's prices while the price of unprocessed cashews had raised.

According to Ndugu Moyo, CATA would export 36,000 tonnes of unprocessed cashews in a move to reduce the expected 98 million/- loss to about 65 million/-.

CATA has processing factories in Mtwara, Lindi, Coast and Dar es Salaam regions. Those considered for temporary closure are Masasi and Newala in Mtwara and Nachingwea in Lindi. The rest were to operate on a single shift from March 1 this year.

[Text] The Capital Development Authority (CDA) has proposed the establishment of a new forum of contribution towards the development of the proposed new capital, Dodoma.

The forum--Dodoma Development Association--will mobilise commerce, industry, churches, associations, institutions and individuals to contribute to the growth of the capital designate.

The Minister of State in the President's Office, Ndugu George Kahama, said in a statement released in Dodoma over the weekend that the government has contributed substantially to the first stages of the development of Dodoma and so had CDA succeeded in attracting other funds for complementary development.

However, Ndugu Kahama noted that the building of a city was an enterprise so big and so diverse that the government and its agencies alone could not undertake to provide all the elements that go to make up the city.

Later, addressing a congregation of prominent businessmen, bankers, contractors, public corporations and private companies, leaders and religious organisations, Ndugu Kahama invited ideas for development of private and community projects.

He said as a major new initiative, CDA would shortly embark on a plan geared to set up companies with the participation of governmental agencies and the private sector to build shops, offices and housing.

It is envisaged that there will be a group of companies which will also be involved in hotels, cinemas and other developments designed to enhance the way of life of people in Dodoma and neighbouring areas.

EXPERTS CLAIM TRADITIONAL DRUGS EFFECTIVE SNAKE BITE REMEDIES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Daniel Mshana]

[Text] A research team of local experts has revealed that traditional drugs were more effective in curing snake bites than modern medicine.

According to an official of the Ministry of Information and Culture, Ndugu Daniel Ndagala, preparation was underway to collect the various types of botanical plants and tree-barks which produce the valuable snake-bite antidotes and make them available to all district and regional dispensaries for administering to victims of snake bites.

Ndugu Ndagala said that since 1977 the Ministry's Research Unit embarked on an intensive research of different types of snakes, their environment and habitat, food and anti-poison traditional medicinal compounds.

He said the team has scientifically proved that snakes are not dangerous reptiles as hitherto imagined by the general public. They can be easily caught and domesticated, while numerous traditional medicines have been "discovered" for rapid cure of snake infected wounds.

Ndugu Ndagala told the Daily News that the Ministry was prompted to conduct the research following reports that many lives and productive capacities of peasants in rural villages were threatened and curtailed by the presence of venemous snakes.

He said tribesmen in Mwanza and Tabora regions were particularly useful to the researchers because they had harnessed their traditional methods of healing snake-bites, and had even grasped techniques on performing snake dancing.

He said for example that one traditional practitioner, Daudi Mponeja had valuable knowledge in snake medicines and had set up a school at Ukiriguru in Mwanza Rural District for teaching students on traditional doses to administer to people bitten by snakes.

So far, 18 students have "graduated" from his school and were issued with certificates recognised by both the Ministry and the Game Division.

Ndugu Ndagala said the research has helped the Ministry enlist all local preventive drugs for snake-bites, the traditional vaccination methods, and other vomiting and bathing douches applied on the victims.

He said at the moment the researchers had no funds and appealed to the Ministry of Health to rescue them by injecting some funds into their Unit for the purpose of finalising the last phase of the project.

NYERERE MAKES 8-DAY WORKING TOUR OF DODOMA REGION

President's Itinerary

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] Party Chairman Mwalimu Nyerere yesterday inspected construction work on an annex to the Party headquarters building here at the start of an eight-day working tour of Dodoma Region.

He flew to Dodoma yesterday afternoon from Dar es Salaam to a hearty welcome by Party and Government leaders led by Prime Minister Cleopa Msuya who arrived from Dar es Salaam earlier.

The extension work on which started in April 1978 would house the offices of the Party Chairman, Vice-Chairman and the Secretary General. There will also be a conference hall and a literary.

Briefing Mwalimu, the Capital Development Authority (CDA) Director of Architecture and Housing, Ndugu William Feruzi, said the conference hall would seat 150 people and the library would have capacity for 50,000 volumes and a reading room for 50 people.

The extension is being built by the Wajenzi corporation Sole under the Ministry of Works. Ndugu Feruzi said the work would be completed in October this year.

The annex was designed by a team of CDA architects assisted by designers from Hermano of Mexico. The extension is among Party construction projects being undertaken at this designated Party and Government headquarters.

Mwalimu is this morning scheduled to tour a CCM headquarters staff housing project at Kilimani area south of here.

His itinerary includes an inspection of the capital city water scheme at Kilimani area. He will later drive to Makutupora to inspect vines research projects run by the Dodoma Development Programme (DODEP).

According to a programme issued by the Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu C. Liundi, the Chairman will also tour CDA projects at area "C."

The post-lunch schedule today shows Mwalimu will drive 14 kilometres to Zuzu where CDA has brick, tiles and ceramics plants.

Mwalimu will also tour the Zuzu electric power station which on completion later this year would supply Dodoma with 10 megawatts of power.

The Party Chairman will tomorrow drive to Mpwapwa where he will inspect development undertakings at Songambele village and later address its residents.

While in Mpwapwa, he will visit the Kongwa ranch and address workers there. He is also due to visit Sejeli village to see research work at the pasture research unit.

He will on Wednesday fly to Kondoa District. The programme there includes an inspection of some conservation activities under [word indistinct] Ardhi Dodoma (HADO) and water supply programmes.

Mwalimu will on Wednesday afternoon return to Dodoma where he is due to open a seminar of divisional and ward secretaries at the Christian Council of Tanzania (CCT) conference centre.

On Thursday he will see work on an irrigation scheme at Mchito village in Dodoma Rural District. The Party Chairman will also drive to Mndemu village and later address the Wananchi.

Second Day of Tour

PRESIDENT Nyerere has asked the Capital Development Authority (CDA) to find more ways of reducing the costs of building new houses in the designated Party and Government headquarters at Dodoma.

Mwalimu made the call when he toured projects under the CDA at Mlimwa east and west areas here yesterday on the second day of his week-long tour of this central region.

At Mlimwa west (also known as Area 'C') Mwalimu was shown several completed houses including a set of 40 residential units whose total construction costs including site works and landscapping totalled 350,000/- for each three-bedroom unit.

"You must cut down costs", the President told top CDA officials who were present. The Minister of State in the President's Office, Ndugu George Kahama, was also there.

Mwalimu raised the same call earlier yesterday after inspecting ten houses for CCM headquarters staff at Kilimani Area.

The houses have been completed and are ready for occupancy. They are built of burnt bricks and roofed with Mangalore tiles. They cost a total of 4.3 million shillings.

At Kilimani, Mwalimu called for the increased use of bricks and roofing tiles for building purposes since they were cheaper.

Contractors should equip themselves with the necessary knowledge on contruction with burnt bricks and tiles, he said.

Responding to Mwalimu's remarks at Mlimawa, the CDA Director of Architecture and Housing, Ndugu William Feruzi, said the authority had devised measures aimed at cutting down building costs.

The CDA cost-cutting measures involve supplying building materials to contractors at a controlled price and later working out the charges for other contingencies with them, he explained.

President on Land Fertility

PRESIDENT Nyerere has directed peasants to restore the fertility of the land they worked on and to practise proper crop husbandry.

Addressing residents of Songambele village in Mpwapwa District yesterday, Mwalimu said restoring soil fertility should be a continuous process.

The President explained that agricultural practices that did not involve the application of fertiliser or manure on farms sobbed the soil of its nutrients.

The Party and the Government would never allow such robbery since it denied the country's future generations their base for development. "We can't afford this. Where will our children go?", he asked.

Land whose fertility was not restored was in danger of turning into a desert, he cautioned.

The President attacked those who used land like a mine whereby the miners moved to new ground after exhausting the wealth underground. "If you treat land like a mine you will kill it", he warned.

He gave the example of Iringa Region's Ismani area which was once renowned for maize production but whose soil fertility had waned because of improper agricultural methods.

"Ismani attracted people like a magnet. Those who worked on the land acted as if they were robbers — stealing the fertility without restoring it", he said.

Mwalimu said he had noticed that maize at Songambele village was not properly cultivated and called on the peasants there to improve this.

Mwalimu was also told a sad story on the failure of three ujamaa undertakings at the village allegedly due to bad leadership.

"If I say you have impressed me I'll be a great liar", Mwalimu told the villagers.

He told them to sit down and find out why their projects failed and see how this could be prevented in future.

Tightening of Distribution Network

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] PRESIDENT Nyerere has called for the tightening of the distribution network in the country to ensure that goods did not fall into the hands of racketeers.

Mwalimu pointed out that racketeering thrived because of loopholes in the distribution machinery and lack of recourse to established channels.

He was answering questions from divisional and ward secretaries when he met them at the Christian Council of Tanzania (CCT) Conference hall here at the opening of their three-day seminar.

Racketeering, (Urushaji) was being worsened by the current shortage of goods in the country but it could be wiped out if even the little that was available was equitably distributed, the President said.

"If there is a shortage, the remedy is to be strict on distribution", he said.

Mwalimu said the existing distribution system was the most appropriate one for the country at present. Tanzania was wary of introducing a rationing system through coupons, he added. For "it will give us problems", he added.

A Ward Secretary had complained that urushaji was getting very serious and that in Dodoma a kilogramme of sugar sold at up to 30/- a kilogramme in the racketeers' market. The official price of sugar is 10/-.

On the question of rich-poor economic relations, Mwalimu said there were some rich countries which did not appreciate the problems of the poor.

Such countries were stubborn and did not want to listen to anybody. Mwalimu said that these countries also thought the poverty in the Third World countries was the result of irresponsibility.

"They think we do'nt work, that we don't exert enough efforts" he said.

Mwalimu called on the secretaries to find effective ways of dealing with Party leaders who violate the leadership code.

Hypocritical leaders only good at sloganeering while at the same engaging in private business were dangerous. The should not be allowed to use the Party for their own personal ends, Mwalimu stressed.

The secretaries in the course of the seminar will discuss their specific responsibilities. The seminar ends on Friday.

President on Cattle, Dams

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

President Nyerere has directed peasants in Dodoma Region to train their cattle for farmwork to make cultivation less burdensome.

Addressing peasants of Mundemu village in Dodoma Rural District yesterday, Mwalimu pointed out that animal-drawn ploughs would enable them cultivate larger areas than what is possible by using hand hoes.

Village authorities had told the President that despite having about 3,000 cattle, the animals were not used for farmwork.

"Cattle must be used, they should not merely be looked at", the president said.

Stressing the need to train cattle for farmwork, Mwalimu said peasants in 'all cattle areas of Dodoma Region should utilise the animals fully.

He repeated the message in the afternoon when he addressed Party, government and parastatals leaders at the Mazengo secondary school hall.

He told the leaders that spares for ploughs should be made from locally available resources instead of importing them.

Mwalimu recalled that despite the Siasa Ni Kilimo fever in which stress on the use of animal-drawn ploughs featured, few peasants used oxen ploughs.

"The hand hoe will not bring the desired development", he told the leaders.

At Mundemu, he told the peasants that cattle could cultivate up to one acre (half hectare) a day and thus simplify their work.

"Even if you go to the farm very early in the morning, you can't do much with a hand hoe", he told them.

Tanzanian peasants should be assisted to simplify their work, he stressed. He, however, said since we could not afford the tractor, we must resort to the tools we could easily acquire.

He noted that Tanzania had about 13 million cattle and this wealth should be utilised for agricultural production.

Mwalimu said cattle should be trained to pull ploughs, and this involved flogging them, something the peasants should not hesitate to do.

He wondered why some of the very peasants who beat their wives for failing to cultivate their farms were lenient to cattle.

The President said one could judge the level of development of villages in the country by the extent to which they used cattle for farming.

Before arriving at Mundemu, Mwalimu met experts working on potable water and irrigation projects in Dodoma Region who briefed him on work at the Mchito dam.

The dam would hold 308 million gallons of water for domestic and livestock uses and for irrigation.

The experts, from the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) said they would build new dams and rehabilitate existing ones in various areas in the region.

They said they were ready to build more dams if allowed to.

"I want hundreds of these dams. Let us build dams all over the place", Mwalimu commented.

In his address at Mazengo Secondary School, Mwalimu said development funds in the coming budget would not be spent on new projects but on increasing capacity utilisation in our industries.

Tanzania did not have enough money to spend on new development projects at a time when existing ones had problems which required solutions, he said.

Mwalimu explained that most of our industries were operating under their capacity and other areas were not performing well because of bottlenecks which we should remove.

The president is expected to attend a seminar for villages at Chamwino village today and tomorrow.

MSUYA MAKES ADDRESS BEFORE OPENING SWISS-AIDED TRAINING COMPLEX

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text] Prime Minister Cleopa Msuya has said that in order for the Party programme to provide a technical school to every district by the year 2,000 long term planning should start now.

He was speaking shortly before opening the more than 15 million/- complex for training mechanical artisans at the National Vocational Training Centre in Dar es Salaam yesterday. The complex was built with Swiss government assistance.

The programme envisages to provide every district with a technical school in the coming 20 years.

The role of the people in getting the buildings, Ndugu Msuya said, should be clearly defined now. External donors, voluntary and religious agencies were also invited to join the people and the Government in identifying areas of cooperation.

Ndugu Msuya called on the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare to start right now plans for expanding and strengthening instructor training programmes so that instructors are at hand when the proposed schools take off.

Training of artisans, he said, should be emphasised because it was deliberately overlooked in the past. As a result, he said, plants and machinery in certain areas were out of action or unproductive for lack of artisans to service them.

Between 1976 and 1985 the country should have been producing 5,500 artisans yearly, but has only been able to produce half the required number. The country needs 50,000 artisans during the period, he added.

The Premier said vocational centres were coming up at Moshi and Dodoma with Danish assistance and the Government would provide boarding facilities at Tanga, Mwanza and Dar es Salaam centres.

He thanked foreign donors and called for maximum training of artisans who, he said, were key people in promoting productivity and laying groundwork for scientific and technological takeoff.

The Swiss Ambassador to Tanzania, Mr T. Raeber, said his country was a small country without raw materials, but had developed by emphasizing and relying on highly skilled manpower.

"This was only possible by permanent improvement of the standard of education and training over the centuries. One of the characteristics of this system is the importance attached to practical training over theory," he said.

The complex along Chang'ombe Road has facilities for training instructors and 200 apprentices at a go.

The Acting Director of the Centre, Ndugu A. Athuman, said some 4,835 artisans were trained between 1977/78 and 1980/81; and 4,640 or 96 percent were absorbed by industries for in-plant training. Some 1,211 artisans will complete this type of training during 1981/82, he said.

The Principal, Ndugu S.C. Runzanga, told the Prime Minister that the centre now has 1,035 trainees with 21 disciplines. He said 881 of the trainees were boys and 154 girls.

Donors to the centres include the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), International Labour Organisation (ILO), Swedish Development Agency (SIDA), Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and the Swiss Government.

Tanzania provided 6,925,917/- for setting up of the complex opened yesterday.

MSUYA MAKING FOUR-DAY TOUR OF SINGIDA REGION

Prime Minister's Schedule

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Mwamoyo Hamza]

[Text] The Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, begins a four-day tour of Singida Region today during which he will inspect several development activities.

A rousing welcome awaits Ndugu Msuya on his arrival here this morning.

The Prime Minister will address a mass rally at the Namfua Memorial Stadium in Singida town on Wednesday and will hold talks with Party and Government officials on Thursday.

Ndugu Msuya is also expected to address rallies at Shelui in Iramba District and Mgandu in Manyoni District.

On arrival today the Premier will be briefed on activities in the region. He will later leave for Iramba District where he will inspect cotton farms at Kikonge, Nguvumali and Kibirigi villages.

He will also later visit a cotton plantation run by the Tanzania Cotton Authority (TCA) at Nselembwe before going to Shelui.

The Prime Minister will leave for Manyoni District tomorrow and inspect millet farms at Mukiwa village. He will also inspect a livestock project in Doroto village.

Ndugu Msuya will also tour tobacco, maize and sunflower farms at the Mgandu complex where he will also address the people. He will also inspect a cassava seedling farm at Bangayeta and open a new post office at Manyoni town.

On Wednesday Ndugu Msuya will tour cotton farms at Kantandaa Rural District. He is expected back in Singida town in the afternoon to address a rally at the Namfua Stadium.

The Prime Minister winds up his tour on Thursday by touring a cotton processing plant in Singida town, and holding talks with Party and Government officials.

THE Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya has urged peasants to strive for better yields per unit of land cultivated instead of boasting of many acres which produce precious little.

Ndugu Msuya was addressing residents of Msolembwe village in Iramba District, some 96 kilometres from Singida town, in the first day of his four-day tour of the region yesterday.

The Prime Minister said peasants must embark on modern farming methods to produce ample cash and food crops to enable the country earn foreign exchange and meet the country's food demand.

Ndugu Msuya called on peasants not to be discouraged by bad weather and other hazards like armyworms which had destroyed thousands of acres of food crops in central regions.

A total of 57,000 acres of food crops in Singida Region were attacked by armyworms early this year, causing damage to 22 per cent of the maize, millet, sorghum and rice planted in fields.

Ndugu Msuya renewed the government's call to peasants to grow crops that flourished best in their areas.

The Prime Minister said since 1977, the government had spent a lot of foreign exchange on food imports, making many industries function without enough raw materials.

"If we go on like this, the nation will be spending a lot of money to pay farmers in foreign countries and our industries will continue to manufacture goods below capacity", Ndugu Msuya said.

The Prime Minister who arrived here yesterday morning, inspected cotton farms in Kikonge, Nguvumali, Kibigiri, and Msolembwe villages in the district.

He praised peasants in the villages for their efforts and urged them to tender their farms well and harvest at least 250 kilogrammes of crops from every acre.

At Kibigiri village, Ndugu Msuya was told that lack of enough maize and the armyworm attack had greatly affected food crop cultivation.

In a statement by the residents of Iramba District, the Prime Minister was told that by last February the district had cultivated 138,576 acres of food crops, representing 64.6 per cent of the target.

The district had also cultivated 19,575 acres of cotton and 15,519 acres of sunflower by last February. Ndugu Msuya was also told the weather permitting, the acreage would be increased.

Iramba residents contributed 20,000/- towards construction of regional CCM headquarters at Singida estimated to cost about 3.4m/-.

TANZANIAN leaders and experts have been called upon to maintain closer contacts with people in rural areas by not only making brief visits to villages but staying and working hand-in-hand with peasants in development activities.

The call was made by the Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya when addressing Singida Region Party and Government officials at the end of his four-day tour of the region yesterday.

The Prime Minister noted that of late some leaders and experts had developed the habit of making short visits to villages, resulting in peasants getting minimal expertise in various development activities.

Ndugu Msuya also directed Singida Region officials to ensure that cotton piled up in villages throughout the region was transported to Singida town for processing.

Some 424,350 kilos is piled up in villages because the cotton processing kiln at Singida town was experiencing an acute shortage of power supply.

However, officials of the Tanzania Electric Supply Company (TANESCO) have promised constant power supply to the kiln to facilitate procession of the cotton within this season.

Ndugu Msuya also directed regional officials to chart a long-term programme to improve livestock keeping in the region.

Earlier, the Prime Minister visited the TANESCO power station in the town. He was told that the town experienced power shortage because most equipment at the station were old and some lacked spare parts.

The Prime Minister was told that power demand for domestic and industrial use was 550 kilowatts but at present the station produced only 350 kilowatts.

The Prime Minister returned to Dar es Salaam yesterday.

BRIEFS

FARM IMPLEMENTS SHORTAGE--Mainland regions have been asked by the Ministry of Agriculture to send data on their requirements of agricultural implements and their spare parts to enable the ministry to solve the shortage of the implements currently facing regions. A ministry official, Ndugu M.A. Mangi told Shihata in Sumbawanga that the ministry was until now using data collected during a survey in 1976/78. Ndugu Mangi who is accompanying the Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu John Machunda, on a tour of Rukwa Region, said that the ministry in collaboration with the Ubungo Farm Implements (UFI) was drawing up a programme to import ploughs. He, however, said correct data on the actual requirements for various tools and their spare parts should be obtained from the regions. [Excerpts] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 15 Mar 82 p 3]

ARMS PROBERS TO SUBMIT REPORT--A five-man probe committee appointed by the government early last year to investigate the source of arms used in robberies and other violent crimes in the country is expected to submit its report to the government at the end of this month. In an interview with Shihata in Dar es Salaam yesterday, the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs, Ndugu J.M. Matiko said the committee was however still compiling the report on their investigations. He confirmed that the report would definitely be submitted to the government at the end of this month. The five-man probe committee comprising members from the armed forces and the civilian sector was appointed last year to investigate the source of arms used by criminals with a view to helping the government deal with the situation by cutting off the source. Announcing the formation of the probe committee in Dar es Salaam last year, the Minister for Home Affairs, Brigadier Muhidin Kimario said that since 1975 violent crimes in which firearms were used had increased from 125 in that year to 500 in 1980. He attributed the rise in armed robbery and other violent crimes to the increase in the country's economic difficulties and the fact that "the country had just emerged out of a war situation." The consignment was handed over to the Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu John Machunda, by the Austrian Ambassador to Tanzania, Dr Gregor Woschnagg, at a brief ceremony held in Dar es Salaam. The Minister thanked Austria for the grant which he said would help in alleviating the current food shortage in the country. The consignment arrived at the Dar es Salaam port from Austria last January aboard MV Jitegemee. The agreement for the grant was signed last year under the framework of cooperation between the two countries. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Mar 82 p 3]

UPC DELEGATION'S VISIT--The visiting Uganda People's Congress (UPC) delegation yesterday formally conveyed to Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) the appreciation of UPC members and the Ugandan people at large for Tanzania's contribution in Uganda's liberation war some three years ago. The thanks were conveyed through CCM Chief Executive Secretary Daudi Mwakawago by the UPC Assistant Secretary General, Ndugu Cecilia Ogwal. They were contained in a pamphlet issued after UPC's annual delegates conference last year. "CCM has created a relationship which is very difficult for us to reciprocate and we feel we must do something but are inhibited by our own problems," Ndugu Ogwal told Ndugu Mwakawago at the Dar es Salaam Party headquarters office along Lumumba street. Briefing the delegation on the CCM structure and functions, Ndugu Mwakawago stressed the importance of creating a strong party in order to consolidate unity within the country. He explained how CCM operated as an active mass Party reaching out to the people and giving them the opportunity to be fully aware of its activities at all times. Earlier, Ndugu Ogwal said that work on proposals for constitutional changes in Uganda had already been completed by a selected committee and UPC's endorsement was awaited. She said that the new constitution intends to extend the working structure to the grassroots, adding that the multi-party system would be maintained. The six-member delegation arrived in Dar es Salaam on Wednesday night for a five-day tour to exchange information, experiences and views with members of the CCM headquarters and its affiliated organisations. The team leaves for Dodoma today for a two-day tour during which it will visit the CCM headquarters. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Mar 82 p 1]

SWEDISH GRANT TO TPTC--The Tanzania Posts and Telecommunications Corporation (TPTC) will receive a 19.6m/- grant from the Swedish Government over the next two years to finance various modernisation projects. A bilateral agreement to that effect was recently signed by the Principal Secretary to the Treasury Ndugu Fulgence Kazaura, and the Swedish Ambassador to Tanzania Ndugu David Wirwark. The money will be used in financing fellowships for the network modernisation and maintenance, supplies management projects, and the Telecommunications training centre in Dar es Salaam. TSA FOOD CROP CULTIVATION--The Tanzania Sisal Authority (TSA) intends to cultivate a total of 4,720 hectares of food crops this year, Shihata reports. According to a TSA report released in Dar es Salaam yesterday, some 2,270 hectares will be planted with maize, 250 hectares serena millet, 150 hectares beans and 50 hectares paddy. Another 2,000 hectares will be cultivated by permanent workers at the TSA estates. Each worker will be allocated with at least half an acre. The programme, aimed at providing food for its workers while at the same time encouraging them to grow some of their own, will be undertaken at TSA's five companies. The companies are Mombo, Mgombezi, Kimamba, Morogoro and Muheza sisal companies. [Excerpt] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 23 Mar 82 p 3]

CC ENDS MEETING--The Party Central Committee (CC) ended its one-day meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday after preparing an agenda for the next meeting of the National Executive Committee (NEC), the Party Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago, said in Dar es Salaam last night. The NEC will meet in Dar es Salaam on Monday and Tuesday during which it will assess a CC report on various Party activities. NEC members will also pick parliamentary candidates for vacant seats in Dodoma Urban, Serengeti, Sumbawanga Rural and Iringa Region (national). Ndugu Mwakawago said NEC will also receive and discuss a paper which elucidates on various paragraphs of the Party electoral procedures. INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS ENDS WORK IN ARUA

EA301922 Kampala Domestic Service in English 1700 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] The International Committee of the Red Cross [ICRC] has wound up its business, closed its office in Arua and handed it over to the Uganda Red Cross. [Words indistinct] ICRC team has been (?working) in Arua for the last 2 years.

At a farewell reception for the ICRC team team arranged by the Arua district commissioner and the commander of the 11th battalion, Bondo, the Arua District Commissioner Mr (Herbert Opei), thanked them for the humanitarian work they performed [words indistinct] in Arua District. The team leader, Mr (Peter), noted that Uganda Red Cross would now take over.

According to a UNA [Uganda News Agency] correspondent, the withdrawal of the ICRC is completely in tune with the prevailing situation in Arua where the security situation has completely come back to normal.

Government officials contacted by UNA regretted that a picture is being painted by some ICRC officials in Europe which would wish to perpetuate a false picture of the situation in Arua and Uganda so that they remain for an unjustifiably longer period in Uganda. The official noted that the withdrawal of all volunteer assistance agencies which were operating in Uganda since liberation has been earlier mutually agreed upon by the Ugandan authorities and those volunteer agencies. The claim by a certain Mr (Ross) that the ICRC has been expelled from Uganda is therefore a blatant lie which must be dismissed with the contempt it deserved.

However, the official stressed that Uganda will continue to accept the necessary assistance from any quarters that is in conformity with its needs, national interests and honor.

CANDIDATE PROFILES SHOW COMMITMENT OF MPR

AB071159 Kinshasa AZAP in French 0817 GMT 7 Apr 82

[AZAP commentary: "Profile of the Militant Candidate"]

[Text] Kinshasa, 7 Apr (AZAP)--Following its ordinary session, the MPR Executive Committee announced that it has defined profiles to be filled by the militant candidate in municipal and legislative elections.

The conditions, which conform with the party's program on the spirit of militantism, the personality of the candidate and on his personal disposition to contribute to the development of his commune, will be made known to the committees of the party called upon to examine the applications.

By the profile of the militant candidate, the MPR Executive Committee has introduced a great change in the electoral procedure of our country in view of the fact that when this innovation is well applied by the different MPR committees the party will be rid of the wolves that would like to enter into the pen during the forthcoming popular elections.

During the previous elections, the door was left open for every Zairian citizen who was a full member of the party to be eligible, without the party imposing strict conditions on his personality. The results were known: Once elected the zonal councillors and the people's commissioners forgot the aims and objectives they had set for themselves during the electoral campaign--the well-being of the population and of the party's development program--and took to activities unworthy of their status as the people's representatives.

In this way, several zonal commissioners who should serve as examples endulged in acts of maladministration and have preyed on the meager financial resources of the people who elected them. As for the people's commissioners, if most of them performed their duties honorably, at least, others only busied themselves about seeing to the prosperity of their own businesses rather than working for the well-being of the population, indulging both in fraud and in illegal trafficking of precious materials. Amnesiacs, they forgot all the promises they hadpompously made to the electorate.

Today, with only a few exceptions, several communities and zones have not as yet been supplied with good drinking water and electricity as they were promised by their candidates in the municipal and legislative elections.

Some of these communities are no longer accessible; the roads have become impassable, contrary to the promises of the candidates during the campaign that they would take care of the maintenance of such roads without even making any reference to the party's designed development program.

The profile of the militant candidate defined by the Executive Committee therefore appears as an attempt by the party to raise a railing around the organs to be renewed and emphasizes the desire of the higher officials of the nation not to repeat the mistakes of the past.

On the other hand, the MPR has the monopoly, if not to appoint candidates to the elections, at least to set the most objective conditions which the candidates must follow in order to be elected, because the party must present for election people capable of defending its ideals, and of contributing to the realization of its national development program.

The party must therefore make sure of the candidate's level of commitment to its ideals and to mobutuism as well as his capacity to serve the people and the rightness of his intentions to seek the welfare of the people. It is only with this condition that he can aspire to be accepted to carry out the service he wants to render Zairian society.

COMMENTARY APPROVES OF SCREENING CANDIDATES

AB011737 Kinshasa AZAP in French 0740 GMT 1 Apr 82

[AZAP commentary: "Democracy and Vigilance"]

[Text] Kinshasa, 1 Apr (AZAP)--The first democratic elections organized in Zaire under the second republic date back to 1970, and since then the government has had the time to learn lessons from the results obtained and to rectify the electoral law in order to adapt to the political realities of the moment. That is why the attention of the citizen is held by the elections which will take place this year and by the right henceforth given to the basic committees to state their views and opinions on the candidature both in legislative and municipal elections.

Whether it is a people's commissioner or zonal council member, all elected office holders should speak the same language as the electorate who should remain the object of the constant preoccupations of the elected throughout their mandate. The basic committee, which lives with the people and which therefore knows best the behavior and degree of militancy of each citizen from its village or locality, cannot be separated from the election preparations without experiencing once again the deplorable game that the country witnessed from the outgoing legislature where some elected people advocated ideas that the electorate did not expect from them and which did not jibe with the ideals of mobutism.

The people's good faith was deceived by the hypocritical attitude of the elected who, yesterday, claimed to be holding high the flame of the revolution, but who, once elected, dropped their masks to show the world their intentions: Sieze power by all means. The people had to be vaccinated against demagogy and protected from surprises by setting up barriers which are the basic committees.

This new measure in the electoral law was to discourage the wolves who were getting ready to put on sheepskin by convincing them that this time their trickery will not achieve its aim.

By testing the militancy of the candidate in the basic committee, the MPR does not deprive any citizen of his right of eligibility guaranteed by the constitution. He rather accomplishes the duty imposed on him by mobutism, to see to it that the country's leaders, and those of the party, are assimilated men, worthy of defending what the revolution has acquired. He therefore cannot contradict himself and disavow his commitments towards the people by allowing the election of people with doubtful militancy [words indistinct] enjoy all their civic rights.

The preliminary examination of all candidature by the basic committee is a wise decision since it helps avoid the repetition of cases of betrayal by those who, having received the people's mandate to defend them according to the principles of mobutism, act against the stream after their election.

BRIEFS

COMMUNICATIONS TALKS WITH BELGIUM--Mr Herman de Croo, the Belgian minister of communications, posts and telecommunications, will visit Zaire from 12 to 20 April at the head of a delegation of 10 top officials of his ministry. His discussions with the Zairian authorities will center on Belgian-Zaire cooperation in the fields of transport and telecommunications. Already, Belgium is taking part in the construction of a telecommunications network in Zaire, especially through the installation of a nodal center worth 75 million Belgian francs to be supplied by the Belgian Telephone Company. The two parties intend to extend this cooperation to the training of technicians. In this framework, Minister Herman de Croo will continue with his Zairian counterpart, Citizen Maate Numu Wu Bowango, the negotiations which began in Brussels on 10 March. CREDITORS AGREE ON PLAN TO SETTLE EANSL LIABILITIES

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 16 Mar 82 p 17

[Text] DAR-ES-SALAAM, MARCH 13--Creditors and shareholders of the defunct East African National Shipping Line (EANSL) who met in Mombasa (Kenya) for two days of negotiations earlier this week have agreed to a proposed scheme to settle the company's liabilities.

Under the scheme creditors would be paid their total outstanding debt of 60 million shillings (six million dollars) over a period of 24 months in four six-monthly installments.

The Mombasa agreement will now require the approval of Tanzania's High Court before any payments are made because the shipping line - owned by the Government of Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia - was registered in Tanzania.

One participant in the Mombasa negotiations told Agence France-Presse that the first payment of 25 per cent of the liabilities would be made immediately after the agreement has received the Tanzanian court sanction.

In event of cash shortfalls the company liquidator - Coopers and Lybrand of London - will turn to the shareholders for more funds.

The EANSL, once considered a unique example of how independent African countries could cooperate in a regional economic enterprise, was disbanded three years ago after it had accumulated massive debts at home and abroad because of poor management and stiff competition from multi-national shppping companies.

Six Freighters

When it was dissolved, shareholding governments pledged to meet the company's full liabilities and also to pay the terminal benefits of their nationals.

So far most of the workers have been paid their benefits.

At the time of its dissolution EANSL had a fleet of six cargo ships plying between East African and North-West European ports. Two of the ships, the Kenyan-registered Jogoo and the Ugandan-registered Uganda were seized in Europe and were subsequently auctioned to meet the company's debts.

A third ship, the Jitegemee, which was relatively new and which later caused controversy between the Tanzania Government and its new owners, was seized while anchored in Dar-es-Salaam. The vessel is still in Tanzania while negotiations are going on between the Government and the Tanzanian buyer to settle the dispute out of court.

PROSPECTIVE LINKS WITH EEC UNDER REVIEW

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 p 879

[Text]

Within the next few months Angola is expected to indicate what type of co-operation it would like to develop with the European Community.

Mr. Edgard Pisani, the Commissioner responsible for development, visited Angola recently to try to clarify the situation. During the visit Mr. Pisani pointed out that the Lomé Convention offered a comprehensive form of co-operation between Angola and the EEC. Other forms of co-operation available included food aid, emergency aid, a fisheries agreement and indirect assistance through the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC). A bilateral agreement would, however, not be possible. The Angolans said that they would be clearer once Namibia had achieved independence. While full membership of the Lomé II Convention thus appears excluded, Angola may be observing the renegotiations of the agreement which starts in 1983.

Mr. Pisani also had lengthy technical discussions with the Angolans. He agreed to organise a donors' meeting in the next two to three months to discuss further assistance for the Benguela railway. The Angolans also expressed interest in a fisheries agreement with the Community and have asked for details of the agreements already concluded between the EEC and Senegal and Guinea Bissau.

The Angolans also mentioned their particular problems in the agricultural sector, notably the need to rehabilitate coffee plantations, develop the livestock sector, carry out reafforestation measures and improve the distribution system. The Angolans are also interested in receiving emergency aid from the Community to help "children of displaced populations" and a specific request will be made shortly.

West Germany is still blocking the release of aid to both Angola and Mozambique under the non-associates budget. In December they again vetoed allocations to both countries but at the end of February the EEC Foreign Ministers agreed to keep the five per cent allocation for Africa in hand. The Germans have said that they would lift their veto once Angola and Mozambique indicated their intention to join the Lomé Convention. This aid could then be used to finance an interim aid programme before both countries could receive aid under the Lomé Convention.

West Germany takes the line that Angola and Mozambique are eligible for membership of the Lomé Convention and so other aid facilities should not be provided.

BRIEFS

ALLEGED STRAINED RELATIONS WITH PORTUGAL--President Eanes of Portugal will visit Luanda from April 15 to 19. The President's visit will be the first visit of a Portuguese Head of State since independence. The Portuguese Minister of Finance, Sr. Salgueiro, left for Luanda recently to finalise details of the visit. General Eane's visit is billed in Lisbon as the final step in a strategy to put relations between Portugal and its former colonies on a better footing. The President has already been to Guinea Bissau, Cape Verde and Mozambique since their independence. Portugal is Angola's second biggest supplier of non-military goods after France, and the trade balance is heavily weighted in Portugal's favour because the Portuguese do not buy Angola's main export, oil. The recent visit of the Portuguese Foreign Minister, Sr. Pereira (West Africa, March 22), ended on a diplomatically unfortunate note when Sr. Pereira was refused a scheduled audience with President dos Santos. The President had apparently been suddenly taken ill. Another explanation put forward was that Sr. Pereira had angered the Angolans by announcing he would press for compensation for former Portuguese settlers whose assets had been nationalised after independence. DIRECTIVES FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL GOVERNING BODIES

Cotonou EHUZU in French 15 Feb 82 p 5

[Article: "PRPB [People's Revolution Party of Benin] Central Committee Directives Relating to the Popularization Operations for Law Nos 81-001 and 81-009 of 23 March and 10 September 1981 and for the Establishment of Local Organs of Government"]

[Text] The installation of the National Revolutionary Assembly on 4 February 1980 genuinely marked the beginning of the era of constitutional revolutionary legitimacy and initiated the principle which guarantees the entire working class and militant Beninese nation the political, legal, and material conditions required for it to effectively play the role of being the true protagonist and the true master of its fate.

In fact, with the upcoming establishment of local organs of government, new favorable conditions will be created for the masses in our cities and countryside to actively participate in the conduct and management of the affairs of state of our revolutionary government.

In order to properly carry out this revolutionary and historic mission of our country, the Central Committee of the People's Revolution Party of Benin has decided that the popularization operations for Law Nos 81-001 and 81-009 of 23 March and 10 September 1981 and for the establishment of local organs of government will take place throughout the whole country in the period from 15 February to 15 March 1982.

Consequently, the phase of informing and preparing the masses and creating public awareness is of cardinal importance.

I. Information, Preparation, and Awareness Phase

There is no denying that for our party and revolutionary state, the information, preparation, and awareness phase takes on critical significance, conditioning the success of all the operations of setting up the local organs of government.

That is why all comrades who are members of the party and its mass organizations and of the local revolutionary authorities must be serious about effectively accomplishing all preparatory tasks, which are summarized as follows:

A. Information and Preparation Meeting at the Province Level

1. Duration:

Monday and Thesday 22-23 February 1982

2. Preparation and Supervision:

In accordance with the provisions of Electoral Law No 81-001 of 23 March 1981, a committee will be set up in each province by the Permanent Committee of the National Revolutionary Assembly.

The committee will work under the actual supervision of each province's political commissar.

3. Objectives:

a) To become acqueinted with the various documents formulated by the Permenant Committee of the National Revolutionary Assembly.

b) To carry out a thorough analysis of the tasks and activities which ensue from those documents.

c) To make a judicious assessment and allocation of the human, material, and financial resources to be activated in consequence of that analysis, in order for the operations to succeed.

4. Participants:

- The members of the National Supervision Committee

- The members of the Provisional Provincial Secretariat of the party

- All the people's commissars

- The members of the State Committee for Province Administration

- The members of the Executive Secretariat of the Provincial Council of the Revolution

- The members of the provincial offices of the party's mass organizations: COJ [Youth Organization Committee], COF [Women's Organization Committee], CDR [Committee for the Defense of the Revolution] and SYNDICAT [expansion unknown].

- The district chiefs

- The executive secretaries of the District Revolutionary Councils

- The top officials of the district offices of the party's mass organizations: COJ, COF, CDR, and SYNDICAT.

B. Information, Preparation, and Awareness Meeting at the District Level

1. Duration:

Thursday and Friday 25-26 February 1982

2. Preparation and Supervision:

In accordance with the provisions of Electoral Law No 81-001 of 23 March 1981, a committee will be set up in each district by an order of the chairman of the State Committee for Province Administration.

3. Objectives:

The objectives are the same as those of the meeting provided for at the provincial level.

In addition, working teams must be formed in the villages and city sections, and their mission on their home ground must be methodically organized.

4. Participants:

- The members of the District Party Group

- The people's commissars

- The members of the Revolutionary Committee for District Administration

- The members of the Executive Secretariat of the District Revolutionary Council

- The mayors

- The village and city section delegates

- The members of the district offices of the party's mass organizations

- All members of the supervisory teams at the village and city section level.

II. Actual Popularization Operations for Law Nos 81-001 and 81-009 of 23 March and 10 September 1981 and for the Establishment of Local Organs of Government

1. Duration:

Monday 1 March through Tuesday 16 March 1982

2. Objectives:

The end objective is the rational and effective installation of Revolutionary Councils at all levels, in accordance with the provisions of Law No 81-001 of 23 March 1981 relating to elections for local organs of government.

In particular, there is the need to:

- Install Local Revolutionary Councils (CRL)

- Install Communal Councils of the Revolution (CCR)

- Form District Revolutionary Councils (CRD)

- Install Provincial Councils of the Revolution (CPR) and State Committees for Province Administration (CEAP)

- Install District Revolutionary Councils (CRD) and Revolutionary Committees for District Administration (CRAD).

The course of this installation process will be specified by the Permanent Committee of the National Revolutionary Assembly.

Ready for the revolution!

The struggle goes on.

REBELLION TRIAL SENTENCES--The rebellion trial arising from the land reform riots of last August has ended. The military court has released three of the 19 arrested, sentenced one to ten years imprisonment and the rest to jail terms ranging from nine years to six months. The prosecution had asked for longer sentences for the charges of incitement to rebellion and attempting to alter the constitution by violence. The court was chaired by the National Political Commissar of the Armed Forces, Comandante Alvaro Tavares. Last August one man was killed and two were injured when security forces clashed with local people on the island of Santo Antao, the mst fertile of the ten islands in the archipelago. CONSULATE GENERAL OPENED IN DIRE-DAWA, ETHIOPIA

Djibouti LA NATION in French 18 Feb 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] On Wednesday 10 February, a consluate general of the Republic of Djibouti was opened in Dire-Dawa. Attending the inaugural ceremony were: on the Ethiopian side, the authorities of the Harrar region and in particular Colonel Zeleke, a member of the party's Central Committee and the COPWE [Commission To Organize the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia] representative of Harrar Province; and on the Djiboutian side, the director of foreign affairs and cooperation, Daher Djama, the mission's official representative, Omar Farah Iltireh, and the first conselor of Djibouti's Embassy in Addis Ababa, Yacin Abdi Bakal.

The opening of a consulate has long been greatly wished for because of the size of the Djiboutian community residing in Dire-Dawa, and especially because a very large number of Djiboutian families go to Dire-Dawa in the summer season.

During the inaugural ceremony, the director of foreign affairs, Mr Daher, took the opportunity to deliver a speech in which he emphasized "the importance that the Government of the Republic of Djibouti attaches to the strengthening of its relations with socialist Ethiopia."

(The complete text of his speech follows:)

This privilege which falls to me to inagurate the Djibouti Consulate General in Dire-Dawa this evening is additional evidence of the importance that the Government of the Republic of Djibouti attaches to the strengthening of its relations with socialist Ethiopia. It is also the desire of the government of socialist Ethiopia--and this desire has been expressed a great many times--to constantly further improve the friendly and neighborly relations it maintains with the Republic of Djibouti.

For a long time now, and up to the beginning of this century, the city of Dire-Dawa has maintained privileged relations with the city of Djibouti, owing in particular to the railroad company.

Opening a Djiboutian Consulate General in Dire-Dawa means a strengthening of those relations, which must inescapably lead to the creation of a climate of trust and understanding between our two brother nations.

I would like to say to you how invaluable the role of the gentlemen who is consul general will be in successfully carrying out this task, and I am convinced beforehand that the Ethiopian authorities in this region will be able to help him in accomplishing his mission.

As I was saying, there are several areas that benefit the good and excellent relations which exist between the city of Dire-Dawa and the city of Djibouti, and it goes without saying that the area of tourism will soon be able to aspire to the place it used to occupy and will be able to help create new possibilities.

I would not like to finish these few words without thanking all the important individuals who have been pleased to honor this happy event with their presence.

Long live Djiboutian-Ethiopian cooperation!

SAUDI AID FOR ELECTRIC ENERGY

Djibouti LA NATION in French 18 Feb 82 p 12

[Text] The Saudi minister of industry and electricity has just made a gift to the Djibouti Electric Company of three German-made (MAN) diesel generating units, each with a 5-megawatt capacity.

This aid follows a visit that Djibouti's minister of industry and state-owned industrial companies made during December 1981 on the invitation of his counterpart, Dr Ghazi al-Gosaibi.

The minister of industry and state-owned industrial companies told us: "This significant aid which has just been granted to us by the Saudi minister of industry and electricity will make it possible for us to increase installed capacity at the Boulaos electric power plant. Three units more than 15 years old which have been having frequent breakdowns and constant maintenance entailing sizable expenditures will be replaced by these three new generators. The total power output presently supplied by those worn-out units does not exceed 7 megawatts. The three new units will supply 15 megawatts of power overall, which represents a very sizable power gain.

This aid demonstrates once more the importance of the privileged relations of cooperation which unite the brother kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Djibouti. That cooperation has always been decisive for the economic and social development of our young country and for the consolidation of its national sovereignty."

The minister concluded by saying: "For several months, considerable efforts have been set in motion with a view to strengthening EDD's [Djibouti Electric Company] infrastructure in order to contribute toward the country's economic and social development and to provide for the growing needs in electrical energy. By 1985, more than $55 million will be mobilized to develop means of producing and distributing electricity, both for installations of the city of Djibouti itself and for the districts in the interior.

"Fifteen million dollars have already been gratned to us in the form of gifts by Libya ($2 million for new powerplants in the interior districts) and by Saudi Arabia ($13 million for the three new units).

"Starting 7 March, I will be participating in a lenders' meeting taking place in Kuwait with a view to mobilizing the $40 million necessary for expanding the Boulaos powerplant and acquiring two 15-megawatt generators.

"The Islamic Development Bank, the Kuwaiti Development Fund, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, and OPEC should probably agree to this loan to the Djibouti Electric Company on very advantageous terms."

AMBASSADOR TO OMAN--On 8 February the Republic of Djibouti's first ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Oman presented his credentials to His Majesty Sultan Qaboos. ARREST OF ALIENS--Thursday evening the security forces launched roundup operations in the central area of the capital. These raids resulted in the jailing of a mass of foreigners whose status in the Republic of Djibouti is irregular. In an interview the minister of interior, Idriss Farah, stated the reasons for these raids, recalling in particular that since independence a large number of foreigners who come from neighboring countries have settled in the Republic of Djibouti. The minister added that that is not prohibited, inasmuch as the Republic of Djibouti is a meeting-ground and a land of interchange, but that foreign nationals must conform to the laws which govern their presence in this country. According to the minister of interior, the presence of a great number of foreigners whose status is irregular is teh cause of a greater and greater number of crimes, robberies, rapes, and threats against Djiboutian nationals. Moreover, it is a heavy additional burden on the Republic of Djibouti's economy. Finally, the minister of interior declared that the roundup operations will continue to be carried out in the future, and he asked Djiboutian nationals to facilitate the job of the security forces. NATION'S NATURAL RESOURCES, BELGIAN RELATIONS NOTED

Brussels LA LIBRE BELGIQUE in French 2, 3 Mar 82

[2 Mar 82 p 16]

> [Excerpts] In her first official trip as state secretary for cooperation for development, Mrs Jacqueline Mayence has just gone to Gabon. "I will be criticized," she says, "because I am starting with a country reputed to be very wealthy." Wealthy? Yes, indeed. Its oil, manganese, wood, and uranium compare quite favorably with the resources of a number of other countreis: it is among the privileged few—Libya, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia....
> It is true that Gabon's earnings are spectacular. But this also goes to show that wealth is not the same as development, and that development is not simply a question of financial resources. Gabon certainly has those resources, as well as an inclination to make good use of them so as to prepare the country to become a prosperous nation before the free ride on natural resources ends. Gabonese petroleum reserves are already being exhausted, and in a few years there will be no more. There will still be manganese, iron, wood, and uranium, but oil accounts currently for half of the country's foreign trade. That half should be tended carefully....

"Hoping to be pleasantly surprised, the government took a census last year.

"Only a few people know the results: they were not published because the conclusions were disappointing. In reality, there must only be about 800,000 of us. The figure is important in establishing our per capita GNP. According to the World Bank, per capita GNP is around $3,850, while our government puts it at $1,679. The difference is significant, despite the fact that even the smaller figures puts us ahead of all other African countries except Libya—even ahead of South Africa."

[The young diplomat] closed the issue of MARCHES TROPICAUX [ET MEDITERRANEENS] in which he had sought the figures. The periodical had published a full study of the Gabonese economy last year. The statistics and assessments it contained hold out fairly encouraging prospects for Gabon.

"In any case," said the diplomat, "the statistics are quite far from telling the full story. Look at that other periodical which proclaimed triumphantly that Gabon's GDP [gross domestic production] went from Fr CFA 3.6 billion to 710 billion between 1960 and 1980, with a growth rate of more than 100 percent per year! It is true, but obviously it was because of the oil. We have produced 120 million tons of it over the past 20 years. But our known reserves amount only to 160 million tons. In a few more years it will be gone, barring the unlikely discovery of new reserves."

Intoxicated With Money

In short, Gabon has no time to lose if it wants to use its oil to build a balanced economy. And this is indeed its desire, as President Omar Bongo continues to proclaim. It is true that the country has already had some experience with the danger of getting intoxicated with superficial prosperity. In 1977 it very nearly capsized into bankruptcy.

1977: Gabon reaches its peak oil production. There is a constant flood of dollars. The country wants to impress Africa, so it decides to host the General Assembly of the Organization of African Unity in sumptuous fashion. Libreville is hurridly rebuilt. Architecturally daring structures arise from the humid turf. There is a proliferation of deluxe hotels. They build one of the most beautiful international centers in the world. Within a few months, Libreville has shed its unpretentious image as a rustic subprefecture and become a proud capital city with modern highways. All during the conference, the OAU participants are awash in champagne, they drive around town in hundreds of Mercedes, and they meet in conference rooms of gleaming marble. When the curtain comes down, the bill is added up, and it is discovered that the national debt is close to $4 billion, nearly double total export earnings. Inflation has reached astronomical levels. So President Bongo orders a severe austerity program and manages to stablilze the economy, to the surprise of the experts who predicted disaster. All public expenditures are strictly controlled, and several grandiose projects are abandoned: the Gabonese need only look at the marvelous, unfinished ruins of these projects in the capital city—masses of decaying concrete—to be reminded that wealth does not bring wisdom. Since that time, Gabon has conducted itself as a cautious and moderately prosperous country, concerned with its future and with productive investments, giving high priority to completion of the trans-Gabon railroad that should facilitate exploitation of its mineral resources, but also taking the first steps toward true development that relies primarily on forest and agricultural cultivation.

An Oasis of Tradition

Gabon is at present unusual in several respects, compared with other Third World countries. Its birth rate is inadequate (1 percent), the towns are not swollen with an influx of peasants, and in fact municipalities must tap labor from Cameroon and Congo to keep essential services running. The country is one immense forest in which the majority of the people subsist on their own, without communications links to the outside. Agriculture is still rudimentary and traditional: the cities must import all their food. In short, despite its great wealth, Gabon is still a primitive country, an oasis of tradition in an Africa swept up in the drive for modernization.

"Basically," says the diplomat, "we are lucky to be both so wealthy and so little developed. Our possibilities are unlimited, compared to what is happening in teh Arab oil-producing countries: they can scarcely hope to invest their petrodollars in agriculture, since their countries are generally sandy deserts. Here, everything is possible. And we know that we must work quickly if we want to stay out of the clutches of envious neighboring countries. But we must do everything all at once: encourage faster population growth through major health programs, to eradicate malaria from our humid forests. We must move faster to exploit the resources of our forests, which are currently producing only one-fourth of the output that could be achieved with rational management. We must launch agricultural programs. We must complete the trans-Gabon railroad."

That railroad, by the way, has already cut its way 130 km into the forest; the project will be 950 km when completed and will facilitate the economic "irrigation" of the country. The construction contract has gone to a European consortium, Eurotrag, in which Belgium has a 6.1-percent interest.

Meanwhile, the country continues on its peaceful course. The peasants, living their isolated existence in the forests, farm the land in their traditional way, still ignorant of that prestigious and ambitious capital city where wages of which they have never deramed are being paid; but if they knew of it, they would start dreaming. The interoccupational guaranteed minimum wage there is 7,000 Belgian francs per month: 10 times more than in Zaire, for example. Education is broadly available; the hospitals are functioning.... And while it may be true that the rich are very rich, the poor there are not very poor.

"Ultimately," says the diplomat, "what we are asking for is not so much money as technology. We will be able to pay 70 percent of the salaries of the development experts who are sent to us. We will be able to finance the equipment we are going to need. What we want in addition is investment, assistance in creating our own small enterprises...."

In simple form, these are the outlines of the country encountered by Mme Mayence, who had to make clear, in fact, that she was not the foreign trade minister....

[Text] "I am not the minister for foreign trade," Mme Mayence had to tell her Gabonese interlocutors, who were pleading for private investment. Knowing that Belgians have railroading in their blood, her interlocutors never stopped elaborating on the astounding prospects to be opened up by the completion of the trans-Gabon railroad. The two sides were not exactly talking the same language, but in the end Tindemans' state secretary was able to turn the talks in the direction she had wanted. "She is a woman of iron," said officials in Libreville, who saw some resemblance between her and Mrs Thatcher. So there was not that much talk about the railroad, except to discuss some of the ancillary problems it poses with regard to personnel training, and more about social problems: education, health, food and, naturally, improvement of the status of women.

A coincidence: Gabon's state secretary for cooperation is also a woman. Mme Honorine Dossou-Naki, quite young, vivacious and witty, crowned with a tightly plaited coiffure, brought a certain warm intimacy to the talks. At the dinner she hosted, she did not make a solemn speech; she confined herself to a few remarks expressing the spirit of friendship existing between Belgians and Gabonese, and saying that this was what was most important. Mme Mayence responded in the same vein, and the gentlemen present all had to admit that women, despite their reputation for garrulousness, make better hosts than men, who always feel obliged to burden get-togethers with interminable remarks. There was porcupine to eat, as tasty and tender as calves' liver, and there were exotic fruits with unusual flavors.

Feminism

Naturally, the tabletalk turned to feminism. Our dinner companion, a young Gabonese diplomat who was tall and slender, said she was happy to see African women making more rapid strides than their European counterparts in asserting their rights and prerogativ s. Indeed, she said, Africa is more mature than Europe in this respect, doubtless because the African woman, being under the thumb of lazy and hedonistic macho males, had to learn to defend and assert herself. Is it not women who really run all of Africa? They do it discreetly, allowing the men to imagine that they are admired and all-powerful, but able to put them in line without their realizing it. European men did it differently: they invented courtly love, giving their women the illusion that they were idols in order to lock them into comfortable uselessness. Now that the women are asserting themselves, the African woman is moving faster: her superiority is becoming ever more evident--a superiority born of so many centuries working alone in the fields, because tilling the land was too base an occupation for her worthy husband, who thought he was made for the noble pursuits of hunting, fishing, and the government of the community. In Europe, the women had to invent feminist militancy, with all its foolishness, whereas in Africa it was enough for them to be themselves.

Sitting on our left was a Gabonese official who listened and smiled. Then he murmured:

"We are more clever than you. Here, our women have always worked harder than the men. Their feminism only drives them to work harder. We are happy to be sexist."

But someone else challenged this, saying that soon African men would be out of the picture, and unless they watch their step it will be the same for men everywhere.

Then Mme Mayence was invited to stay 3 weeks in Libreville to undergo an initiation into the secret rites of African women. It was explained that then she would clearly understand all the problems with which she has to deal. "Heavens," exclaimed one of the Belgian guests, "what will she find out at AGCD?" [expansion unknown] General Manager Leenaerts and special assistant Guillot-Pingue hid their faces at the thought....

The following day Mme Mayence had extensive talks with Mme Agathe Okumba, wife of the former foreign minister, who heads a powerful women's movement in Libreville that publishes a small newspaper, organizes educational and basic literacy classes, and carries on a completely balanced nutrition program based on local food products. It was decided to study the possibility of technical assistance for this movement, which is recognized by the Gabonese as probably more effective and closer to the people than any of the government agencies.

"No Private Preserve"

Mme Mayence was also received by President Omar Bongo, who expressed his ardent wish to see cooperation between Brussels and Libreville develop. One official bluntly told us that in fact the President and the entire country have had enough of being considered France's "private preserve." France, under the pretext of being the guarantor of CFA currency, thinks itself entitled to override all the decisions of Gabonese officials.

"This is why we want to diversify our cooperation. Obviously, that is not pleasing to our dear cousins, and you can be sure that Mme Mayence is being closely watched."

This also seems to be the opinion of several Gabonese journalists who interviewed the state secretary, asking her if she did not fear that "certain obstacles" stand in the way of Belgian cooperation with Gabon. They pressed her, but avoided making clear what they meant. The state secretary replied that she did not see what obstacles could present themselves, and that in any case it was in no one's interest for cooperation to become the object of rivalry. In short, she had understood, and so did the journalists.

"You see," we were told, "our dear cousins will accept certain things, but not everything. You must not threaten their economic supremacy. The Japanese have already deprived them of a big chunk of the automobile market.... The English are there, too, pushing ahead. You will see: our dear cousins will be watchful; they absolutely insist on protecting us from anyone who might try to take over their role of watching out for our fundamental interests. For our dear cousins love us very much—ourselves, our oil, our manganese. But be careful, do not say that our dear cousins are somewhat neocolonialist: that would not be true, they will swear to you...."

But the dear cousins sho ld not get too worried. The final communique of the Belgian-Gabonese meeting announced that the exchanges of views only served to open up possibilities. A joint commission will be established to come up with specific projects, "taking into account the real possibilities and potential of the two countries." Bilateral cooperation will be oriented toward transport, rural development, education, the promotion of small industry. The Belgian interlocutors were in fact surprised by the modest requests that Gabon presented: for the time being, a few study scholarships, a few development experts, assistance for teh activities being carried out by women. The discussions went smoothly except on one point: utilization of a government-government loan of 50 million Belgian francs, which the Gabonese want to handle as "businessmen" rather than as "developers."

All things considered, both sides ended the talks with a feeling of satisfaction....

REPORTAGE ON NUNOO-MENSAH'S DELEGATION LONDON VISIT

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 p 837

[Text] BRIGADIER J. Nunoo-Mensah, Ghana's Chief of Defence Staff and member of the National Provisional Defence Council, has dismissed as "outrageous" the recent allegations in Lagos made by a Ghanaian diplomat seeking political asylum. Alhaji Youssif Patty, the High Commissioner appointed by President Limann, alleged that "about 2,700" soldiers and civilians had been killed in Ghana and that Libyan soldiers could be seen guarding the airport, radio station and army headquarters in Accra. Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah said he would be "surprised if we lost more than 30 to 40 people". He said he would not be party to a government that violated human rights, and that the PNDC was not there to eliminate Ghanaians but to reform them without coercion.

The Chief of Defence Staff was addressing a press conference in London last week along with two members of the delegation he led — Mr. P. V. Obeng and Mr. K. Ahwoi. On the nature of the delegation's visit to England, Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah said among its goals was to explain what was going on in Ghana to leaders in a country that was attached to democracy and which was concerned when another country with which it had relations departed from multipartyism. Mentioning that he was Sandhurst-trained, that both Ghana and Britain were members of the Commonwealth, the CDS said the delegation had been very warmly received and had had a sympathetic hearing. The delegation held talks with Lord Carrington, the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Richard Luce, Minister of State at the Foreign Office, Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Terence Lewin, and representatives of some international companies with interests in Ghana.

The CDS said they did not come to talk about specific aid programmes, detailed discussion of which would come later. It was more an exchange of views, and to correct inaccurate press reporting of events in Ghana. He said there was a little programme going between Ghana and Britain which he thought would be maintained.

On finances, investment, and the International Monetary Fund, Mr Obeng said the revolution was taking an "X-ray look at the whole economic structure", and the PNDC did not intend to prolong the vicious circle of dependence on foreign loans. He said 25 years of these loans and grants with Ghana still in the quagmire of poverty meant a new look had to be taken at the economic strategy. He confirmed that negotiations with the IMF had reached an advanced stage by December 31, although the People's National Party government had lacked political will. Since no part of the economy was going to escape the X-ray scrutiny, any package and conditions put forward by the IMF would also be looked at carefully.

On devaluation, Mr. Obeng said there was no way an undisciplined currency could be related to other currencies without first putting in some discipline. After the injection of discipline "we would then see [the cedi's] position in relation to other currencies and then make the necessary corrections as we deem fit". Here he mentioned the various measures taken since December 31 which, after five weeks had brought the unofficial exchange rate down from ₵80 = £1 to ₵35 = £1. He said the PNDC did not rule out devaluation as a possible option, but that it was only one of several options the government would consider.

Instead of the "traditional" loans which nourished dependence on further loans and grants, Mr. Obeng said the PNDC was interested in assistance which would provide "roots for proper economic growth". With agriculture as the "bedrock of a new economic order" in Ghana, any investment directed towards agriculture would be welcome, though not to the exclusion of all other sectors. The potential of gold production had been assessed, and although not a scheduled part of the delegations' business in London, it had discussions related to promotion of the gold industry.

Several questions bore on "democracy", "return to civilian rule" and when there would next be elections in Ghana. Mr. Ahwoi said electoral democracy made sense in a society where the electorate had been "properly schooled in a way as to believe that the people that the electoral process throws up can do something to their benefit". Consistent experience in Ghanaian history showed that the elected "forgot" the people who had elected them. One of the PNDC's main concerns was to ensure that if and when the electoral process was resorted to again, that gap which historically was created between the electorate and the elected would not exist again. With all the experience of the June 4 era, Mr. Ahwoi said it was very surprising the rapidity and "joyous abandon" with which the "political iniquities" of the past had returned in the Third Republic. The Ghanaian people were now being organised politically, in the workplace and in the community, to achieve the political consciousness required for a genuine participatory democracy. With luck, this might take a short time, but it could also be a lengthy process and it was therefore impossible to be precise about any date for a return to electoral democracy. As to whether this was the last coup in Ghana, Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah said he was quite hopeful the PNDC could give Ghana an honest government, which would remove any basis for a coup. As long as the PNDC made the weak and downtrodden in Ghana its main concern there would be no need for a coup.

Was the resumption of Nigerian oil sales and debt-rescheduling for Ghana a sign of Nigerian understanding of what was happening in Ghana, and were other suppliers showing that same understanding? Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah has said "both Nigerians and ourselves understand the need to have a stable Ghana. Instability is infectious. I think it is in our mutual interests; it's in the interests of the Western world to have a stable Ghana. That's the message I've come to preach here".

What had Flt-Lt. Rawlings meant exactly when he said the people's courts would not be hampered by legal technicalities, asked one concerned journalist? The Chief of Defence Staff said the PNDC respected human rights and believed in the rule of law. Those put on trial would have full opportunity to defend themselves he added. Mr. Ahwoi pointed out that several people arrested after December 31 had been released, while the rest were being held pending the results of investigations. There would be no blanket trial, and no one would be tried just for having been a member of the PNP. President Limann, he said, would be treated just like everyone else.

On the legal technicalities, he said even in Britain there had been a question of accused people getting off through technicalities; legal "aberrations" were numerous in Ghana because of the absence of a legal heritage. The prevailing concern was that people who had committed economic crimes that had undermined the structure of decent Ghanaian life should be dealt with according to the conception of justice of the "ordinary man on the Clapham omnibus", or in Ghana's case, the Nima tro-tro.

He recalled the Chief of Defence Staff's Lagos statement that there would be no executions in Ghana, adding that no provision for a death penalty had been included in the legislation that would found the people's tribunals. As to what constituted economic crimes, he pointed to gross tax-evaders as an example, people whose criminal profiteering had been done to the detriment of the ordinary people of Ghana. An example was going to be set for future generations, he added.

INCREASE OF ASSASSINATION ATTEMPTS AGAINST RAWLINGS ALLEGED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 23 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Text] ACCRA, March 20 - Flight Lieutenant Jerry Rawlings, G hana's Head of State since the New Year's Eve overthrow of President Hilla Limann's civilian Government, finds himself faced with an increasingly difficult economic situation as rumours fly about new coup plots.

Over the past few weeks the Chairman of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) has reportedly been the target of several assassination attempts. The last one was on Friday, March 5, the eve of celebrations marking Ghana's 25th independence anniversary, according to political circles here.

According to these reports, several officers behind the March 5 operation were arrested and subsequently executed.

Other assassination attempts were reported to have been made during February, led by Ghanaian Army officers opposed to the new regime.

On March 6, duringthe military parade in Accra marking the independence anniversary, Flt.-Lt Rawlings arrived in a machine-gun carrier surrounded by heavily-armed soldiers in combat dress and escorted by two other armoured vehicles. During the ceremonies he was surrounded by bodyguards with guns at the ready.

Basic Shortages

It is public knowledge that this isthe only way the new Ghanaian leader moves about, even inside Burma Camp, the main military base here, where he lives.

These various attempts would explain why he has not found the time to come up with his promised economic recovery programme, even though the economic situation is still deteriorating.

The worsening situation is obvious each day in the capital, where it is becoming increasingly difficult to find such basic consumer necessities as bread, rice, sugar and meat.

The Market Mammies

The new military authorities are locked in a struggle with the market mammies, the women who control most of the local trade, and neither of the two sides is prepared to give way. The PNDC is insisting that stocks held by the market mammies, who are now banned from handling imported goods, should be sold at controlled prices fixed by the Council. The traders argue that they cannot sell at a loss, andsome of them have hoarded their goods, even burying them to hide them from the newly-created people's defence committees.

At the same time there has been no improvement in the already bad industrial situation. Factories are under-producing through lack of spare parts or other essential commodities for which import licences are unobtainable because of lack of foreign exchange.

The peoples' defence committees have brought widespread disputes in the factories, which have further slowed down production and led to assaults on some executives. Several factory managers, including expatriates, have been accused by the committees of poor management, sometimes of fraud, and have been summoned to explain themselves.

Army Chief of Staff Brigadier Nunoo Mensah, a senior Council member, has had to intervene publicly to make it clear that power was not given to the people so that they could molest the bosses.

Elsewhere, all foreign development and economic cooperation projects have been halted since the coup, as the overseas partners wait for Ghana's economic policy to be defined.

Libya Holding Back

It seems that even Libyan aid is not as significant as had been thought early in January, when thetwo countries resumed relations in the wake of the coup. The Ghanaian delegation which visited Tripoli in February obtained only a gift of 50,000 tonnes of oil, the promise that a 15-year energy supply programme would be drawn upand discussions about a possible scheduled air route between Tripoli and Accra.

To ensure oil supplies, Ghan a has had to pay Nigeria 21 million dollars out of its 110 million-dollar unpaid oil bill. Nigeria had halted supplies in January.

The priority today is on agricultural development. In January Flt.-Lt. Rawlings sent university students on vacation until mid-April so they could help bring in the cocoa harvest, the country's main foreign exchange earner. Now he has announced that the target is self-reliance in food within one year. Ghana has plenty of rich landand it should not be difficult to become self-sufficient. This is one task that does not require heavy financial investment, and which, if successful, could provide the basis for economic recovery.

RAWLINGS: CASTRO, MACHEL HAD WARNED ME

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Mar 82 p 7

[Interview with J. J. Rawlings by Fernando Lima in Accra, date not given]

[Text]

I WAITED three long days for this interview. It was scheduled for several occasions and each time it was postponed; something else had cropped up which could not be delayed. Such is the nature of revolutions . . .

I was told that it would be difficult to arrange the interview, but that the fact that I had been sent from Mozambique "helps a lot". I seemed to have jumped the queue — Reuters, Tass and Associated Press had all requested interviews before me.

Burma Camp, the military complex on the outskirts of Accra, has become the decision-making centre for Ghana's new regime. Here Jerry Rawlings, and his most important colleagues, live in military barracks. Here meeting follows meeting without pause. Now it was with the military commanders of the frontier areas, now with a delegation preparing to leave for abroad, now the preparation of proposed changes to the 1982 budget.

Finally, after many long and insistent hours, my wait was finally crowned with success. Captain Kojo Tsikata, one of the men closest to Rawlings, accompanied me to the Flight-Lieutenant's quarters. At the entrance there was a barrier of barbed wire and sandbags. Two soldiers, with steel helmets and Chinese AK-47s, searched me thoroughly. "I hope FRELIMO is a bit more gentle," said Captain Tsikata, by way of apology.

The Chairman of the Provisional National Defence Council, the PNDC, was sitting in a corner of his room. "It seems that you've already got all the replies you came to Ghana for," said a friendly Rawlings as he shook hands with me. And indeed, during my hours of waiting, I had been able to engage in lengthy discussions with people close to the PNDC about the major problems confronting the new authorities.

The room in which Rawlings received me serves simultaneously as reception, meeting room, study, dining-room and bedroom. Beside the chair where he was sitting was a spartan campbed covered with a white sheet. On the table in front of me were two clips, while on one of the shelves lay a revolver and an RPG rocket launcher.

Dressed in military uniform, Rawlings could not hide the evident signs of tiredness in his face. Not that this proved any obstacle to his fluent conversation — we talked together for around three hours.

Rawlings looked with interest at the cuttings I had brought from the Mozambican Press on recent events in Ghana. On the table where I placed my taperecorder, there was a 1982 New Year card from Samora Machel. "Was it sent before or after?", I asked. Rawlings smiled broadly, but did not give a reply.

AIM: In Mozambique in 1979, people thought that you should have retained power, instead of handing over to the civilians. We felt that if you gave power to these people, then they wouldn't do anything for the country, they would continue to drain Ghana, to maintain corruption here. Why did you hand over?

RAWLINGS: First of all, please tell Samora Machel I was naive in thinking that oppression was an accidental human error. I've now come to realise that it's a deliberate organised affair. That was a very sad mistake — I was really naive.

I owe Samora Machel a salute, and also one for Castro. They were trying to tell me that I didn't understand what I was involved in, but I thought I knew.

POWER

When you talk about the handover of power — well, it was never my ambition to have a monopoly on leading this country. I just saw myself — as I still do — as part of society, wanting to complement society and hoping that society will complement my individual efforts.

Let me try to answer you from the naive level I was at then. In handing over, I didn't see it as handing over power— for me, it was a question of administration. For me, the power was still with us, us the people. I thought it was just impossible for anybody to seek to turn the clock back, there was no question about it.

So when Castro and Samora Machel started telling me these things, I tried to argue about it, saying "they don't understand — there's no way that we can be reversed".

'NO SLAVE'

In handing over, I didn't see it as handing over our ability to demand accountability. We were going to be part of things now — or so I thought.

I've never been a slave, and I never will be. Having helped to de-enslave my fellowmen, having helped break their chains, I assumed that they would never allow themselves to be chained up again.

But I stood out as the only one who remained defiant. The overlords ended up by locking everybody else back in the cage.

They were able to do it because they divided them up — divide and rule. I'd only come across that in books before. It was so beautiful! — the way they used the government machinery to orchestrate situations, to get those boys to the verge of slaughtering each other, to orchestrate, in the process of eliminating us, prejudice in people's minds.

ORGANISED

I now understand what people were trying to tell me. It wasn't a question of mere human faith and support — you needed to mould it, to crystallise it into a supportive system. It needed to be organised into a force. But all I knew then was: "I'm not going to be a slave". That was all. And I didn't expect my fellowmen to permit themselves to be enslaved. But they did not realise then that the situation called for us to organise ourselves, otherwise the overlords would return.

AIM: And so you now feel that it is crucial that people should be educated, mobilised, given political awareness?

RAWLINGS: That's sure, it is necessary. But there is a problem in linking theory and practice. I am a very lonely man, in the sense that I've become the bridge between the underdogs and our progressive intellectuals. The trouble with our intellectuals here is that they suffer a communications and ideological barrier.

They don't feel the conditions of the ordinary man. The intellectual gives a lecture to me, saying that the objective conditions are not ripe blah blah blah. But he's doing so on the level of a full stomach — something that the underdog doesn't have. He doesn't have to get up at three, four o'clock in the morning to queue to go to the toilet. He doesn't have to get up at this time to go and get water. So don't come and bring me this intellectual stuff.

I'm not too angry at the reactionary elements. You don't expect anything from them, since they're criminals anyway. But those of us who aren't — we haven't done enough homework to be of use to the underdog's mentality. Because we can't even make ourselves understood. The intellectuals stand outside things, and as a result they're frightened. In situations like that, it's the angriest man who takes the lead. Not the priest, not the professor — its the angriest man who calls the shots.

INTEGRITY

AIM: What social system do you hope Ghana will follow in the future?

RAWLINGS: People talk about capitalism as one mode of development, and communism or socialism as another, but at least they're all on the move, using different paths. They have something in common, namely a certain level of social integrity, a certain national character, a demand for accountability. All of which is missing in most of the Third World.

For those who want to talk about freedom in the West, I would even say — yes, they probably permit themselves the freedom to be responsible . . .

AIM: But sometimes they don't want to allow that freedom . . .

RAWLINGS: Oh, they won't allow it for us, but for themselves they would allow a certain level of freedom to service their so-called development.

EXPLOITATION

For those who want to talk about the East, even if you want to tell me that they don't have the freedom to be responsible, I would say — OK, but they are under the control of patriotic nationalists.

But when you come to Third World countries, when you come to most of Africa, when you come to my country, we're neither permitted the freedom to be responsible nor to be under the control of patriotic nationalists. We have the worst of all worlds — in order to make the exploitation possible, so that it can survive. Because if you permit a man the freedom to be responsible, he will become independent.

But when my colleagues talk about socialism as the way forward for us, you know what I tell them? "Be careful of labels! The Western countries have had all these opportunities to poison people's minds. The best thing you can do is solve people's problems practically — afterwards you can tell them that what you're doing is socialism. But, given the level of prejudice, you'd better leave the labels out at first."

AIM: Can we now discuss the People's Defence Committees, the PDCs. Perhaps they can be compared with the "Dynamising Groups" set up in Mozambique shortly before independence. At that time the capitalists were leaving the country and sabotaging everything, so we needed a channel to link FRELIMO with the masses. This channel was the dynamising groups, which took on important controlling functions, such as getting sabotaged factories back into operation. I imagine that PDCs here could play that kind of role.

RAWLINGS: That's right, that's right. But so far the situation hasn't crystallised itself that well. We have no cadres yet. So that we are still directing things at the masses, while the cadre organisation is being built up.

AIM: But what do you think will be the future role of the PDCs?

RAWLINGS: After the PDCs there can't possibly be anything else. They will be the final authority. But right now it's as if we were inciting them, giving them the consciousness to govern themselves. However, the point will come where we, as individuals, will become irrelevant.

I see the PDC's becoming the final authority. In other words, they have to mature, to assume their responsibility, their proper role.

AIM: Turning now to the Provisional National Defence Council, the PNDC. What is its role now, and what will it be in the future?

RAWLINGS: No one can predict precisely the social development of any organisation as such. We can't give an exact answer. But we have to start from the concrete experience of our people and, unlike Mozambique, we have very little experience of current revolutionary struggles. Of course, nationally our people have the experience of an anti-colonial struggle, and of trying to build a progressive organisation.

But the groups which have now come together — progressive organisations like the New Democratic Movement, the People's Revolutionary League and above all, the most important group, the progressive officers, progressive junior noncomissioned officers within the military — they have no experience of working together in a revolutionary struggle. So it is not easy, we do not have what one might call a united leadership. You have all these groups and it's important to have some experience of working together. Therefore you have this body, the PNDC, which is a provisional organ for the moment. As the revolution develops, as the struggle develops, I think there will emerge the concrete, adequate organs to meet the revolution's needs.

VULNERABLE

AIM: Ghana's economic situation is desperate, and I think that this makes you vulnerable to foreign pressure. So what are the main steps economically that you plan to take in the near future?

RAWLINGS: No doubt you can see what's going on here. As far as the high prices of goods are concerned, it will remain like that for some time. We have no control over that. But as far as production is concerned, that is something that we can control here, and are trying to do something about. You can see the students getting involved in productive activities, for instance. But what about the food situation? You are not independent if you cannot feed yourself.

EMPHASIS

A lot of emphasis is going to be laid on this question. We're all going to have to go back to the land.

AIM: There are certain important sectors of the economy under state control, and a very developed state-services sector. But these sectors don't function, because they are so infiltrated by people who are corrupt. How can you solve this problem? How can you transform this into an efficient mechanism?

RAWLINGS: I have no doubt that one way will be through socialising the concept of management. We have to transform these sectors, so that people who work in them no longer see themselves as slaves, but see that they are doing valuable work. In other words it must belong to them.

We can't have this nonsense going on any longer, where we just produce, but have no control over what happens to the final product.

AIM: Let's now talk about Ghana's foreign policy. The Western Press has been speaking a lot about your relationship with Libya. According to some reports, everybody should now feel that Libya is expansionist. The Americans are now saying that there's a "new imperialism" in Africa . . .

RAWLINGS: It's all nonsense.

AIM: So what role could Libya play in helping you, at the economic level, for instance?

RAWLINGS: We'll accept any kind of assistance that will not deprive us of true independence, any kind of assistance that will complement and enhance our own efforts.

AIM: Nigeria, in relation to southern Africa, plays a certain progressive role. But it seems to me that Nigeria has not played a progressive role towards Ghana.

RAWLINGS: But, my brother, it's precisely because what is happening here is too close! You know one of the shocking things that was happening in Acheampong's time? We were sitting over here, and conferences were being held, and Ghana was participating in them, supporting the MPLA in Angola, a communist party. Where lies the morality? When you will not tolerate communism in your own country, but you're saying it's OK over there? Precisely because it's not next door to you! Idiots!

EXAMPLE

AIM: But you have the problem that a number of West African countries are afraid of what is happening here in Ghana. It might not be a very nice example for the dominant groups . . .

RAWLINGS: Precisely because it is a nice example for the masses!

AIM: So how do you see the situation in the countries surrounding you? Only Benin could be considered sympathetic. What do you think the possibilities are of invasion, or of some kind of subversion in Ghana?

RAWLINGS: There's no doubt in my mind that we'll have to prepare for all kinds of sabotage. But they'd better not dream of an invasion. Because we'd burn West Africa.

They'll do everything they can to subvert things here, so it is for us inside Ghana to protect it, to stay awake 24 hours a day, to ensure that the situation matures.

No genuine African government that represents the interests of the masses would find what is going on here uncomplementary. For those who do, they'd better be ready for sleepless nights, or ready to intensify their repression. Democracy can be very expensive sometimes.

AIM: Finally, how do you see your relationship with the rest of Africa and with the non-aligned movement? And how would you like to see relations developing between Ghana and Mozambique?

RAWLINGS: Of course, we hope to have very close relations with Mozambique, because we regard Mozambique as a progressive country, a revolutionary country, which is building a socialist society. We in Ghana have just started, and naturally we will learn from the experience of Mozambique, and we hope to develop very strong links between our two countries. On the more general questions of foreign policy, Ghana will continue to participate, as it has always participated, in the OAU, the United Nations and the Non-Aligned Movement, and will do so in the style and within the tradition of our first President, Kwame Nkrumah.

NEW YOUTH COUNCIL ADMINISTRATION--A new organisation, the National Youth Organisation Commission (NYOC), has taken over the administration of the National Youth Council (NYC) with effect from March 3. As a result, all regional and district co-ordinators of the defunct NYC have been made administrative officers of the NYOC. These officers are to assist the regional and district youth representatives of the commission, who will be elected by the various Regional and District Youth Consultative committees in preparing the ground for the establishment of a mass national democratic youth movement. SECRET SOCIETIES' 'DUBIOUS' ACTIVITIES--The PNDC has been urged to proscribe the activities of secret societies as they constitute a very serious pocket of resistance to the aims of the December revolution. Commenting on the current revelations coming out of lodges in the Eastern Region, a leading member of the June 4 Movement, Mr. Eddie Mends, said that the activities of the societies bred nepotism, favouritism and a class system all of which were completely at variance with the tenets of the revolution. He contended that members of these societies were too conservative and would always want to maintain the old order. Mr. Mends observed that the arrests of some of the members was indicative that "the secret societies indulge in very dubious activities which should not be allowed in this area." AGRICULTURAL INVESTMENT PROGRAM DRAWN--The Ghana Commercial Bank has drawn up an investment programme for this year under which ₵900m. would be disbursed among small-scale farmers in the country, in a bid to develop the rural sector and absorb the unemployed youth into the agricultural sector. This was contained in the bank's 'Facts Sheets' on agriculture just released in Accra. The bank's lending policy, the sheets said, was geared towards correcting regional economic disparity, the creation of employment opportunity and entrepreneurship development in areas hitherto uncovered by the bank. The programme would also benefit new applicants for overdraft, loans and advances, consortium and equity investment. It added that the proposed ₵900m. represented both the level of extension in the bank's credit and equity investment as an addition to loans already granted and disbursed among the bank's farmers' associations in the country. Increased attention would be on poultry, livestock and fishing. Meanwhile, the area manager for the bank in the Volta Region, Mr. E. W. K. Adzoku, has announced that ₵10m. had already been distributed to all the 13 branches in the area for disbursement to small-scale farmers in the region for the current cropping season. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 p 897]

UNRESTRICTED TRAVEL ABROAD--The PNDC has stressed that there is no truth in rumours being spread by certain people that the Council will soon stop Ghanaians from travelling outside the country. Because of these rumours, many citizens are leaving the country while others have been advising their relations outside the country not to return home, the statement said. The PNDC made it clear it was not the intention of the Council to prevent Ghanaians from travelling outside Ghana if they wish. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 p 896]

DISAPPEARANCE OF FORMER SECURITY CHIEF--Liberian police have been looking for the head of the Special Security Service, Mr. Gbaku Wright, who was sacked last weekend for alleged embezzlement, the Justice Department said that Mr. Wright took to the bush in Grand Gedeh County, close to the border with the Ivory Coast, immediately after being dismissed for alleged embezzlement of what Head of State Doe said was more than $90,000 in Executive Mansion Funds. The Mansion's chief accountant, Mr. Gibson Sackor, was also dismissed, following allegations that he had improperly handled $75,000 US, the Justice Department said. There was no indication that formal charges had been brought against the two men. Announcing their dismissals, Mr. Doe said he had examined certain records of the special security service and discovered, during an auditor's investigation, gross irregularities in the use of government funds. The Head of State recently announced (West Africa, February 8) audits on senior officials at the Executive Mansion, including Mr. Gbaku Wright. DOE'S ANTICORRUPTION MEASURES--MONROVIA, March 21--Head of State Samuel Doe has sacked the Director of Liberia's Special Security Service (SSS), T. Gbeku Wright, and the Chief Accountant at State House, Gibson Sackor, for allegedly embezzling over 166,000dollars of public funds. Mr. Wright is charged with the misuse of over 91, 000 dollars while Mr. Sackor is charged with embezzling 75,000. Mr. Doe, who ordered yesterday that the two men be turned over to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution, said failure to make restitution of the embezzled amount would result in the confiscation of their property. The Liberian leader, who is also Commander of the Army, said he was personally taking over supervision of the SSS until the appointment of a new director. Early last month Mr. Doe ordered an audit of the finances of State House, which is his own office, and of the Ministries of Finance, Education and Public Works, saying there were strong indications of corruption. Since then an audit of the finances of the Ministry of Commerce, the National Police Force and the University of Liberia has also been ordered. [PARIS WEST AFRICA in French 23 Mar 82 p 14]

BRIDGE COLLAPSE CUTS RAILWAY--Engineers are working flat out to re-open the Blantyre-Salima railway line, closed after the collapse of the rail bridge across the Livulezi River last week. A temporary diversion and bridge are being built. Malawi Railway officials expect these to be completed in three to four weeks time. Reconstruction of the damaged bridge itself will not start until May, when the rains have ended, the officials said. Until the diversion is completed, Malawi Railways will operate passenger buses between Golomoti, the last station south of the bridge, and Mtakataka, north of the river. Urgent goods will also be taken by road between the two stations. The bridge collapsed last week when one of the three main supporting pillars was washed away by floods. Because of the age of the bridge--it was built in the 1940s--Malawi Railways had been keeping a 24-hour watch on its condition as a safety precaution. The bridge fell into the river barely an hour after a passenger train from Salima had crossed it. [Excerpt] [Blantyre MALAWI NEWS in English 13-19 Mar 82 p 1]

BATTERY PRODUCTION TO RESUME AFTER LONG DELAYS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt] The production of car batteries is scheduled to resume this May at the Tudor factory, located on the outskirts of the city of Maputo. The factory has been at a standstill for months due to the lack of raw materials, according to Victor Guimaraes, manager of that production unit, who made the statement during yesterday's visit by Maj Gen Antonio Hama Thai, chairman of the Executive Council of the City of Maputo.

The chairman of the Executive Council of the City of Maputo was accompanied on his visit by a number of the city's directors. At the Tudor factory, the party and government leader in the Mozambican capital made a leisurely inspection of facilities at the said production unit, which has been paralyzed since October of last year by the lack of raw materials.

According to the manager of that manufacturing unit, which is the only one in Mozambique to specialize in the production of electric cells and batteries, the production of medium-sized and large dry cells is scheduled to begin this June, as soon as the necessary components arrive.

Victor Guimaraes said during the visit that Tudor was assigned a production goal of 25,000 batteries and 20 million medium-sized and large cells.

As was stated above, the main problem causing the shutdown is, basically, the lack of raw materials, particularly lead and metal plates. They are the chief components in the production of batteries and cells, which at present are in short supply on the domestic market.

Another problem currently affecting that production unit concerns its financial difficulties in meeting its payroll for the approximately 300 workers at the Maputo factory and at its branches in Beira, Nampula, and Quelimane.

According to the manager of the Tudor factory, that production unit spends 2,000 contos a month to pay the wages of its 300 underemployed workers. At the moment, the workers are staying at home and waiting for the raw materials to arrive.

The enterprise's management assured the chairman of the Executive Council that it will pay the workers their wages until all its available funds are gone. At the moment, only the administrative personnel and a few maintenance workers are working at the enterprise.

Victor Guimaraes said that the goals established for the 1981 Central State Plan were not met due to the lack of raw materials. He added that Tudor has an installed capacity for producing 25 million electric cells and 60,000 batteries.

Because of the above-mentioned problems, Tudor, which was supposed to export over 2,000 batteries to Tanzania, did not fulfill that export plan. There are also other orders that cannot be filled for the same reason.

Tudor's manager told the chairman of the Executive Council of the City of Maputo that a certain organization imported batteries at a certain cost in foreign exchange. On the other hand, Tudor did not receive raw materials because of the lack of foreign currency. According to the manager, the imported batteries are sold for 4,731 meticals, while Tudor sells its product for 3,675 meticals.

Attempting to clarify that situation, Tudor's manager said that the money spent to acquire the batteries in question could have been used to buy materials to insure operations by his enterprise, whose batteries can be sold abroad to bring in a greater amount of foreign exchange.

FISHING BOATS PURCHASED FROM PORTUGAL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] ANOP reports that under the terms of a protocol signed in Lisbon, the People's Republic of Mozambique is going to acquire three "fish corral" vessels with Portuguese crews for experimental fishing in Mozambican shoals.

The protocol was signed by Basilio Horta, Portugal's minister of agriculture, trade and fisheries, and by Joaquim Tenreiro de Almeida, Mozambican secretary of state for fisheries, who is in Portugal as part of the party headed by Antonio Branco, minister of industry and power.

In the protocol, Mozambique expresses its willingness to grant fishing licenses to Portugal for shrimp and valuable fish. This may result later in the formation of mixed-economy companies.

Also in the field of shipbuilding, it was stipulated that Portuguese and Mozambican technicians will investigate the types of vessels appropriate for traditional fishing in Mozambique and for beginning the exploitation of Mozambican fishing resources.

The protocol states that the framework for activity by Portuguese firms in the development of Mozambican fishing and related industries, including both equipment and fish canning, will be determined at the appropriate time.

The protocol provides for joint activities in vocational training and scientific research in connection with Mozambican fishing.

It is also possible that a Portuguese research vessel will be sent to Mozambique to evaluate resources.

The director of the Mozambican Institute for Fishing Research, Fernando Simoes, is going to remain in Portugal to visit the Portuguese shipyards.

Mozambique's secretary of state for fishing, Tenreiro de Almeida, met in Porto with the owner of the Viana Fishing Enterprise to discuss the establishment of a joint venture by firms from the two countries.

If that mixed-economy partnership of fishing enterprises becomes a reality, it will be the first time that such a thing has happened.

The owner of the Viana firm is to visit Mozambique in May.

Also planned is another partnership of the same kind with the Mermaid of the Sea firm in Seixal.

The owner of that firm, Elizabeth Freitas, will also visit Mozambique.

SHRIMP CATCH IN 1981 CALLED SATISFACTORY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Liege Victorino]

[Excerpts] Beira--More than 3,280 tons of shrimp, mainly for export, were caught in our waters last year by PESCAMAR--a Spanish fishing unit that was set up for that purpose--thus achieving the plan's goal of 3,250 tons of that crustacean. This represents $3.5 million in shipments that are made every 40 days, according to Carlos Fernandes, the firm's manager.

The same source said that the daily shrimp catch varies from 500 to 1,500 kilograms, depending on the time of year.

The plan has set this year's goal at 3,750 tons, with an additional 450 tons of miscellaneous fish.

The official also told us that the daily goals are being exceeded, meaning that production will be better this year.

Improved shrimp-catching operations from the standpoint of daily averages were also recorded last year, and the possibility exists that the production level will rise this year.

As we indicated above, PESCAMAR devotes itself exclusively to catching shrimp for export, but it does not disdain the other fish that wind up in its nets. They are delivered to the wharf under the terms of a contract signed between PESCAMAR and National PESCOM, which insures that all the fish thus caught are made available for domestic consumption.

Carlos Fernandes also told us that after they are caught, the shrimp remain at the fishing grounds to wait for the merchant ship that arrives every 40 days to handle their transshipment and transportation. The firm has no refrigeration units, so processing is done on board the merchant ship.

There are plans, however, to transfer four cold storage chambers from EMOPESCA, where they are currently being used, to PESCAMAR.

The same source added that every 40 days, when the merchant ship arrives, the entire shrimp catch is sent to Spain in suitable packaging supplied by that country. He said that the resulting foreign exchange earnings amount to about $3.5 million (approximately 1,295,000 contos).

SPECTRUM OF 1981 AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION REVIEWED

[Text] Arnaldo Ribeiro, director of the Agricultural Directorate Unit, has been quoted in the quarterly magazine AGRICULTURA, which is published in this country, as saying that the levels stipulated in the plan for agricultural development last year produced quantitative and qualitative advances, with emphasis on the state-owned, cooperative, and private sectors. This was true not only by reason of the quality of the crops introduced, but also as a result of the quality of the production volume achieved.

Arnaldo Ribeiro said that although there are still obstacles to be overcome, the development level of agricultural production last year, particularly in the state sector and with respect to crops that are of great importance for exports and for supplying the people, [was satisfactory], and there were considerable improvements in the development of agricultural activity.

Of the crops that deserve emphasis because of their economic characteristics, the director of the Agricultural Directorate Unit mentioned tea, copra, citrus fruit, corn, rice, and potatoes as those whose production was outstanding, although there were factors preventing full achievement of the established goals.

A more detailed analysis of the level achieved with each of the crops in question shows, as one example, that of the 21,040 tons of tea called for in the plan, only 95 percent, or 20,040 tons, was produced. The reason for nonfulfillment of the plan was that the factories were shut down for 2 weeks because of a lack of fuel. Even so, there was an increase of about 4 percent over the 1980 figure.

Failure to achieve the goal in copra production was due to the lack of fuel, spare parts, rust preventatives, sheet iron for repairing the tugs, and zinc sheets for the drying ovens. The result was that the crop was harvested, but could not be processed or, if it was processed, was stored for long periods of time, thus losing its quality.

Supply problems (fertilizer and seed) and delays in planting the crop were the main reasons for nonfulfillment of the plan for corn. The situation was made worse by the fact that most of the enterprises with large areas for producing that cereal (such as CAIA, CAPEL, MATAMA, and MANICA) do not have driers. The result is that corn must be harvested when the moisture content is low, with a consequent loss of production.

Rice production also had its moment of tribulation, since of the 62,100 tons called for in the plan, only 39,000 tons were produced. The reason was that the organization responsible for most of the production of that cereal is the CAIL [Limpopo Agroindustrial Complex], and that entity was not able to do its share for reasons which are already known and which were thoroughly analyzed at a meeting held at the end of last year.

Potato production totaled 73 percent of the goal. The reasons for the shortfall have to do with the fact that all the seed needed for the production campaign was ordered from a limited number of suppliers, all of them located in South Africa. The alleged harvesting delays in South Africa, the embargo on railroad cars coming to our country, and problems related to planning and control, which still exist, meant that vast areas could not be planted and that others were planted too late, thus preventing the intended yields from being achieved.

Although several difficulties were experienced last year, the effort put forth by the Maputo State Agricultural Enterprise was obvious, and it was reflected in the improvement of that enterprise's organizational level, most of its managers having been transferred to the production units (Moamba and Magude) so that they could experience the rural problems firsthand.

As far as involvement by the state-owned, cooperative, and private sectors in carrying out the plan was concerned, there were a few problems that should be emphasized in terms of each sector's characteristics.

In the state sector, it was noted that although progress was made during the last season, there are still a few aspects that are reflected in noncompliance with technical standards, and cultivating operations are still not being carried out strictly according to the rules.

Because of indiscipline in the organization of the work force, it is not possible to implement the system of paying each worker a wage on the basis of what he accomplishes.

The cooperative sector, which is one of the most important because of its social characteristics, is still not receiving the forms and systems of support that will guarantee its consolidation and development.

Within the agricultural cooperatives themselves, work on individual plots continues to be viewed as a priority by the members of those cooperatives to the detriment of the collective farm, since production by the cooperatives is still not a decisive factor in the economy of the peasants.

On the basis of the above, Arnaldo Ribeiro concluded as follows:

"It is necessary to engage in arduous work involving the local structures and to introduce mechanisms that will further promote the formation of cooperatives, since they constitute a necessity that will contribute to economic fulfillment by the cooperatives.

"Failure to clearly define the structures responsible for specific private enterprises has been making it difficult for the latter to operate, since they do not know where to turn for the solution of their problems, specifically as regards acquisition of the means and factors of production, and this affects the performance of which they are capable for the purpose of contributing to improved supplies for the people."

BRIEFS

PORTUGUESE TV COOPERATION--A delegation from the Portuguese Radio-Television System (RTP) will arrive in Maputo tomorrow to conclude preparations for a cooperation agreement with Mozambique Experimental Television [TVE]. That is what our reporters learned yesterday from Antonio Schwalbach, director of that communications medium. Signing of the agreement is scheduled for the middle of this year. The same source said that the agreement will cover the areas of technical assistance, vocational training, the supplying of programs, and information. In Portugal meanwhile, the RTP has announced that "independently of formalization of that agreement, specific actions are being taken, including the sending of RTP productions for showing in Mozambique and the preparation of equipment and technicians." In addition to confirming that report, Antonio Schwalbach told our reporters that the TVE is already benefiting from some cooperation on the basis of a memorandum signed by officials of the two media. The TVE official added: "At this moment, an RTP producer is working with us, and it has been agreed that we will be provided with a 35mm black-and-white telecine system as well as a mobile studio with two cameras, also black and white." The delegation expected in Maputo tomorrow will consist of a member of the RTP's management, the technical director, and the director of training. The TVE has already signed one agreement with Hungary and another with Algerian Television. There are plans to extend that cooperation in the near future to Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. CRITICISMS OF GOVERNMENT, FINANCIAL PROGRAMS LEVIED

Lavish Spending by Second-Tier

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 22 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Editorial in the column "Comment"]

[Text] Thank goodness that a few DTA National Assembly members saw fit late last week to hit out at the lavish second-tier government spenders, including those in the official DTA ranks.

It now remains to be seen whether those same MNA's are prepared to do something positive about combating the very practices they have criticised.

But it goes further than that:

- The DTA will have to place considerably greater emphasis on ways of streamlining government expenditure in general, considering that it has created perhaps the most expensive government structure per capita in the world;
- And it will have to bolster its entire economic philosophy and approach if the country is truly to prosper under DTA control.

Referring to the latter point, the two most important principles are affordability and nurturing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

Neither of these principles seems to have much prominence and concern in the DTA at present.

The meaning of national affordability is straight forward: we simply cannot afford to have those things at present which are well beyond our means.

Indeed, all the more so because of negative economic circumstances and uncertain political conditions.

The second principle requires the channelling of the bulk of the nation's resources into the productive means, such that we will benefit in the long term from a growing and stable economy.

The contrary situation of course would be to direct resources into items that we cannot afford and items that will bring no lasting affect to the country. If anything, such expenditure will lead us to depression and bankruptcy.

The contracts are clearcut: Singapore, Bophuthatswana and Malawi versus Vietnam, Lesotho and Tanzania.

The choice is ours' (or the DTA's for the present time).

DTA Warned on Second-Tier

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial in the column "Comment"]

[Text]

DTA members in the National Assembly yesterday again slammed the lavish second-tier government spenders.

And rightly so.

Indeed, one can only praise the DTA members for their perception and their concern.

We heard objections to the perks given to Ministers which included massive homes, farms, vehicles, TV sets and a host of other things.

And if to add insult to injury, Mr Alex Woodman pointed out that SWA has 150 odd Ministers.

Which gives credence to our view in this column yesterday that government in SWA must be amongst the most expensive per capita in the world.

That much we accept from the DTA. But shouldn't these questions also be asked:

- Who was responsible for creating the system?
- Aren't there too few controls and wasn't there a misguided sense of trust?
- Can the country truly afford the system?
- Aren't the DTA attacks in the National Assembly on the system an indictment of the DTA's own creation?
- And is the DTA not concerned that its own creation may precipitate its own downfall?

The DTA ought to be grateful that it has been able to test its own policies; it ought now to be grateful that it is in a position to adjust and refine them.

But to do too little too late will prove disastrous and the writing is already on the wall.

Damara Government Corruption

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

FRAUD and corruption charges "second to none" were levelled at the Damara second-tier Authority in the National Assembly yesterday.

DTA Damara representative Mr Max Haraseb, let loose a tirade of allegations against the Damara Representative Authority where the Damara Council under Mr Justus Garoeb rules as the majority party.

He was speaking during the Budget debate.

After describing "only some of the most obvious cases" of corruption, Mr Haraseb asked for a commision of inquiry into the financial affairs of the Damara Authority and strict Central Government control of the finances of second-tier authority authorities.

According to Mr Haraseb, the Damara Authority's account is overdrawn by R2,5m.

The AG and other agents involved with the State's finances should head such a commission of inquiry before any further funds were allocated to the Damara Administration, Mr Haraseb said.

While several second-tier Authorities were guilty of such maladministration, Mr Haraseb said he was naming the Damaras as an example because he was intimately acquainted with that administration.

SPECIAL FAVOURS

Not only the MECs and even MLAs in the Damara Administration received special favours in the granting of cash loans, but even the wives of the Damara MECs received up to R25 000 cash loans from public funds for private business, alleged Mr Haraseb.

Administration leaders such as MECs received subsidies to buy private motor vehicles and then used their travel allowences to repay the money to the Administration, he continued.

Mr Haraseb mentioned one case where an MEC received a loan from the Administration, purchased a Toyota truck for R7 000 and used the rest to buy a tip truck for his private business. The business involved working on a contract awarded to him by the Damara Administration, Mr Haraseb added.

Some of the drought relief funds allocated to the Damara Administration for additional land for Damara farmers had been used to buy erven in the towns of Government officials, charged Mr Haraseb.

According to him, the fiddling of travel allowances by some Damara MECs and MLAs was costing the Damara Administration thousands of rands.

Mr Haraseb said a speaker at the recent congress of the ruling Damara Council in Otjiwarongo had boasted that Standard 6 girls were employed by the Damara Administration for salaries between R500 and R600 per month.

Mr Haraseb mentioned two administration vehichles – DVO 112 and DVO 115 – which were used to convey congress delegates to the venue in Otjiwarongo.

"These are only the obvious eye-openers", said Mr K Haraseb.

According to Mr Haraseb, on average, an MEC gets a R50 000 cash loan for himself from the administration, his wife R25 000, and when this sum is multiplied by the five MECs it could be understood why that . . administration had an overdraft of R2,5m.

"These are the same people who attack the DTA Government and who accuse us of dishonesty and oppression while they are enriching themselves at the cost of the people", said Mr Haraseb.

Eleven-Kingdom Plan Criticized

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] SWA cannot afford 11 kingdoms of the kind reflected by the White Representative Authority, according to RP member of the White Legislative Assembly, Mrs Anna Frank.

Mrs Frank was addressing a "re-organisation" function of the RP at Hochfeld.

"SWA does not have the money. We can't afford it. We should rather see that the country can stand on its own legs economically and give urgent attention to items such education and housing", she said.

Mrs Frank hit out the R400 00 house that has been built for the Chairman of the White Executive and said that the wrong example has been set for the other representative authorities.

Mrs Frank said furthermore that the Whites should remain part of the political mainstream in SWA and should not allow themselves to become alienated.

"Only the closest cooperation can create a peaceful future", she added.

Finance Minister's Budget Criticized

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Editorial in the column "Comment"]

[Text] SA Finance Minister Owen Horwood's Budget has turned out to be surprisingly mild considering the subcontinent's present economic circumstances.

The greatest area of concern of course has been the sharp decline of the gold price from an average of 613 dollars an ounce in 1980 to 460 dollars in 1981 and an average so far this year of 364 dollars. In recent weeks the price has fluctuated around 320 dollars.

The affect of this has been a drop in government income from gold of R2,17b in 1981-82 to an expected R900m for the current fiscal year.

Coupled with the aforementioned has been the levelling off and contraction of other sectors of the SA economy.

Yet against that seemingly frightening background, Minister Horwood drew up a Budget of R18,2b total expenditure of which he has a deficit before borrowing of R2,3b. This amounts to 2,8 percent of the GDP.

His approach was to keep the increase in expenditure at a minimum (up 11,5 percent which is well below the current inflation rate), impose a 5 percent loan levy on individual taxpayers, increase company tax from 40 to 42 percent and to introduce a slight increase in indirect taxation.

Most important, the Exchequer will not be forced to go to the banking sector for net recourse which would have the effect of pushing local interest rates up even higher.

Significantly, however, Minister Horwood does not feel that local interest rates are high yet in real terms which could mean that he will have no objection to Reserve Bank Governor Gerhard de Kock turning the screws even tighter if inflation cannot be contained.

Welcome measures to the South Africans must undoubtedly be increased relief for social pensioners, civil servants, married working women and wine and fruit-juice drinkers.

It is not clear yet what Minister Horwood has in store for SWA, but going by the aforementioned, it would seem that we can expect a financial contribution equal to that last year in money terms, but not necessarily in real terms.

Minister Horwood described his own Budget as "conservative and strict".

On balance, again, we would describe it as slightly milder than that.

But by the same token, SWA has not had the boom that South Africans have come to enjoy.

'Big Spenders' Rapped

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE big-spenders in the second-tier of government came under sharp attack in the National Assembly this week from C van Wyk, a DTA Coloured representative.

He was giving his maiden speech.

Mr Van Wyk said that the squandering of money by the second-tier authorities was extremely irresponsible, and he referred in particular to the Coloured authority which had apparently bought TV and video sets worth R2m and six buses for cultural purposes worth R400 000.

"I wonder what this 'Coloured culture' involves", he asked.

"Is it a new form of discrimination?"

Mr Van Wyk said that the money would have been better spent on:

- Old age homes in Windhoek and Keetmanshoop;
- More institutions for the handicapped;
- Rehabilitation centres;
- Institutions for the blind and deaf;
- Sports facilities in rural areas;
- And additional classrooms.

"In some classes there are 40 to 50 children which does not allow for a fair education", he said.

"And because those children don't get a fair education, many of them become juvenile delinquents".

Mr Van Wyk said that many people had expressed concern to him about the irresponsible spending and he believed that the vast majority of people in the DTA opposed it.

"People want to know how Mr Barney Barnes can still be in the DTA and spend money in an irresponsible way."

"Is the DTA aware of it", he asked.

"I urge that an in-depth investigation be appointed immediately to put a stop to such practices", he said.

NDP, DAMARARAAD REPORTEDLY FORM NEW PARTY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] MR PETER KALANGULA's NDP and Mr Justus Garoëb's Damararaad agreed in principle in Windhoek this morning to merge.

The new party will be potentially one of the most powerful in the country.

The Owambo-based NDP broke away from the DTA recently while the Damararaad broke away from the NNF.

No firm decisions have been made as yet on the leadership of the new party and nor has a name been decided. The existing leadership of the two parties will cooperate on a fairly loose basis for the time being.

Negotiations between Messrs Kalangula and Garoëb started yesterday and proceeded fairly rapidly because of the considerable common ground that was found between them. Final agreement was reached late yesterday and confirmed this morning.

Details were still being thrashed out at a local hotel at the time of going to press.

General agreement is said to have been reached on these points:

- That all Namibians be united into one nation and that ethnic interests will be secondary to national interests;
- Opposition to the present ethnic form of government;
- The process to independence must be hastened;
- An end must be brought about to the war in the north;
- And everything possible must be done to accelerate the country's economic development and that housing and education be made top priorities.

Asked to comment this morning, Mr Garoëb said: "We have reached agreement on many matters and we are now exploring others. We will also be reporting back to our respective parties before the issue is finalised".

Mr Kalangula said in turn that he was "delighted about developments. I think that we are starting to move now and people are beginning to realise that we are a factor to reckon with."

Mr Kalangula said that a press conference will be called in the near future to spell out the details, once they had been accepted fully by both parties.

He also confirmed that arrangements were being made to hold a meeting in Katutura within the next few weeks and details will be spelt out there as well.

KALANGULA: NO RECONCILIATION WITH DTA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 22 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE National Democratic Party is in no mood whatsoever to rejoin forces with the ruling DTA in the forseeable future.

That was the blunt reaction this morning of NDP leader Mr Peter Kalangula when asked to comment on the diplomatic posturing of DTA members of the National Assembly towards the NDP late last week.

Mr Katuutire Kaura intimated that there was common ground between the NDP and the DTA because the NDP members were once part of the DTA crucible while Mr Gregoir Tibinyane said that he supported Mr Kalangula on certain issues and Mr Kalangula might have got his own way in the DTA if he was more patient.

Mr Kalangula said this morning however that the NDP's differences with the DTA remained, and not least of these was that the DTA is perpetuating apartheid in "a more human form".

"I cannot accept that, despite the promises DTA leaders have made to NDP members if they return to the DTA", he said.

"The major stumbling block in the DTA is Mr Mudge who is trying to divide the people while others try and unite the people".

Mr Kalangula was particularly critical of Mr Mudge's alleged moves a fortnight ago to upturn the apple cart among the Owambos.

He made two major allegations:

- That because people in Owambo refused to turn out at DTA meetings in large numbers, Mr Mudge allegedly ordered Defence Force helicoptes to go out and fetch Owambo headmen and bring them in to DTA meetings;
- And that the Headmen were brought to Windhoek last week under allegedly false pretences.

Mr Kalangula claimed that the Headmen have complained to him on both allegations.

Referring to the first allegation, Mr Kalangula said that the Headmen told him that they were given little option in the matter; they were told that they had to attend the DTA meetings "or else".

On the second allegation, he said the Headmen were invited to attend the opening of the National Assembly, "but it appears that the real intention was to give a show of DTA strength which is partly groundless".

Asked to comment on the DTA's allegations that manipulators are responsible for the NDP break from the DTA, Mr Kalangula remarked: "Who are these manipulators? I challenge the DTA to tell us. I went on record about how I felt about matters long before I broke away from the DTA and it was clear to the DTA then that there were no manipulators. Where have these manipulators now suddenly come from?".

VEHEMENT DENIAL

Mr Kalangula also denied vehemently that the NDP was receiving financial support from abroad.

Mr Kalangula said that the building up of the NDP was going smoothly and much enthusiasm was building up.

Arrangements are being made this week for he NDP's first meeting in Katutura which will be held within the next few weeks.

Mr Kalangula predicted that there would be a large turn out.

"People in Windhoek and Katutura have been urging me all along to have a meeting in Katutura and I feel that we now have to respond positively", he said.

Mr Kalangula is in Windhoek at present on party business.

VEII CLAIMS HE HAD NO OPTION BUT RESIGNATION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Mar 82 p 4

[Text]

MR GERSON VEII, ex-President of Swanu, has resigned his leadership positions in the party.

He remains a member of the party, however.

Mr Veii had "no other option but to relinquish my post in the Polit Bureau and the Central Committee of the party", he said in a letter of resignation yesterday.

The reasons Mr Veii gives for his resignation include "the spirit of distrust, dislike which almost adjoined to hatred is still prevailing and the spirit of noble cooperationis noneexistent."

Mr Veii also said the December congress at which he was replaced by Mr Moses Katjiuongua as President, was "far from being democratic."

"While being aware that the whole atmosphere was heavily poisoned against me, to the extent of 'ousting him and destroying him politically', I was nevertheless prepared to participate in the proceeding of the congress".

Mr Veii said he kept his peace not because of weakness or political ineptitude as was calimed in certain quarters, but because of political considertions.

. He did not want to cause a split in the ranks of the liberation movement, which would only help the enemy. He was still prepared to cooperate "with those who did not want or like me, but that cooperation was regarded as a sign of weakness and capitulation.

"It should by now be very clear that under the present political situation prevailing in Swanu that I cannot carry on with my work to the satisfaction of the party and the struggle as a whole."

Approached for comment, Swanu President Mr Katjiuongua said it had come as a surprise.

"It is a pity that something that should be an internal party problem should be taken to the press."

He said a full statement would be issued by the Polit Bureau in the next few days.

MUDGE REPORTEDLY ACCUSES WEST GERMANY OF INTERFERING POLITICALLY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] COARSE interference by West Germany, top SA Government officials and the SA Defence Force have manipulated domestic Namibian politics, precipitating an open confrontation between Peter Kalangula, former DTA President and Mr Dirk Mudge, Chairman of the Ministers' Council.

This startling allegation was made by Mr Dirk Mudge in the National Assembly yesterday afternoon.

He was replying to the second reading on the Additional Appropriation Budget.

In a lengthy address which caused ripples across the floor as well as in the public and press gallery, Mr Mudge yesterday initiated his long-awaited exposé of the 'hidden manipulators' behind the recent events in the DTA which culminated in its Owambo arm, the National Democratic Party, breaking away from the Alliance.

Mr Mudge promised a few weeks ago to "expose the manipulators".

After dealing with his past relationships with Mr Peter Kalangula, and with Mr Werner Neef, both of whom left their top positions in the DTA and the Ministers' Council to combine forces in new political force, Mr Mudge described the inconsistencies in the political moves of both.

These inconsistencies, he said, indicated that something else lay behind it all.

"Plans that don't make sense are usually someone else's plans", he said.

The manipulations by outside forces of internal DTA affairs, have been consciously cloaked in personal confrontation between Mr Mudge and his two ex-colleagues, according to Mr Mudge.

INTERFERENCE

"I wondered, and then I realised there was interference in our affairs, threatening the right of the Territory's people to their own self-determination", he said.

Referring to the "crude interference by West Germany in our affairs", Mr Mudge named a German journalist, Dr Hans Germani, in his role with the new political force pitting itself against the DTA.

"There are people" (from West Germany) who paid visits here with other motives than the arrangements of independence elections", Mr Mudge said.

Turning to "crude interference by senior officials in the SA Government", Mr Mudge said he did not want to be misinterpreted.

He was not alleging that the Prime Minister or, Ministers of Defence and of Foreign Affairs, were involved, since he could not prove it, but certain officials have been manipulating the politics of SWA, continued Mr Mudge.

He went on to say that Dr Germani gave Mr Werner Neef air tickets to arrange finance for the new political party at the SA Defence Force in Pretoria.

Mr Mudge said a full report on Mr Neef's visit to Pretoria will still be produced.

"I want to know what happened there".

LAUGHED

At this point Mr Werner Neef laughed across the floor.

Mr Mudge went on to say that he appreciated the role of the SADF in the Territory. It was fighting for the whole SA. The DTA was also fighting at the frontline of SA, he added.

"But officials of that Government are involving themselves with matters with which they have nothing to do", he warned. ("Hulle bemoei hulle met sake waarmee hulle niks te doen het nie"). It had been agreed that the SADF would fight militarily while the DTA would conduct the political struggle, according to Mr Mudge.

He then went on to hint at the role of other factors in the political intrigue against the DTA, in a mysterious statement:

"FINISH IT OFF"

"There are still other links in this business. Links which stretch back a long way. And there's one of them that I'm busy following up, about which I'm not speaking today — one of them. But I warn that when I have finished with that link (skakel) I will have completely finished with it. I promised I would talk when I am ready, and then I will finish it off once and for all".

Mr Mudge then said he doubted that the DTA would go ahead with the current Western initiative as long as there was outside interference "in our affairs".

People can draw all sorts of conclusions, he added but "the DTA has come to stay in SWA."

In an impassioned tone, Mr Mudge then wanted to know why other political parties such as the NDP were now being backed as "winning horses". (wenperde).

"Just take the chains off the DTA and we can also be a winning horse", he said.

It was easy for other parties to reject the interim government and the constitutional system in SWA, according to Mr Mudge, because they were free to do so.

PASTOR HEITA SAYS MUDGE FORCED HIM TO RESIGN FROM NDP

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] LEADING NDP member and Owambo Executive member, Pastor Heita, told the National Assembly yesterday that he never resigned from the NDP a few weeks ago, but that he was forced to do so by DTA Chairman Mr Dirk Mudge.

Pastor Heita later withdrew his resignation.

He was one of the Owambo leaders who broke away from the DTA with Mr Peter Kalangula.

Pastor Heita who was taken aback earlier in the afternoon by Mr Mudge's attack on NDP members, said that Mr Mudge went to Owambo to see him (Pastor Heita), Mr Mudge forced him to resign from the NDP, Mr Mudge wrote the letter of resignation and forced Pastor Heita to sign it and then Mr Mudge had the letter published in Die Republikein.

Pastor Heita alleged furthermore that he was bribed to return to the DTA.

"I did not want to talk about these things but developments this afternoon have forced me to do so", he said.

"I left the DTA because I didn't like the apartheid in the organisation. The DTA maintains that it has brought all the country's groups together, but that is not true. It keeps them together while at the same time practising apartheid. One has only to look at the 11 governments in the country based on ethnicity.

"Where in the world is there another country with only 1m people and having 11 governments," he asked.

Pastor Heita said that the scorn of the DTA at the Owambo Executive having appointed Mr Werner Neef an Owambo representative showed the true colours of the Alliance.

"The Owambo Executive appointed Mr Neef because it regards him as a White Owambo", Pastor Heita said.

"When I come to Windhoek and see White and Black children playing happily at the Catholic school, it becomes clear to me that they can be educated together.

"Why hasn't the DTA opened the schools so that Owambo children can be educated with White children", he asked.

"We have been here in the Turnhalle for seven years and we are supposed to have rectified matters. The Owambos are no longer prepared to slave under the DTA as they have had to do for the past seven years".

GOLIATH

Pastor Heita said that when Mr Mudge addressed the National Assembly yesterday afternoon, he (Pastor Heita) could not help comparing Mr Mudge with Goliath.

"Mr Mudge spoke just like Goliath, saying how he would kill David and give his corpse to the vultures.

"Mr Kalangula however compares with David and Mr Mudge should not forget that the small pebble cast by David killed Goliath"

Pastor Heita said that the DTA representatives might regard themselves strong because they sit in the National Assembly, but the NDP awaited them at the polls.

"I say to you, the DTA and Mr Mudge, don't challenge us."

Pastor Heita's speech was frequently interrupted by interjections by DTA Deputy Chairman, Mr Kuaima Riruako.

Annoyed on one occasion, Pastor Heita remarked: "I trust that you are now happy that you have a doctor as leader, namely Dr Ben Africa. I hope he see's fit to give you an injection in the tongue".

BECKER MOVES TO DROP INDEPENDENCE MOVE AS FAILURE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 18 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Text]

MR Sarel Becker, leader of the HNP, presented a motion in the National Assembly yesterday which would, if passed, put the clock back at least 10 years.

The motion appeals to the SA Government, through the AG, "not to continue with the current independence exercise with respect to the Territory", but to reintroduce the status quo as it existed 10 years ago.

The motion notes that "10 years of negotiations and other activities to make SWA an independent state have clearly failed," and that "these negotiations and other activities have undermined the economic and political stability of the Territory."

It also notes that "it is now clearer than ever before that SWA's salvation lies in closer military, economic and political interaction with SA."

The concrete steps Mr Becker would like to see taken include the dissolution of the National Assembly, ending the current independence initiative, reverting to the principle of each ethnic group being given "the opportunity for self government in their own separate area", reintroduction of the position of Commissioner General for Blacks and a similar post for the "Brown peoples", scrapping the post of AG and reintroduction of direct representation for Whites in the SA Parliament.

The motion also rejects the principle of a-one-man-one-vote election "in a territory where 85 percent of the potential voters are not even capable of performing the elementary acts necessary to indicate their choice on a ballot for themselves."

In addition, the status of the White legislative assembly should be re-established as it was before the proclamation of AG 8.

The motion was not debated, but only presented to the Assembly.

Mr Becker is being watched with interest during this session of the National Assembly after he announced earlier on this year that he would resign from the Assembly during this session.

TENSION SAID BUILDING UP BETWEEN AG, VARIOUS OFFICIALS

Municipal Officials Angry

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] TENSION is building up between the AG and Municipal officials in the latest round of controversy over third-tier government.

Municipal officials are understood to be very unhappy with the sudden cancellation of a meeting with the AG, Mr Danie Hough, which was due to be held on Friday. A delegation from the Municipal Association was to meet with Mr Hough at noon to discuss the proposed take-over of third-tier government by the Ministers' Council.

According to Mr Freddie van der Merwe, Secretary of the Association, "no reasons were given" for the cancellation of the meeting. He told The Advertiser that another meeting would be held this morning at 10 am.

According to Mr Udo Klipwe, Secretary to the AG, however, the meeting will not be held today. It would only be possible to schedule the meeting for tomorrow, he said, but arrangements still had to be made.

Asked why Friday's meeting had been cancelled, he said the AG had not been able to "fit it in". He said "we simply got into difficulties with the programme."

"Its not that we don't want to see them", he said. But Municipal officials are upset at the last-minute cancellation, since the issue is regarded as an important one.

The Association is known to be strongly opposed to the takeover bid, and would like to see the recommendations of the Arnold Commission implemented. The differences centre on the question of whether a city like Windhoek should have one municipality or three.

The Arnold Commission recommends that Katutura and Khomasdal each have their own municipality.

"Each more or less homogenous local community, defined by its needs, abilities and the standard of environmental services that it accepts for itself, has a right to its own local government. The measure of authority it will have in its own matters, will depend only on the question of whether it can afford to manage itself.", the Commission states.

The Ministers' Council is opposed to the recommendations, and a controversy arose when it was said at a press conference that the Commission's recommendations had been rejected. The Council is known to be in favour of a single municipality in Windhoek, and announced at the same conference that it had decided to take over local government with effect from April 1.

This would pave the way for the unification of the municipal authorities in Windhoek, and make it possible for petty apartheid restrictions in the city to be done away with. This could affect such facilities as the swimming pool and library.

Meanwhile, divisions have emerged on the municipal scene about the issue. Some municipalities have expressed themselves in favour of the move by the Ministers' Council. It has been claimed that the move would benefit the smaller local authorities, who have so far been treated badly by the second-tier Authorities.

In a declaration at last week's meeting of the Karibib Town Council, the Mayor, Mr Volker Rodenwoldt accused the Municipal Association of distorting the truth.

Referring to a letter from the Association, he said it was "irresponsible, either through stupidity or malice." The letter, he said, presented an untruth, which undermined all trust in this institution once and for all.

Mr Rodenwoldt said the decision of the Ministers' Council was in line with AG 8, and that there had been not protest about the matter when AG 8 was promulgated.

"I repeat, firstly, new constitutional decisions have not been taken. Secondly, the report and the recommendations of the Arnold Commission have not been rejected and thirdly, the question of cities (White, Black and Brown) living together is a constitutional one and remains subject to the decisions of the AG."

It is believed that at least three other towns also support the move by the Ministers' Council.

Crisis With Ministers' Council

[Editorial in the column "Comment"]

[Text] SWA is rapidly moving into a constitutional crisis which will engulf AG Danie Hough sooner or later.

His time for remaining aloof is getting short.

Mr Hough has apparently undertaken to dismantle the Minister' Council and have it reconstituted with all second-tier governments represented if the present dispensation is rejected by the majority of second-tier governments.

This situation, as mentioned above, is already pretty close: the second-tier governments now face each other five to five (the Bushmen don't have a representative government).

Significantly, however, there is no point changing the Ministers' Council unless the National Assembly which elects the Ministers' Council is re-elected. Adapting the one and not the other would be tantamount to sweeping the existing time-bomb under the carpet.

Which brings us to this point.

Mr Hough might do good to persuade the Ministers' Council to resign and to take executive powers back into his own hands and use the existing National Assembly purely as an advisory body.

Say until independence, which shouldn't be long if we have to believe what the SA and Western governments tell us to believe.

This would probably make a lot of people a lot happier, probably even the crisis-ridden DTA.

Such government worked well under Judge Tienie Steyn and Dr Gerrit Viljoen and there is no reason why it shouldn't work now.

And if we don't have a UN-supervised election (or its equivalent) by say the end of next year and there is then no likelihood of having one, we suggest that another internally-supervised election should be called to institutionalise internal political thinking at that point in time.

That will be five years after the last one-man-one-vote election, the normal period between elections in democratic countries.

In any event, and most regretably so, we suspect that a UN-supervised election is now as far removed as it ever was.

Swapo is already blocking it and it is only a matter of time before it will be joined by the DTA.

All in all then, the time has really come for both Pretoria and the existing Ministers' Council to truely take stock of the situation.

RAILWAY OFFICIALS ACCUSED OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Representative's Accusations

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 23 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Text]

DISCRIMINATION by some White railway officials came under a scathing attack by Coloured DTA representative Alex Woodman yesterday when he suggested those giving the railways a bad name should leave.

Mr Woodman was speaking during the Budget debate in the National Assembly when he said: "People are told to keep their noses out of railway matters because it belongs to SA. I will not keep my nose out of the railways' affairs because I want the best for my people."

He said there were more good and helpful Whites on the railways than "bad ones" but added "there are a few who are a thorn in the flesh of Namibia. They cannot stay here any longer."

While he singled out certain officials, Mr Woodman said the System Manager for the Territory could not be blamed for the behaviour of all his railway staff because he was not always aware of it.

One railway official – a goods and passenger superintendent with the surname Kock – was singled out by Mr Woodman in particular.

Mr Woodman said he had been observing this man at the Windhoek Station where he told some Black passenges who had just disembarked at one end of the platform: "You kaffirs, not here, this section is for the Whites".

According to Mr Woodman, Mr Kock had made his own attitude clear on a number of occasions.

"WHITE MAN'S RAILWAY"

It was: "The railways is the White man's railways and belongs to SA you people (Black and Brown) must work with a pick and shovel."

This man had succeeded in reducing the numbers of enrolled Black and Brown employees attending Keetmanshoop on a course from 24 to three and was now doing the same in Windhoek, Mr Woodman said.

Mr Woodman mentioned one occasion when Mr Kock had said: "It is my aim to work all you kaffirs out the railways. I succeeded in Keetmanshoop and I will do it here in Windhoek too.

"It is clear that Mr Kock is a limiting factor for sound relations on the railways", Mr Woodman concluded.

He went on to relate how, in January, Mr Kock had issued written instructions that no Black or Brown employees were permitted to work as assistent ticket controllers. Instead, a White clerk was taken for the job as was the case on train number 99206 on February 21 this year, when there were three trained Black and Brown officials available", Mr Woodman said.

ONLY A CAP

On completing their training, Whites were given three uniforms, while others received only a cap. Mr Kock then imposes fines on the others for being improperly dressed, he alleged further.

"It has become railway policy that Blacks and Browns are not promoted", added Mr Woodman. He alleged that White employees were given study time during working hours to prepare for exams while others were denied this and had to study during their free time.

In this connection Mr Woodman referred to certain correspondence in the railways personnel office coded S M 590611141 dated October 19 last year.

In another case, two conductors, who were transferred to Usakos in November last year, had to stay in 'rest houses' while there were three empty railway houses available at the time.

In Windhoek there is a hostel for unmarried White railway employees which was closed to others, said Mr Woodman.

At Tsumeb Station's 'rest house', three Black and Brown officials had to sleep in the same bedding and when they complained they were told by the Station Master: "Shut up kaffir, I am the boss", according to Mr Woodman.

He referred to military service conditions for railway staff, where Whites allegedly receive a supplementary allowance in lieu of their pay, but others not.

Only White seconded railway staff from SA receive Territorial allowances, while others do not, Mr Woodman also said.

When Black and Brown staff are transferred, continued Mr Woodman, they are told at the other end that "we're not responsible for your housing", while there are empty houses at the towns, added Mr Woodman.

White railway staff could exchange their annual free rail passes for an air ticket, while others had to wait until they had 20 years service.

Mr Woodman concluded his attack on the railways in Namibia by asking for urgent attention to be given to the matter.

Charges Refuted

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] MR Mike Myburgh, System Manager of the Railways in SWA, has responded to allegations that the Railways discriminates against Black and Brown Namibians.

The allegations were made in the National Assembly by Coloured DTA representatave Mr Alex Woodman last week.

"There is no substance in Mr Woodman's allegations that the SA Transport Services in SWA uphold a policy of discrimination against Black and Brown people in the Territory", Mr Myburg says in a lengthy statement.

The System Manager invites Mr Woodman to use official channels to clarify uncertainties he has about the Railways before he makes one sided and untested allegations in public.

Mr Myburgh explains that the Railways in SWA resorts under the SA Transport Services and is not part of the SWA Government service.

Transport Services, Mr Myburgh explains, are not represented on the Ministers' Council or by any other figure in the Central Government.

It is therefore not possible to defend the Railways publicly against charges levelled at it, except through the media.

Because he was not present in the National Assembly at the time of Mr Woodman's attack on the Railways, Mr Myburgh says that he has used The Windhoek Advertiser's report "Railway Racists Must Go: Woodman" as a basis for his press release.

Mr Woodman's accusations have been recorded in the National Assembly, and Mr Myburgh says he owes it to the SA Transport Services, the White employees on the Railways, and the Superintendent Mr Cock who was personally attacked by Mr Woodman, to react.

On the charges against Mr Cock, Mr Myburgh notes:

● Mr Cock was accused of being insulting and discriminatory against Black and Brown employees of the Railways. A personal investigation by Mr Myburgh into the matter yielded nothing to support the allegations. The System Manager suggests that Mr Woodman comes foreward with specific details of the incidents he referred to in the National Assembly. Mr Myburg also gives his assurance that if any such allegation against Railways personnel could be substantiated he would not hesitate to prevent their recurrance.

● Mr Cock was accused of reducing the number of trainee railway officials (Black and Brown) from 24 to three at a course held in Keetmanshoop. No evidence for this could be found, Mr Myburgh says. He says that no course could be identified during Mr Cock's term at Keetmanshoop, in which Mr Cock could have had a say. He would also welcome more details from Mr Woodman in this regard.

● Mr Cock is further accused of appointing White clerks in place of Black employees to serve as assistant controllers, while the Black employees had the necessary qualifications to take up the posts. Mr Myburgh points out that any qualified person is not placed until he has acquired the necessary "ripeness" and ability to handle the job.

Mr Myburgh then turns on to the nine allegations which Mr Woodman made on Railway policy in SWA, based on his own perception.

He points out that seven of the points were already replied to by the railways to the Ministers' Council in writing on March 5, prior to Mr Woodman's National Assembly attack.

The following points were also made by Mr Myburgh:

● There is no difference in the uniforms issued to White and Black employees, as incorrectly alleged by Mr Woodman. There was a brief period in which there was a shortage of new uniforms which the Railways had introduced, and as a result both Black and White employees had to wait, Mr Myburgh replies.

● It is untrue that it is Railway policy not to promote Black and Brown employees. The same standards and merits are used to promote all employees, Mr Myburgh says, contrary to the allegations of Mr Woodman.

● It is also untrue that only Whites are given the opportunity to study for Railway exams during working hours, he adds.

There was one unfortunate case where a certain Mr A R Woodman – a train conductor at Windhoek, was incorrectly informed that he had to study for certain exams in his own time because it was thought he had failed in his first attempt at the exams. This mistake was discovered three weeks ago and immediately rectified.

● The SA Transport Services decided in May 1981 to allocate houses to Black and Brown Railway officials, continues Mr Myburgh. Railway officials must however apply for them, and there were no applications by the two Black conductors posted to Usakos, which Mr Woodman mentioned in his attack.

● The fact that community accomodation for unmarried seconded officials from SA is reserved in Windhoek is necessary in order to obtain the services of these Whites on which the Railways in SWA are very much dependent, according to Mr Myburgh.

● No proof could be found for Mr Woodman's allegation that three Black and Brown employees had to sleep in used bedding at Tsumeb's restrooms, and that they were insulted when they complained to the Station Master. That White employees other than the Station Master may have acted in this matter is possible, Mr Myburgh says, but action was recently taken against persons who acted in an undesirable manner.

● There is absolute parity between salaries paid to White and other employees on the Railways in SWA while they do their military service, contrary to Mr Woodman's allegations.

● Mr Myburgh explains that the payment of a territorial allowance to Whites from SA is a necessary economic move in order to obtain their services.

● The granting of free flight tickets to seconded Whites from SA once a year is necessary for the same reason, concludes Mr Myburgh.

BUDGET DESCRIBED AS STRICT, CONSERVATIVE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] THE Minister of Finance, Mr Owen Horwood has introduced a loan levy of five percent on individual taxpayers who do not fall under the final paye deduction system.

He has also increased taxation of non-mining companies as well as gold, diamond and other mining companies.

Advertising services have been brought into the ambit of general sales tax and long-term insurance companies are to be taxed an additional 10 percent on their incomes.

The ad valorem excise duty on less-essential goods is to be increased by five percent on both locally manufactured and imported goods.

Tax on cinema tickets is to be abolished.

Various concessions of a minor nature are also included in Mr Horwood's Budget package.

In his speech yesterday, Mr Horwood said that in nominal terms his Budget provided for an increase in total expenditure of only 11,5 percent above the revised estimates for the previous year.

ACTUAL DECLINE

"At the present rate of inflation this implies an actual decline in expenditure in real terms.

Since additional appropriations later in the year would be kept to the absolute minimum, the final expenditure outturn should therefore show little, if any, increase in real terms.

The deficit before borrowing was expected to rise only moderately from R2 060 million last year to R2 380 million this year. These amounts both represented 2,8 percent of gross domestic product, compared with the average of 3,4 percent over the past 22 years.

Provision had been made to finance the expected deficit in such a way that not only the Exchequer but the Government sector as a whole would be able to avoid a net recourse to bank credit.

Mr Horwood said the Budget was strict and conservative and should achieve its basic objective of contributing to the consolidation of the domestic economy and the ajdustment of the balance of payments — the two main economic priorities at this time.

It had significantly succeeded in its twin objectives of keeping the deficit before borrowing to a minimum to place as little pressure as possible on interest rates and in keeping a firm hand on Government spending, because of the huge drop in gold mining revenue and the imperative need to counter inflation.

NO EASY TASK

"To design such a Budget in the face of the expected decline of some R1 300 million in tax and lease payments by the gold mining industry and the increased cost of maintaining essential government services was no easy task.

"Such budgetary measures are never popular, but in situations like that of today they are clearly essential to preserve the basic strength of the South African economy.

"I believe furthermore that the Budget spreads the burden of adjustment in a fair and equitable manner."

REFRAINED

Mr Horwood said he had refrained from raising the rate of income tax on individuals, mainly because of the incidence of fiscal drag and bracket creeping which resulted from the combination of inflation and a progressive tax system although he had made concessions in the case of married women and those earning salaries, wages and pensions below R7 000 a year.

He had preferred to impose a loan levy which was a compulsory savings measure.

The South African economy was basically so strong and so versatile that he had no doubt that whatever the state of the world economy and the vagaries of the business cycle, the economic future was assured, the Minister said. — Sapa.

OFFICES OF 'WINDHOEK OBSERVER' RAIDED BY POLICE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] THREE plainclothed policemen this morning carried out an extensive raid on the newspaper offices of Mr Hannes Smith's Windhoek Observer.

They were apparently in search of obscene material. Angry and upset, Mr Smith told The Advertiser afterwards: "Its plain harassment of the Windhoek Observer."

Hundreds of pictures were taken in the search which took place at about 9 am. Two of the men involved in the search were from the CID, Senior Inspector J P Diedericks and Sergeant S Geyser. Leading the group was Lieutenant Johann Folscher, Head of the Drug Squad.

According to Mr Smith, the men arrived and asked for The Observer's compositor, Mr Eddie Maartins. They said they were looking for certain material. When told Mr Maartins was not in, they asked for his office, "but I told them I was responsible for anything on the premises", Mr Smith said. "They then asked for the keys to his cabinet, which I gave them."

Pictures of models are kept in the cabinet, which come from Scandinavia, France, West Germany, Italy and South Africa, according to Mr Smith. Some of the pictures are used for the back page of the Observer.

"I haven't got any pictures depicting the sex act, I wouldn't allow it", Mr Smith stressed.

He told The Advertiser he had made many contacts overseas, and had asked them to send him pictures of models.

"But no sex act pictures, I told them", he said.

"I informed the Attorney General of the arrival of the pictures, and he told me he was keeping an eye on the back page. He would be compelled to act against me if the page conveys obscenity."

Mr Smith also mentioned that he had received a phone call from State attorney Koos Brandt just half an hour before the men arrived. Mr Brandt had told him there was a complaint against him from Colonel Willie van der Merwe of the Security Police.

Col Van der Merwe had complained about the Observer's failure to correct an earlier report, in which it was alleged that Security Police members were responsible for a specific incident of littering.

Mr Smith told Mr Brandt the photographer involved was still away, and that it would not be possible to do anything before he came back.

"I don't know whether it has anything to do with it, but I just mention it. Half an hour later they were here", he told The Advertiser.

The policement had maintained a "cold courtesy" throughout, he added. No receipt had been given for the confiscated material, but he was told if he wanted to get a receipt or inspect the material, he should come to the office.

"I ignore the request", he said.

At the time of going to press, further details were not available from the Police.

NNF OBJECTS TO BASTER PATIENTS IN STATE HOSPITAL

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Mar 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Namibia National Front has come out in strong opposition to a scheme whereby Coloured and Baster patients are to be transferred to the new State Hospital in Windhoek.

No public announcement of such a step has yet been made, but the NNF says it has "strong reasons for believing that preparations are being made for such a step."

"Should this new system be introduced, it will cause considerable alarm and unhappiness in the community."

The NNF argues that the problem of overcrowding in the Katutura State Hospital should be solved by the full integration of hospital services. The planned scheme would "perpetuate apartheid and ethnic divisions.", it says.

"This is in line with Government policy of arbitrarily dividing the Namibian people along ethnic line and does not take into consideration the fact that we form a single community and are part of a single nation, Namibia."

According to the statement, friction would be provoked in the community and families with members of different population groups would be place in an "impossible position."

The NNF also responded to recent allegations of corruption amongst second-tier Authorities. It called for an investigation into the financial activities of all second-tier Authorities, "so that those who have misused public funds can be dealt with."

"Corruption is inherent in the second-tier system", it says, because these governments are unpopular and are composed of people who "do not represent the interests of the Namibian people as a whole."

The NNF also demanded the abolition of the "entire system of ethnic governments and called for a replacement by a government elected by the Namibian people in accordance with Resolution. 435.

CLUBHOUSE FOR BLACKS--A clubhouse can now be built by the Black Africa Football Club in Katutura. This emerged at the City Council meeting this week, when the Municipality took the necessary steps to make an erf available to the club. The clubhouse will be provided with ancillary recreational facilities, and will be sited in the nort-east of Katutura. In its motivation, the club stated that "the opening of such a clubhouse with other sports than those indulged in presently, will help alleviate some of the present social evils amongst the youth". The City Council also agreed to let the ground, the club was presently using to the club, as a practise field. The club has 500 supporters and 300 playing members. AKTUR OUT OF ASSEMBLY--The caucus of the SWA National Party election front, aktur, has decided not to participate actively in proceedings in the current session of the National Assembly. The leader of Aktur in the House, Mr Jannie de Wet, said in a statement in Windhoek the decision was in line with Aktur's view that the National Assembly and the Ministers' Council in their present forms did not contribute to stability in SWA in the pre-independence period. The Executive committees of the Whites and the Damaras and the Kapteinsraad of the Rehoboth Basters petitioned the AG at the beginning of the month to dissolve the Ministers' Council and the National Assembly, and to reconstitute the two bodies on more broadly-based ethnic representation. Mr De Wet said no decision had been taken as yet on the issue. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 18 Mar 82 p 1]

SUGAR PRICE INCREASE--The consumer will have to absorb more price increases in the next few months than just the two increases in the sugar price announced on Friday. The Secretary of the Department of Economic Affairs, Mr P R Kruger on Friday announced a 12,5 percent increase of the sugar price as from today as well as a further price adjustment when the rail transport tariffs become effective in April. It is expected that these increases will in turn affect the prices of all goods either containing sugar or dependent on rail transport. These increases will further have an increasing effect on the inflation rate. Mr Kruger said the controlled price of sugar would be announced in the Government Gazette after the second increase. He appealed to shop owners to sell existing sugar stocks at the old price. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 22 Mar 82 p 1]

DRAIN OF WHITES--WINDHOEK--South West Africa's total population is 1 035 000, according to preliminary census figures published in Windhoek yesterday. The most significant change in the population is among Whites who now number 71 530, a 26 percent drop from the 1970 census figure of 90 658. The population figures for some of the other groups are: Owambo 505 000, Kavango 93 560, Herero-Kaokoland 78 380, Damara 77 100, Coloureds 41 000 and Tswana 8 000. Whites formed the second largest population group after the Owambo in 1970. They now occupy the fifth place. [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Apr 82 p 13]

WHITE POPULATION DECREASES--The white population of Namibia has decreased 21 percent in 11 years. In fact, according to the 1970 census, the white population was 90,658 at that time. By 1981, it was only 71,530. In 1970, the Whites were the second largest ethnic community, behind the Ovambos. Now they are in fifth place. (REUTER) [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 4-5 Apr 82 p 2]

PRE-ELECTION SITUATION ANALYZED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2880, 16 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Article: "Presidential Battle Is On"]

[Text] Lagos, March 14--With 18 months to go before the next elections, in September 1983, the battle to succeed President Shehu Shagari is already on.

Of the five parties registered by Nigeria's Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO) for the 1979 elections which took Africa's most populous state back to civilian rule, only Mr. Shagari's National Party (NPN) seems as yet to be in a position to win on its own.

The four opposition parties have decided to realign themselves within a joint front under a "progressive" banner, to challenge the pro-Western capitalist policies of the current President.

On paper this alliance is as yet probably the only grouping able to unseat the NPN, but it has many weaknesses which will have to be overcome if it is to win the elections.

Only one of the four parties has a political programme--the Unity Party (UPN) of Chief Obafemi Awolowo presents a Socialist image--and the absence of a joint platform soon makes it clear that there is a single common denominator: "All against one". President Shagari has already condemned the ganging-up as "anti-civic".

There is also the delicate question of which candidate will represent the combined opposition at the presidential election.

The leading figures in the alliance are both old hands on the Nigerian political scene. Nnamdi Azikiwe, the first President of the Nigerian Republic (1963-66), is 77 years old today. "Zik" is the unchallenged leader of the Nigerian Peoples' Party (NPP), which gets most of its support from Eastern Nigeria, home of the Ibo people.

Chief Awolowo of the UPN is just 73. For the past 20 years "Papa Awo" has been political leader of the Yoruba people, in the west of the Federation. Both of these men know that the September 1983 elections will probably be their last chance to reach the top.

The subsequent elections, in 1987, will be a matter for the "new wave" politicians, those who have made their names since independence in 1961.

For the time being the opposition feels confident, and there has been a series of meetings between progressives of the UPN and NPP which have also attracted some members of the two north-based parties, the Great Nigeria Peoples' Party (GNPP) and the Peoples' Redemption Party (PRP).

Last week a leading member of the NPP made an eloquent birthday speech for Chief Awolowo, despite the traditional differences between Ibos and Yorubas. "Awo" repaid in kind when he was in Maiduguri, in the north-east of the country, on Thursday and announced after a meeting of the "progressives" that Zik was chairman of a progressive parties' alliance which, he said, was not yet registered as a political party.

But the public optimism does not hide the fact that the opposition has yet to produce a candidate who can confront Shehu Shagari, who is the bvious NPN candidate.

Nor is it clear that the eastern Ibos will be prepared to case their votes for Awolowo, who they accused of letting them down when they tried to secede from the Central Government almost 13 years ago. And it also remains to be seen whether the Yorubas would back an outsider for the presidency.

President Shagari, who has managed to keep his distance from a party whose members have sometimes been accused of corruption, appears increasingly as a national figure, whereas Awolowo is seen more as the man of only one party and group of people.

Nigeria is proud of its claim to be Africa's largest democracy, but it still has to prove that it has overcome the last vestiges of tribalism, and that it can demonstrate the same sense of national purpose in domestic politics as it can in international politics.

The opposition's biggest problem over the coming 18 months is likely to be finding a candidate who can appeal to the whole Federation. (A.F.P.)

PREPARATIONS FOR ELECTIONS REPORTED UNDER WAY

Progressive Parties Alliance

[Article by Chris Nwokedi]

[Text]

THE four progressive parties, in Nigeria, the NPP, UPN, GNPP and PRP have formed an alliance known as the "Progressive Parties Alliance".

The governing council of the alliance shall be the summit comprising the four party leaders, the national chairman of the NPP, Chief Adeniran Ogunsanya and the twelve progressive governors.

The decision was contained in a communique issued at the end of a three-day second meeting of the four progressive parties held in Maiduguri, Borno State.

The meeting was presided over by the national leader of the NPP, Chief (Dr) Nnamdi Azikiwe and attended by Chief Obafemi Awolowo; national president of the UPN, the executive president of the GNPP, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim and the national chairman of the NPP, Chief Adeniran Ogunsanya. Also in attendance were the twelve governors of the four progressive parties.

The national president of the PRP was unable to attend the meeting due to flight difficulties.

The summit members who were accompanied to Maiduguri by several leading members of their respective parties were received at Maiduguri Airport by the executive president of the GNPP, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim and the Borno State Governor Alhaji Mohammed Goni.

According to the communique which was signed by Chief (Dr) Azikiwe for NPP, Chief Awolowo for UPN, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim for GNPP, Alhaji Abubakar Rimi, Governor of Kano State on behalf of Chief Michael Imoudu for PRP and the national chairman of NPP, Chief Ogunsanya, the meeting reviewd the political developments in the country since its last meeting in Benin City on January 16, 1982 and were satisfied that the decision of the four parties to come together, stay together and move forward together had received the overwhelming support of millions of Nigerians.

The meeting considered the report of the committee of 40 appointed by the summit to make recommendations about the form of association that the four parties should adopt and decided after exhaustive discussion that the ideal form of association is the merger of all the progressive parties.

"The timing of the merger is to be decided by the summit", the communique added.

Earlier before the meeting opened on Wednesday the twelve progressive governors paid a courtesy call on the Shehu of Borno, Alhaji Mustafa Umar El Kanemi at his palace. On the way to the palace, the governors wen through crowded streets.

Oyo Governor on PPA

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 13 Mar 82 p 16

[Text]

THE proposed alliance of the four progressive parties in Nigeria is not just aimed at capturing the Presidency in 1983 elections rather it is aimed at changing the face of Nigeria.

This was the view of Governor Bola Ige of Oyo State while answering questions from airport correspondents on his way to Maiduguri to attend the crucial meeting of the progressives.

Governor Ige said: "We want Nigeria to be the greatest the biggest most developed and nationalist black country in the world.

"And it is only we who can do it" he stressed. He further declared: "The Presidency is only just one item. We will win the Senate the House of Representatives and the states". This he said is possible because they are working together. He explained that the result of the 1979 elections showed that the progressives could have walloped NPN if they had teamed up.

On election rigging, Governor Ige warned that "anybody who rigs the elections in 1983 will not live to hear the result. Only the widows of such persons and the orphans will be alive to hear the result".

He maintained that rigging is the worst violence that man can contrive explaining that anybody who rigs is a murderer a robber and a vagabond and will be so dealt with. "It is the greatest violence that can be perpetrated against democracy" Governor Ige added.

Commenting on the constraints in the creation of new states he said the constitution has laid down procedures adding that there is no reason why states should not be created any time before 1983 if section 8 of the Constitution is complied with.

The Governor said the Maiduguri summit of the Progressives will be very successful. He declined to comment on the agenda of the meeting, explaining that it was not for the public as yet.

Also commenting on the meeting of the Progressives Governor Bisi Onabanjo of Ogun State said the 1979 elections were fought separately even though they have much in common.

He also dismissed reports in some media about plans to impeach him by his state legislature.

'Not a Sell-Out'

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 15 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Emeka Nwabufo]

[Text] The on-going alliance between the four progressive parties, the NPP, UPN, GNPP and the Imoudu PRP is not a sell-out of the Igbos or any other tribe, the NPP has restated.

The alliance of the progressive parties, it has been reaffirmed, "is a quest for unity, good government, peace, stability and progress in the country long bedevilled with sectionalism, tribalism and blind ethnicity in its body politic".

The Anambra State Commissioner for Health, Dr Edwin Onwudiwe made these assertions over the weekend, when he addressed a mammoth crowd of NPP supporters at Amawbia, in the new Obizi Local Government.

Dr Onwudiwe described those who formulate the Igbo sell-out story as the "real detractors and enemies of their own kith and kin, those who have never had any real interest in the welfare and progress of the Igbo man."

He declared. "The turncoats and never do wells who talk of selling out the Igbos to the Yorubas have never thought of the possibility of the Igbos buzing over the Yorubas, if such nonsense proposition was ever possible."

Dr Onwudiwe, who was also the vice Chairman NPP Anambra State, recalled that "when the NPP entered into an accord with the NPN in 1979, no one shouted sell-out".

The NPP boss warned on the disastrous consequences of tribal politics, which according to him, the progressive alliance would wipe out, and emphasised that "the Igbos would no longer take it kindly with anyone, group of persons or organisation, who take pride in fanning the embers of tribalism in this country."

Dr Onwudiwe explained that "now that the two fathers of Nigerian Nationalism, Chief (Dr.) Nnamdi Azikiwe the Owelle of Onitsha, Chief Obafemi Awo had agreed to bury [word illegible] differences and work together, the nation would be afforded the opportunity of experiencing purposeful leadership."

In reference to the women folk, Dr Onwudiwe acknowledged that "the present administration in the state had been in the fore-front in the recognition of the rights of women and their role in the society--"thus the state government had spared no pains in bringing women to the realm of affairs"

The Chairman of NPP Awka Local Government Area, and co-ordinator NPP in Awka, Obizi and Ezu Local Government Areas Chief Dan C. Maduka, in his speech vowed that "Awka and the two new local government areas Obizi and Ezu, would remain safe NPP areas despite any machinations of our detractors."

Awolowo Defended

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 15 Mar 82 p 5

[Article by Obidili Onuwah in the column "Party Politics": "Is Awo Really a Tribalist?"]

[Text] As the grand alliance of the four progressive parties gathers momentum after the Benin summit, people are becoming scare stiff as if the unusual had happened. The politicians in the opposite camp are now shaking their heads in disbelief as to the compartibility of what they call incompartibles.

Following an alleged report in some national Dailies that Chief Obafemi Awolowo, the leader of the Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN) is to run for the 1983 presidential election under the banner of the Progressives, there had been wide speculation that the progressives would hit the rock because Chief Awolowo is a tribalist.

But is Awo really a tribalist? Certainly not. You cannot say Awo is a tribalist when he has not been given the chance to rule the country. In the first Republic when Chief Awolowo, as the first premier of the former Western Region, ruled West, he gave the Westerners the best he could in terms of goverpance. He introduced free education at all levels and free health care system in the former Western region – a programme which the Unity Party of Nigeria is still carrying on in the five states under its control.

It would amount to misconception for any person to call Chief Awo a tribalist because none of his actions and utterances has portrayed him so. The Igbos had many investments and landed property in places like Lagos, Ibadan, Benin etc. the domain of the Yorubas but their properties were neither confiscated nor treated as having been abandoned like in Rivers and Cross River States where the issue of abandoned property still lingers in the minds of many Igbos. How many Igbos have been butchered in Lagos or Ibadan?

The Military Governor of the defunct Western Region, Lt Col Fajuyi, a Yoruba, died because of the late General J. T. U. Aguiyi Ironsi, his guest whom he tried to protect. How many Nigerians have done or will do this? Without sentiments, of course, no ethnic group in Nigeria has demonstrated the spirit of nationalism more than the Yorubas. Chief Awolowo was dreaded much by his political opponents because he is a man with foresight who deals on hard facts. He believes in calling a spade a spade without fear or favour.

When Awo said that the state of the nation's economy was in shambles he was branded 'a prophet of doom' but when the truth started unfolding itself, we resorted to making austerity a stock in trade. May I remind the reader that Awo was saying this not as a Yorubaman but as somebody who had the interest of Nigerians at heart. He knows that the nation's economy concerns every Dick and Harry in Nigeria.

Awo is such a person that is less likely to compromise principle for short-term solutions because he argued for a change or for a specific development in a manner and language that made the rulers either before or after independence felt threatened. This is evidenced from the fact that right now, every criticism Awo makes against NPN Federal government is seen as an attempt to bring down the government, which the NPN synonymously calls confrontation.

For people to say that Chief Awo is a tribalist or aggressive is uncalled for and the assertion does not contain any element of truth for Chief Awo has not been given the chance to rule the country so as to ascertain whether his government will be a Yoruba dominated government or whether his programmes of action will be tailored towards the benefits of Oduduwa descendants. This is the only logical way people should prove whether Chief Awolowo is a tribalist.

It therefore, follows that Awo should be given a chance to rule this country because he is the person who has an answer to the political, social and economic problems of this great nation – Nigeria. He always faces the facts and that is why the facts in his statements and speeches have never been faulted at any time by any one.

The Igbos and Yorubas have the same level of political awareness so that one does not see anything wrong in the Igbos pitching their political tents with the Yorubas since they have the same aims and objectives – making Nigeria a true to type place where no person is oppressed, where equity, justice and fair play will prevail, where the nation's economy will never be dominated in the hands of group of individuals or the priviledged few, while the masses die in squalor.

Perhaps, one thing is clear, since the four progressive parties have decided to come together, work together and move forward together, it implies that whoever is chosen among the progressives will certainly deliver the good for which the progressives are destined to achieve. In this case, leadership will never constitute problem within the Progressives.

The progressives should not make the mistake of relaxing and waiting for 1983 to come before they start their compaign. This is the time the Progressives should start off, educating the people (the electorate) what the Progressives stand for, before it will be too late, no matter who leads the Progressives, be he Dr Nnamdi Azikiwe, Chief Obafemi Awolowo, Chief Michael Imodu, or Alhaji Ibrahim Waziri. The four political parties should merge, and answer one name — probably the Progressive, to ensure their political success in 1983.

NPN in Benue

IN Benue State, there is now a tussle in the National Party of Nigeria (NPN), as some members of the party have continued to declare their intentions to contest for the gubernatorial seat come 1983.

Addressing a press conference at the Benue Hotels in Makurdi last Wednesday, one of the aspirants, Mr Simon-Peter S. Gusah, announced his intention to seek nomination from his party.

According to him, his intention to contest the governorship was because Benue State has not got its right "leadership".

Mr Gusah who is also a Commercial Controller at the Benue Cement Factory in Yandev, near Gboko, stated that as far as he was concerned, the incumbent governor of the state has done nothing to the people that voted him into office.

Answering a reporter's question, Mr Gusah said that his people had given him the "go-ahead" to contest for the race, adding that "my training and experience have prepared me for the demands of the office I seek in our presidential system of government."

It would be recalled that the former Minister of Communication, Mr Isaac Shaahu has also declared his stand for the governorship race.

Also, on the race is Deputy Speaker in the State House of Assembly, Mr Audu Ogbeh (now a minister in the Shagari administration) who did say that the next governor of the state must come from "Idoma area".

AMENDMENT TO CENSOR PRESS AT ELECTION TIME DEFEATED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Biola Ajoni]

[Text]

THE Senate has rejected an amendment proposed to the electoral bill to set up a committee to censor government owned media and broadcasting houses at election time.

It rejected the amendment on Thursday after the Senate President, Dr. Joseph Wayas voted against it following a tie of 30 votes for and against it.

The amendment that a committee to be known as the committee on political broadcasting and publication by publicly owned media was proposed to clause 109 of the electoral bill by Senator Onyeabo Obi.

According to him, the committee would comprise the Chairman of FEDECO, the managing director of NTA, the general manager of FRCN, the president or chairman of the Newspapers Proprietors Association of Nigeria, the president or chairman of the Nigerian Guild of Editors and the president of the NUJ.

The committee was expected to draw up regulations guiding publication and materials for broadcast in 'consultation with political parties and publicly owned media houses'.

The amendment proposed a prison term not exceeding six months for any person or editor of the publicly owned media that contravened any of the regulations.

Also the Senate by 30 votes to 20 with five abstensions rescinded its amendment to the electoral bill that public officers shall not hold any office in a political party.

The amendment, passed on Wednesday was rescinded following a motion moved by Senator Abayomi Durosinmi that the Senate reconsider the amendment.

The motion was seconded by the leader of the Senate, Dr. Olusola Saraki and opposed by Senator Ahmadu Ali who said the amendment was in order and that the motion if passed, would open a flood gate to similar motion.

Contributing, Senator Ayo Fasanmi said while the motion 'had its merit, it appeared as if it was moved to protect the interest of certain individuals.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CIVILIANS, POLICE ANALYZED

Lagos THE NEW NATION in English Vol 5, No 34, Feb 82 pp 7, 36

[Article by Olushola Iginia: "The Civilian/Police Relations--A Cat and Mouse Game?"]

[Text] Dele Ndubinsi Udoh was an athlete and he was based in the United States of America where he had even taken a black-American wife. But in true patriotic spirit, he left his wife and home behind in America in answer to a National call, and returned to Nigeria to prepare for an international competition. Unfortunately, he died in circumstances involving some members of the Police Force.

On a cool-night in Enugu, Anambra State, a woman under-graduate of the University of Nigeria, Nsukka, was returning from a night-party together with an uncle in his Peugeot 504 car, when they ran into a Police check-point. Inexplicably, one of the Police Sentries on duty opened fire at the occupants of the car, killing the undergraduate woman instantly.

Dr. Akintunde Akindiji was a 45 years old, qualified Medical Practitioner and Medical Director of the Lafia Clinics Group in Lagos. On the night of January 13, he received an emergency call from his Clinic informing him that a pregnant woman was in serious condition and needs emergency treatment. The dutiful Dr. Akindiji packed his medical – bag and dashed off to his Clinic where he treated the woman who later became well. When he returned to his house at about mid-night, he found two plain – clothes Policemen standing in front. Surprised, the unfortunate Doctor inquired about their mission and he was told by the two Policemen that they had come to arrest a smuggler believed to be living in the Doctor's house. Characteristically, the Policemen further ordered Dr. Akindiji to surrender his car keys which he refused to do on the grounds that he had been wrongly accused. A scuffle thus ensued between himself and the Policemen and within a second, one of the Detectives had shot the Doctor, shattering his thigh bone and bursting his main artery. Furthermore, in gestapo style, the two Policemen hustled the gravely injured Doctor into a waiting taxi and sped off. Later, since the Doctor was suffering from a serious internal haemmorrhage he had to be flown to Switzerland where he could receive specialist attention. Alas, the luckless Doctor died in a Swiss hospital on January 29, 1982.

All these people, including the victims of the 1980 Black Maria tragedy, are perfect examples of the instances of extreme Police brutality and callousness in the country. Hardly a month passes now in Nigeria without hearing of at least a random, senseless Police killing of an innocent civilian. Added to this are cases of beatings of innocent civilians at police check points which have maimed many for life. Actually, the situation now is that Nigerians, especially the motorists in the various urban centres in the country, do not know whom to fear most; is it the dare-devil, homicidal armed robbers or the gun-totting, trigger-itchy anti-riot policemen who are supposed to protect their lives and property? One thing is crystal clear. The cat and mouse relationship between policemen and civilians in Nigeria today has escalated to dangerous proportions and now, more than ever, the need to curb, or at least limit this acrimonious relationship, is more glaring.

But then, what factors are responsible for this current spate of "mad-dog" killings by Nigerian Policemen? Of course, gone are those days when the quintessential Nigerian Policeman is a tall, gangly man hopelessly and solely armed with an antiquated Mark IV rifle, and a sitting-duck target for the better-armed marauders prevalent in the society. Following a huge public outcry over this unequal situation, the authorities started taking the necessary steps to update and modernize the Nigeria Police Force. Today, Nigerian Policemen are smartly outfitted and the obsolete Mark IV rifles are all but gone, replaced with more efficient and sophisticated machine-pistols and sub-machine guns. Sadly, it seems rather than turning these weapons toward miscreants, the innocent civilian population is taking more and more of the bullets from Nigerian policemen.

Quite a large cross-section of the civilian population sampled in Nigeria believe strongly that senseless and callous Police shootings of innocent people stem directly from the fact that a large number of Policemen are virtually illiterates who are not properly educated on how to deal with civilians or how to cope creditably with stress situations. They pointed out that this is why there are always casualities during students' riots or any other riot for that matter. Others believe that most of the Policemen on duty at the various Police check points are either drunk or drugged which is why they turn suicidal at the slightest provocation, either real or imagined, by civilian motorists. The question of pure jealousy on the part of Policemen against motorists can also not be ruled out. More importantly, as is evident in many cases, impulsively murderous Policemen often get away with nothing more than a wrist-slap for their atrocities and this serves as an incentive for others to behave irrationally since they know they are apt to escape with any grave misdeed done by them. This, of course, should not be so.

What then must be done to alleviate or even eradicate this ugly situation? True enough, the Inspector-General of Nigeria Police, Mr. Sunday Adewusi has issued strong warnings to his men on several occasions to desist from shooting at civilians indiscriminately. But apparently, his warnings have fallen on deaf ears since we have had two cases of fatal Police shootings since then. A solution, many people believe, is to thoroughly re-educate Nigerian Policemen on how to behave towards the public. Undoubtedly however, the most effective deterrent which make murder-inclined Nigerian Policemen pause a while longer before pulling their triggers, will be for members of the National Assembly to enact a law making senseless Police shootings of innocent civilians an offence punishable by death, no matter whether the person or persons concerned died or not. Such a legislation will definitely help to permanently rein in suicidal Policemen who appear to be rampant nowadays.

But even as we go to Press on this drastic matter concerning the Police, the crisis-ridden Force has blundered itself into yet another scandal, this time involving the Press. On Friday the 5th of February 1982, a doomed circular with Reference No. C756550/T/I signed by one Lekan Alabi, Chief Superintendent of Police on behalf of the Inspector-General of Police, emanated from the Force Headquarters in Lagos to some Newspaper Editors in the country. The circular was to the effect that Police requires all Editors to submit at least two copies of their Newspapers to their State Police Commissioners, a day prior to publication. In other words, the Police seeks to censor all Nigerian Newspapers. Following the predictable uproar which followed this Police effrontery, the Inspector General of Police hurriedly retracted the Press release by handwritten notes to all Editors of Nigerian Dailies assuring them that the censor request circular is null and void and does not have his backing. But this retraction did not quell the raging fire already sparked off by the first circular.

In its Editorial, the Nigerian Tribune in its characteristic spit-fire rhetorical style declared "In Nigeria, only the laws of the land shall prevail. The courts are eminently suited to deal with infractions against our laws by individuals and Newspapers. Extra-legal, illegal, fascist and feudal measures have no place here (in Nigeria). And we are resolutely committed to insuring this." In the same vein, the Sketch Group, one of the Publishing companies which received the first circular, declared that it has no intention whatsoever of submitting copies of its Newspapers for Police censorship. For its part, the Daily Times, adopting a softer rhetorical but no less declaratory style, came out with a front-page Comment saying that the Police, by the circular, had clearly exceeded its legal bounds and blatantly violated Section 36 sub-section 17 of the Constitution which lucidly states that "Every person shall be entitled to freedom of expression, including freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart ideas and information without interference."

However, the furor over the circular had led to the ubiquitous Probe of Enquiry set up by the Minister of Police Affairs, Mr. Emmanuel Osamor. The Probe Panel will determine the circumstances leading to the issuance of the Press Circular, determine the officer or officers involved in the issuance of the circular and finally recommend what punishment should be meted out to any officer or officers found guilty. Already, the Inspector-General of Police, Mr. Sunday Adewusi has promised to resign if it is conclusively proved that he has fore-knowledge of the Press gag circular.

Pending the outcome of the Probe however, the Nigeria Police Force would do well to shake itself out of its present disorganized, confused and bungling State. With the Nigerian Society growing more complex everyday the country cannot afford a lacklustre, corrupt, and self-perpetuating Law Enforcement Agency.

COMMENTARY: FRANCE, U.S. 'HOODWINKING' SEEN OVER CHAD TROOPS

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 14 Mar 82 p 3

[Commentary by Gausu Ahmad: "Hoodwinked OAU Troops: Why Are They Still in Chad?"]

[Text]

"ONE who deceives will always find those who allow themselves to be deceived", says Machiavelli. This maxim is true to the role of some western powers, namely France and the USA, in the Chadian crisis vis-a-vis their successful deception of some African leaders who sent their troops to destroy what remained of that country. In fact, the maxim has always been true to the relationship between the Western imperialists and most African countries.

Last year, writing under this column (SNN, 6/2/81), I made the following observations, inter-alia, as regards the African countries sending their troops to Chad: that it is a fundamental historical mistake, resulting from lack of reflection on history for the African leaders to allow themselves to be lured by Western imperialism to throw once again another African country into similar chaotic situation they threw Congo (Zaire) in the 1960's. That by all means the Libyan troops in Chad pose less of a threat to the security of African nations than say French troops or any other foreign troops. That the Libyan troops had indeed brought the much needed peace to Chad. That the extraordinary interest and support shown and promised to the OAU troops in Chad by the USA and France could never have been in good faith. And that all said and done, the history of the "peace-keeping" forces all over the world, has never been anything to write home about. In fact, they often succeed in worsening the conflicts and tensions which they are supposed to resolve or ease.

It was for the foregoing reasons that I concluded that the expulsion of the Libyan troops from Chad by Weddeye and replacing them with troops from some African countries was a big mistake committed by Weddeye and some African leaders.

The idea of sending these so-called peace-keeping forces was said to be the brainchild of the USA and France with a promise of massive financial and logistic aids for maintaining the troops. Thus, the idea was not really African in origin and it is, therefore, a misnomer in the first place to call the troops. "African peace-keeping forces." The function of these troops as conceived by the USA and France, of which most African leaders have been quite aware, was to put back Chad, firmly; into the grip of the West by remaining in the "French sphere of influence." Chad had seemed to be getting out of that sphere with the coming in of the Libyan troops.

Now that the OAU troops had accomplished their functions through the successful expulsion (by Weddeye) of the Libyan troops and also the return of chaos in that country, one wonders what those troops are still doing there.

From all indications, the troops are there doing nothing when rebel Habre has continued to make more advances into the towns and cities of Chad. It is also clear that even if the OAU troops would like to engage Habre forces, they do not have any capability to halt him both in terms of logistics and morale of the troops. Even if they have the weapons, the morale is totally lacking, since they know very well that they will be fighting for a very irrational cause.

There is also the issue that the mentors of the leaders of these OAU troops are now said to be supplying Habre with weapons with which to fight Weddeye and possibly the OAU troops. France has also stopped the arms supply to Weddeye after the so-called cease fire resolution over the Chadian crisis said to be adopted by the same OAU members who had earlier condemned Habre.

These same OAU members had earlier supported Weddeye against Habre who has all along been wrecking virtually all agreements reached for solution to the crisis. The OAU members now want Goukouni Weddeye to sit down and "negotiate" (God knows what) with Habre. May be it is because they now know that about the future of Chad as at now. Either Weddeye forgets about the OAU and sends their troops packing out from Chad and invite Libya once more to crush Habre, once and for all so as to restore true peace and national unity, or leave things as they are now which will inevitably lead to the disintegration of Chad. Weddeye under the latter option could at best retain some part of the country. The third probability is the likelihood of Habre taking over the whole country after he might have completely crushed Weddeye's forces.

Whatever the result, the OAU force in Chad have been a total failure for the organisation as far as its credibility in crisis-solving is concerned. The sooner they leave Chad the better it would be for the organization. This is particularly important for Nigeria, which has so far spear-headed the peace-keeping operation in Chad.

The situation, should also serve as a lesson to any sovereign nation which likes to believe that any of these powers can be trusted. We had had so many examples of betrayals by these powers all over the globe. The Bokassa Central African "Empire", the Shah Reza Pahlavi Iran, the Sadat's Egypt are but few examples of betrayals by the imperialist nations. African leaders should learn from these lessons.

the same America that asked them to send their troops to Chad so as to keep "peace" has now come to change her mind about who can really bring the type of "peace" America wants in Chad. Or does it have to do with the decision by the OAU to hold its summit meeting in Tripoli this year, which the US has always opposed?

It is really disheartening to note how the African leaders have allowed themselves to be hoodwinked to do one thing and then revert to the opposite as soon as they are asked to. When the African leaders were asked to support the so-called Government of National Unity (GNT) headed by Weddeye and to send troops to replace the Libyan soldiers in Chad, they quickly did so. Now that the USA and France are no more interested in Habre's success the OAU is again succumbing to the imperialist design.

The questions that remain are what are the OAU troops right now doing in Chad given the fact that at the rate at which events are going now, Habre's forces are going to overrun the whole of Chad in no time? Will they continue to remain there until they are again asked to go back to their countries by the USA and France? What would have become of Chad by then?

At any rate, there appears to be three probabilities

FORMER CORRUPTION PRACTICES BUREAU HEAD INTERVIEWED

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 14 Mar 82 p 9

[Excerpts of interview with Dr T. A. Adegbite, chairman of the defunct CPIB (Corrupt Practices Investigation Bureau) by Bukky Wilson]

[Text] SNN:— Sir, you were the Chairman of the defunct Currupt Practices Investigation Bureau (CPIB). No doubt the agency carried out some investigations during your tenure. Could you please say what became of the results of those investigations?

Dr. Adegbite:— The CPIB was the first of its kind, and it was divided into two sections — An investigation section was under me while the judicial section was manned by the Director of Public Prosecution under the Ministry of Justice. What concerned my department was the investigation of all currupt practices.

Some people were seconded to my department from the army and the police force but I wanted a federal character in the manning of my department, so Mr. R. C. Onicjupu was made the administrative officer and Alhaji Dan Adamu was assistant director of investigation.

After my staff had investigated stories thoroughly, they forwarded them to me, and I in turn went through cases to ensure there was no mistake. My job was to see that cases were fully investigated.

I then forwarded the findings of the CPIB to the Director of Public Prosecution to see whether there was any merit to the case. From then, the case was ready for prosecution and it was the responsibility of the Ministry of Justice to prosecute.

My opinion of the Ministry of Justice then was that either there were too many inexperienced legal officers or they themselves were not really serious about prosecuting anything.

About 13 cases were investigated fully by us but the Ministry of Justice claimed that there were no judges to try the cases.

Also at least 60 other cases were awaiting legal advice for us to handle.

Several times, I went to Rt. General Olusegun Obasanjo and his Chief of Staff to request that they created a special court for the bureau because the Ministry of Jutice wasn't doing justice to our cases and several times I went to the Ministry of Justice, but was often told that they were short of staff.

NNN:—Did you find your assignment challenging and easy?

Dr. Adegbite: I found my job very challenging and dangerous. On a particular occasion, 20,000 Naira was offered my private secretary by an accused to help him withdraw a letter from the CPIB file.

SNN: At present there is no more CPIB, do you think this is right?

Dr. Adegbite: I really did not see any reason why the CPIB should be wiped out, if we want to clear up curruption from our midst. The excuse for its eradication was that it didn't achieve anything but if a separate court had been created as requested by me it would have achieved a lot.

Its not achieving anything was mainly because the Ministry of Justice refused to co-operate with the bureau by refusing to give legal advice and by not prosecuting cases when required.

SNN: Given the two situations in Nigeria (i.e. military and civilian) what do you think of corruption in each of the two situations? Will you say we were more corrupt under the military than at present.

Dr. Adegbite: I think Nigerian is basically corrupt, it does not really matter what law is made, the corrupt people will always go around it.

We have a lot of corrupt people among us even at the high level but corruption is more glaring now because people no longer hide to do evil. During the military era, people hide Some of the people who now hold power feel they can get away with almost everything they do, and our law enforcement agencies are also guilty of this evil.

SNN: What do you identify as factors that contribute to corruption as the former chairman of CPIB? And what do you suggest to curb these?

Dr. Adegbite: Parents these days are neglecting their duty Some pupils are now known to be more corrupt than the adults. The homes have a lot to do with the bringing up of children.

The churches and mosques and other religious establishments have a lot to do, but very little could be done when the home is neglected. We have hope but we need an honest law enforcement agency! They should make sure that only the right people enter the force.

Also, our leaders and politicians have to show a more serious example of patriotism Majority of them only think of themselves and their families and how to build their own empires instead of how we can have a good and honest government. You have to belong to a particular tribe in this country before you could get a job.

The judiciary is the last hope of the common man, I hope and pray that it can remain free to dispence justice and I hope it won't be under the thomb of any political party now or in future because it is then that it can never be free to dispense justice.

Also, I pray that judges and magistrates will add to their legal knowledge the fear of God, and the love of the common man, I hope and pray they will also realise that one day there wil be the judgmen of God.

The Nigerian workers need to help the nation to be upright because the love of money and desire to become prosperous is found in the heart of most Nigerians.

SNN: The CPIB operated for five years, if I'm not mistaken. Would you say that the bureau effectively served its purpose?

Dr. Adegbite: The bureau couldn't have served its purpose when only one arm of its two wings was functioning.

The Ministry of Justice which was the second arm of the bureau failed to do its bit.

SNN: Would you like to comment on military and civilian administrations in the country?

Dr. Adegbite: The military rule by decree, they had the power of the gun and no civilian dare to challenge them but the civilian government is government by election, we selected them. But at the moment, our government is for the party people. If what we have now is being run properly, then we shouldn't have problems.

BENDEL GOVERNOR SUSPENDS SALARIES OF TWO TRADITIONAL RULERS

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

GOVERNOR Ambrose Alli of Bendel State has suspended indefinitely the payment of monthly stipends to two traditional rulers in the state.

The traditional rulers affected are the Otaru of Igarra and Oba Oyewole of Kakuma, both in Akoko-Edo Local Government area of the state.

In addition, the governor has redesignated the Otaru of Igarra as 'Clan Head'.

In a letter dated February 17, this year, written to the Otaru by the state government, no reason was given for the disciplinary action taken against the Otaru.

The reason given for the disciplinary action taken against Oba Oyewole was that he could not accord Governor Alli warm reception when the governor visited his area last year.

Making this known at a press conference on behalf of the five ruling houses at Igarra, in Benin City on Wednesday, Prince S.S. Obaro spoke about a grand design by the UPN controlled administration of Governor Alli to dethrone or humiliate traditional rulers particularly the Otaru of Igarra who has refused to take part in partisan politics let alone join the UPN.

'With the suspension of the payment of stipends of the Otaru and Oba Oyewole, the era of the 'no kobo obas' reminiscent of the era of one kobo obas of the former Western Region has begun in Bendel State,' he added.

Prince Obaro called on all traditional rulers in the state and all Bendelites to resist any attempt of the UPN-controlled government to subjugate and humiliate traditional rulers.

Prince Obaro who is the national legal director of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN), appealed to the Oba of Benin, Omo N'Oba who is also the special adviser on chieftaincy affairs to the state government to resolve the issue to avert intra-communal conflicts and civil disturbances in the state.

He told newsmen that the suspension of the stipends would be challenged in court.

FIVE GROUPS APPLY TO BE REGISTERED AS PARTIES

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 12 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Andrew Isibor]

[Text]

FIVE political assocations have now applied to the Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO) for registration as political parties.

Only one of these associations has already returned its completed forms to FEDECO.

If these political associations are registered by FEDECO for the 1983 general elections, this will bring to 10 the number of political parties registered in the country within the first four-year experiment with the presidential system of government introduced in the country in 1979.

Making this known at a Press conference in Benin City, Bendel State yesterday was the Chairman of FEDECO, Mr. Justice Victor Ovie-Whiskey.

Justice Ovie-Whiskey deposed that as a result of the delay in the passage of the Electoral Bill in the National Assembly, the commission has been driven to the wall, adding that the commission was now poised for the registration of any political assocation that fulfils the requirements of FEDECO in accordance with existing Electoral Act of 1977 which, he said, was still valid until a new electoral law was enacted by the National Assembly.

Asked to name the political associations that applied for registration, the FEDECO chairman said that their identities and leaders would be made known soon.

Justice Ovie-Whiskey pledged that his commission would not deny any political organisation registration as a political party as long as such organisation meets the constitutional requirements.

He was optimistic that the 1983 general elections would commence in August next year despite the delay in the passage of the Electoral Bill.

The FEDECO boss said that his commission had now taken preliminary steps to minimise the problems that would be caused by the delay in passage of the Electoral Bill.

Subsequently, he said, the registration of political parties would commence now while the revision of the voters list would follow soon.

UNLESS SETTLEMENT SOON, TROOPS MAY PULL OUT OF CHAD

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 9 Mar 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] THE Minister for External Affairs, Professor Ishaya Audu, said on Sunday in Nairobi that Nigeria would seriously consider pulling its peace-keeping troops out of Chad if there was no progress towards a political settlement of the civil war there by June 30.

In an interview before leaving the Kenyan capital for Lagos, Professor Audu said that the Nigerian Senate gave the peace-keeping troops a six-month mandate which expires on June 15.

'If there is no political progress, we will find it difficult to advise our Senate to extend the mandate,' he said. 'If there is no political progress by June 30, then the threat of pulling out becomes serious', he added.

Chadian President Goukouni Weddeye had rejected an Organisation of African Unity peace plan adopted last month, which called for negotiations with his chief rival, former defence minister Hissene Habre, elections by June 11 and a final pullout of the OAU Peace-Keeping Force on June 30.

Professor Audu, who met Kenyan President, Mr. Daniel Arap Moi, said that the peace plan should be considered final.

'I believe that a responsible head of state shouldn't commit either his own troops or external forces he has invited into his country to kill his own people in order to achieve what he calls a reconciliation in the country', Prof. Audu said.

'Goukouni himself knows that if the OAU troops walk out today, Habre's troops will walk in tomorrow—and we wouldn't hesitate to recognise Habre' he added.

Nigerian troops provide the backbone of the 3,500-man peace-keeping force, which sent to Chad last December after Libyan troops pulled out of the country. Zaire and Senegal have also contributed troops to the OAU force, which is commanded by General G.O. Ejiga of Nigeria.

Prof. Audu delivered a special message from the Nigerian Head of State Alhaji Shehu Shagari, to President Moi and said that they discussed Chad and last month's OAU foreign ministers' meeting which admitted the Polisario Front as the 51st member.

The seating of the Polisario freedom fighters who have waged a six-year war against Morocco for independence of the Western Sahara prompted a walkout by 19 OAU members.

Pro. Audu said that Nigeria and Kenya were 'very concerned' about the intergrity of the continental organisation, adding that 'the Polisario is not big enough to kill the OAU'.

The minister said 'there is hope' that something can be done before next August's OAU Summit in Tripoli, Libya, to get negotiations for a cease-fire and referendum in the Western Sahara back on track. He refused to elaborate.

HOUSE, SENATE PASS 1982 REVENUE ALLOCATION BILL

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Mar 82 pp 1, 9

[Article by Clement Eluaka]

[Text]

THE House of Representatives has passed the 1982 Appropriation Bill.

The bill provided for the Federal Government to disburse over six billion Naira from the consolidated revenue funds.

However, it was amended slightly with an increase of about 100 million Naira.

Initially, President Shehu Shagari had proposed to spend about 6.78 billion Naira from the consoliated revenue fund for this year.

Before the bill was passed, the House had previously approved the report of its committees in respect of 21 ministries and 12 government departments.

The bill did not sail through easily because of opposition from mostly UPN members who protested that increases in the votes for the presidency were not justified 'even when the House approved 20 million Naira special grant for Lagos State.'

The House has also appointed 12 members to represent it at the joint finance and appropriation committee conference which is expected to sit this morning.

President Shagari presented the 1982 budget estimates to the National Assembly late last year.

Also yesterday, the Senate passed the Appropriation Bill with a decrease of over 46 million Naira.

It passed the bill after the third reading approving 7.08 billion Naira as capital expenditure and 3.5 billion Naira as recurrent expenditure.

Before passing it, the Senate amended it to confer on the Minister of Finance the power to sign a warrant for the re-deservation of reserved expenditures in accordance with the Finance and Management Act of 1958.

Hitherto, the bill vested in the director of budget the power to sign the warrant.

The Senate had rejected a motion by Senator Jonathan Odebiyi to re-commit the bill to the committee of the whole Senate and not to pass it.

Senator Odebiyi had argued that this was necessary to resolve the issue of 803 million Naira which the executive proposed to deduct from the Petroleum Profit Tax (PPT) before paying the PPT into the consolida ed revenue fund.

The proposed deduction would be unconstitutional, he said.

WITHOUT MORE FUNDS, CHAD BASIN AUTHORITY MAY DROP PROJECTS

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Abdullahi Idris]

[Text]

Maiduguri

THE Chad Basin Development Authority (CBDA) may drop some of the eight projects it is now handlig unless the Federal Government provide enough fund for it to execute the projects.

This was announced by the General Manager of the authority, Malam Bunu Sheriff Musa while briefing President Shehu Shagari on the activities of the CBDA in New Martel, yesterday.

The general manager said last year the Federal Government approved 80 million Naira for the authority with which it embarked upon execution of a number of projects.

Malam Bunu Sheriff however said of the 130 million Naira budget prepared by the authority this year, the Federal Government approved only 45 million Naira, adding that because of this, the CBDA would have to drop some of its projects.

The general manager said the authority, had embarked on many irrigational projects, the most developed of which was the 67,000 hectares South Chad irrigational project. He added that the authority hoped to produce 20,000 tonnes of rice and 13,000 tonnes of wheat by next year.

Malam Bunu Sheriff said the authority had provided 478 farmers with developed farms for irrigation and added that the number was expected to rise to 2,500 soon.

He said even though the farmers were not entitled to any compensation, the CBDA had nonetheless worked out a method of compensating them for the 30 months period during which the farms were being developed and farmers had no means of subsistence.

On manpower problems, the general manager said the authority should be removed from the unified salary structure in order to be able to employ competent hands.

After inspecting the CBDA three megawatts power house, the president and his entourage drove to Krenowa about 12 kilometres away where he was conducted round the recently completed multi-million Naira pump station and the 38 kilometre main canal.

After a brief refreshment at the CBDA guest house at Kirerowa, the president and his entourage flew by helicopter to Baga where he commissioned the CBDA Baga Polder project.

The president left for Lagos yesterday evening.

EDITOR OF HAUSA-LANG[illegible] PAPER ARRESTED, RELEASED

Warrant for Arrest

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE acting editor of Gaskiya Tafi Kwabo, Alhaji Mohammed Babanzara Hassan was arrested by the Police at the premises of the New Nigerian Newspapers Limited, Kaduna yesterday.

Three plainclothes detectives, one from the police in Kaduna and the other two from Kano took him away at 9.45 a.m. He is to be taken to the Kano House of Assembly.

The detectives claimed that they had received instructions from the Kano State police commissioner and the assistant police commissioner in Kaduna to arrest the editor. The warrant for his arrest, according to them, was issued on February 5, this year and the Kano police commissioner received it on February 8.

The arrest of the editor is not unconnected with his non-appearance before a Kano State House of Assembly committee when he was instructed to do so recently.

The Salisu Indabo Committee of the Kano State legislature which had probed allegation of financial improprieties against some legislators had sent a warrant with number KHA/54/65 for the arrest of the editor to the police.

Appearance Before Kaduna House

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 11 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Editor of Gaskiya Ta Fi Kwabo, Alhaji Mohammed Banbanzara Hassan, who was arrested by plain-cloth policemen from Kano on Tuesday was released yesterday after a brief appearance before the Kano State House of Assembly.

The House had issued a warrant No. KHA/54/65 on February 5 for the arrest of the editor for failing to appear before the House committee probing allegations of improprieties against some legislators.

He was summoned before the House to defend his paper's publication about the alleged offence.

The speaker, Alhaji Abdullahi Abubakar Karaye, told the House yesterday that the arrest of the editor could not be effected earlier because the Commissioner of Police had been on leave.

He said the commissioner only resumed last week and immediately endorsed the warrant of arrest. He then announced the presence of the editor in the House.

He, however, said that since the House had agreed that his evidence could no longer be required, he had no op[illegible] than to release the editor.

The Speaker then warned him that the House would not view such action lightly next time.

EMBARGO ON EMPLOYMENT IN SENIOR GRADES LIFTED

[Article by Yakubu Momodu]

[Text] THE Federal Government has lifted its embargo on employment into senior grade levels in Federal ministries and parastatals.

A directive to this effect stated that recruitment in the senior grades (GL 07 and above) including transfer in Federal Government establishments should begin with immediate effect.

A statement from the Office of the President, Budget Department and signed by the Director of Budget, Mr T. A. Akinyele, declared "I wish to inform you that the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria has approved the lifting of the current freeze on new appointments in senior grades (GL 07) and above, including transfers in Federal Government establishments with effect from February 3, 1982."

The statement which was addressed to all ministries and special advisers, Secretary to the Government of the Federation, all heads of the civil service of the Federation, Federal permanent secretaries and heads of Extra-ministerial departments appealed that employing authorities should exercise utmost discretion in employing new hands.

"I must emphasise however that employing authorities should exercise utmost discretion".

SENATOR CALLS STEEL PROJECTS 'A DISASTER'

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 11 Mar 82 p 16

[Text] SENATOR David Dafinone, Chairman of the NPN Senate caucus has warned that the present steel projects in the country would bring nothing but economic disaster to the nation.

He described them as 'turn-key projects' on which proper planning and evaluation had not been carried out before they were embarked upon.

He blamed the bureaucrats for misadvising the last military regime on the viability of the projects, pointing out that the existing industries with their various locations at Aladja, Ajaokuta, Osogbo, Jos and Katsina were ill-conceived.

Senator Dafinone, who is also the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce and Industry, was refuting allegations that some senators were lobbying over the siting of new steel projects in the country.

Speaking at an interview with the New Nigerian, the Senator explained that his concern and that of most of his other colleagues, was not where the projects were being sited, but whether such projects would be viable when they eventually go into production.

For example, he said, Ajaokuta was concieved as a blast furnace mill to use 30 per cent of our coal and 70 per cent of imported coke in order to produce an acceptable blast furnace.

He said the cost of importing the coke as evaluated in the world market today revealed that Ajaokuta would be 'a tremedous loss to this nation, not only in terms of profitability, but also in foreign exchange'.

As for the steel plant at Aladja, the senator explained that the plant was designed to use one-third of its products while the balance of two-thirds was to be used as raw materials for Osogbo, Jos and Katsina Rolling Mills.

He regretted however, that those who conceived and executed the plan had not been able to find solution to the problem of transporting the raw materials from Aladja to other rolling mills at reasonable costs.

While Aladja had now gone into production, he said, the problem of transporting the raw materials which Osogbo, Jos and Katsina would use had now become 'a stark reality posing very grave problems'.

Another area in which the nation would incur huge losses, he said, were the proposed flat steel and aluminium projects, whose over-all cost would be in the neighbourhood of 10 billion Naira as against 2.6 billion Naira which the executive wanted the nation to believe.

He disclosed that the system of production (HYL step 3) which is to be used for the projects was a new process which had not been tried successfully anywhere in the world.

He said a similar system was tried in Venezuela, Libya and Mexico and it turned out to be a total failure, adding that their factories had stop production because of tremendous losses being sustained.

Each of the projects in those countries was an equivalent of two billion Naira, he said, and pointed out that while each of those countries could afford to write off such huge sums of money, Nigeria with her teeming population could not possibly afford to do so.

The Senator emphasised that he was seriously opposed to the use of the system here in Nigeria because of its failure elsewhere, adding that posterity would not forgive him if he failed to expose the economic risks involved in such a venture before it was too late.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER WANTS INCREASE IN RICE PRODUCTION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 11 Mar 82 p 9

[Text]

THE Minister of State in the Ministry of Agriculture, Alhaji Usman Sani, said rice production should increase now that its price per tonne had gone up.

Addressing a meeting of chairmen and general managers of three commodity boards—groundnut, cotton and grains in Kaduna on Tuesday, the minister said the approved producer price of rice at 400 Naira per tonne was good enough incentive.

The minister commended the proposal of the grains board to establish rice milling machines, and provide small rice mills.

He further stated that the recent increase in the price of wheat from 247 Naira to 280 Naira per tonne was in line with government policy of encouraging local production.

The minister also noted that in order to increase groundnut production, land had been acquired in Bauchi State for large-scale farming. He added that favourable response from other states for land had also been received.

The minister said that positive steps have already been taken to increase cotton production through the establishment of large-scale mechanised cotton farms.

Alhaji Sani, commenting on the reported cases of malpractices by some staff of the various boards, called for a more effective accounting system in order to prevent further loss of government revenue.

The minister also frowned at the rate at which home-made goods were smuggled to our neighbouring countries, saying that everything possible would be done to curb smuggling.

GALVANIZED STEEL IMPORTATION SAID CAUSE OF CLOSED PLANTS

Ship-load Impounded

[Text] A cargo vessel carrying 2,040 tonnes of flat galvanised sheets has been impounded by customs officials at the Apapa Wharf.

The vessel named "Gold Orli" arrived at Apapa Wharf on February 16, and was consigned to an indigenous businessman.

But following a tip-off, customs officials moved in and when the consignee could not produce a valid import licence for the items on board, the ship was seized.

This was disclosed to newsmen in Lagos yesterday by the chairman of the Galvanised Iron Sheets Manufacturers Association of Nigeria, Alhaji Kaloma.

Alhaji Kaloma declined to give further details on the arrested ship, saying that investigation into the matter was still in progress.

Alhaji Kaloma made some recommendations to curb the incidence of smuggling.

These include the cancellation of all approved user certificates found or suspected to have been improperly issued and stoppage of import licence for galvanised flat/corrugated sheets immediately.

He also suggested that all persons or organisations found to have used fraudulent means to obtain approved user certificates or to have falsified a certificate by the Federal Minister of Finance should be prosecuted.

Japanese Firms Accused

[Text] Nigerian manufacturers yesterday accused some Japanese companies of collaboration with some indigenous businessmen to sabotage the country's economy.

The manufacturers who are in the galvanised iron sheets industry, claimed that the Japanese companies were pursuing a deliberate policy of smuggling into the country, thousands of tonnes of galvanised sheets.

Making this disclosure at a Press conference in Lagos yesterday, the Galvanised Iron Sheets Manfuacturers Association of Nigeria explained that it was now on the warpath with the Japanese companies and their Nigerian collaborators.

On the effects of the alleged illegal importation of the products, the chairman of the association, Alhaji Mohammed Kaloma Ali, told newsmen that the smuggling activities had resulted in the illegal importation into the country of more than 200,000 tonnes of galvanized sheets worth about ₦100 million in foreign exchange within the past two years.

In addition, he stressed, the Federal Government had been robbed of about ₦20 million in terms of import duties because of the illegal importation.

Alhaji Kaloma pointed out that about ₦160 million investment at the galvanised industry in the country had been lying idle for almost one year now, adding that the industry was now almost strangled out of business.

He revealed that about 6,000 workers in the various galvanised companies had been laid off while about 2,000 workers for planned expansions in the industries had to wait.

On the efforts of his association to combat smuggling, Alhaji Kaloma emphasised that since 1979, they had been giving every assistance to the Federal Government on ways of arresting the ugly situation.

This included the supply of vital information on a list of all corrugators suspected of engaging in smuggling; a list of approved users certificates suspected to have been improperly issued and a list of Japanese vessels which carried about 15,000 tonnes of galvanised or corrugated sheets for delivery at Nigerian ports this year.

CLASHES REPORTEDLY KILL TWO IN BORNO STATE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 15 Mar 82 p 12

[Text] Two persons were killed in two separate clashes in Gashagar and Borno Kiji villages in Borno state recently.

Briefing some newsmen in his office, the Borno State Commissioner of Police, Alhaji Tahiru Jidda, said the Gashagar incident resulted in the death of one person with three others injured. They were later admitted at the Geidam General Hospital.

Alhaji Tahiru said police had so far arrested and charged one suspect to court while 10 others were being interrogated.

The second incident which occurred in Borno Kiji Village of Fune Local Government Area also claimed one life with two persons admitted at the Potiskum General Hospital for serious injuries.

He said seven persons were arrested in connection with this incident and charged to court for culpable homicide. The police also recovered dangerous weapons from the rioters, the commissioner said. Reasons for the clashes were not immediately known.

Alhaji Tahiru then announced that the police in Maiduguri had recovered 1,500 cartridges at the Baga Motor Park.

The police commissioner said the double barrel short-gun cartridges were concealed in 53 cartons of peak milk.

Two persons have been arrested and charged to court for unlawful possession of firearm cartridges.

Alhaji Tahiru then refuted a front page newspaper report that what the police recovered at the Baga Motor Park were large quantities of arms and ammunitions. He warned that the public should not be scared unnecessarily.

INSPECTOR GENERAL SAID ACCUSED OF HARASSING JOURNALISTS

[Text]

THE chairman of the Nigerian Peoples Party (NPP), Chief Adeniran Ogunsanya has pleaded with the Inspector-General of Police, Mr Sunday Adewusi to stop harassing Nigerian Journalists who reported what he said at a recent news conference, but to face him, the man who made the statement being reported.

In a two-page letter to the police boss written last Tuesday but made public in Lagos on Wednesday, Chief Ogunsanya said he had decided to write the Inspector-General because of the National Concord's report which revealed that the purpose of arresting, detaining and questioning some journalists recently was to cross-check with other journalists present at the news conference before knowing "the actual person who should answer charges of incitement against the government."

Chief Ogunsanya recalled knowing Mr Adewusi for the first time about 20 years ago when the police boss was an ADC to Dr Nnamdi Azikiwe and pointed out that even though since that time "several Nigerians have said several things about you (Mr Adewusi)", it was only last Friday when he (Chief Ogunsanya) was arrested and detained for seven hours that he got the opportunity to know what could happen under Mr Adewusi as first police officer of Nigeria

"It is a matter for regret that an investigation of this nature personally carried out by a commissioner of police and supervised by you can reveal such inefficiency", Chief Ogunsanya remarked in his letter.

Chief Ogunsanya recalled that a recent statement credited to a member of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN), Dr Joseph Wayas who is also President of the Senate to the effect that he would have handled the NEPA strike issue differently from the way the Minister of Mines and Power had handled it if he had the opportunity, tallied with his own statement that the Federal Government's approach to NEPA workers strike was a "national disgrace"

Chief Ogunsanya quoted six paragraphs of the Punch report of his news conference and confirmed that he had essentially made those statements, adding: "I hope I have been of sufficient assistance to you in your ambition to lock me up. You can at least leave the Punch staff alone."

Chief Ogunsanya also expressed regret that the I—G and his men were still harassing the editor of the "National Concord".

ABSENTEES TO LOSE SEATS--Members of the House of Representatives who have absented themselves from the proceedings of the House for more than 61 days may lose their seats now that the House has ordered its Committee on Ethics and privileges to compile a list of them. The Speaker of the House, Chief Ume-Ezeoke, moved the motion for such a list to be compiled after noticing frequent absences of members. The Constitution requires that Members who are absent for more than 61 days forfeit their seats. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 p 898]

SCHOOL TERM STANDARDIZATION--The Senior Deputy Registrar of the West African Examination Council (WAEC), Mr. Shiaka Esezebor has appealed to federal and state governments to standardise their school terms to ensure the availability of examiners to mark their answer papers. The Federal Government should also recognise the marking of the council's examination papers by the teachers as part of their functions. These were contained in a speech delivered at a luncheon organised by the council as part of the activities marking the 30th anniversary of the council in Lagos yesterday. Mr. Esezebor said that these would help the council to perform its functions more efficiently and effectively. He said that next Tuesday, March 23, has been set aside for the signing of a treaty drafted by representatives of all the member-countries on the reorganisation of the administrative structure of the council adding that the Minister of Education, Dr. Sylvester Ugoh would represent the Federal Government at the signing ceremony. LNG PRODUCTION--President Shehu Shagari has disclosed in Bonn that the production of Liquified Natural Gas (LNG) in Nigeria would begin in 1989. Answering questions on Wednesday during a meeting with representatives of German chambers of industries and commerce, President Shagari said consultants had been invited for the re-appraisal of the LNG project. He said the re-appraisal would be completed by January next year and that tenders would be invited for the project in March 1984, while the contract would be awarded a year later. President Shagari said 'we still have three of the partners engaged in the project with us and we are seeking for more and we hope German entrepreneurs will take interest.' He said Nigeria was confident that with the co-operation of the Germans, market for Nigeria's LNG could be secured in Western Europe, adding that this would be of mutual benefit to both countries. Presdient Shagari reassured the businessmen that there was no official policy to delay the repatriation of funds by foreign companies in Nigeria. He told the representatives that his administration had tried to remove all obstacles in the way of genuine investors. President Shagari said that as far as Nigeria was concerned, there was favourable climate for foreign investments, including full repatriation of profits and payment of technical services. OIL MILL SOON--The Federal Government is soon to establish a ₦1 million oil mill factory in the Egbado area of Ogun State. The project is aimed at boosting the Federal Government's Green Revolution Programme. This was made known in Abeokuta by the Ogun State area manager of the Nigerian Palm Produce Board, Mr. J.A. Afelumo while addressing a meeting of the Licensed Buying Agents and palm produce farmers in the state. Mr. Afelumo stated that apart from the oil mill project, the Federal Government had also made available nut cracking machine to farmers at highly subsidised rates. The area manager then appealed to farmers in the state to embark on a large scale production of palm produce so that the Federal Government's project would be fully utilised. Mr. Afelumo expressed regret over the present low production of palm produce by the farmers in the state despite an increase in producer prices recently by the Federal Government. He however hoped that with the present encouragement being given by the Federal Government, farmers in the state would do their best by producing more palm produce. RESULTS OF FOURTH SESSION OF SENEGAMBIA-CAPE VERDIAN MEETING

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 3 Mar 82 p 21

[Article by Pape Marcel Sene: "Toward the Signing of Two New Agreements"]

[Excerpt] Senegal and Cape Verde have established all the conditions necessary for providing an example of cooperation.

While nine agreements and five arrangements have already marked the 6 years since the mixed Senegalese-Cape Verdian mixed commission was established, a reliable source reports that two new agreements are to be added.

In fact, it is expected that when the work of the fourth session of the Senegalese-Cape Verdian mixed commission is completed tomorrow, the experts representing the two countries will sign a cooperation agreement in the maritime fishing sector, as well as a cooperation agreement in the public health field.

Under the terms of this latter agreement, the government of the republic of Cape Verde and the government of the republic of Senegal agree to encourage active and increased collaboration in the realms of medical information, in particular where epidemiological reports, an exchange of health and demographic statistics, and the immediate transmission of data in the event epidemics develop are concerned.

This proposed agreement also pertains to the joint struggle against major epidemic diseases such as leprosy, malaria, tuberculosis, yellow fever, cholera, measles, etc. It also stresses the exchange of experience in primary health care, research and development, and traditional medicine and pharmacopoeia, and it also stipulates the medical aid Senegal will make available to the republic of Cape Verde.

Where the draft cooperation agreement in the maritime fishing sector is concerned, its 14 articles define the relations which will prevail between the two countries in this field following the signing of the agreement, including reciprocal fishing rights for Senegalese and Cape Verdian fishing vessels, transmission of reports on catches, incentives for the establishment of mixed Cape Verdian-Senegalese companies for the establishment of industries for the processing and marketing of fishing products, and the establishment of a parity committee made up of representatives of the two governments and economic operators in the two countries responsible for overseeing the proper implementation of the provisions of the agreement.

The Senegalese-Cape Verdian mixed commission will also take up questions of a political, cultural, educational and informative nature, etc.

At the opening meeting of this mixed commission's fourth session at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Praia, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Moustapha Niasse and his Cape Verdian counterpart, Col Silvino Manuel da Luz, made reference in their respective addresses to the timeliness of excellent fraternal relations between the two peoples, and the tools for implementing the passionate desire for cooperation between two countries linked by the same destiny.

CORRUPTION ARRESTS--MM Becaye Sene and Mamadi Gassama have been arrested for enrichissement illicite. M. Sene was the Director General of the Banque de l'Habitat and M. Gassama was an electrician at the Daniel Sorano Theatre. The arrests were billed in the government controlled daily, Le Soleil, as illustrating that the special court set up last year to stamp out corruption was no respecter of rank. The court had made several enquiries since its inception but these were the first arrests made. The President was accompanied on the visit by several of his ministers, including M. Moustapha Cisse, the Vice-President of the National Assembly. The President was welcomed to the region by M. Ibrahima Kone, the Governor of Louga. The region had been chosen for an official visit. President Diouf said, in order to investigate the real situation of the peasants. The Head of State is a native of the Louga region. In a speech at Louga the President spoke, notably, of the administrative reforms that had been made in the regions in order to encourage autonomous agricultural development. The main aim of these reforms, he added, was to create a standard of living in the rural areas comparable to that in the towns. This theme was developed by M. Moustapha Cisse, who expressed concern at the extent of rural-urban migration, which was causing considerable strains on infrastructure in the cities. The President was to visit 27 towns and villages on his tour. [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3373, 29 Mar 82 pp 894-985]

INCREASED PEANUT CROP--The Gambia Produce Marketing Board had bought, through its licensed agents, 82,600 tonnes of groundnuts by the end of February. The latest Edible Nuts Report from Gill & Duffus estimates the season's crop at about 90,000 tonnes, compared with 46,000 tonnes for the 1980 season's crop. The report also suggests that there is unlikely to be much improvement in prices in the near future, except for some particular grades, because of generally good crops round the world and large stocks left over from the 1980 plantings. PRESIDENTIAL LEGISLATIVE ELECTIONS--BANJUL, March 20--Presidential and legislative elections take place in Gambia on May 4 and 5, it was announced here today. It is the first time the present will be elected by universal suffrage. Previously the head of the winning party in the parliamentary elections had automatically assumedthe post. The poll will choose 35 new Members of Parliament for the eight constituencies in this small West African country. The authorities said that, because of the state of emergency and curfew still in force since last July's abortive coup, political parties will need police permission to hold public meetings. Meanwhile, current President Sir Dawda Jawara left Gambia today for a 24-hour visit to Guinea. His last visit there was in January, when he informed Guinean President Ahmed Sekou Toure of events in Gambia since the coup attempt and the decision of his Government to form the Confederation of Senegambia with neighbouring Senegal. ENERGY POLICY DISCUSSED--The prime minister, for his part, discussed the government's energy policy and informed the Council of Ministers that he will preside on 3 March 1982 at a meeting of the National Energy Commission. Along the same line of thinking, the prime minister asked the minister of industrial development and crafts to make all arrangements for commissioning the solar energy plant in Diakhao as soon as possible, and, working with the minister of water resources, to develop wind power as an energy source. NEW CASEF BUILDING--The Administrative Center for Economic and Financial Services (CASEF) was opened yesterday in Lome. Also, the Kara regional office of the National Social Security Fund and a huge water tower at Tsevie were inaugurated on Saturday. The Lome ceremony was attended by several members of the Political Bureau and the Central Committee, National Assembly deputies, members of the diplomatic corps, several directors of financial enterprises of the area, and representatives of construction companies. Built mainly of reinforced concrete, the CASEF structure has an imposing yet elegant appearance. It has more than 500 offices and can accommodate more than 800 employees. Integrated as it is in the fine complex which includes the party headquarters and the 2 February Hotel, the center is a jewel that has been added to the list of important achievements of the Eyadema government. MARKED INCREASE NOTED IN RAIDS ON CATTLE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2878, 9 Mar 82 p 16

[Text] Kampala, March 6--Sixty-eight people were killed and more than 100 others wounded on Wednesday when at least 1,000 cattle rustlers from Uganda's Karamoja Province raided the Soroti East constituency in Usuk County in the country's east, according to unconfirmed reports here.

Half the raiders reportedly bore firearms, and the rest were said to be armed with spears.

The raid was one of the worst reported in recent years.

Each year, the Karamojong take their herds from their semi-arid province in North-Eastern Uganda to greener pastures in the south during the dry season, which lasts from December to March.

They raid cattle as they go, raising the tribal frictions with their neighbours.

The cattle raids are centuries old, but were intensified in 1979 after the Karamojong tribesmen looted an amoury belonging to Idi Amin in the Uganda-Tanzania war. They later used the guns in the cattle raids.

Uganda Government officials in Kampala privately blame the recent escalation on cheap firearms, which have alledgedly been brought into the country from neighbouring states. Two head of stolen cattle can be exchanged for a firearm in those states, one official said.

Turkana tribesmen from neighbouring Kenya, Somalis and Southern Ethiopian tribes are all said to be interested in cheap cattle from Uganda and pay the money-starved Ugandans in foreign currency, an official said.

'DIPLOMATIC SOURCES': MOBUTU MAY MOVE TROOPS FROM CHAD

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 15 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] GROWING unrest in Zaire may force President Mobutu to recall the 2,000 troops he has sent to join the Organisation of African Unity Peace-Keeping Force in Chad.

According to diplomatic sources, the troops, armed and equiped by France, have already been put on alert for an immediate return home.

They provide Mobutu with his main line of defence should unrest in Zaire get out of hand. The French decision to arm, clothe, feed and pay these soliders was Mobutu's most important gain at the summit of French-speaking African countries in Paris last year.

Africa and the world were led to believe that Mobutu had peace in Africa at heart when in reality, critics assert, he was more interested in finding a way for somebody else to pay for the troops he needs to retain his hold on power. His success was enhanced when, on a visit to Washington he persuaded the American Administration to promise that most of the 12 million dollars it had allocated to the OAU force would go to Zaire.

More recently, on a visit to Zaire in January, General Francois Giscard, chief of the military mission at the French Ministry of Co-operation and Development, promised an increase in military aid to Zaire, but made it clear that France cannot afford another direct intervestion in Zaire. French and Belgian paratroopers were flown to Kolwezi in 1978 after the massacre of 600 expatriates.

Mobutu's internal problems are growing on several fronts at once. Last week the University of Kinshasa and the National Teacher Training Institute were closed and several thousand primary school teachers who are on strike for better pay ignored Mobutu's ultimatum to return to work or be fired.

According to diplomatic sources in Kinshasa, there were also disturbances at the military base at Kitwit in the Bandungo Province, where non-commissioned officers rebelled against poor pay, miserable food and what they regard as the unjustified promotion of officers from the Equatorial Province, Mobutu's home district.

The region is commended by General Itambo Mukina Wa Kmbala, one of a group who served as NCOs in the Colonial Force Public and were promoted to colonels and generals after independence. When Mobutu assumed power in 1965, he retired them on large pensions because he did not wish to have people around him who remembered that he too had been a sergeant.

Itambo was brought out of retirement last July during a reshuffle of army posts and put in charge of what Mobutu likes to think are his most loyal troops. Itambo is held in low regard by young officers, and the recent incidents at Kitwit suggest that he may be losing his grip.

dependence.

"Black feel the Contact Group has no mandate to speak or act for them" says the report.

Black Namibians, like Afrikaner South Africans, are among the most highly Christianised people on the continent. It is estimated that nearly 90 per cent of the population of one million have been baptised. There are 300,000 Lutherans alone among the Ovambos and Okavangos. The report points out that SWAPO is often wrongly depicted as being anti-West and anti-church, yet many Namibian refugees in SWAPO camps in Angola and Zambia had their own chaplains.

responsible, and had therefore to forego compensation.

It is widely believe in Namibia that a South African army unit called Koevoet — Afrikaans for crowbar — was responsible, as it has allegedly been for other attacks on church property and for many unsolved murders, including those of businessmen who had given money to SWAPO.

The report says that if the West cannot apply enough pressure to end South Africa's stubbornness over the territory, it should support mandatory sanctions against Pretoria—"in particular a strictly monitored oil embargo."

ANALYSIS PUBLISHED ON COPPER, CREDITOR SITUATION

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3371, 15 Mar 82 pp 707, 709

[Text] ZAIRE'S POTENTIAL economic wealth has caused more economic problems than it has solved. The mineral potential of the Country has allowed it to amass an estimated $4,500m. of external debt which, because of mismanagement and falling prices for the main exports, it is unlikely to be able to pay off.

Ever since 1975, when rescheduling of external debt was first arranged, the country has gone from one repayment crisis to another. It was thought that the IMF programme for the country arranged last summer would clarify the debt situation and lead to the repayment of at least some of the principal of the debt.

The IMF stepped in in June 1981. With their seal of good housekeeping the "Paris Club" of government creditors agreed to reschedule official government debt a month later. But, by the end of last year, Zaire was over $120m. behind on payments of the bilateral government debt rescheduled in the summer.

The IMF programme, for 912m. Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) (about $1,030m.) drawable over three years starting last June, is the largest programme the Fund operates in Africa.

The loan was conditional upon stringent performance criteria, which included yet another devaluation of the beleaguered Zaire, cuts in government spending, promises to curb corruption in the state buying and marketing organisations and assurances that the budget would be balanced in 1982 and beyond.

The money was, as is usually the case with loans from the Extended Fund Facility, to be taken in tranches. 175m. SDRs have been drawn already, but IMF officials in Kinshasa (the placement in top positions at the Ministries of Finance and Planning was a condition of the loan) have ruled that further drawings will not be permitted because the "conditions" have not been fulfilled.

It is understood that President Mubutu has pleaded for more time, arguing that the political part of the operation can only be undertaken after the congress of the ruling Mouvement Populaire de la Revolution (MPR) and the ensuing legislative elections. This process is now to be completed in September, although earlier scheduled for May.

The failure to meet the IMF conditions has not pleased members of the "Paris Club" who agreed to reschedule interest and principal on part of Zaire's $3,300m. worth of bilateral government debt. The countries involved in the talks were France, Belgium, Britain, the US and five others. This year total debt service commitments are about $530m., but, added to the $120m. due from last year, it is unlikely that this can be paid.

This inability to pay even rescheduled debts adds weight to the view of the so called "London Club" of private creditors. The 122 banks involved have decided not to collectively reschedule debts as asked. A meeting of the "London Club" due to take place last September has yet to be held. Over $100m. is due in 1982 in uninsured and bank debt to members of the London Club.

The reticence of the London Club reflects purely commercial criteria. The attitude of the IMF and the Paris Club of government debtors, on the other hand, is indicative of political or longer term commercial Western interests in the region.

One of the main planks of the IMF prescription for the economy — has been devaluation of the Zaire. Last year, for example, there were two devaluations, one of 30 per cent and one of 40 per cent. The Zaire is worth, in real dollar terms, less than a tenth of its value at independence. This strategy is designed to keep the mines going; devaluation stimulates exports by cutting prices to the consumer. But devaluation has also meant a serious reduction in purchasing power for those Zairois not on the gravy train. (Most of the State companies are controlled by Mobutu's friends or relations and reprivatisation has been one of the conditions of IMF loans).

Domestic demand has been severely constrained by the devaluations. Many factories outside the privileged export (predominantly mining) sector are operating at less than a third of capacity. The labour force, too, is operating "below capacity"; unemployment in the urban areas is well over 50 per cent. Devaluation has meant an increase in the price of imported food. 20 years ago the country was a net exporter of food. Now about a third of food requirements are imported.

Zaire's copper, cobalt and uranium (this last as yet significantly exploited) are vital to commercial and strategic Western interests. It had been expected, for example, that the arrival of Socialists at the Elysée would put relations between Paris and Kinshasa on very thin ice. Soon after the arrival of President Mitterrand, it was announced that the Franco-African summit would not take place in 1981 in Kinshasa as planned, confirming this view. However, a certain rapprochement between Paris and Kinshasa was re-established when M. Mitterrand's Adviser on African Affairs, M. Guy Penne, visited Kinshasa and announced that French aid to Zaire was to be increased in all spheres. "Zaire", he added, "Is the most important francophone country after France".

The principle at the Elysée, then, is apparently one of assisting people rather than regimes. The embarrassment in Paris continues, especially as this year's Franco-African summit is still, officially, due to be held in Kinshasa in October.

Although, apart from France, there is a complex of Western interests involved in Zaire, as well as China, Japan, and Saudi Arabia, the other main support in the past has been from the US. This has sometimes been ambiguous, as was seen last September, when, shortly after one of Mobutu's main critics, the former Prime Minister, M. Nguza Karl I Bond testified to the US Senate on the corruption in the regime, the State Department made a new statement of support for Mobutu and increased military and financial aid. This support was confirmed when Mobutu visited Washington early in December and met with US leaders.

PUBLIC UNITS GOING PRIVATE--Thirty-eight Zairian state enterprises have been listed for conversion to private management, the Zairian news agency (AZAP) reports. According to the agency, the list was published Friday evening by State Commissioner for Information Kande Dzambulate after the weekly meeting of the Executive Council (government). Among the 38 enterprises are several agricultural farms, the Kisenge Mining Company in Shaba, the Forestry and Trading Company (FORESCOM) in Equateur region, two Zairian public transport companies, the National Association of Editors and Composer-Typesetters (SONECA), and the Maluku steel plant. Mr Kande said that the Maluku steel company was one of the main items on the agenda, and he explained that the agreed solution for reviving the plant is to establish an integrated, mixed economy organization. The makeup of the enterprise will be proposed by the future partners. The minister of information added that the national and international offering of shares will be conducted by the departments (ministries) of foreign affairs, finance, portfolio [as published], national economy, and industry, as well as the General Commissariat for Planning. The national steel plant, established in 1972 and located at Maluku, 80 km northeast of Kinshasa, has never operated at more than 10 percent of capacity because of supply difficulties. Its annual production is estimated at 250,000 tons. In announcing the list of 38 enterprises, the minister of information explained that this listing followed the national decision by the MPR Central Committee at its second session in July in favor of "privatization" of some unprofitable public enterprises. DISMISSAL OF TEACHERS--The governor of Kinshasa city, Sakombi Ekope, has announced that a number of Zairian teachers who have been on strike for several days over salary demands are going to be dismissed. Speaking at a rally of party members in the capital, Mr Sakombi said that all primary and secondary schoolteachers who were not on duty on Monday, as ordered by the government on Friday, are dismissed and will be sent back to their area of origin. The governor strongly criticized the "antisocial" attitude of these "recalcitrants," who, he said, have chosen to engage in a test of force with the government instead of a discussion to find appropriate solutions to their list of demands. Despite the government's ultimatum, classes had not resumed Monday in most of the capital's primary and secondary schools. The situation remained the same for the next few days except in the secondary schools, which were operating at about 75 percent, according to sources with connections in the Department (ministry) of Primary and Secondary Education. It was learned Wednesday that at the request of the secretary of state for secondary education, a number of students of the University of Kinshasa and higher institutions in the capital have been drafted into service. These drafted students reportedly will soon be used to replace teachers dismissed for not having obeyed the government ultimatum. [Text] [Yaounde CAMEROON TRIBUNE in French 14-15 Feb 82 p 15] 9920

IMF GRANTS TEMPORARY RELIEF--Although it has not met the requirements of the International Monetary Fund, Zaire, has been granted temporary relief with a loan of SDR 106.9m. (₤66.3m.) under the IMF's compensatory financing facility because of the weak demand for Zaire's principal mineral exports--copper, cobalt, and diamonds. Zaire's drawings under a SDR 912m. (₤565m.) three-year IMF rescue programme are still frozen because of failure to keep up its debt service payments, the granting of the latest facility is nevertheless taken by bankers as a limit that it remains "in good standing" at the IMF. ZCTU SEEKS PUNISHMENT OF MINISTER STOPPING UNIONIST'S INTERVIEW

Zimba's Statement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 7

[Text] THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) has asked the Party and its Government to punish permanent secretary in the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting Mr Edward Lubinda for stopping a Sunday television interview featuring chairman of the Civil Servants Union of Zambia Mr Bresford Gondwe.

ZCTU general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba said in Kitwe yesterday that a public apology from Mr Lubinda was not enough because he had muzzled a leader of a big organisation contrary to the principles of the Constitution of Zambia.

Mr Lubinda had shown disrespect for the law because Mr Gondwe was speaking on television as a leader of a registered trade union and transmission of his interview should not have been cut.

The ZCTU was watching the situation and expected to see disciplinary action taken against Mr Lubinda for flouting human rights enshrined in the Republican Constitution.

"Mr Gondwe was not insulting the Party and its Government but was merely pointing out the wrongs in the system through the media which is funded by a taxpayer for whom he was called to speak."

People who should defend the principles of the constitution are abusing it, he said.

"Mr Lubinda's action does not require public apology but demands disciplinary action against him because he directly breached the freedom of speech always defended by President Kaunda.

Trade unions under the constitution of the land and supported by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) had the powers and mandate to point out some shortcomings of their employers on conditions of service.

He said convention 151 of ILO allowed trade unions representing the public sector to freely negotiate for better conditions of service for their members "which Mr Lubinda does not seem to know".

"We find it unnecessary and unbecoming for him to have robbed the civil servants of a chance to listen to their leader. What the Times of Zambia said yesterday in its editorial is not only right but a cardinal fact.

"The ZCTU would in future review a number of issues including restrictions of the use of the mass media because we are dangerously moving in an area of dictatorship which might deny workers freedom to air their views on conditions of service."

Mr Lubinda said he had instructed TVZ to stop the prerecorded programme because Mr Gondwe was attacking the Government.

Meanwhile, Minister of Information and Broadcasting Mr Mark Tambatamba said yesterday that it was Government policy not to allow the Zambia Broadcasting Services to be used as a forum for attacking the Party and its Government.

The Government was determined to ensure Radio and Television Zambia was used for national building and those that wished to attack the Government or individuals must find other forums for that.

He was commenting on the action taken by Mr Lubinda last Sunday when he cut the transmission of a Sunday Interview programme.

Mr Tambatamba said he had personnally not watched the controversial interview and was speaking from a weak position on the issue.

Government Found Interview 'Unpalatable'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] LAST Sunday's Television Zambia interview featuring chairman of the Civil Servants Union of Zambia Mr Bresford Gondwe was stopped because the Government found it unpalatable.

Permanent secretary in the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting Mr Edward Lubinda admitted yesterday he instructed TVZ to stop the pre-recorded programme because Mr Gondwe was attacking the Government.

The Sunday Interview Proramme was recorded last Friday.

He said the Government would not allow people to use its institutions to attack it.

TVZ was a Government institution and it was not proper for the institution to invite someone to use it in attacking the Government.

"Who can allow someone into his house and give him a gun to shoot him?" Mr Lubinda asked.

He said Mr Gondwe attacked the Government as the worst employer with poor conditions of service.

NATION 'PRIORITY STATE' FOR EEC AID TO AFRICA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] ZAMBIA is classified as a priority state for European Economic Community (EEC) aid to Africa, Belgian ambassador to Zambia Mr Louis de Cleak said in Lusaka.

To this effect the country is the first one to benefit from Sysmin, the new system of support for mineral producing countries which was introduced in Lome II.

Speaking at his residence to mark the 25th anniversary of the European Economic Community Mr Cleack said the EEC had made available to Zambia a commodity aid of K10 million per year.

This was in addition to about K50 million which the country expected to receive under Lome 11.

"The share of the community and its member states in Zambia's receipts of development cooperation funds is now well over 40 per cent," Mr Cleack said.

He said nine of the community member states had bilateral cooperation programmes with Zambia which was classified as a priority state.

But he called for closer cooperation among countries to enhance development and overcome economic recession.

The privileges that Zambia enjovs from the community arise from her membership of the Lome Convention.

SWAPO CAMP PREPARED FOR LARGE INFLUX OF REFUGEES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Mar 82 p 4

[Article by Arild Vollan]

[Text] THREE new primary schools are under construction at the Namibia Health and Education Centre at Nyango in western Zambia to handle an expected big jump in enrolment.

The centre is in fact a camp for refugees from Namibia, run by the South West Africa People's Organisation — SWAPO — and the need for more schools reflects increasing pressure on SWAPO refugees as the search for a solution to the future of Namibia intensifies.

"The situation inside Namibia is getting worse and worse," says Mr Mushimba, SWAPO's chief representative in Zambia. "South African army raids deep into southern Angola are driving many of the Namibian women and children refugees there to seek safety in Nyango. We expect another 1,000 from Angola in the coming months. Camp facilities have to be expanded."

Not many outsiders reach the Nyango centre. First one needs permission from SWAPO's Lusaka office, then a travel permit from the Zambian authorities, who assign a security officer as escort. Finally there is a drive of nearly eight hours, the last stretch over a rough track scarcely recognisable as a road.

The camp itself, however, has only one guard posted at a simple wooden gate. There is no fence or any sign of weapons. Set in a pleasant countryside of tree-covered rolling hills some 200 km. east of the Angolan border, the camp in some places looks more like a farm than a sheltering place for 3,800 Namibians.

"It actually was started as a farm," Mr Kapof, SWAPO administrator of the camp explains. "Our people came here in 1974 and cut down trees to clear the land for planting.

"We now have more than 50 hectares and are adding another ten this year. The place has grown too big to be self-supporting and we depend on external aid for most of our food."

Although the camp is not armed, Kapof and other camp officers are very security-minded. They quizzed visitors thoroughly before showing them around and would not permit interviews with refugees.

SWAPO leaders explained that South Africa claims all camps are military installations and no camp is safe from South African attack. Nyango has never been attacked and Mr Kapof wants to keep it that way.

Most SWAPO refugees, perhaps 60,000, are in Angola, with smaller groups in Tanzania. Nyango is the only SWAPO camp in Zambia.

Family groups at the camp are housed in scattered, unregimented tents provided by the Lutheran World Federation. The large number of unaccompanied children live in barracks furnished with double-deck bunks.

There is a small hospital, a pharmacy, at least a dozen primary classrooms, used in shifts, and several kindergartens. Communal kitchens serve meals for the children.

"We have 1,800 enrolled in primary school classes and 300 in the pre-primary schools," Kapof explained. "We have quite a lot of children under school age and some who are beyond primary. About two-thirds of the camp population is children.

"Some have been sent here by their parents for safety; others are children of SWAPO members who have jobs or are studying in Lusaka."

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been providing assistance to Namibian refugees for several years under an Aid to Liberation Movements programme that included refugees from now-independent Zimbabwe.

The Nyango camp has received kitchen equipment, drugs and medical supplies, sewing machines for workshops, a minibus and school materials from UNICEF.

The UN High Commissioner for Refugees and many countries, including Norway, Sweden, West Germany, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria have helped make Nyango one of the best organised small refugee camps in Africa.

The children appear healthy and active. Women are busy in the fields and kitchens or can be seen making clothing in the workshops. There are few men among the refugees.

The men at work building the new school buildings are Zambians hired by a construction company.

Older boys, when they complete schooling, leave the camp. Some are enrolled in the United Nations Namibia Institute to be trained as future administrators of an independent Namibia. Most of the camp officers are graduates of the Namibia Institute.

Some older boys can be seen in workshops making furniture from locally produced lumber. There are football fields and even an occasional film for recreation.

The camp generates its own electricity and draws water from its own boreholes. There is a pig farm and a chicken farm is to be provided by UNICEF.

"The arrival of more refugees will stretch our facilities temporarily," Kapof predicted. "But we are confident we can manage, thanks to the help of our many friends and international organisations. And, of course, we all expect to return to Namibia — soon."

NCCM, RCM MERGE, BECOME ZCCM, NCCM DISSOLVED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] THE Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines was born yesterday with the sanctioning by the High Court of the merger of the two mining companies — Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and the Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM).

Giving effect to the merger RCM changed its name to ZCCM, with effect from yesterday. NCCM is to be dissolved without winding up on March 31, 1982.

A statement issued by the ZCCM spokesman named a 12-man board of directors headed by former managing director of the defunct NCCM Mr Francis Kaunda as chief executive.

The board held its first meeting yesterday at the company headquarters, which formerly housed NCCM, in Lusaka, marking the end the merger process which started on May 15, last year.

The beginning of the process was marked by President Kaunda announcing the Government's decision to merge the two former copper mining companies.

The statement said that in terms of the arrangements of the merger, RCM has taken over the undertaking, assets, rights, liabilities and obligations of NCCM with retrospective effective from April 1, 1981.

The board consists of seven A directors appointed by Zimco which holds about 60 per cent of the issued share capital of ZCCM, and five B directors appointed by the minority shareholders, ZCI Holdings, Amax Incorporated and general public.

NKUMBULA: PARTY BOYCOTT OF LAUNCHING OF MEMOIRS MOST STUPID

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE Party boycott of the launching of Harry Mwaanga Nkumbula's memoirs last Friday was "most stupid," 'the Old Lion' charged yesterday.

Speaking from his bed at his Libala home, Mr Nkumbula said it appeared as though he had no history in the eyes of UNIP.

UNIP leaders must have read the book and he did not think that there was anything to cause anxiety or worry about.

"It is a statement of fact about what happened and it is important to have such books for posterity's sake."

He said by boycotting the ceremony, those in the leadership of the Party did not appreciate their Independence.

"I do not think they think they are independent. I do not understand them and I do not know what the Party is thinking about me."

Mr Nkumbula said he had not given much thought to the Party action, but his immediate reaction to it was that he considered it a "most stupid" decision.

The guest of honour invited to officiate at the ceremony Member of the Central Committee, who is Chairman of the Cultural Sub-Committee, Dr Henry Matipa turned down the invitation at the last moment.

Later, Dr Matipa said he did not attend because he was at a function where the President was officiating at Mulungushi Hall. He called the ceremony a "little occasion".

However, a spokesman for the publishers of the memoirs, Multimedia, said the boycott was pre-arranged.

BULGARIAN TRADE TEAM HOLDS TALKS WITH KAUNDA

[Text] ZAMBIA AND Bulgaria must find ways of raising capital to complete their joint development ventures they have embarked on, leader of the Bulgarian trade team, Mr Ognian Doynov said in Lusaka yesterday.

He said most projects embarked on by the two countries have not been realised due to lack of resources.

"We agree that to develop a country there was need for great resources. Our main concern therefore should be to stimulate collection of resources so that Zambia could later be self-sufficient."

Mr Doynov and his delegation held talks with President Kaunda at State House, Party Secretary-General, Mr Humphrey Mulemba at Freedom House and Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia at Cabinet Office. The delegation was later entertained to lunch by Dr Kaunda.

Mr Doynov stressed that Bulgaria was not interested in becoming an imperialist or capitalist power through her economic investment in Third World countries.

"What we want is to see that the standard of living of the people is raised through joint venture projects and that employment is being stimulated. Profits raised from projects should be pumped back to generate more employment and not slashed away to gain interest."

Mr Doynov also said development aid should be used immediately it is received in order to realise good return from capital and that Bulgaria and Zambia have co-operated for a long time even before Zambia's independence.

Speaking before the start of talks at State House, Dr Kaunda said the two countries had reached a number of agreements and that it was up to the people concerned to effect implementation.

The President said it was his hope that during their visit here the Bulgarian team would find a way of implementing the agreements which he termed very important.

Mr Mulemba said during his meeting with the Bulgarians that the two countries should explore new areas of co-operation in economic and other sectors. Currently Zambia was concentrating on growing more food to feed herself and some for export.

"Because of this, we thank the Bulgarian government for accepting a good number of our district governors to train in agronomy to come back and spearhead the agrarian revolution."

Mr Mulemba expressed concern at the deteriorating situation around the world with regard to peace which could only come to the world if countries improved their economies and he called on Zambia and Bulgaria to strive in this field.

Earlier, Mr Mundia said economic ventures in most Frontline States had failed because of the constant attacks from racist South African troops.

"Until Namibia and South Africa are liberated, most Frontline States will not achieve much in economic development due to destabilisation forces prevailing in the region."

Mr Mundia also said Zambia would soon focus her agricultural policy towards irrigation to improve crop output.

"We must go into irrigation because our weather is unpredictable. Last year, we had a bumper harvest and this year, we invested a lot in agriculture just to be let-down by the rains," he explained.

The Bulgarian team was being taken around by chairman of the Economic and Finance Committee, Mr Elijah Mudenda.

MUZ REJECTS NEW PENSION PLAN IN MINING INDUSTRY

Walamba's Statement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia has rejected the new pension scheme in the mining industry.

The union has appealed to the Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM) management to suspend the scheme which miners have already turned down.

In a no nonsense statement to the Press at his Katilungu House office, MUZ chairman Mr Timothy Walamba said he had decided to swiftly move in to end a wrangle between his members and the mine management whose personnel officers allegedly misinterpreted contents of the pension scheme handbook.

MUZ was not consulted on the launching of a joint exercise to explain the pension details to the workers. He met Copper Industry Services Bureau (CISB) officials on Monday at which he put across the union's stand on the scheme.

He said CISB officials apologised for this "serious oversight."

MUZ was there to champion the cause of its members and would not sit idly by while the workers were being taken for a ride.

"In MUZ today we have young men and women with degrees and other professional qualifications, who after a short glance at the new pension scheme, knew it had little to offer in terms of benefits," he said.

The contents of the handbook were not the same as those of a blueprint which gives details of earnings and how much would be due to workers on retirements.

"All these were deliberate omissions aimed at confusing miners and calculated to make the union leadership be ridiculed for inciting or influencing workers to reject the scheme".

The mine management had under-rated MUZ's capabilities by leaving them out of programmes it had planned to brief workers on the scheme.

In the white paper, companies tabulated how much money they would contribute alongside the workers own contributions which is not reflected in the handbook. Such anomalies he said were intended to demoralise employees.

Mr Walamba said Zambia's economy was sick enough as it is and needed no more bashings. "MUZ which represents a large portion of workers, had no time for quarrels which would ruin the economy through work stoppages."

It was a pity that senior staff in the industry used MUZ to have their case heard because they too had rejected the scheme.

"Since they have no union representation, senior staff have gone flat out to misinterpret the contents of the pension scheme so that it was outrightly rejected."

Mr Walamba decided to ask the mine management to suspend the pension scheme until it was amended.

He did not support any pension scheme which gave retired workers their pension in a lump sum.

In the past, the majority of retired miners who were offered lump sums ended up squatting near main townships on the Copperbelt. This could not be encouraged by MUZ, he said.

"Messengers retiring from the Civil Service settle in dignity because of a proper pension scheme which takes care of them until they die."

Offered

MUZ was against the introduction of the scheme this month because of the many statutory deducations workers would suffer such as personal levy which had been increased.

Mr Walamba planned to hold a public meeting in Chamboli mine township on Saturday to explain why the union supported its members in rejecting the scheme.

Last week, former MUZ chairman Mr David Mwila offered his services to MUZ and its members to explain the details of the pension scheme which, he said, was second to none in the country.

Mr Mwila had said as a man who was part of the negotiating team with the companies, he was better placed to explain the contents of the scheme.

But his offer was rejected by a group of youthful miners who stormed the offices of the Sunday Times in Kitwe and demanded to know in what capacity Mr Mwila would address the miners.

The workers said the former MUZ leader had failed to address them when they demanded pay increases last year.

Mwila Offers To Explain Pension Plan

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] FORMER Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) chairman Mr David Mwila has offered to help the union explain the new pension scheme details to miners at Rokana who seem to have rejected it. The scheme comes into effect next month.

Mr Mwila said this was the most opportune time to persuade miners to accept the new pension which is to replace the Supplimentary Retirement Gratuity (SRG).

Miners did not understand the details of the scheme "which is very much in their favour" because they need someone qualified enough to give them a clear picture.

Mr Mwila said he was more conversant with the scheme because he was part and parcel of the team which negotiated the pension proposals with the mining companies. The proposals were later sent to the union's legal experts overseas for verification.

Mr Mwila, who led MUZ for more than 13 years as chairman until he lost last month to Mr Timothy Walamba in a crucial election in Ndola, said miners would benefit a great deal from the pension scheme and urged them to accept it.

"There is no other pension scheme in the mining industry I know of which can be described as better than the one my administration negotiated with the mining companies together with the hefty salary rises for all the employees in the industry."

He said he was prepared to help Mr Walamba's team to "put the message across to all the miners if the present MUZ executive feels it cannot do it in view of the short time in office."

MECHANICAL DEPARTMENT'S ANNUAL REPORT NOTES FUNDS NEED

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 28 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] THE Mechanical Services Department needs more than K10 million to maintain and repair the Government fleet.

And the Government has been accused of inadequately funding the MSD whose director Mr Simon Mwamba has said: "It is a known fact that preventive maintenance in the long run is much cheaper than repairs after breakdowns."

This is contained in the department's annual report for 1980 which was tabled in Parliament before the House adjourned on Wednesday.

The report says MSD's activities had been hampered by lack of cash to buy spare parts.

The funds crisis has inevitably led to the department failing to allow for long-term planning.

"Spare parts supply failed to meet the demand and the required standard, upgrading policy was not fully adopted, improvements were not carried out and the preventive maintenance system was not introduced to mention a few areas where more funds were desperately needed."

The problems have been compounded by lack of qualified personnel and rampant indiscipline among workers 20 of whom were dismissed in 1980.

At the beginning of 1980 there was "virtually no training" arranged for MSD staff of any category and there is need for additional 1,000 tool kits for mechanics.

Mr Mwamba has, however, acknowledged that the spare parts supply position has improved over the 1979 situation although this does not meet the minimum required level.

To improve the situation the report says there is need for more funding in view of inflation and high prices as it is estimated that the department needs about K10 million above the previous allocation.

It has called for recruitment of qualified people and urged the Government to make extra provision of 20 per cent cash value for all orders on new vehicles to allow for the buying personnel.

Maintaining a running fleet is cheaper than repairing broken down vehicles, it notes.

Reviewing the operations of the workshops throughout the country, the report says the figure of outstanding jobs at the end of 1979 was 1,800 while the corresponding one at the end of 1980 was 963.

The total input in the Lusaka central workshops in 1980 was 4,933 jobs and the total output the previous year was higher at 7,924 jobs.

The department has urged the Government to increase allocations to help it operate efficiently.

ZCTU CHAIRMAN SAYS TAZARA UNDER UTILIZED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] THE Tanzania Zambia Railway Authority (Tazara) is under utilised, Zambia Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba said in Mpika yesterday.

The ZCTU chief said the railway line had the potential to create jobs if it was fully utilised.

Mr Chiluba was speaking when he opened a two-day quadrennial congress of the Railway Workers Union of Zambia at Tazara training school.

"Unless we properly gear ourselves towards its better and more effective utilisation, Tazara would only help to drain resources from other needy areas to redeem the loan whose period of grace ends this year."

Mr Chiluba appealed to the Party and its Government to allow not only copper and essential imports to use Tazara but other items which were regularly ferried by road between Zambia and East African countries.

Offset

He said items such as cement and sugar should be exported through Tazara rather than by road.

Citing the scarcity of soft drinks in most of the towns along the Tazara route in Northern Province, Mr Chiluba said in a country where price controls were permanent and regular the railway network could play a vital role to offset transport costs on items with negligible profit margin to enable goods to reach consumers.

"Compromise is a key to economic management so that a lively interplay of activities between governments and other interested parties can result in the provision of goods and services to the public."

Mr Chiluba said every tonne of cement which was diverted from Tazara and loaded on a private truck robbed Tazara revenue and the nation employment opportunities.

The ZCTU policy of protecting the interests of workers has been misunderstood by some people and the labour movement has instead been accused of being unpatriotic to the cause of the country, Mr Chiluba said. — Zana/ZIS.

CENTRAL BANK SIGNS ONE YEAR LETTER OF CREDIT TO FINANCE OIL IMPORTS

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 28 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Arnold Raphael]

[Text] LONDON, Saturday. THE Central Bank of Zambia yesterday signed a K180 million one-year letter of credit in London to finance oil imports.

The funds were raised by a syndicate of eight international banks led by the Bank of America International.

The credit carries a one-and-three-eights per cent margin over the London interbank offered rates.

The loan replaces a similar one that carried a margin of one-and-a-quarter per cent over libor.

Meanwhile, a report from Lusaka in today's Financial Times warned that the International Monetary Fund was likely to delay the third tranche of its K960 million programme in Zambia.

The London daily said any delay in the IMF tranche would exacerbate an already difficult foreign exchange position. An IMF team was due in Lusaka shortly for its second visit this year.

Under last year's agreement Zambia drew two tranches of special drawing rights K240 million — K360 million. "The latter trnanche was held up, however, by the Government's failure to keep within domestic credit ceilings and to bring down arrears in external payments to agreed targets.

But late last year, the IMF board granted a waiver and the drawing took place in December. But the same problems say the economists (in Lusaka) have resurfaced", the Financial Times said.

With arrears in import payments for imports standing at K420 million at the end of 1981, and with the figure currently standing at about K450 million, the Financial Times said: "A May tranche is now regarded as highly unlikely".

STUDENTS WHO DO NOT RETURN AFTER COMPLETING DEGREE WILL LOSE AID

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt] New Delhi, Monday.

THE Party and its Government will terminate Government scholarships to any student studying abroad who fail to return home after completing first degree, the Minister of State for Education Mr Alan Chilimboyi who is on an 11-day visit to India said today.

Clarifying a point raised by Zambian students in India at a meeting at the high commission on taking masters degrees after their first degrees, Mr Chilimboyi said as a new nation Zambia wanted all the people to participate in national development.

He said all students were expected to go home where their professional knowledge would help in the economic development of the country.

"We do not like students who spend their life time in universities because they do not compliment the efforts of the Party and its Government."

The longer a student stayed in a university the more he blocked hundreds of others waiting to fill the places. Opportunities for further education were always available to graduates after serving a minimum of three years.

He told the students that the country's current shortage of qualified manpower has forced the Party and its Government to spend a lot of money on expatriates and it was only through them as graduates that the country would achieve self-sufficiency in its manpower requirements.

UNZA AUTHORITIES ANNOUNCE DISCIPLINARY ACTION AGAINST STUDENTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] FOUR members of the student executive of the University of Zambia Students Union have been expelled while 15 other students have been suspended for one academic year.

Confirming the disciplinary action taken against the students, university authorities said in a statement yesterday that they would not condone indiscipline any more.

Expelled are: Unzasu president general, James Funduka; chairman, John Gwata Phiri; secretary general, Norbert Mumba and publicity chief Darlington Banda.

Those suspended from March 19, to September 30 next year are: Chibesa Mfuni, Alex Nkomesha, Armstrong Simakando, John Mwila, Chibamba Nkole, Bruce Mukanda, Joseph Wakumelo, Beny Chilufya, Dominic Mwansa, Fightwell Mutambo, Ngenda Kamayoyo, Evans Hapopowe, Geoffrey Mwape, John Norton Ng'uni and Ayieko Kisonyo Singoro.

"The rest of the students will be expected to return to the campus and resume their studies on April 11, 1982," the statement said.

Last week, a statement issued by the executive claimed that the entire 13 of them had been expelled together with 46 other students and that the rest of the student body would be required to re-apply for admission.

In Parliament Minister of Education and Culture Mr Frederick Hapunda said a decision to expel the students had not yet been taken.

Yesterday's statement said the student executive had clearly abused their freedom by their behaviour and arrogance against the public, property and legally constituted authority.

"The union executive has demonstrated this by issuing circulars framed in unrestrained language and by other acts of indiscipline, clearly contemptous of university authority."

At least on two occasions, they found it fit to order a boycott of classes and once led the rest of the student body to block the Great East road, disrupting traffic and causing inconvenience to the motorists without any provocation.

On another occasion, some of the leaders rampaged the kitchen and destroyed already prepared eggs in demonstration of their dislike for eggs.

SEVENTEEN VILLAGERS ABDUCTED BY ZAIRIAN SOLDIERS

Shapi's Confirmation

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] SEVENTEEN villagers from Solwezi in the North-Western Province have been abducted by Zairean soldiers and are being detained at Kipushi, Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi confirmed in Ndola yesterday.

Mr Shapi who is the chairman of the Zambia-Zaire Joint Permanent Commission said he had received a report from his counterpart in Solwezi Mr Fine Liboma on the detention of the villagers.

When contacted for comment, Mr Liboma referred all inquiries to Mr Shapi.

"I have already briefed the chairman (Mr Shapi) and I cannot comment. I will be disciplined if I give you the story instead of the chairman," Mr Liboma said.

Mr Shapi said the number of Zambians being held had increased. "I have just been informed by Mr Liboma about the arrest of the 17 people." However, he could not say when the villagers were arrested.

The matter was referred to the Zaire consul-general's office. "We want the Zairean authorities to release them immediately because they are innocent villagers."

The arrest of the villagers brings the number of Zambians being held in Zaire to 24.

Last month seven policemen were detained at Mokambo after skirmishes between Zambian and Zairean security forces.

Mr Shapi said particular attention was being given to the plight of the villagers.

And the mother of one of the people being detained, Mrs Mable Nights Mwansa said that her son Harry who was arrested at Mokambo on March 1, on his way to Mansa had been moved to Kipushi where he is being held with 16 other people in a tiny house.

Mrs Mwansa who had gone to Zaire to seek the release of her son, said she found him in Kipushi but the authorities there rejected her plea to have him released because "he was a soldier".

Mrs Mwansa who was given a chance to talk to her son, said the detainees were given only two meals a week. She said all of them complained about torture and had no shirts.

One of the detainees was Mr Pascala Mbulo who said he was related to Member of the Central Committee and Executive Secretary for the Women's League Mrs Chibesa Kankasa.

Mrs Mwansa said she had already sent a message to Mrs Kankasa telling her about the detention of Mr Mbulo.

Mrs Mwansa appealed to the Government to take a tough line and secure the release of the Zambians.

Joint Commission Criticized

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] BORDER problems between Zambia and Zaire seem to be increasing instead of decreasing. This is in spite of the existence of a permanent joint commission on the issue between the two.

The latest pinprick is the reported arrest and detention in Kipushi, Zaire, of seventeen villagers from Solwezi in the North-Western Province.

This brings to 24 the number of Zambians being held in Zaire. Last month seven policemen were detained at Mokambo during skirmishes between Zambian and Zairean security forces.

Naturally there is bound to be angry vituperations from Zambians over this latest development. Some may even try to make political capital out of it by blaming the Party and its Government for lack of a firm stand in securing the release of those detained.

Others may want to demand that Zambia should take decisive retaliatory action against Zaire. These are the normal reactions of people who have been deeply wounded basselessly.

But we plead and caution against any rush action. Zambians, as usual, should keep their cool. They should not do anything that might make the situation worse than it is.

Ultimately it is better — to use a popular phrase — to suffer peacefully than to exacerbate a potentially new crisis. Confrontation is not in the interest of either Zambia or Zaire.

Zambians must surely know that what has happened has certainly not been sanctioned by President Mobutu Sese Seko.

He and President Kaunda are both men of peace. The last thing they would like to see is conflict between countries, let alone between Zambia and Zaire.

But the two countries are natural branches of one and the same tree. So those branches are bound to rub against each other from time without, of course, destroying themselves or the main tree in the process.

They must learn to live with the pinpricks of their neighbourliness. Better still they can remove those pinpricks for good neighbourliness to prevail.

That is why the two countries wisely set up a permanent joint commission to nip-in-the-bud any potential border problem.

But that commission appears to be looking at the problem cursorily without finding "permanent" solutions and removing the pinpricks and their causes. It should stop to be a talking forum.

Instead it should actually act to enhance and harmonies the political, cultural, economic and social connections of one people divided by an artificial barrier.

Only then will grassroots Zambians and Zaireans speak person-to-person or shout the slogan "one Zambia, one Zaire".

But for it to act it should be a full time department of the foreign ministry responsible for border issues.

Zairian Consul General's Statement

[Text] THE ZAIREAN government deplores the detentions of Zambians along the common border by Zairean authorities just as it disapproves the detentions and harassment of its nationals by the Zambian government.

Speaking at a Press conference in Ndola yesterday, Zaire consul general Mr Bomele Molingo Ikaki said detentions and harassment of Zambians or Zaireans cannot be condoned because such actions create tensions between the two sister countries.

Mr Ikaki said the recent skirmishes at Mokambo and Sakania border posts which led to the detentions of some Zambians and Zaireans should not be allowed to occur in future.

"Zambia and Zaire have a duty to find a workable and effective solution to problems pertaining to the common border in order to allow the people of the two countries particularly those along the border flow on either side of the border without being harassed."

He said Presidents Kaunda and Mobutu understand each other very well but the problem arose when it comes to the followers who are supposed to emulate the good example set by the two heads of state.

"Being followers, we have a duty to observe and maintain the policy of good neighbourliness because Zambia and Zairea will continue to exist as neighbours.

"We have an obligation to consolidate this relationship because we are developing countries and to develop we need peace."

He commended the work being done by the Joint Zambia Zaire Permanent Commission. Without its invervention in the recent skirmishes the situation could have taken a different dimension.

The task facing the commission is a difficult one but the resolutions passed at its recent meeting in Kitwe will go a long way in harmonising relations between the two countries.

He said the commission is working towards implementing effective means through which future border skirmishes can be avoided in future.

Referring to the three Zambian police officers who were detained last month after the skirmishes, Mr Ikaki said he was sure that once the procedure is followed, they are going to be released.

"It is not Zairean authorities who are delaying the release of the three police officers but there is a procedure to follow and once this is done, they are going to be released."

Every government has a system of doing things and Zaire too has a procedure to be followed before releasing detainees.

On the question of the reported 17 villagers who are alleged to have been abducted by Zairean soldiers from Solwezi in the North-Western Province, Mr Ikaki declined to comment referring questions to the Zaire ambassador based in Lusaka.

Mr Ikaki said matters arising from North-Western Province do not fall under his jurisdiction and as such, he was not competent to deal with them.

Mr Ikaki also dispelled the common belief that Zaireans were the culprits behind the smuggling of essential commodities into Zaire.

Zaireans do not have documents allowing them to buy commodities in bulk from the manufacturing firms but it was the Zambians themselves who smuggle goods for sale in Zaire.

ZAMBIA AIRWAYS CORPORATION FACES 'BLEAK FUTURE'

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 30 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] ZAMBIA Airways Corporation faces a bleak future because of numerous problems which have beset the company, Minister of State for Power, Transport and Communications Mr Maxwell Lufoma said yesterday.

Mr Lufoma said in Lusaka that the airline's problems were compounded by government policy to progressively cut subsidies and grants towards investment and operating programmes of some parastatal organisations including Zambia Airways.

Mr Lufoma was speaking at the start of official talks between Zambian delegation and a Netherlands team on bilateral air service agreement between the two countries at Ndeke House.

"Like other airlines the world over, particularly in the developing world, Zambia Airways is beset with a lot of problems and faces a bleak future but not what happened recently with AirLaker", he said.

AirLaker, a British Airline, closed down recently because of financial problems it was facing.

Mr Lufoma said until Zambia Airways' financial position improved, he did not see how it would be able to procure immediately a wide body aircraft of which cost ranged from K60 million to K80 million a piece.

Existing policies of many financial institutions did not allow soft terms in financing the purchase of aircraft because of its short life span.

"This has made it very difficult for the airlines in the developing countries to implement effectively their replacement programmes", Mr Lufoma said.

He said in order to survive, national airlines in developing countries had to be as practical as possible and operate on strict economic and commercial policies.

This meant that although Zambia Airways had embarked on a development plan aimed at acquisition of a wide-bodied aircraft, it could not proceed with it until the airline and the government were satisfied that it would be able to meet its financial obligations without relying on government investment grants scheme from which many parastatal organisations had been excluded.

Mr Lufoma who said Zambia had benefited a lot from The Netherlands' assistance hoped that a successful conclusion of the talks between the two countries would bring Zambia and The Netherlands even more closer.

Speaking on behalf of The Netherlands delegation, that country's ambassador extra-ordinary and plenipotentiary to Zambia Mr Van Limburg Stirum said although the two countries had a technical agreement dating back to 1974, plans to reach an air services agreement had been mooted only in the past four months.

Mr Stirum said he was instructed last year by his government to open talks with the Zambian government on the possibilities of an agreement being reached on an air service between them.

Early this year, a delegation from KLM, the Dutch national airline arrived in the country for talks on the subject and this was followed by a trip to The Netherlands by Minister of Power, Transport and Communications Mr Rajah Kunda last month for further discussions.

Netherlands technical assistance to Zambia dated back to the pre-independence days with several nationals of that country now working in Zambia as volunteers.

KAFUE EXPRESS PASSENGER TRAINS TO RESUME NEXT MONTH

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 29 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] THE Kafue Express passenger trains which were suspended on February 14 to facilitate the movement of copper to the ports will resume next month, a railway spokesman announced in Kabwe yesterday.

Reviewing the exercise, Zambia Railways assistant general manager for operations Mr Bernard Chewe said the movement of copper which had piled up in the country was going on smootnly.

Speaking on behalf of Zambia Railways general manager, Mr Basil Monze, who was in the Southern Province on other railway business, Mr Chewe said the remaining copper on the Copperbelt was now in transit.

At the time Kafue Express trains were suspended the Copperbelt region had a total of 8,315 tonnes of copper in stock. Another 9,680 tonnes of copper for the southern route was standing in the wagons.

Copper for the Tazara route which was in wagons on the Copperbelt stood at about 10,000 tonnes.

Mr Chewe said the stock had built up because Tazara was loaned about 900 wagons.

He said 300 of the wagons had now been repossessed and assigned to Maamba mine to speed up hauling of coal to Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia (NCZ) which was urgently needed for fertiliser production. — Zana.

ESSENTIAL GOODS STILL BEING SMUGGLED TO ZAIRE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Mar 82 p 2

[Excerpt] Essential goods still find their way into Zaire despite the statutory instrument President Kaunda issued last November.

The Control of Goods (essential commodities) Regulations came into force to stop the smuggling of goods into neighbouring Zaire.

Under the regulations President Kaunda gave immediate orders to police, customs officials, forest, immigration officers and district messengers to arrest any person with essential goods in excess of the specified amounts and whom they suspect of preparing or trying to export them.

But unrelenting Zairean smugglers and their Zambian accomplices have found a loophole in the regulations.

They connive with employees of transportation companies, using sophisticated methods to smuggle goods in bulk through the Pedicle road.

The common method used is simple: They make an underworld arrangement with senior employees of transportation companies.

For instance they obtain forged consignment papers purporting that goods are scheduled for delivery to a supermarket in Mansa, Nchelenge or Mwense.

This trick has been designed to deceive customs and excise officials at Mokambo border.

ZSIC SHOWS INCREASED PROFIT DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDING LATE 1981

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Text] THE Zambia State Insurance Corporation (ZSIC) has scooped a pre-tax profit of K20 million during the financial year ending December 31, 1981 against K16 million in the preceeding period to register an increase of nearly 26 per cent.

But the profit transferred to the company's general reserve slumped by almost K4 million from K12.5 million in 1980 to K8.8 million.

Chairman of the corporation Mr Ignatius Muchangwe says in the annual report released in Lusaka yesterday after the general meeting that for the first time ZSIC's profit became liable for income tax since the Government withdrew the exemption it had enjoyed so far.

He says that in the period the corporation will pay K10 million in tax, making it one of the highest tax paying companies in Zambia.

The corporation's two main divisions (life and non-life) registered satisfactory increases in gross premium income with the non-life returning K62 million against K53 million in 1980.

The life division netted in K25 million against K20 million in the preceding period to register an increase of 24 per cent.

On investments, Mr Muchangwe says the value of portfolio for both life and non-life now stood at K225 million as against K176 million in 1980, representing an increase of 28 per cent.

"Development of the corporation's investment portfolio continues with the object of increasing the returns and contributing to the national development programme."

As the economy of the country develops so the need arises for additional types of policies and the corporation is always examining new forms of cover.

The need for development ahead of inflation is of importance for healthy and soundly-based insurance in Zambia.

"We have already recognised the need of the farming community for wider cover on the range of crops."

The claims frequently increased, giving rise to concern as this could be attributed to rising crime rate and moral hazard.

RAILWAY WORKERS UNION HOLDS FIRST QUADRENNIAL CONGRESS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 2

[Excerpt] THE Railway Workers Union of Zambia has deplored what it called the current situation on Tazara where not only the majority of assets "seem to be concentrated in Tanzania but the monthly transfer of money in foreign exchange flows to Dar es Salaam"

The union made the observation during its first guadrennial congress held in Mpika last Sunday which Zambia Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba opened.

But, the union took note of the efforts by the Party and its Government to construct new railway lines linking Zambia with neighbouring countries.

The congress advised the Government not to construct such railway lines which could not be linked directly to any of the existing internal railway systems.

The union appealed to the Party and its Government to ensure agreements signed over any joint economic venture "adequately guarantee the worker his full enjoyment of the rights of citizenship of his contracting state."

Apparently referring to Tazara, the union said the distribution of profits and assets of such ventures should be equal.

"This quadrennial congress strongly deplores the current situation on Tazara," the union noted.

The union pledged to encourage workers on both Tazara and Zambia railways to work harder and to enforce strict discipline for higher productivity and efficiency.

During elections that followed, union chairman and secretary, Mr Dominic Katwishi and Mr Kingfred Malamba respectively were returned unopposed for another term of four years.

The other was assistant general secretary (Zambia Railways), Mr Paul Kumbuyo while Mr Ason Chewe beat Mr Ken Bwanali to retain his post of assistant general secretary (Tazara).

Mr Sylvester Mwansa beat Mr Dereck Mwiinga and retained his post of vice national chairman. Others who retained their posts were Mr Duncan Zulu and Mr Winston Mulenga as trustees. The other trustee, Mr David Situmbeko lost to Mr Joseph Mulenga.

'RAMPANT STEALING' CAUSES HEAVY LOSSES TO COUNCIL WORKSHOP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] THE mechanical workshop of the Lusaka Urban district council is incurring heavy losses because of rampant stealing.

Losses have been recorded in the council's liquor undertaking department where despite efforts to improve it the situation remains frustrating.

This is said in the district committee report to the provincial council which describes the operations of the mechanical workshop as "heartbreaking."

"Vehicles taken to it (workshop) end up with more faults than those reported. Thieving is rampant. This has resulted in the paralisation of the whole transport network of the council."

The report, which is signed by area's district governor Mr Simon Mwewa, says as a result of thefts of spare parts many council vehicles are at a standstill — adversely affecting council services such as fire, vaccuum tanker service and other essential services.

ZCCM ANNOUNCES MEASURES TO IMPROVE MINERS' SERVICE CONDITIONS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] The newly formed Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM) has announced far-reaching measures aimed at improving conditions of service for Zambian miners.

Announcing the measures during a briefing of editors-in-chief who included head of this paper Mr Naphy Nyalugwe yesterday, chairman and chief executive of the ZCCM Mr Francis Kaunda said in the new conditions:

- Expatriates will be paid local salaries equal to their Zambian counterparts;
- The discriminatory educational system favouring expatriates will be abolished;
- Harmony with the Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) by keeping employees' interests in the forefront will be maintained and the;
- Assessment of over K200 million if the current housing problems is to be solved.

But he said it would be counter-productive for the ZCCM to apply the improved terms if there was no corresponding increase in productivity from the employees.

As head of the second biggest mining company in the world, he was for change and progress so there would be prosperity in Zambia's economy.

By merging the two former independent mining companies of Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM), Zambia reached an important landmark on her economic path.

Divergent policy bodies, duplication of work, conflict and waste which were inevitable at the time the two companies separately exploited the same mineral resource had been overcome and this had led to rationalised mining operations.

On the improved conditions of service for Zambians, Mr Kaunda said the equal pay system for expatriates with their local counterparts would be as a result of the split contract for expatriate employees.

"In terms of this contract, our expatriate employees will be paid a local salary which will be equal to what their Zambian counterparts are paid. An expat allowance will be externalised."

The introduction of equal educational opportunities in mine schools for expatriates and Zambians would be in line with the Party and Government policy of providing the nation with social services.

"At present, the mining industry's efforts have been directed mainly at providing schools to cater for the children of expatriates, with Zambian miners' children filling the remaining school places.

"ZCCM will extend these facilities so that, in time, they cater for the miners' children regardless of whether or not the parents are expatriates."

The building of more schools to realise this ambition was on a long-term basis and because of the massive costs involved, it would be necessary to cut down on some of the social programmes like housing.

On the more than K200 million earmarked for solving the housing problem in the mining industry, Mr Kaunda said ZCCM did not have the money now because of financial constraints brought about by low copper prices and poor cobalt sales.

On the need to accelerate and consolidate Zambianisation, Mr Kaunda said since editors-in-chief were people whose institutions — the media — played a key role in the development of the country, he found it imperative to explain that the programme in the mining industry had not been faultless.

"What I mean is that some appointments which were made in the past have not really met the requirements of true Zambianisation, partly because the Zambians appointed to senior positions have not been properly prepared for the increased responsibilities."

He called for an end to "window dressing Zambianisation in ZCCM", as he had observed that in some cases, Zambians had not been given the responsibilities that went with the jobs formerly held by expatriates.

FAMINE RELIEF TO START WHEN SOUTHERN PROVINCE FOOD NEEDS KNOWN

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 27 Mar 82 p 5

[Excerpt] THE PARTY and its Government is ready to launch famine relief exercises once the food shortfall is determined in various areas, Southern Province Political Secretary, Mr Joseph Simuyandi has said.

Addressing councillors, heads of parastatal and government departments in Namwala Council Chamber yesterday, Mr Simuyandi said the authorities were aware of the looming food crisis because of poor rainfall.

Assuring the people not to panic, he noted that apart from poor rain some districts like Namwala were also badly hit by restrictions of cattle movements due to diseases which also forbid animal sales.

The political secretary also appealed to district councils throughout the province to promptly work out measures of alleviating hunger before relief funds are realised by the central government.

Fears of wide-spread famine have been reported from various parts of the province particularly Namwala, Kalomo and Gwembe districts, which received very little rainfall this season.

IRISH DAIRY FARM FUNDING

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Text]

Business Review Reporter

THE Irish government has given Zambia about K30,000 for the establishment of a dairy farm in Kasama, Northern Province.

The grant is a fulfilment of a commitment made by Irish Minister of State for Development Cooperation Mr Jim O'Keefe in January when he was here, the statement from the Irish embassy in Zambia said in Lusaka yesterday.

During the visit Mr O'Keefe pledged that Ireland would increase bilateral assistance to Zambia which was a priority country on the list of states having bilateral cooperation with Ireland.

The dairly farm to be called the "Kasama dairy settlement scheme" would involve the establishment of 23 tenant dairly farm units, whose initial cost would be met by the K30,000 grant.

Establishment of the dairy would be under the supervision of Irish agricultural adviser in Kasama Mr Alan Pierce with the help of one Zambian extension officer.

Other development projects financed by the Irish government include a dairy farm at Hartley in Lusaka and the Mungwi water scheme.

MUNDIA SAYS HARVEST MIGHT BE HALF OF LAST YEAR'S

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA might this year not even have half of the last year's bumper harvest because of poor rainfall, said Prime Minister Mundia yesterday.

The situation has prompted the Party and its Government to consider irrigation so that crops remained unaffected even in the face of poor rainfalls.

Mr Mundia was speaking at his office before holding talks with a four-man Bulgarian delegation which is in Zambia for consultations with the Party and its Government on a wide range of subjects.

He told leader of the delegation Mr Ognian Doynov his team should focus the discussion with the Zambian side which will be led by chairman of the Economic Sub-Committee of the Central Committee Mr Elijah Mudenda on irrigation.

"The future focus will have to be on irrigation because at times we have had changes in the rainfalls. for example, this year, we may not harvest even half of what we had last year because of poor rainfall."

Past help to Zambia from Bulgaria had mainly been in the area of manpower development, but the prevailing situation should force emphasis on irrigation.

Mr Mundia praised the cordial relations between Zambia and Bulgaria, pointing out that the two countries held similar views on many international issues.

KALOMO CATTLE THREATENED WITH STARVATION

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Apr 82 p 5

[Text] The cattle in Kalomo are threatened with hunger due to lack of grazing pasture and water.

Kalomo governor, Mr Nathan Siafwa, confirmed yesterday that cattle were in danger because of a severe drought in the area.

Mr Siafwa said he had been contacting people in the field to determine the needs of cattle owners.

The governor, who is also Member of Parliament for the area, named Simwatachela, Sipatunyana and Moomba as the areas most affected by the drought.

Mr Siafwa also said he was awaiting reports from ward officials who had been sent to drought-stricken areas before he could give a full report on the needs of people in the area.

Meanwhile, Southern Province political secretary, Mr Jospeh Simuyandi has appealed to villagers in Kalomo not to take their animals to Gwembe in search of water as they would expose them to tse-tse-fly.

Mr Simuyandi was told that some villagers planned to take their cattle to the shores of Lake Kariba for water and grass.

And Livingstone governor, Mr Mukazo Vunda is touring farms to determine the extent of damage caused by the dry spell.

Mr Vunda's programme takes in 87 farms and several chiefs' areas.

ANGOLAN REFUGEES--LUSAKA, March 23--Some 9,000 Angolan refugees at the Maheba refugee camp at Solwezi, in Zambia's North-Western Province, are to be repatriated under terms set by the Angolan Government, a source said. Angolan Government conditions for their return have been accepted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the Zambian Government, according to the source. An adviser to Angola's President Eduardo dos Santos, Major Jose Marie, toldthe refugees at the weekend that they were needed in their country to help reconstruct its economy. More than 10,000 Angolan refugees at the Maheba and Muyukwayukwa camps on the border with Angola refused a repatriation proposal last August. Most were believed to be supporters of the rebel Angolan UNITA movement led by Jonas Savimbi who feared severe repercussions if they returned. [Paris AFRICA AFP in French 23 Mar 82 p 21]

POOR RESULTS OF SUGAR HARVEST REPORTED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 6 Mar 82 p 9

[Article by Fernando Bessa]

[Excerpt] The sizeable imports of raw sugar gave the biennial 1981/1982 harvest great importance. However, the current state of the industrial sector and the organization of the refineries have reduced efficiency at harvest time.

The major obstacles for the 1981/1982 harvest were the late start and fuel shortages at the 1 May sugar refinery and the late arrival of loading system equipment and turbine breakdowns at the 4 February refinery.

In the second complex, processing did not begin in January, the scheduled completion date, and this delay made it unprofitable. Processing started in February mainly because of the period of maturation and harvesting in an 8-year cycle.

Shortage of Skilled Personnel

Moreover, the machine operators lacked technical skills and the workers were underutilized, which hindered timely processing; in addition, sugar recovery levels in most production units were low.

Lacking irrigation facilities, the 4 February refinery in Dombe Grande, Benguela Province, was short on water; the shortage of skilled personnel at that unit and the 1 May refinery caused unforeseen consequences that could endanger future processing campaigns.

Reduced Production

The production level achieved at the last estimate (December 1981) for this sugar harvest was considerably below the goals set, as were related indicators, such as time lost and unspecified losses including absenteeism.

At the 1 May complex, the sugar production goal was 22,042 tons but the final amount was 69 percent of that figure and the 4 February unit which was supposed to produce 6,874 tons only produced 1,350.

In general, refined sugar, alcohol and sugar-cane syrup were produced in smaller amounts than called for in the plan. This was more evident at the 4 February unit where sugar and sugar-cane syrup production was only 20 and 30 percent of the target.

At the Heroes of Caxito unit, the production goal of 25,961,815 kilos of refined cane was reduced by about 4 million kilos in December 1981. The highest yield in this production unit was for unrefined sugar, the target was 3.51 percent and the final figure was 2.70 percent.

PORTUGUESE PRESS ACCUSED OF EVIL INTENT

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 7 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial: "A Castrated Press"]

[Text] Some Portuguese newspapers rage hysterically and extravagantly against the People's Republic of Angola; even a minimally reasoned psychological and sociological analysis would have to conclude that the defense of politically backward, reactionary positions was not the only explanation.

This out-of-control attack on the Angolan revolution obviously goes much deeper in the minds of its backers and instigators and is related to the frustration, rage and despair of those who know they have lost forever the privileges which they had hoped to extend. They have not found the courage to admit they are castrated.

Portuguese newspapers reprint with great flourish and without comment some articles from our newspapers with the most flagrant typos. By so doing, they hope to make their readers believe that Portuguese has not been properly used in Angola since independence.

At other times, the article's contents interest them for negative publicity. Whenever an article criticizes water shortages or streets littered with trash, it is a pretext for these papers to tell their fellow believers, desolate about their return to the mother country, how the city "once the most beautiful in West Africa" has gone downhill.

By reprinting justified criticism in our press about unusual situations, these papers which are questionable from a journalistic point of view--but whose political line easily reveals their origin and backers--do not even realize they are contradicting their own statements about the lack of freedom in Angola to criticize wrongs publicly.

We come to the matter of a recent article in JORNAL DE ANGOLA on a group of marginal individuals who were re-creating in some schools in the capital dramas learned from imported television series. The article placed the problem in its true context and asked the people to react calmly and thoughtfully in similar situations.

Some Portuguese rags transformed this incident, banal in any major capital, into an imaginary threat to the safety of Portuguese volunteers in Angola and then the visit of the Portuguese foreign affairs minister to Luanda was wrongly inserted in this context to imply that the Portuguese Government had asked Angolan authorities for special measures to protect its citizens.

All this would just be cause for laughter and scorn if this type of news were not part of an organized plan to interfere in the domestic affairs of the People's Republic of Angola, to slander and denigrate the Angolan revolution and create an unfavorable climate for cooperation and relations between the two nations and peoples.

Included in this campaign is the promotion of all Angolan traitors who so sympathized and obtained legal help from the most reactionary circles in Portugal whose most faithful servants they always were.

Exploiting the increased travel of Angolans and Portuguese between the two countries, this press--with its gross deformation of the Angolan situation--aims to inject doubt, false questions, hesitation, fears and confusion. It is rare that the occasional traveler arrives from Lisbon without the latest alarming news--read only yesterday--in one of these reactionary Portuguese rags.

In the past, the freedom fighters could always distinguish clearly between the Portuguese people and the fascist colonial government.

The Angolan people, the MPLA-Labor Party and the government are aware of the abyss which separates these papers and their interests from the vital forces truly responsible for the march toward progress and well-being in a country like Portugal. The others who cultivate the glories of the past show their own impotence.

The struggle continues.

Victory is certain.

PARTY'S IMPORTANCE IN STATE APPARATUS DEMOCRATIZATION STRESSED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 5 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by Manuel Correia]

[Excerpt] The National Commission to Structure the State Apparatus met yesterday for the first time; the session was chaired by Evaristo Domingos (Kimba), a member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party and representative of Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

At the opening session Domingos said that the law on local government organizations clearly defined the jurisdiction and duties of the people's assemblies and their executives and recognized that the democratization of the state apparatus always depends primarily upon affirming the party's leading role at all levels; the state will not delegate responsibility for organizing the economy and the working masses.

This leader indicated that one objective of this process was to do away gradually with the obsolete, inefficient state apparatus and create a new state where the workers and citizens participated actively in solving the country's economic, political and social problems. Domingos stressed that this process was geared to give provincial structures in this first phase the indispensable means to solve local problems and raise the people's living conditions.

Upgrading local structures and constantly improving their work, continued Domingos, necessarily implies strengthening the central structures and broadening democratic centralism.

Kimba then said that since the state was one, all the parts were obliged to carry out clearly defined complementary tasks for the benefit of the entire country. The central organizations will always be responsible for defining the broad organizational procedures for operating units and departments in their area of activity, he stressed.

Domingos said the central government organizations will determine the working procedures and guidelines, define the principles of supervision and provide the necessary support so local subordinate units can develop normally.
In conclusion, he said that through hard work mainly to struggle for a more efficient use of the economy's material goods and human resources, bureaucracy and its evils could be avoided and the initiative of the masses increasingly developed.

LAMENTABLE HOTEL SITUATION--As part of the Broad Offensive against Liberalism and Disorganization, a group from the staff of the offensive, headed by Manuel Pedro Pacavira and Antonio Jacinto, respectively Central Committee secretary for the productive sector and member of the Central Control Commission, visited the Hotel Tropico on Friday. Domestic Trade Minister Gamaliel Martins and Viriato dos Santos, the National Director of Hotels and Tourism, accompanied staff members. There it was learned that the instructions given during the first visit to this hotel by staff members had not been obeyed and the same problems still existed. The hotel which has not had beer for more than 45 days because of a lack of kegs and deliveries from the producers has mediocre service ranging from poor-quality meals to a lack of alcoholic beverages. The poor training of the employees who serve the public, the absence of working service (for freight and meals) and passenger elevators, the deteriorating drainage system and the low wages of the rank-and-file employees are in evidence. If the drainage system is to be repaired completely, some floors or perhaps the whole hotel must be closed. The latter will only be possible when work is completed at the Hotel Presidente where the Tropico guests can be transferred. Instal is responsible for elevator maintenance but has not fulfilled its duties. The Hotel Tropico, subordinate to Angotel, is currently having problems getting bread (supplied by Epan) and has at times been without it for 2 months. The presence of an intermediary (Angotel) and the lack of autonomy for its own unit makes it even more difficult to operate a five-star hotel like the Tropico. NO ASPHALT FOR HUAMBO STREETS--Innumerable potholes caused by the recent constant torrential rains in the central plateau have made the streets of the city of Huambo almost unpassable. Moreover, the organization responsible for the beautification of the city and street maintenance has not taken measures to prevent potholes from occurring all over the city, causing accidents and damaging cars. The regional company for urbanization and community projects recently placed under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Provincial Coordination on the instructions of the People's Assembly has just taken responsibility for encouraging self-help projects and resurfacing the streets and roads of the municipality of Huambo. The latter was previously the duty of the municipal commissariat. In this connection, Deputy Director Samuel Martins told ANGOP that the firm had sophisticated technical equipment but lacked qualified personnel knowledgeable about all sides of the problems in this sector. The asphalt shortage throughout the province has been caused primarily by the lack of transportation to move it from Cabinda via Lobita and on to Huambo by the CFB [Benguela Railroad]. Martins also said that often "the asphalt is poorly mixed so that repaired areas degenerate quickly into potholes, all this because of a lack of skilled labor." KOMSOMOL DELEGATION--At the invitation of the Amilcar Cabral African Youth of Cape Verde [JAAC], a delegation of the Soviet youth vanguard, Komsomol, recently paid a courtesy visit to our country (15-21 January), during which they signed with their Cape Verde counterpart a cooperation agreement based on the granting of material aid, exchange of delegations and cultural exchange. The delegation, which was led by Comrade Farit Mukhameteshin and which included an official of the Komsomol Higher School, Viktor Bistrov, was received in audience during the period of his stay in Praia by the national secretary of our youth organization, Comrade Luis Fonseca. They were invited to take part in the commemorations of 20 January in Tarrafal, marked by a public meeting where the prime minister, Brig Maj Pedro Pires, was the speaker. The conversations with a counterpart Cape Verde delegation were to have begun on 16 January in the morning and would have ended on 19 January with the signing of a cooperation agreement. Our representation (which included responsible officials of several departments of the organization), led by Secretary Mario Matos, were to have been completed with the signing of the cooperation agreement. A visit to the island of Fogo, as well as a cocktail party and a lunch offered respectively by the Soviet Embassy and by the JAAC were included in the program of the visit. PORTUGAL COOPERATION--At the invitation of the Administrative Council of the Bank of Cape Verde, Dr Emilio Rui Vilar, vice governor of the Bank of Portugal, visited our country 11-14 January. Dr Rui Vilar's working visit is included in the framework of the cooperative relations between the Bank of Portugal and the Bank of Cape Verde established immediately after national independence and reinforced by the financial and technical agreements signed in Lisbon last July. We recall that the above-mentioned financial agreement anticipates the support of the Bank of Portugal in the granting of credit by the Portuguese Banking system and the export of equipment and services of Portuguese origin to the Republic of Cape Verde up to a limit of $30 million. The delegation from the Bank of Portugal, which also included Dr Francisco Monteiro, in charge of the training services of the Bank of Portugal, met on 12 and 13 January with a delegation from the Bank of Cape Verde led by its governor. They discussed concrete aspects related to the execution of the financial agreement and then outlined the training and technical-assistance programs to be given by the Bank of Portugal to the Bank of Cape Verde in several areas, specifically monetary and exchange regulations, credit and bank organization. The vice governor of the Bank of Portugal further worked with Maj Osvaldo Lopes da Silva, minister of economy and finance, and paid a courtesy visit to Dr Corsino Fortes, deputy secretary of state of the prime minister. On the afternoon of 13 January, Dr Rui Vilar was received in audience by Brig Maj Pedro Pares, prime minister of the Republic of Cape Verde. At the close of their labors the Portuguese and Cape Verde delegations expressed their pleasure at the climate of the dialogue, the objectivity and cooperative spirit in which the discussions took place permitting the achievement of concrete results on the points of their common agenda. OAU REPRESENTATIVE DEFENDS ROLE OF PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 5 Mar 82 pp 3, 4

[Text] The OAU, which seemed to have been observing total silence regarding the repercussions in Chad after the latest Nairobi resolution, is beginning to emerge from its reserve. In a careful press release issued on 4 March, the representative of the OAU secretary general in Chad, Mr Dawit, tried to respond to a number of criticisms of the pan-African organization and the pan-African peace force.

"The special representative of teh OAU secretary general in Chad, Gebre Egziabher Dawit, wishes to provide the following facts following recent statements about the OAU presence in Chad.

"Despite the enormous political and logistic difficulties which it faced in undertaking its mission, the OAU has succeeded well in carrying out its task in Chad. There is ample evidence, all confirming that the OAU has become a factor for stability and security for both Chadians and foreigners currently living in Chad.

"The OAU has through its political and military presence restored the confidence of Chadians living in the vicinity of the sectors where the inter-African force is located.

"Therefore, all efforts to create the impression that teh OAU mission in Chad has failed are simply false and unfounded.

"Although the question of financing persists, the continued OAU presence in Chad will depend in large measure and mainly on the Chadian leaders' desire and agreement to solve their problems in one way or another.

CAMPAIGN TO URGE CITIZENS TO PRESENT UNITED FRONT LAUNCHED

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 5 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] The big consciousness-raising drive which started in the capital on 20 February ended on Wednesday 3 March. For more than a week, the consciousness committee, led by several members of the Transitional National Union Government [GUNT], the mayor of Ndjamena, the director general of security and the prefect of Chari-Baguirmi, visited each area to urge Chadians to form a united front against the international conspiracy.

At the meetings, the speakers one after another denounced the concealed intention of the latest Nairobi summit conference to impose Hissein Habre on us. The GUNT's desire to end the rebellion so that peace can be restored and Chadians enabled to quietly undertake the country's reconstruction was reaffirmed at all the sessions. At the last meeting at Garangozo, Facho Balam, chairman of the consciousness committee and minister of transport, public works, mines and geology, called on "every Chadian to stand ready" to make his contribution to the restoration of peace. He stressed the need to mobilize all human and moral resources in the struggle against the forces of evil.

He particularly appealed to all Ndjamenois to be vigilant. They must denounce anyone who might sabotage the peace. Each Chadian, he said, must regard himself "as a frontline soldier." Also participating in this final meeting were Mr Yacine, secretary of state for interior responsible for refugees; Hassane Filedje, mayor of Ndjamena; and Mr Kabarallah, prefect of Chari-Baguirmi. The committee will doubtless turn future attention to the Chad provinces.

SAUDI ARABIA DEPORTS CHADIAN UNDESIRABLES

N'Djamena INFO CHAD in French 13 Feb 82 p 3

[Report by Chadian Press Agency]

[Text] Having probably left years ago under the pretext of pilgrimage to Mecca, some of our compatriots, some 5,000 in all, are now being declared "personae non gratae" by the Saudi authorities. Last week, 140 of them were repatriated to N'Djamena. According to certain reliable sources, the forced repatriation is the result of bad behavior by these Chadians in the host country. A fair number of them is made up of habitual offenders who by that very fact disturb the peace of mind of pilgrims and the Saudi public. Besides their systematic drug dealing, the Chadians in Mecca have other far from polished codes of behavior: delinquency, robbery, theft, and rape.

Faced with these acts, which are a serious threat to public order, and since it could not imprison those who committed them because of their status as foreigners, the Saudi police simply decided to expel them from the country. And the "repatriation" operation that has been started will last 10 days, at a rate of two flights a day.

In N'Djamena, legal documents show that the Saudis are right: out of 140 repatriated, two-thirds are habitual criminals. This is the height of misfortune! The arrival of these international class criminals can only pollute the already none too safe atmosphere of N'Djamena more unless the police is careful. Additional malefactors, in N'Djamena's present situation, will of course demand doubled vigilance and especially adequate means for the peace keeping services to be able to meet any situation.

INTERMINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETING—Several members of the Transitional National Union Government met yesterday as an interministerial council chaired by Adoum Togoi, minister of defense, veterans and disabled veterans. The council studied the situation in the east on the basis of reports by members of the Defense and Security Council. The council noted that the military situation, while worrying, should not distract from the main functions of the state. Thus, the council reviewed operations of several important ministries: national education, public health and information. It approved several recommendations to enable officials of these departments to better prepare for the coming school year, implement a better health policy, and improve content of information media. The ministers for these departments are to carry out missions abroad in an effort to find solutions to the problems facing their departments. [Text] [Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 5 Mar 82 p 1] 9920

YANGALBE TRIP REPORTED—The thaw in Chad's relations with Egypt and Sudan progressed during the past few weeks with a speeding up of the process of restoring normal diplomatic relations. The reopening of Sudan's embassy is imminent, and Egypt has announced its intention to do the same. All these good intentions were reaffirmed during the visit to these countries by Yangalbe Passire, secretary of state for foreign affairs. On his return, Mr Yangalbe discussed the results of his contacts and reported that he found that Egyptian and Sudanese officials had a good understanding of the government's position on the latest Nairobi summit conference. In regard to Sudan specifically, the various points in the final communique which endorsed President Goukouni's recent visit to Khartoum were explained in the context of the facts. After numerous working sessions, Mr Yangalbe reached an agreement with the Sudanese officials on a meeting of the security subcommittee in the next few days. The subcommittee is to discuss questions of security on the common border. In addition to reopening its embassy Sudan plans to resume flights between Chad and Sudan beginning 5 March. CHINESE-GUINEAN AGRICULTURAL TECHNIQUES CENTER DESCRIBED

[Article by Sekou Fofana: "The Yathia Center for Popularization of Agricultural Techniques"]

[Excerpt] Among the many villages strung out along the Mamou-Faranah road, there is one that irresistibly catches the eye because of its picturesqueness and the rapid progress being made there. It is the PRL [Local Revolutionary Authorities] Yathia, located 26 kilometers from the town of Faranah.

Formerly the same as all the other little villages in the area, Yathia today has a new look, with the creation of a center for popularization of agricultural techniques by the Central Revolutionary Authority.

A result of Chinese-Guinean cooperation, the Yathia center's purpose is to train popularizers in rice and corn growing, called agricultural work controlers (CTA).

The modest, but strong, infrastructure includes:

a developed area of 6.13 hectares (of which 5.01 are irrigable, and the rest taken up by small levees, roads, and canals) an outfall dam; a metalfloodgate; a main irrigation canal; a drainage canal; a pumping station; buildings (including a class-room, an office for technical cadre, a lecture hall, a laboratory for phenology, pedology, and agro-chemistry; two dormitories, a mechanics workshop, a rice-mill, a store-room, etcetera).

The personnel complement is 39 workers (5 management cadre, 4 skilled workers, and 39 laborers) [as published].

Experiments in progress concern rice and corn, and in the cultivated hollow can be seen 32 carefully marked out frames, of which 25 are rice frames and 7 frames are under corn.

During the last agricultural campaign, Guinean and Chinese researchers experimented on one variety of rice, Qing Kang, and one variety of corn, Perta; the results obtained indicate that in the conditions at Yathia, Qing Kang yields 5 or 6 tons per hectare.

The peasants in the area PRLs are full of comments about the first yields obtained at Yathia, which is a profound expression of their desire to learn from the workers at the center, with whom they have established fraternal contacts. The receptivity of the peasants is a good sign that the Yathia Center will achieve its aim of being a "school with an essentially practical vocation, available to rice and corn producers, especially peasants from Agro-Community Farms (FAC), Agro-Pastoral Farms (FAPA), CER [Revolutionary Education Centers] students, and students from the Faculties of Agronomy.

PREMIER'S VISIT TO AGRICULTURAL CENTER

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2905, 14-20 Feb 82 p 36

[Excerpt] On Thursday 11 February 1982, the prime minister, comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui, member of the BPN [National Political Bureau], paid a working visit, accompanied by comrade Abdoulaye Diao Balde, member of the BPN, minister of domestic trade, to the Federation of Kindia.

On his arrival at Kindia, the prime minister was greeted by the activists and cadre of that urban center, led by comrades El Hadj Mamadou Bella Doumbouya, commissioner general of the revolution, El Hadj Moussa Sakho, federal secretary, and Zakariaou Toure, regional governor, all members of the Central Committee.

Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui was later to to go to the Molota ward, where he met, in Kilissi, the Guinean and Korean cadre and technicians working at the Kim Il-Song Institute of Agronomic Sciences.

It is to be recalled that this institute was created in application of the decision of the ministerial symposium of Non-Aligned Countries on increasing food production, held in August 1981 at Pyongyang.

At the end of his visit, the prime minister signed the distinguished visitors' book, emphasizing the pride of our people in this achievement which is the ratification of the exemplary quality of cooperation relations between our country and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

He also exhorted the cadre and technicians working there to strive for scope and breadth in this scientific unit which is an important trump in the fight for agricultural development joined by our people, and which is orientated toward self-sufficiency in food.

REPORTAGE ON VIEIRA VISIT TO CUBA

Vieira Decorated by Castro

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The Jose Marti National Order, the highest medal of honor bestowed by the Cuban state, was conferred by Cdr Fidel Castro on Comrade Joao Bernardo Vieira "Nino," secretary general of the PAIGC [African Independence Party of Portuguese Guinea and Cape Verde] and chairman of the CR [Revolutionary Committee], who made an official and friendly visit to Cuba, arriving last Wednesday.

During the ceremony, Ramiro Valdes Menendez, leader of the Communist Party of Cuba [PCC], declared that Cuba and Guinea-Bissau are two peoples united by history, blood, freedom and revolution and he called the illustrious visitor Cuba's staunch friends.

According to Ramiro Valdes, the medal is intended as recognition of Nino as an outstanding African leader. "We hope it will serve as a symbol of our friendship and proof of genuine solidarity," he said.

Nino Vieira, in turn, said that he considers the medal an example of friendship between an African people and a Latin American people and that he was in Cuba to strengthen the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the peoples, governments and parties of the two countries.

The CR chairman placed a wreath on the Jose Marti monument and visited the Maximo Gomez Academy of the Revolutionary Armed Forces in the vicinity of Havana. During his stay he also plans to visit places of economic, political and social interest in the country.

Nino Vieira is scheduled to leave Havana today for Panama where he will pay a 3-day official visit.

Agreements Signed With Cuba

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 8

[Excerpts] The day before yesterday, the republics of Guinea-Bissau and Cuba signed five agreements which call for bilateral cooperation in the political, consular, commercial, cultural and juridical spheres.

Joao Bernardo Vieira (Nino) and Fidel Castro, Guinea-Bissau's and Cuba's top leaders, attended the ceremony in Havana for the signing of agreements which will help strengthen the bonds of friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the two countries, bonds which have existed since the time of the struggle for national liberation.

With regard to the plan for cooperation between the PAIGC and the PCC, the agreement was signed by Comrade Samba Lamine Mane, member of PAIGC's Politburo and minister of natural resources, and Jesus Montane, deputy member of the PCC Politburo, while the commercial agreement was signed by Comrade Avito Jose da Silva, minister of rural development, and Comrade German Amado, Cuba's first deputy minister of foreign trade.

The document calling for juridical assistance was signed by Guinea-Bissau's Justice Minister Fidelis Cabral D'Almada and Cuba's Justice Minister Oswaldo Dorticos. The agreement calling for cultural cooperation was signed by Comrade Mario Cabral, minister of education, and Jose R. Fernandez, deputy chairman of Cuba's Council of Ministers, while the document calling for collaboration between the two countries in the consular sphere was signed by Comrade Julio Semedo, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Cuban Deputy Foreign Minister Obgar Oramas.

The CR chairman ended his official visit to that country on Monday and began a 3-day official visit to Panama the same day.

PAIGC's secretary general was given a warm sendoff by Cuban President Fidel Castro. Havana residents were present at the airport waving Cuban and Guinea-Bissau flags. After the playing of the national anthems of the two countries, the president and chairman complimented the leaders of the PCC, the government and various Cuban organizations as well as the representatives of the diplomatic corps.

During his sojourn in that Latin American country, Nino Vieira and his entourage visited educational institutions on the Isle of Youth where young people from Guinea-Bissau and other African countries are studying.

BISSAU PORT FINANCING--The projected construction of the new port of Bissau and of other ports in the interior of the country will be financed in principle by the World Bank ($14 million), Arab Bank for Development of the African States [BADEA] ($10 million), Fund of Kuwait ($10 million) and the organization of petroleum exporting countries [OPEC] ($3 million). Our government will contribute 2 million pesos to the project. This sum is to be spent on the construction of the wharf. The project is evaluated overall at $48 million. At this moment $8.5 million is lacking to cover the entire cost of the project. Our government will have to seek even more possible contributors. The delegations of the organisms sharing in the financing have been meeting in Bissau since last week. They met day before yesterday, Monday, in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to evaluate the studies of the project made by a Dutch company. The delegations of the World Bank, the BADEA, and the Fund of Kuwait, which also represents OPEC. The cost of the projected new port of Bissau is estimated at $32 million. It is being financed by the Arab countries, while the reconstruction of the bridge to the wharf for a fishing port, a few ports in the interior of the country, even a building containing 22 apartments, as well as technical assistants and the bouying of the sea approaches and the river are projects to be entirely financed by the World Bank. The port of Bissau will have a helicopter landing platform measuring 260 by 27 meters and another platform and a takeoff area measuring 290 by 15 meters. This new port will occupy all the space between the bridge leading to the wharf and the port of Pindjiguiti, in which a large share of the installations will be opposite the building of the Finance Ministry. EXECUTIONS WARNING--MONROVIA, March 25 - The Military Government in Liberia may resort to executions to stem a crime wave, Armed Forces Commander Thomas Quiwonkpa has warned. General Quiwonkpa blamed agents of the Criminal Investigation Division (CID) for not making enough effort to halt an influx of drugs and counterfeit money into the country. Some agents were conniving with criminals to destabilize the Liberian economy, he told a news conference. The conference was called in connection with the investigation of a CID agent allegedly involved in a counterfeit money and marihuana scandal. The General said he would personally follow up the case and that if the accused or anyone else in the case was found guilty an example would be set. (A.F.P.)

NEW SSS BOSS--MONROVIA, March 26 - Head of State Samuel Doe has appointed Lieutenant-Colonel Nathan Nelson to head the Special Security Service (SSS), it was announced here. LT-Col Nelson, who was already with the service, replaces T. Gbeku Wright, who was dismissed last week for allegedly embezzling over 91,000 dollars of public funds. Mr Wright has been turned over to the Justice Ministry for prosecution. (A.F.P.)

OUTGOING CHIEF OF FAC MISSION TALKS OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 27 Feb 82 pp 1, 2

[Report on interview with Mr Claude Lechiguero, Aid and Cooperation Fund chief]

[Excerpts] The stay in Madagascar of Mr Claude Lechiguero, chief of the Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC), is drawing to a close. This week Mr Lechiguero began making farewell visits to principal Malagasy officials. The outgoing FAC chief will work in Paris for several months on the minister's staff before taking up his new post. He will be replaced by Mr Michel de Bonnecorse, who was previously stationed in Dakar (Senegal).

After Mr Lechiguero's stay of 3 years and 3 months as the representative of one of the largest French aid and cooperation agencies in a given country, there is naturally good reason for making a review, however brief it may be .... Mr Lechiguero gladly answered our questions, particularly since he found many reasons to be satisfied during his Malagasy visit.

Let honor be paid to whom honor is due: Franco-Malagasy cooperation. At least for the large percentage for which he was responsible. The figures speak for themselves. The volume of FAC's nonreimbursable aid to Madagascar has risen from 950 million Malagasy francs in 1979 to 1.600 billion in 1980 and to more than 3.250 billion in 1981.

This growth of French aid to Madagascar over the years has been satisfactory. In 1979, such aid was described as "too modest" in view of the island's large size. It has since "constantly increased." The recent visit of Mr Guy Penne, adviser to President Francois Mitterrand, to Tananarive was further proof of France's determination to develop its relations with Madagascar.

Many French missions have been sent to Madagascar. Even now, a large mission of experts (economics and finance) is in our country. These experts are representing various French agencies which may possibly grant Madagascar aid (FAC, Central Fund for Economic Cooperation, Treasury, etc.). Their presence coincides with upcoming Malagasy negotiations with the International Monetary Fund. They have come to make their own "diagnosis" for "adapting and developing French public aid to Madagascar" under the present special circumstances. Such support will supplement the measures which the government itself desires.

One of the directors of the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation is expected in Madagascar sometime this month, as well as the director of economic cooperation for the Ministry of Cooperation in Paris. They will describe to Malagasy officials the main features of French cooperation.

All during Mr Lechiguero's stay, the concerns of French cooperation, which are also those of the government as well, involved "obvious priority sectors." In the case of rural development, for example, French aid concerned products corresponding to speculation capable of putting Madagascar's balance of payments on an even keel. Coffee, cotton, rice, oilseeds, etc., were thus included.

In each of these sectors, as we know, France has granted relatively substantial aid. In the case of products such as rice and oilseeds, some French measures are planned for restricting the outflow of foreign exchange in these areas. Other measures are also planned for bringing in foreign exchange.

Some raw materials for beer production will be produced locally. Thus we will save more than 1.5 billion annually in foreign exchange!

After agriculture and rural areas, transportation is the second concern of French public aid. Of the 3.250 billion Malagasy francs granted to Madagascar by the FAC last year, about 1 billion was allocated to this sector. The National Railroad System, in particular, constitutes a comprehensive program. The existence of rural tracks, in all productive regions, is "essential."

With regard to education and training, secondary technical education has been the subject of a special effort. Technical training in Madagascar has thus received substantial aid from France. A system for training technical instructors is now under consideration. At present, 526 French technical assistants are serving in Madagascar. There are also 76 physicians, most of whom are specialists. French medical aid, to relieve our burden in this area, is relatively substantial. Each year 400 to 450 scholarship holders receive additional training in France through the FAC.

MSZMP DELEGATION HOLDS TALKS WITH AREMA, AKFM

Account of Delegation Visit

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 26 Feb 82 p 2

[Text] As is generally known, a delegation of the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party (MSZMP) has been in Madagascar since the beginning of this week. Numbering 4 members, the delegation is headed by Mr Laszlo Ballai, an influential party member, and its visit is drawing to a close. Delegation members told us yesterday of their satisfaction with having been able to talk with Malagasy trade unionists throughout their stay and with representatives of organizations associated with the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution.

The delegation was thus able to hold a brief working session with members of the AREMA [Vanguard of the Malagasy Revolution] Political Bureau under the leadership of Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona on Monday at the Palace of Mahazoarivo. The prime minister gave his visitors a warm welcome and explained to them the structures and operation of AREMA. He pointed out that the Malagasy Revolution was born with AREMA and that it is the application of Boky Mena principles which constitutes the real basis of its policy. The achievements of the Malagasy Revolution, under the leadership of President Didier Ratsiraka, were briefly described to the Hungarian delegation.

When it came time for Mr Laszlo Ballai to speak, he also described the MSZMP and its role in the Hungarian revolution: the defense of national sovereignty, establishment of an independent national economy, constant effort to determine majority interests, rejection of any act which would violate a country's national sovereignty, campaign against racism, etc. The Hungarian delegation leader then stated that his country totally approved of President Didier Ratsiraka's plan to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace. The talks revealed that Hungary will soon donate to Madagascar a shipment of drugs valued at 1.200 million forints.

Thanks to AKFM

It was actually the AKFM-KDRSM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence-Democratic Committee to Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution] which invited its MSZMP comrades to visit Madagascar. The meeting between AREMA and the MSZMP held no surprises, since the ideological principles of both parties are the same. During a press conference yesterday at party headquarters, Minister Richard Andriamanjato explained that the delegation was in our country "to demonstrate its solidarity with Madagascar, a country which, like Hungary, has chosen the path of socialism, and to study with us the means of removing Africa from imperialist and neocolonialist domination." According to Minister Richard Andriamanjato, the Hungarian people and their government are opposed to the interventionist acts of certain countries and unconditionally support struggling peoples, as in the case of Namibia, SWAPO, South Africa and the ANC. The minister assured the press of "Hungary's willingness to cooperate with Madagascar for the establishment of real peace in the world and in the Indian Ocean in particular, which the struggle of socialist and progressive countries will place beyond the harmful reach of bloodthirsty, warlike countries." Minister Richard Andriamanjato also said that the dominant feature of relations between the AKFM and MSZMP is mutual respect and sovereignty.

Later, in Tsarafaritra, the seat of FV-ANT-RV [expansion unknown] (city), Minister Richard Andriamanjato also confirmed to his Hungarian visitors "Madagascar's real determination to embrace socialism." Ministers Georges Ruphin (labor and social legislation) and Rakoto Ignace (higher education) and CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Councilor] Arsene Ratsifehera, as well as other figures in Malagasy politics, attended this meeting.

Only Socialism

Once again, the AKFM-KDRSM leader described to the Hungarian delegation the current features of the Malagasy Revolution, stressing the fact that "only socialism will enable Madagascar to emerge from its present difficulties." In 1975 the Malagasy people thus chose socialism and President Didier Ratsiraka as the great respected leader of this revolution.

The Hungarian delegation also spoke about the history and achievements of socialism in its country. Change was possible only as a result of many sacrifices. "Many people deplored the rule of minorities and reactionaries. Today the majority is composed of workers and farmers. Thus we have won. The workers had two parties. But with the increase in general awareness, today they have merged into only a single party. And thus since 1948, we have had to wait," Mr Ballai continued, "25 years to harvest the fruits of such efforts."

Mr Ballai pointed out that current major issues concern the notion of capitalism and socialism, war and peace. "We other Hungarians," he said, "have totally chosen socialism. And we are certain that the united struggle of progressive peoples will ultimately bring about a final victory."

Joint Communique

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] A delegation of the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party (MSZMP), led by Laszlo Ballai, chief of the Central Committee's Economic Policy Division, visited the Democratic Republic of Madagascar at the invitation of the Congress Party for Malagasy Independence (AKFM/KDRSM).

The MSZMP delegation was welcomed by Richard Andriamanjato, AKFM/KDRSM chairman and a member of the Supreme Revolutionary Council. The delegation held talks with several members of the AKFM/KDRSM Political Bureau and met with militants of the AKFM/KDRSM's Tananarive chapter, leaders of the Vanguard of the Malagasy Revolution party, representatives of other organizations and members of the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution.

The MSZMP and AKFM/KDRSM representatives mutually informed each other of their parties' current activities and tasks and exchanged views on relations between the two parties and countries and on possibilities of developing cooperation. They reviewed current problems concerning the international situation, particularly with regard to Africa. MSZMP representatives again expressed the solidarity of Hungarian communists with the struggle being waged by the AKFM/KDRSM to strengthen the achievements of the Malagasy Revolution and for social and economic recovery. MSZMP and AKFM/KDRSM representatives stressed the importance of the struggle of African peoples against imperialism and colonialism and in favor of social progress. They resolutely condemned imperialist activities in southern Africa and stated that they consequently support the just struggle of the peoples of Namibia and South Africa under the leadership of SWAPO and ANC. Both parties' representatives support the plans for turning the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace and consequently support the proposals of Mr Didier Ratsiraka, president of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

Both parties' representatives also expressed their willingness to combine their efforts in all international undertakings in favor of disarmament, detente and the construction of a just and lasting peace in the world.

During their cordial and friendly talks, the MSZMP and AKFM/KDRSM delegations agreed on the continuous development of cooperation between the two parties on the basis of Marxist-Leninist principles and proletarian internationalism.

The MSZMP delegation left Tananarive on Wednesday, 24 February 1982.

FRELIMO CONGRESS TO BE HELD IN 1983

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] FRELIMO's Central Committee, meeting yesterday evening on the occasion of its Second Extraordinary Session, decided that the fourth congress will be held from 25 to 29 April 1983. The Central Committee meeting was held during the interval which preceded the closing of the First National Party Conference. The work of the conference, which had been underway since Thursday morning, also ended yesterday evening with a speech by Marshal Samora Machel, chairman of the FRELIMO party.

The Central Committee extraordinary session ratified a resolution calling for the adoption of "recommendations made by the First National Party Conference on preparation procedures and tasks to be carried out by the Fourth FRELIMO Party Congress." It was in light of those recommendations that the date of the 1981 congress was determined.

The recommendations were presented in the conference's final document, read by Jorge Rebelo, Central Committee secretary for ideological work.

The preparation of a list of subjects to be discussed at the congress, the unleashing of a broad-scale party and popular movement in support of the congress and a study of possible changes to be made in the party's statutes and program were decided upon as some of the objectives of the conference, as stated in the introduction to the final document.

The text then speaks of the difference between the third and fourth congresses, stating that the former was "the congress in which, after national independence became a reality, the historic mission of the Mozambique Liberation Front was considered achieved and FRELIMO was created--the party now directing the construction of socialism in our country."

With regard to the Fourth Congress, the national conference considered basically that it "must stimulate the program of the construction of socialism in every area of activity."

In its conclusion, the introduction to the final document states that "although the congress was to be held in 1982, the conference believes that the present proposal, to hold the congress in 1983, assures the success of the concrete preparatory action of the congress, respects our party's democratic traditions and is essentially in keeping with the spirit of the statutes."

"The party program must clearly express the socialist nature of the revolution in the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique]," the final document stresses.

In touching on possible changes, the conference pointed out the need for "a thorough examination of our party's name."

The conference also dealt with the problem of the appropriateness of the symbols defined in the statutes, the party's ideology and the nature of the revolution. As a result, the anthems, flags and emblems will be reviewed. The designation of Permanent Policy Committee, the leadership organization which assumes the functions of party orientation between Central Committee sessions, should be replaced by that of Politburo.

In its final document, the conference stresses that these theses "should have as their starting point concrete problems which affect the life of the people.

It recommended that the "causes and solutions surrounding these problems, expressed in the form of theses, be brought up for discussion by the militants and people in general."

Preparation of the Theses

The starting point for the preparation of the theses, as recommended by the conference and subsequently adopted by the Central Committee, consists of the following:

1. our achievements: how to evaluate and strengthen them;

2. material problems we are facing and how to resolve them;

3. activities aimed at socializing the rural sector and settling the people in villages must be developed and strengthened;

4. an equitable sharing of labor leads to increased production;

5. enemy action is being stepped up in an attempt to destroy the example we are setting in our area toward the construction of socialism in Mozambique;

6. the party's guidance is sound; our successes are the result. We must strengthen the party's role. We must be capable of attracting new groups to our side and mobilizing all patriotic sectors for the national tasks;

7. it is necessary to consolidate democracy, the security of the citizenry and legality;

8. we oppose the growing aggressiveness of imperialism with firm action by all the progressive democratic defense forces of peace, democracy and socialism.

After approval by acclamation by all delegates to the conference, the Central Committee met in extraordinary session. Finally, President Samora Machel gave a speech which we are publishing in its entirety on page 3 of this edition.

DETAILS OF STUDENT LIFE IN GDR PROVIDED

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 31 Jan 82 p 8-9

[Excerpt] Thousands of young Mozambicans are being trained technically and professionally in the GDR. The following is an exclusive story for DOMINGO on their life and how they are adapting to their professionalization in that socialist country.

They are in the GDR learning for Mozambique.

Francisco Tenhane, from Inhambane; Tomas Mabaza, from Gaza; Lourenco Gica, from Maputo and Salvador Cuna, from Beira will face this winter in Berlin, the capital of the GDR, more calmly than they did last year. They have already adapted and they smile as they recall their emotions when they saw snow for the first time in their life, immediately upon arriving in the GDR in December 1980. "We feel good here," says Francisco, 22 years of age, whom we visited in the factory where they manufacture batteries and parts, and the industrial area of Oberschoneweide, in Berlin, where he works. Together with his friend, Bebo Faustino, 19 years of age, he is assembling vehicle batteries.

All in all, there are 50 young people between 19 and 22 years of age being trained for 4 years in this enterprise. When they return to their fatherland they should be ready to give technical assistance and repair batteries for trucks, diesel locomotives and port cranes. "They need technicians for that,"

They are in the GDR following a government agreement. The Berlin factory cheerfully agreed to organize their training. Everyone, from the director of the factory down to the worker on the production line, is doing so with a great deal of affection. "We want our guests to feel good in this atmosphere which is new for them and we want them to learn a great deal for their country," declared Arthur Kjeldgaard, a constructor of machines, a man of 60, their "head monitor" in the enterprise. In the first place, the recently arrived Mozambicans have received winter clothing. The first 5 months were considered a time of adaptation. They were lodged in a calm neighborhood, in the suburbs of Berlin, always being able to count on the help of the workers in the enterprise. These workers showed them Berlin, familiarized them with our customs, guided them in their shopping and the food preparation of, and on the possibilities of moving, since in a short time they would have to get around alone in their new situation. The enterprise contracted professionals in higher education who gave them classes in German. And successfully, as I was able to verify myself. All of them make themselves understood well in German. "We were surprised at the speed with which they have learned," commented Paul Benz, director of cadres and training who praised the 50 young people: "All of them are very studious, they show themselves to be eager to learn as much as they can." The time of adaptation culminated with joint vacations in a company rest home in the mountains.

Since 1 August 1981 they have been working in the production lines of the factory. "All of them will here learn the necessary skills for manufacturing, maintenance and repair of batteries," explained the director. A specialized workman, who serves as their monitor, always has two or three Mozambicans in his charge. They work 7 hours a day, Mondays to Fridays. Tuesdays and Thursdays they have 2 hours of class and 2 Saturdays a month, 4 hours. They are continuing to learn the German language. They are also learning elements of mathematics, electrotechnology, theory of battery manufacture and political and social education.

"In the meantime, all of them are already fulfilling their work quota or even surpassing it," Langangke, the chief of finishing, confirms. Therefore, they receive a good wage which can go as high as 1,000 marks per month, which is equivalent to 15,000 meticals.

At the same time the young Mozambicans are integrated into the production brigades, they participate in the collective life of the brigades, they have the same rights and the same duties. That applies both to excursions with the brigade and to meetings in which production problems are discussed. They are also invited to attend the sessions organized by the youth organization.

Many workers have already invited their young colleagues from this far distant country to go to their homes. Thomas Maba and Gertrudes Conceicao, whom I met in the section of manufacture of small parts, have already been many times of the home Gisela Semmler. Thomas has already struck up a friendship with the 21-year-old son of Mrs Semmler. Gertrudes also is a great friend of the daughter's.

The 50 young people are lodged with 150 more young Mozambicans, apprentices of other enterprises, in a modern building, near to a beautiful lake. The young people are divided into groups of seven and each group lives in a house divided into three parts. I asked Lourenco, 22 years old, who is from Maputo, what they do in their free time. "We have 4 weeks of vacations per year, he said, like our German comrades. We can spend them in vacation centers belonging to the company. Many of us will visit our compatriots who live in other cities of the GDR." Lourenco intended to visit soon some friends in Zittau, in the southern part of the country. They like to go to the discoteque and they like to play football. Lourenco is the sports delegate. "Our street team has no possibilities of beating them," a young German production worker emphasized. Naturally the house of culture of the enterprise and the sports clubs are open to the young Mozambicans. Frequently they also converse with their German companions, both in the factory and in union meetings or in sessions of the youth organizations, about Mozambique and the struggle of their compatriots, the crimes of the South African racists. They always find attentive listeners.

CHISSANO: IMPERIALISM POSES PRECONDITIONS FOR COOPERATION

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 14 Mar 82 pp 15-17

[Report on interview with Foreign Affairs Minister Joaquim Chissano, by Xavier Tsenane of Radio Mozambique; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] In an interview given after his return from Rome where a conference of solidarity with the peoples of southern Africa was held, Minister Chissano began by saying that the Rome meeting "resulted in increased support for liberation movements in the southern African area."

Maj Gen Joaquim Chissano said we have had difficulty in cooperating with certain imperialist countries because they impose preconditions on us for that cooperation. "Those conditions are not normal compared with those other countries impose as a requirement for cooperationa nd which are universally recognized. We would not call the latter preconditions but, rather, principles accepted by everyone, such as neutrality, mutual advantages and equality.

"But," Minister Chissano continued, "we perceive that certain Western countries are forcing us to accept preconditions in return for cooperation, or else they demand that we adhere to certain institutions or accept certain agreements of no interest to us. We could be tempted to think that those countries are right, that if we do not adhere to those institutions, it is difficult for them to cooperate; but this is not the case, for they cooperate with countries which do not adhere to those institutions, including South Africa with which they have no difficulty cooperating."

To give a concrete example, he referred to the United States. "At other times, we see countries like the United States which changes its arguments day after day to justify its noncooperation with the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique]. It began by claiming that we rejected human rights in Mozambique; later, it changed to the problem of individuals who take positions against the United States. It does not recognize that we must take positions in keeping with our responsibility in various international questions. It says that we have a greater tendency toward alignment than nonalignment. When we are defending our security, it thinks we are against the United States as in the case of the CIA agents in Mozambique. It does all this only to refuse to cooperate with the RPM."

Joaquim Chissano said he believes these attitudes are in keeping with "an attempt by imperialist countries to impede our rapid development and thwart our development plans." There are "countries which sign accords and then create obstacles in the implementation of those accords." These imperialist maneuvers are also felt within the SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Conference]. That is why "we are led to believe that indirect sanctions were imposed against our country instead of imposing sanctions against South Africa."

Citing the example of South African aggressions against the nerve points of our national economy, including the railroads, he said that these attacks are aimed at "decreasing the effectiveness of our transportation system which connects the Mozambican coast with the countries of the hinterland. Therefore, one of SADCC's weak points is that of being a target for those who are attempting to stop or delay our economic development."

The foreign affairs minister said there are other examples which are indicative of the imperialist economic war against Mozambique. However, he stressed that Mozambique is holding firm to its objectives to reduce its dependency on South Africa.

Embargo Against South Africa

During the interview the foreign affairs minister was also asked if Mozambique's position with regard to sanctions taken against South Africa in November 1980 had changed, to which Joaquim Chissano replied that the RPM is continuing to carry out those measures.

After speaking of the specific location of Mozambique which, in addition to the geographic aspect, has commercial ties with the RSA [Republic of South Africa] inherited from colonialism, the Mozambican diplomatic head said that "we cannot continue to apply direct and immediate sanctions against South Africa." However, "we favor the implementation of sanctions."

He warned that "we do not accept the concept of countries preventing the implementation of sanctions against South Africa under pretext of protecting us. It is wrong to think that they are protecting us through continued cooperation with South Africa. If they really wanted to protect us, the first thing they should do would be to cooperate with us to reduce our dependency on South Africa."

HOTELS TO PRIVATE BUSINESS--A total of 35 establishments of the hotel and allied sector, belonging to the hotel industry and located in the low-lying and Maquinino and Esturro areas of Beira, are to be transferred to the private sector before the end of this month. The liquidating committee associated with those units and in operation since November has taken steps to finalize the transfer of those establishments as soon as possible; it needs only to make final arrangements for units located in Beira's Manga and peripheral areas. An information source close to this committee told our reporting staff yesterday that 49 units will be transferred in Sofala's provincial capital and that their sale will be in keeping with criteria previously established. As principal requirements in the distribution of those establishments, future purchasers will have to guarantee the public improved service, provide favorable conditions to satisfy the most elementary needs of their clients, offer definite investment programs and possess minimum acceptable operating experience in the hotel sector. BUS ASSEMBLY PLANNED--A planned assembly line for Ikarus buses will enter into operation in Beira during the second half of this year, according to a source representing the Mechanical Construction Directorate, an organization associated with the Ministry of Industry and Energy. The plan calls for an initial assembly of 50 buses, including the articulated type with 261 seats and others with 100 seats. The project is being backed by present cooperative agreements between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the People's Republic of Hungary. CONSPIRACY TRIAL'S ADJOURNMENT--BANJUL, March 30 - The conspiracy trial of two Gambian opposition leaders was adjourned here Monday for a week shortly after opening because there were no defence lawyers in the Supreme Court. Sherif Mustapha Didda of the National Convention Party and Cheyassin Secka of the National Liberation Party have been charged with five other people of conspiring between January and August last year to overthrow the Government of President Sir Dawda Jawara by force. Nearly 900 People have been charged either with taking part in an attempted coup here at the end of July or with being involved in the ensuing days of general violence, murder and looting. Trials started in December before special courts. To date they have handed down 17 death sentences, but these have not yet been carried out. The short-lived putsch was quelled by troops despatched from Senegal at Sir Dawda's request. The two West African states merged in a confederation early last month. (AFP)

NIASSE'S RELEASE--DAKAR, March 30 - A Moslem opposition figure in Senegal, extradited here from Niger in January after being sentenced in absentia to a year in jail, was freed on Monday, an informed source reported yesterday. He is Ahmet Niasse, who is generally known as the "Ayatollah of Kaolack" (a town in South-Central Senegal). There was no immediate official information concerning his release. Charges against him included swindling, spreading false information, insulting a member of the Government, inciting soldiers to disobey orders and trying to operate an unregistered association. Mr Niasse was arrested in the Niger capital Niamey in April 1980 after living in exile in Libya. He had said he intended to form an Islamic party in Senegal, 82 percent of whose 5.5 million population are Moslems. (AFP)

CATTLE RUSTLING'S COMMERCIALIZATION--DAR-ES-SALAAM, March 24 - Cattle rustling across the Kenya-Tanzania border by the local cattle-keeping tribes is being exploited by local businessmen to beat Tanzanian foreign exchange control. According to reports reaching here businessmen are paying "armed bandits" in local currency to drive stolen cattle to the border, where they are headed across into Kenya to be sold for Kenyan shillings. The commercialization of cattle rustling came to light when local authorities said they were seeking several hundred people in Mara region, on the border with Kenya's South Nyanza Province, east of Lake Victoria, in connection with stock theft. More than 50,000 head of cattle have been smuggled across into Kenya over the past few years, according to some estimates here, and it is rare for the stolen animals to be recovered. Commercialized cattle rustling, characterized by organized armed raids on cattle herds which are then moved during the night, has increased recently because of the high price cattle fetch in Kenya. Businessmen have used the trade to take their money out of Tanzania. A report in the Government-owned Daily News said financiers of the cattle deals recruited some of the experienced rustlers who traditionally raided for reasons of prestige and valour. (A.F.P.)

FIRST-HAND ACCOUNT OF KAMPALA SITUATION

Paris LE MATIN MAGAZINE in French 13 Feb 82 pp 8-9, 11-12

[Article by Maurice Szafran]

[Text] Kampala--"Do you want to go with me, sir? You know, you can give how much money you wish." I have now been walking for an hour up and down Kampala Road, the "grand" boulevard of the Ugandan capital. And for an hour a horde of outrageously made-up whores have repeated this same phrase. After an hour I already have an almost morbid sensation that this city is in a deep coma, that its residents are strictly content to survive. Here girls with soft skin trade it for food.

Peggy, who is 24 years old with a thin "ritual" scar on her left cheek and hips pressed tightly into a poorly tailored skirt of inferior black leatherette, found a room for me in exchange for a 10-dollar bill. This is a feat, an almost impossible mission in Kampala. There are only 3 dilapidated hotels, without running water or electricity half of the time, of questionable cleanliness, and where a "bakchich" is required for sleeping on torn sheets. I ended up at the International Hotel, formerly the pride and joy of Amin Dada because of its sparkle and gleam. The elevator: out of order; lamp: broken; keys: only 1 for about 50 rooms, which snugly house, after dark, some characters who have come for "business."

"When Kampala was liberated (in April 1979)," Peggy states, "there was a veritable slaughter at the International. Amin's killers had taken refuge there. The fighting progressed from one room to the next, from one balcony to the next, in the corridors, the dining rooms, the ballroom. At that time, I wanted to become a nurse." Room 232, International Hotel, Kampala. She stops talking, inspects my toilet kit, asks me if I would give her a little "Paris perfume." She hesitates, touches my T-shirts, and says: "Perhaps I could sleep there, on the other bed. I live 20 km away and taxis are too expensive."

After 10 years of ruthless dictatorship, Idi Amin Dada, field marshal and president for life, had totally dismembered the country. He had, of course, had more than 300,000 Ugandans assassinated. He and his close associates had, of course, annexed most of the assets of a naturally wealthy country. But even worse, Amin Dada had physically exhausted the entire country. An insane dictator had dragged a whole country along into his madness. And since April 1979, when the Tanzanian Army routed Dada, things have hardly been any better. Ugandans are still shooting each other. The country's economy is still at zero. And Kampala functions only as a result of the millions of dollars injected by the World Bank following patient negotiations conducted by the "democratically" elected president of the republic, Milton Obote.

A feeling of uneasiness: It is 1930 hours; the sun has set and Kampala begins to doze, making room for crazed snipers. I ask Peggy to take me for a "walk" in the city. "It is calmer than before," she replies, "but still dangerous." Another 10-dollar bill. No further problem; she smiles, then adds: "Now I screw for foreign currency. It's easy and it pays well. You see, here the whites don't have a damn thing to do in the evening." With a little after-shave lotion behind her ears, she thinks again of "business": "I hope you have a pack of Sportsmen. We have to offer 3 or 4 cigarettes to the soldiers to get rid of them." No problem; journalists stationed in Kenya had informed me: Sportsmen provide the essential permit for any night outing in Kampala.

"Come on, I'll show you how clever people manage in this country." Peggy is used to walking. She has a lot of breath and keeps up the pace. Laid out on 7 hills, Kampala is exhausting, with constant ups and downs. She laughs: "For more than 2 years, there was practically no gasoline. Ugandans have a passion for Mercedes cars. As soon as they get a little money, they buy one. They were very annoyed; they stuck them in their garages and boarded up the doors. But it made no difference: patrols of soldiers blew everything up with grenades and drove off to their villages behind the wheel of the car. They had gas! That dirty army." We keep on walking up and down, but she still is not willing to tell me where she's taking me. We turn off Kampala Road and pass in front of the bus station, which must have been pretty a long time ago, having been built in the purest colonial style. There is no one in the streets. At 2015 hours, Kampala is asleep. About 20 meters away, we have to deal with two soldiers wearing red berets tightly on their heads and with automatic pistols at their sides. Peggy chuckles, but I don't. She is used to these "barjots." But it still took her some time.

The first one says to his buddy: "Finally, some company."

The other one says: "You, my brother, you must have a few pennies somewhere."

Peggy: "Get serious, a pack of Sportsmen is quite enough for both of you." They pocket the cigarettes and the atmosphere becomes clearly relaxed.

One of them asks: "And where are you going?"

Peggy: "To market." All three burst out laughing.

We ascend and descend. Exhausting. We skirt Kolalo Hill, the chic, diplomatic district of the city, dipping down onto Makerere University. Passing in front of the entrance, Peggy does not even bother to look, but states simply: "We are going to market." About 2200 hours in Kampala. Destination: A shantytown.

On the edge of the shantytown of Kisenyi, we finally catch sight of a poorly lighted shed. During the day, the owner--a big chubby guy--repairs mufflers. After dark, he turns his shop into a stronghold of "magendo," the favorite game of any self-respecting Ugandan. Magendo is a very special form of the black market. Robert, the keeper of the place, explains to me: "The prices are lower than in actual stores. But all the food is grown and prepared by my family about 50 km from the city. Do you want bananas, meat, coffee? No problem. Japanese watches, Bic pens, a cigarette lighter? Easy. I get that from Rwanda. At least Amin taught us one thing: resourcefulness. This country no longer exists; there are no more laws, nothing. From time to time, soldiers come and grab up everything. I let them have their way, otherwise I'll get a bullet in the head." During this time, Peggy has been packing things into a kind of dish towel. She did not walk such a long way for nothing. That will cost me another 10 dollars. About a dozen people silently feel the weight of the fruit, arguing with a look over a few pieces of overly rare soap. "These are rich people who have come," Peggy points out. "They love to play magendo. The poor arrive at sunrise. They take what's left, most often green bananas, with which they can make a good sweet puree." On the way back to the International, two more barriers, two new distributions of Sportsmen. "There are a good thirty such places throughout Kampala," Peggy tells me. "The new masters know it, but prefer to ignore it. Corruption is rampant. Offer them a few bottles of German or Dutch beer and most of those scum will let your magendo thrive." A whiskey at the bar of the Imperial, the only regularly supplied hotel in Kampala. Nothing but whites and prostitutes. Depressing.

About 8 am, Kampala has resumed its false appearance of an impatient capital in which "real" business is transacted between two piles of ruins, behind the gutted exterior of an imitation bank. Peggy had promised to introduce me to an important Ugandan figure, a close associate of President Obote. This high-ranking military officer regularly purchases magendo drugs with total impunity. All Kampala is aware of what's going on and all Kampala keeps its mouth shut. Imagine, the officer let it be known that about 30 soldiers were "loyal" to him, that they were even ready to do anything to defend and protect him. Peggy and I looked for him all morning before learning that he "was accompanying the president on a field trip, visiting the neediest villages on the outskirts of Kampala."

"That's super for him," Peggy said. "He'll use the opportunity to make sure that the merchandise gets in all right. Rotten, Uganda is rotten. Amin has fathered his children, and I'm the first."

The shantytown of Owen. In another shantytown, Peggy made an appointment for me with a "bayayes." Distinguishing sign: orphan; occupation: thief; specialty: vendor and consumer of "nyaye," the local marihuana. Eric is 19 years old. In 1976, his parents--textile merchants--were taken away by Amin's security services, the sinister State Research Bureau. He never saw them again. He still doesn't know why.

He told us: "At 12 years old, I found myself in the street. For the first 6 months, I slept near the bus station. And then I joined a gang. It was easier." There are more than 10,000 bayayes who have taken over the streets of Kampala. An amazing sight: They are lined up at regular intervals on either side of Kampala Road. "In the daytime," Eric continues, "we sell cigarettes, newspapers, books. No one has the right to compete with us, except ...." But life has not always been so easy for the bayayes. Hunted by Amin's "sbires," they were formerly "deported" to coffee plantations to replace "missing" farmworkers. "After a month of working, I escaped," Eric said. "I wanted to get back to Owen and rejoin my friends at any price." His friends are there around him, about 20 boys between the ages of 10 and 20. No leader, shared booty, complete solidarity: These are the basic principles of the bayayes. They have even invented their own language, "luyaye," an incomprehensible mixture, if you are not one of them, of English, dialect and slang.

It is easy to be taken with the charm of the bayayes. You have only to follow them to discover, more and better, the madness of Kampala, an entire city's obsession with inventing new forms of trafficking daily. "It's hard," Eric noted, "because of that military scum. They hunt us down, beat us and make us pay ransom." We were sitting on the bare ground, in one of Owen's abandoned shanties. One of Eric's companions pulled a bottle out of his pocket and passed it around. Intense burning in the throat after the first swallow. We were drinking "waragi," a homemade banana alcohol that is distilled and then sold by the bayayes. "People here love to drink," Eric noted pompously, suddenly very serious. "Especially beer. Now it's too expensive. So we drink waragi instead. That brings in a lot, a whole lot." How much? "Forty dollars a month." The salary of an important high-paid Ugandan.

And Eric laughed. At my astonished look, at his old yellow shirt, full of holes, giving him the gawky appearance of a tramp. Can he be "rehabilitated"? For whom, for what? After the fall of Amin, an Italian priest was bent on "civilizing" the bayayes. The priest was very decent, very well-intentioned. "You must be joking. He tried to screw us," Eric interjected. "His only goal was to keep us from smoking nyaye." Bursts of laughter around us. Without exception, the bayayes all use drugs. "And the priest," Eric continued, "was annoyed that we were getting high. We don't give a damn. It's really essential to survive in Kampala."

Surviving in Kampala: This was Eric's only concern in recent years. Fighting with his gang, violence in exchange for violence, against the indomitable storm that has hit the Ugandan capital. "The soldiers," he repeated again and again, "are dogs. They have assassinated dozens of my friends coldly and cowardly. The technique was always the same. They would surround us, blocking off all exits from the shantytown with trucks, and would choose about a dozen hostages. And they would liquidate them. On the spot. Or later, in the ominous Luzira prison. They piled us up like rats over there. Before shooting us." In Kampala, soldiers and police have chosen a favorite target: the bayayes.

"We bother them," Eric replied. "We bother them because we are stronger than them when it comes to trafficking. We take a lot of money away from them. Normally, the sale of marihuana belong to us." A demonstration followed immediately. A travel agent was waiting for his supply. The appointment was kept near the National Assembly. This customer was a very distinguished gentleman: pin-striped gray suit, maroon tie, highly polished shoes. He moved quickly toward Eric, looking nervously in my direction. The bayaye slipped his hand into his pants and took out a plastic bag. The man simultaneously gave him several Kenyan bills. "The cops and soldiers have never tried to stop the trafficking," Eric pointed out. "No, on the contrary, they wanted to control it, to direct it. But we are stronger, better organized than them."

Bayayes gangs never work against each other. Each has its own territory, goods, technique. "In Uganda, you get along or you croak," Eric concluded calmly.

Before I left him, he took me to one of Kampala's three discotheques. "No one danced for a long time. Apart from us, no one dared go out in the evening. Too afraid. Too hard. Now we're obviously making up for it. Everyone wiggles until they're exhausted, now that the soldiers are shooting less." The club was called the Black Star. We had to stand in a long line in a narrow corridor strewn with beer bottles. Only the men paid 300 shillings to the cashier; the girls went in "free." Then we went down a rickety, worn stairway and ended up in a rectangular room which was poorly lit with old neon signs. The men were on one side and the young women on the other. In the course of war and poverty, "they" had gotten out of the habit of talking to each other. Eric placed himself in the center of the dance floor and passed around a joint. Life was apparently returning to normal. "We have to learn how to relax again," he told me. "Not easy. I still can't manage to look at someone without wondering whether or not he will try to kill me." Everyone smoked. The atmosphere finally became relaxed. The bottles continued to pile up in a corner. There were about 100 people and they had finally forgotten Amin Dada, the massacres and their troubles. This gloomy, gray disco gradually took on a festive atmosphere.

Kampala's bayayes have actively helped to pillage the city. The new government no longer even tries to control them. It constitutes only one of the many forces making Uganda subject to their strict needs and desires. "I have enough money to buy weapons," Eric noted. "Sure, you need them in order to be respected. Soon I'll buy myself a submachinegun. No problem; if I have to use it, I won't hesitate." Eric is one of Amin's orphans. One of his great pleasures is to sniff a cotton ball dipped in gasoline. Another detail: When Peggy introduced him to me, I was convinced that he was 30 years old. There is no doubt that the bayayes are seriously worn and tired.

Arua, the former stronghold of Field Marshal Idi Amin Dada.

"Do you really want to go there? I'm against it. The roads are more or less quiet, but Amin's killers return from time to time. And there, make no mistake, they assassinate everyone." This high official of the Ministry of the Interior trembles at the mere mention of the Western Nile Province, of which Amin Dada is a native. The government also controls only a limited part of it. "When the last of Amin's soldiers abandoned Kampala," the official continued, "they shipped out tons of arms and ammunition on a fleet of trucks. And since then, backed up against the Sudanese border, they have made life impossible for us." Thus President Milton Obote's government does not particularly appreciate a foreigner poking his nose around over there, especially since the official army issued no report when it retook a strip of the Western Nile. "They systematically and meticulously exterminated a small tribe, the Madi," an opponent stated. "For vague reasons. They say that one of Amin's wives was a native of the tribe."

After a 2-day truck ride and after a multitude of barriers, which were obviously cleared with packs of Sportsmen, we reached a totally surrealistic little town. Nothing was left, nothing except wild, savage vegetation. No gasoline or telephones. A post office and bank in ruins. "Arua is abandoned when night falls," a policeman said, walking up and down in the debris. "Everyone goes back to his tribe. It's easier to defend yourself. What a mess!"

Arua's last "defenders" live in constant terror: Will Amin's killers decide to attack? They are there, not far away, within firing range. They have said that they would not stop trying to regain control of the city. "Let's have no illusions," the policeman added, "the Ugandan soldiers assigned to protect us behave almost as badly as Amin's characters. They steal from us and force our women to accept anything. It is hell, I tell you, hell."

Amin's killers are like phantoms, invisible but still so present. Just their legend maintains irrepressible anxiety. How many are there? In Arua, the most extraordinary figures are repeated with absolute certainty: a handful, according to some; tens of thousands, according to others. "I have 13,000 men awaiting my return," Amin recently boasted in his gilded prison in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. The reality is not of great importance, since the blows of these mercenaries spread panic among the survivors. And this is certainly what they want. "They attack the churches and assassinate the priests," a banana vendor said, frightened. "The Italian fathers who had worked among us for 30 years have also fled." An apocalyptic account, roads systematically mined, villages so little or so poorly supplied that malnutrition still takes its toll. "And when we go to the hospital," an old farmer complained, "the doctors make us pay for aspirin."

The Arua hospital was reorganized in early 1980 by an international team of doctors. "When the French were there," a woman remarked, "everything was normal. Today everything costs. A bed as well as a shot." So Arua disappears a little more every month; the population is leaving. For nearby Zaire or for Kampala. Without any certainty of getting there alive. The paranoia of Ugandans is far from over.

REPORTAGE ON PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

Comment on Namibia, South Africa

LD170108 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Ramalho Eanes's visit to Angola was today marked by the official opening of bilateral talks and the speeches delivered tonight at a banquet hosted by Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos in honor of his Portuguese opposite number.

Harsh criticism was leveled tonight by the Angolan president at the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] in connection with the recent release by UNITA of Portuguese prisoners, as our special correspondent Antonio Varela reports from Luanda:

[Varela] Some of the statements made by the Angolan president tonight might cause controversy in Portuguese society, namely those in which he referred to the recent release of Portuguese prisoners by UNITA in the following terms:

[Begin Dos Santos recording] The latest example we were presented with by those longing for a return to colonial-fascism, was the tragicomedy produced by the CDS, supervised by imperialism and having as its main actor not the so-called 16 released prisoners but the renegade Savambi, himself the product of the former fascist secret police and obedient tool of imperialism and its figurehead, the Pretoria racist regime. [end recording]

[Varela] In spite of this, both minister of industry, energy and exports Baiao Horta and Sa Machado, deputy chairman of the CDS, included in the presidential retinue as members of the administration council of the Gulberkian Foundation, applauded, in the end, the Angola president.

The Angolan president's speech is of great political importance not only for its firm condemnation of colonial-fascism and of the colonial war--known here as the First National Liberation War--but also for his portrayal of the Portuguese people as an ally because, he said, the enemy was the same.

Eduardo dos Santos also analyzed the prevailing situation in Southern Africa, and voiced his gratification at Portugal's stand on the independence of Namibia:

[Begin Dos Santos recording] We take not with gratification of the stands which Portugal has adopted vis-a-vis the problem of Namibia within the framework of the efforts which the international community has been undertaking in order to find an internationally acceptable solution to the conflict. [End recording]

[Varela] A deepfelt tribute to the late President Agostinho Neto and a strong criticism of the past colonial situation as a necessary condition for the consolidation of effective and stable cooperation and the overcoming of mistakes made during the decolonization period was the keynote of the first part of the speech delivered by General Ramalho Eanes:

[Begin Eanes recording] There is no reason to long for a past where the political mistakes and the lack of perspective on the future prevented the rapid, necessary and correct evolution toward freedom, independence and full sovereignty and dignity as these are the values from which the fraternity between [word indistinct] peoples, aware of their identity, draws its strength, and without which there can only be oppression, unjustice, conflict and ambiguity. [End recording]

[Varela] Ramalho Eanes also referred to the situation in Southern Africa, namely the continuing South African military aggressions against the southern part of Angolan territory which Portugal cannot fail to strongly condemn. The text of the speech of the Portuguese president was, in the last minute, reduced in lenth due to the alleged excessive amount of time it would take to read it out. Among other alterations, a specific reference to South Africa, condemning its aggressions against southern Angola, was omitted.

[Begin Eanes recording] Today, when the People's Republic of Angola is suffering the effects of violent armed incursions, in blatant violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, Portugal cannot and must not, as a responsible member country of the Atlantic Alliance and as a country which knows Africa well, fail strongly to condemn these military aggressions and stress the urgent need for negotiated, just and stable solutions capable of putting an end to such aggressions. [End recording]

[Varela] Ramalho Eanes also expressed Portugal's support for the People's Republic of Angola and our country's understanding for the difficulties which the Angolan people are currently going through.

Eanes Meets With Namibian Leader

NC190737 Paris AFP in English 0723 GMT 19 Apr 82

[Text] Luanda, 19 Apr (AFP)--Visiting Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes is expected to confer here today with Namibian nationalist leader Sam Nujoma, whose country has been a main topic of General Eanes' talks with his host, Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, an informed Portuguese source said.

Mr Nujoma met Sunday with Portuguese Deputy Foreign Minister Leonardo Mathias.

General Eanes wants to play a role in the current efforts by the five-nation Western "contact group" trying to achieve an independence settlement for South African-ruled Namibia. Before his trip here, he had discussions with the group, whose efforts have reached an impasse in recent months because of disagreement about the electoral system in the future independent state.

Last month, the contact group visited Angola, but did not see Mr Nujoma, who was in Cuba at the time.

General Eanes' intervention comes as Mr Nujoma's SWAPO guerrillas have announced a "general offensive" in Namibia against occupying South African troops. Pretoria, which already occupies part of Southern Angola, has stepped up reconnaissance flights which Luanda officials say have previously heralded air attacks.

At the start of his four-day visit, General Eanes declared that Portugal would stand by Angola in the face of "violent armed incursions."

Before he leaves for home today, President Eanes is also expected to meet with representatives of Fretilin, the opposition movement in the former Portuguese Asian colony of East Timor, now occupied by Indonesia--illegally, in Portugal's view.

Comments Before Departure

AB191753 Paris AFP in French 1523 GMT 19 Apr 82

[Text] Luanda, 19 Apr (AFP)--Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes declared on Monday in Luanda before his departure for Lisbon that the official visit he had just concluded to Angola set a "new landmark in the common history" of the two countries.

At a news conference, the Portuguese head of state stressed the "frankness and cordiality" which prevailed in the talks between the two delegations. "The chapter (reference to the disputes) of relations between Angolans and Portuguese" has now been turned over, he said. He stressed "our political determination to develop a closer dynamic and multiform cooperation based on mutual advantages."

Replying to a question, Mr Eanes indicated that the Angolan authorities were holding a Portuguese soldier (captured in 1975 along with forces of Roberto Holden's Angolan National Liberation Front) as well as two Portuguese civilians. The soldier "made up his mind to stay. The Portuguese Army left no soldiers behind in Angola," the president stated.

Mr Eanes explained that the Angolan authorities took the initiative to bring up this issue. Then he added: "I think that they will find a relatively prompt solution to this problem."

On the international front, he pointed out that, even though "Portugal does not represent NATO here," Angola does not, however, ignore the position of Lisbon within the alliance. "We support the restoration of peace. A strong Angolan state will make cooperation much easier. Meanwhile, NATO countries have clearly stated their position on the issue of apartheid and on the settlement of the Namibian problem," he said.

The Portuguese president indicated that some NATO countries maintain close economic relations with South Africa because they hold the view that Pretoria would otherwise enjoy its autonomy. [as heard]

Questioned lastly on the activities of some Angolan opposition movements in Portugal, he recalled that the Portuguese constitution guarantees the freedom of speech, adding that the movements often engage "in a publicity campaign," without any relation to reality or their own importance.

SOLDIERS TO BE USED IN DEFENSE, RECONSTRUCTION TASKS

[Text] Angolan Minister of Defense Col Pedro Maria Tonha (Pedale) Thursday affirmed in Luanda that the "Reagan administration's militarist tactics will not be able to undermine our people's socialist choice and the support of those who are still fighting for their independence."

Colonel Pedale, who, closed an evaluation meeting on the results of the operational, combative and political preparation during the 1981-1982 training year, said that the meeting took place in an internal cycle "in which the country was undergoing difficulties owing to the increased aggressiveness of South African racists" whose armed activities are basically directed "against undefended populations and vital economic objectives which have gravely affected our country's economy."

After pointing out that our armed forces are committed primarily to the defense of territorial integrity and national sovereignty, the minister of defense stressed that they "should also take part in the national reconstruction tasks, especially in this stage of increased economic activity in which every effort should be made to restoring the country's economic and social systems."

"All officers, noncommissioned officers, enlisted men, and sailors should be unceasingly watchful for proper use of areas for which they are responsible, by utilizing resources wisely and exclusively for military purposes"--the party Politiburo member stressed, adding that the conclusions reached at the meeting "are to guide you permanently in your daily work, in leading the troops and serving as a basis for the creative development of the sector each one leads."

About 70 higher officials from the country's politico-military regions participated in the meeting.

MANPOWER SHORTAGE, PROFITEERING AFFECT SALES

Luanda NOTICIAS DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 19 Mar 82 p 2

[Article by O. Bento]

[Text] From early dawn, an endless line of people forms at the Mobil station on Deolinda Rodrigues Avenue waiting to get lamp oil. The fact that not all the houses in the suburban barrios, particularly in our capital, are equipped with electricity obliges the families to obtain light from oil lamps for which the usual fuel is oil. In unsettled Luanda, as in other areas of the country, this product, for diverse reasons, is difficult to get.

For example, let us look at some of the causes inherent in this problematic situation, in the specific case of the above-mentioned station, for as it is understandable, many will certainly wish to know the reasons, since Angola possesses enormous oil-bearing possibilities.

We move about and on the site we can find out from a worker on duty that the supply at the station is unpredictable and as long as they continue this pattern of filling the tanks today with a certain number of liters and return to fill other tanks 1, 2 or 3 months later, the situation will never get any better.

To service the crowd that files up there only one worker is on duty in the morning and two in the afternoon, who also supply other vehicles with other fuels.

If we consider the inconveniences that this situation creates, and take into consideration that the same workers together with duties as suppliers also are responsible for collecting payment and if we add to this some slackness on their part, we can easily deduce the result.

On the people's part, they buy at their own convenience, as there is no limited amount to buy. They take whatever they can get.

We do not believe that all the oil they buy is for their own use because the amount bought confirms our curiosity. Rumors reaching us from other provinces say that much of the oil bought this way supplies even clandestine trade rings because of the shortage they are also experiencing. And when it gets there, the exhorbitant prices demanded are shocking. It remains for us to say that the relevancy of the situation demands urgent measures.

NEED FOR SPARE PARTS FOR PRIVATE VEHICLES STRESSED

[Article by Joao Serra: "Automobile Spare Parts"]

[Excerpts] There is no doubt that the development of Angola--a country whose geographical area is greater than 1 million square kilometers--is absolutely dependent on the speed and efficiency of an automobile fleet that will be commensurate with the tremendous demands of economic and social interchange between the coastal belt and the interior.

This is why the automobile, the jeep and the truck are a resource of inestimable value as a lever for progress. Paradoxically, however, at this moment there are in Angola thousands and thousands of vehicles of all types that are immobilized solely for the lack of spare parts; indeed, the elementary nature of the damage to some of these vehicles is shocking.

What is the explanation for this problem?

Innumerable excuses can obviously be found very quickly to ward off responsibility. It appears undeniable, however (without overlooking the negligence and unconcern of certain enterprises with respect to the regular maintenance of their vehicles) that there is genuine difficulty and there are many obstacles in connection with the sale of spare parts on the local market.

The truth is that certain parts are simply not to be found on the market. Moreover, many of the imported parts inexplicably fail to take into account the characteristics of the national motor vehicle fleet. Replacement parts for certain makes of vehicles that in some cases are still in considerable use in our country are accordingly no longer imported. On the other hand, however, you have the bureaucracy, the selfishness of the so-called "strategic reserves" for purposes that are after all poorly defined, and the increasing frequency of the cases of "cronyism" in the spare-parts trade, all contributing to make the problem worse.

If we are to believe the explanations of the spare-parts establishments, the imported parts are destined exclusively for the vehicles of the state sector. This criterion is subject to various interpretations, however, and the question immediately arises as to why so many vehicles used by the state are lying idle and rusting away, destined very soon to be added to the scrap heap.

Other questions can also be raised, however, Do not the thousands of private vehicles also constitute--in the final analysis--a valuable national resource? Do not the hundreds of trucks belonging to small private companies--trucks that regularly provide an important part of the transportation of goods within Angolan territory--also represent a definite contribution to the economic development of the nation?

The national motor vehicle fleet--both private and state--constitutes an Angolan national resource. To allow thousands of vehicles of all types to deteriorate and die for a lack of spare parts is a mistake that those who manage the inventories of spare parts are failing to comprehend with sufficient clarity.

OUTDATED STRUCTURES OF HUAMBO AIRPORT REVIEWED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 7 Mar 82 p 13

[Excerpt] The regional office of Angola Air Lines (TAAG) in Huambo is having to cope with various difficulties of an infrastructural nature, notably the unsuitability of Albano Machado Airport.

The second most important in the nation, the office was established on 1 January 1980 because of the intensity of the traffic, which has recorded a substantial increase in recent months to the figure of approximately 13,000 passengers carried.

Airport manager Jose Carlos gave some statistics recorded at the airport: approximately 20 flights per week in the planes traditionally used (Boeing 737, carrying 130 passengers) and 24 flights per week in Yak-40 airliners, with stops at Moxico, Huila, Malanje and Benguela. This latter type of plane, which has a capacity of 31 passengers, has been regarded as inefficient by the official directly responsible for routes because it cannot handle the daily movement of traffic and baggage for the users of TAAG.

On the other hand, the Huambo airport has two types of cargo planes, with a capacity of 4,000 tons (the AN-26) and 20,000 liters of aviation fuel (the Hercules C-130).

Airport Unsuitable for Present Traffic

Although not adapted to the heavy traffic it must handle, Albano Machado Airport has already been in operation for approximately a decade. It was built for aircraft of smaller capacity, and its transformation is therefore necessary.

The insufficiency of sound equipment and the absence of public telephones are the reason for a certain inefficiency in the effort to support the users and their ability to utilize the service telephone of the national airline.

SAVIMBI SEEN OPEN TO HIGHEST BIDDER

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 14 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Reporting to His Masters"]

[Text] The renegade has returned to his hideout, to the protection of his masters, in the racist Republic of South Africa.

After an absence of several months during which he was in the United States of North America to contact old friends of the days when he was a lackey of the CIA--and not only that. And he paraded his wretched, traitorous self--this traitor to the cause of the African peoples--through the Kingdom of Morocco. Now here he is, back in the "apartheid paradise," a place where, it would seem, he feels completely at home.

The man who has so much to answer for to our people--for his crimes--returned to Pretoria to report to his current masters on the results of the mission that they entrusted to him, a mission of new betrayals of sovereign and independent Angola.

According to what the South African newspaper STAR has disclosed, he was greeted on his arrival by Pieter and Roelof Botha--and also by Magnus Mallan, to whom he is apparently directly answerable, inasmuch as this is the individual who is coordinating all the destabilizing actions in opposition to the People's Republic of Angola.

Still according to the daily STAR, the puppet "displayed his pleasure" upon his arrival. In other words, he had faithfully carried out all the assignments that the swindlers had given him. The fact is that the rulers in Pretoria would have been hard put to find a more obliging traitor: one more obedient to their orders or more servile, one easier to bend to their will.

If we are to believe what the aforementioned South African newspaper tells us, the racist leaders for their part had "good news" with which to reward their diligent puppet. Accordingly, in addition to everything they have been giving him up to now--money, arms and extensive logistic support--he will now have at his disposal additional bases on the territory of occupied Namibia, to go with those which are customarily displayed to journalists who are receptive to puppet concepts such as "liberated territory." It will not just be bases, however. He will also have more instructors, and they will be American as well as South African. In short, he is increasingly beholden to the swindlers.

Basically, what has just taken place in Pretoria--right out in the open, reported in the newspapers--is merely one more stage in the long history of betrayals by a man who is no longer even attempting to conceal his attitude. He has lost whatever remained of his dignity--if indeed he ever had any. In the final analysis, he is what he has always been throughout his life: a renegade who sells himself to the highest bidder.

He has now sided with the worst enemies of all Africa. He stands ready to do their bidding, obedient, ready to carry out all orders given him by the racists.

Yesterday, during the long colonial night, he was heart and soul with the oppressors, with those who were oppressing us, with those who reduced us to poverty, with those who exploited our labor and our resources. He later placed himself under the boot of the CIA. Today, while still serving U.S. interests, he is directly in the service of the South Africans, standing at their side and against us, against our struggle for the edification of the Angolan person.

He does not want us to be free, the masters of our own destiny. He believes we must be cast in his image and become lackeys of the swindlers.

He has wagered everything against us, against all our aspirations for freedom, social progress and peace.

He believes we must return to the past, to slavery, to the whip.

In Pretoria last weekend our enemies drew up plans--in their offices with the renegade--for new actions against the Angolan people.

We shall not be taken by surprise. We shall be vigilant, and we shall know how to defend ourselves against the onslaughts of imperialism and its agents.

The struggle continues.

Victory is certain.

BRAZILIAN HOTEL CONSTRUCTION DIFFICULTIES--In carrying out the general offensive against liberalism and disorganization, a team from the general staff of the offensive, led by Central Committee Secretary for the productive sector Manuel Pedro Pacavira and Antonio Jacinto, assistant coordinator of the Central Control Commission, visited the Hotel Presidente Wednesday. During their visit the general offensive leaders against liberalism and disorganization noted that the delay in terminating the works was primarily owing to the failure to meet the deadline set by SISAL-SA, a Brazilian firm contracted to reconstruct the hotel. They also noted that the lack of communication between the local party structures and labor unions and the Technical Commission for Work Inspection, which includes elements of Domestic Trades and Construction and, particularly, the technical incompetence on the contracted firm's part, hindered the termination of the works initially expected for the end of 1980. During the visit to the various floors they also noted that the insufficient material for the hotel structures was imported, such as mattresses which are now beginning to deteriorate. OPEC LOAN--An agreement involving $1 million was signed between OPEC and Cape Verde, represented by Director of Political Affairs E. C. Renato Cardoso of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, instructed by its minister to sign the loan in Vienna which the OPEC nations decided to grant to Cape Verde from its common fund. The non-interest-bearing loan of $1 million is to be used to pay Cape Verde's initial share after its entry into the OPEC Common Fund last October. The common fund, recommended by UNCTAD principally to benefit Third World countries which base their economy on the production and export of raw materials, is aimed at regulating and compensating such countries when there are price declines on the international market and its use was approved by the underdeveloped countries. The problem of entry shares by less advanced countries arose--the least share being $1 million--and that is why OPEC decided to grant Cape Verde this loan. Cape Verde and the OPEC organization enjoy excellent relations as evidenced by the fact that this organization is financing a large part of the telecommunications project for our country. PATASSE AFFAIR MAY GENERATE PERMANENT DISTRUST OF FRANCE

Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Mar 82, p 4

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti, LE MONDE special correspondent]

[Text] Bangui Hopes For Patasse's Extradition

The French-Central African crisis continued this Wednesday, 10 March, following Paris' refusal to return Mr Ange Patasse, who took refuge in the French Embassy on Saturday, 6 March, to Bangui authorities. It was in vain that Mr Guy Denne, Elysee adviser on African and Malagasy affairs, proposed to General Kolingba on Tuesday that Mr Patasse be allowed to leave the embassy and go to a neighboring country.

Bangui--The French-Central African crisis took a new turn on Tuesday 9 March, with Bangui's delivery of a 48-hour ultimatum on the surrender of Mr Patasse, who has been taking refuge at the French Embassy since last Saturday, to Central African legal authorities.

The decision of the Military Committee for National Recovery was announced on state radio in the middle of the day, while Mr Guy Penne, the president's adviser for African and Malagasy affairs, who had arrived that morning and was to leave in the early afternoon, was still in President Kolingba's office where he had been received for close to a half hour.

The severe deterioration of French-Central African relations is assuming something of an unreal character. Monday morning, the residence of Colonel Faure, armed forces attache, was searched by the police. Since Tuesday afternoon a security force has been established around the French Chancellery by the Central Africans in order to control access to it.

While Mr Patasse, considered to be the mastermind of the aborted conspiracy on 3 March, camped in the small salon adjoining Ambassador Couturier's office on the first floor of the Chancellery, Mr Penne was rather briefly received by General Kolingba and was to spend less than 6 hours in Bangui.

The French Embassy is more and more silent on what is transpiring, and Mr Penne did not want to say anything. As for the French troops in the "200-villa quarters," they have been confined to barracks and the entrance to their camp has been embellished with several rows of barbed wire.

On the one hand, there is the impression of witnessing the continued slippage of French-Central African relations since the failure of the "Patassist" attempt to overthrow the regime almost a week ago. On the other, one wonders whether this development of the situation can be as irreparable as it seems.

For, as a member of the government said on Tuesday evening, the Central African authorities continue "to have confidence in France's wisdom." They remain convinced that although "presumptions" of complicity in the "Patassiat" conspiracy involve French "personages," "French-Central African cooperation has nothing to do with this matter." They do not doubt Mr Mitterrand's attitude and, according to the remarks of this same minister, remain "confident of Mr Patasse's extradition."

In other words, the ultimatum delivered on Tuesday--and of which Mr Penne apparently could not have been aware before his arrival--must be considered as "friendly." It is true that once Mr Patasse's presence on the French Embassy's premises was publicly known, the Military Committee had to have felt it necessary to take an initiative to show that it wouldn't just twiddle its thumbs as far as the man it considered the leader of the conspiracy, whose supporters have been arrested by the dozens, was concerned.

Whatever Bangui's reasons, Paris finds itself with an ultimatum on its hands which, in principle expires on Thursday at noon. For, as far as the Central Africans are concerned, the pursuit of Mr Patasse is a "strictly internal" matter and, consequently, his extradition should not be the subject of negotiations. Once again, in official circles here, they seem to be excluding the chance of Paris offering the right of asylum in its local chancellery to the refugee.

That's where things stood early Monday morning, after 6 hours of the crisis and without prejudging the results of Mr Penne's mission: the most wanted man in Central Africa was shut in the air conditioned salon of the embassy of a power whose aid represents two-thirds of the income in the Central African budget, and which has had 1,200 troops stationed here for close to 2-1/2 years.

Although there is an amazing discrepancy between the "suspected" actions attributed to certain Frenchmen and the "historical ties" between France and Central Africa, nevertheless a rather disturbing state of suspense is seen here. For, it wouldn't take much for a climate of mistrust to become permanently installed.

PATASSE REPORTEDLY TO BE EXTRADITED TO TOGO

Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Mar 82 p 6

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti: "Mr Patasse Reportedly To Be Extradited to Togo"]

[Text] Ange Patasse, who has been in refuge in the French Embassy in Bangui since 6 March, may be transferred to Togo on Tuesday 23 March or Wednesday 24 March. Togo has reportedly granted him political asylum at the request of Paris. Lieutenant Colonel Gervil-Yambalo, CAR minister of foreign affairs, refused to make any comment on this matter after being received by President Eyadema in Lome on Monday. However, he stressed that it was necessary "to find a just solution which would be acceptable to France and the CAR."

The escapade of the chairman of the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MLPC), now dissolved, who returned to Bangui on 27 February with the intention of taking power--and believing, on that day, that he had French support--may finally come to an end, 3 weeks later, in Togo, with General Eyadema finally having yielded to France's insistence after several other African heads of state had declined.

On the day after the 3 March abortive coup, the French Embassy in Bangui had, at the request of Paris, informed Mr Patasse through his wife that he would not be granted refuge. A day later, on 5 March, Paris reconsidered and so informed Mr Patasse, who was in hiding with missionaries, through one of his brothers. Two days later, Mr Patasse arrived at the French chancellery by car, dressed in a "boubou" and wearing a hat.

The Central Africans demonstrated their irritation by ordering a search of the house of a French officer, Colonel Faure, and by controlling access to the French chancellery. Thereupon, Elysee special adviser Mr Penne came to Bangui on 9 March and was received by President Kolingba. This meeting no doubt convinced Bangui that whatever happened Paris was going to grant refuge and request extradition.

Paris has thus, reportedly, obtained what it wanted. We do not know the French Government's reasons for reversing its initial refusal to grant refuge to Mr Patasse, or, in particular, what message the French cultural attache in Bangui brought when he arrived in Paris on 7 March, the day after Patasse had been received at the French Embassy. Finally, there is no doubt that the CAR military are only grudgingly permitting the departure of an opponent who tried to take power by force and who, in doing so, boasted of French support.

ABORTIVE COUP FORCES MILITARY REGIME TO HARDEN ATTITUDE

Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Mar 82 p 6

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti: "Coup Attempt Causes Military to Harden Attitude and Strengthen Their Power"]

[Excerpts] Bangui--The recent history of the CAR illustrates the extent to which some of the young African states are vulnerable. At first sight, it would appear that, by making a few wise investments and a moderate management effort, a territory half again as large as France and favored with fertile soil and good rainfall should be able to provide a decent standard of living for 2.5 million people.

However, what experience has shown, at least from 1972 until the beginning of this year, is retrogression and deterioration of the standard of living of this Republic enclosed in central Africa. The latest political convulsions --the attempted coup by Mr Patasse at the beginning of March--are only one aspect of this general situation.

When, after the fall of the tyrant, the CAR restored republican freedoms, its economy was in ruins--it produced 17,000 tons of cotton in 1981--the morale of the oversized public service was paralyzingly low and the central authority was considerably weakened.

The CAR might have slipped into anarchy if Mr Mitterand had withdrawn the "barracudas"--renamed on 1 July 1981 "French Operational Assistance Elements" (EFAO)--and if the CAR officers had not brought all the political domain into agreement 2 months later by accepting the transition offered them by Mr Dacko. "An admission of failure," in the view of Jean-Pierre Cot, but also, perhaps, the second chance in the "after-Bokassa" era. The Military Committee for National Recovery (CMRN) headed by General Kolingba chose at that time, not only out of prudence but also to calm the concerns of Paris, the course of a rather benevolent dictatorship. The dissolution of political parties does not prevent Bokassa's former prime minister from conducting from Paris an active campaign against the Bangui military.

It is true that for the most part power remains in the hands of the Oubangui river people. Mr Dacko who is a M'Baka--the tribe which has dominated the political life since independence and remains strongly established in the army and the administration--has yielded power to General Kolingba, a Yakoma, another tribe which straddles the river. While Mr Dacko was said to be close to President Bongo--the M'Bakas being forest people like the Gabonese--the CMRN chairman leans toward President Mobutu of Zaire.

Mr Patasse's Demagoguery

Despite the presence on the CMRN of several of his "savannah" colleagues, Mr Patasse preferred to utilize outsiders and maneuver on the most sensitive terrain: mobilizing the people of the northern area bordering Chad against the river people. To achieve this, he could count on an additional tactical force: the unemployed and deprived of Bangui, to whom he periodically made ridiculous promises with remarkable aplomb--for example, that he would double the purchase price of cotton (60 francs CFA) or that he would "successfully complete research on the use of dirigible balloons" as a communication breakthrough for the enclosed country. Credulity of the crowds, charisma of a leader brought up in the Bokassa school--whatever the case, Mr Patasse's popularity was undeniable and he himself had been intoxicated by it before his return to the country on 27 February.

While Mr Patasse was organizing his "return to power," General Kolingba and his friends started out by trying to check the decline in the economy: Reduction of the budget deficit, in response to IMF demands; trimming of the public service (600 out of 24,000 officials laid off or retired at the beginning of 1982); and levies on salaries of state officials--an average of 10 percent effective 1 March--as a contribution to "national recovery." Also, in return for some production incentives, particularly an increase from 60 to 70 francs CFA in the production price of ball cotton, the CMRN set 30,000 tons as the production target for the next harvest, which would mean regaining the level of past yields, which neighboring Cameroon is still getting.

This modest goal was already producing some results when Mr Patasse tried to take over by force on 3 March. General Kolingba had even succeeded--by risking some rather unpopular measures--in convincing some Frenchmen that a recovery was not impossible. Also, even if the purpose for keeping the EFAO in the CAR was to reassure many of Paris's African allies, it also had the effect of discouraging any local anti-French movement. Even Mr Patasse, from his Paris location, had understood that he would do better to make advances to the French than to denounce their "neocolonialism."

However, perhaps the abortive 3 March coup d'etat was necessary to convince everyone in Paris that Mr Patasse was primarily a power-hungry demagogue with few scruples. While most of the other politicians--like Mr Goumba, appointed rector of Bangui University, or Mr Pehoua, who was received in February by General Kolingba--accepted a truce with the military, Mr Patasse elected a test of strength, which would leave deep scars.

The military were immediately obliged to harden their attitude. Not only did they undertake to break up Mr Patasse's party, but General Kolingba no longer plans to involve civilians in the government any time soon. How many "savannah" people have become involved in failed coups d'etat--for example, former generals Bozize and M'Baikoua--and thereby reduced their representation in the army and government! Mr Patasse had a lot to do with the present situation in which the running of the state has become even more a matter between Yakomas and M'Bakas, both riverine, between whom there is a precarious balance. The northerners may come to feel even more left out of public affairs.

The "Patassists" also ran the risk, till now considered minor, of part of the north seceding, a development which might be viewed with favor by the cousins in southern Chad. Then, the last, but not least, lesson of the 3 March abortive coup: The cohesion of the CAR, both its security and development, still depends to a large degree on French aid, which alone makes up two-thirds of the CAR budget. French military advisers have played a decisive role not only in restoring order but in preventing bloodshed. In addition to the security guarantee which it provides, the EFAO has built some 30 bridges throughout the country and makes a not inconsiderable contribution to hygiene during its "tours in the provinces."

In summary, in the CAR the burden of the several years of chaos--during the empire--is still too evident for anyone to seriously envisage, with respect to development aid, any other policy than that of substitution.

Mr Patasse demonstrated by his failure not only that he had only limited support, particularly in the army, but also his country's dependence on France and the fragility of the early stage of its convalescence.

LIFE IN NDJAMENA REPORTED DETERIORATING

AB211940 Paris AFP in French 0911 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Report by Bernard Degioanni]

[Text] Ndjamena, 21 Apr (AFP)--The population of Ndjamena lives in fear of another civil war in Chad because of the deteriorating political climate and the division within the government, note observers in the Chadian capital.

This political malaise which has contributed to the isolation of President Goukouni Oueddei, has, over the last 2 weeks, led to insecurity in the capital where arbitrary extortion and arrest by the military police are on the increase, it is learned from diplomatic sources.

The population, still suffering from the civil war which practically destroyed Ndjamena from March and December 1980, is mainly afraid of the reprisals that a new armed conflict between the various political and military factions represented in the government would mean.

"In Ndjamena there has been neither war nor peace for too long. The leaders' powerlessness has created an atmosphere of suspicion. At the slightest shot every Chadian will be afraid and distrust his neighbor," says an African diplomat posted to Chad.

The fear of the civilian population has spread. Since Monday several high-ranking officials of humanitarian organizations are, at their request, being escorted by soldiers of the neutral inter-African force when they move about. Diplomats have also asked for similar protection from the OAU, reliable sources say.

The authorities have slightly lost control over the military police. The director of an oil company was shot in the back in the yard of the Ndjamena police station where he had gone after being arrested at home.

According to the official version of the events, the director, a French National who had to be flown out to Cameroon because of the seriousness of his wounds, had apparently attempted to flee as he entered the premises of the police station.

Night patrols to prevent people from going about with arms are less frequent. A night watchman of the American agency "CARE" in charge of the distribution of food donated by voluntary organizations, was murdered and his murderers got away with all the goods.

Although the office of United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees [UNHCR] provides food daily for 200,000 persons, the beggars have reappeared on the streets of Ndjamena after a 2-year absence.

The Chadian administration virtually does not function any longer and no state body has a bank account. The employees of hotels, like most civil servants complain that they do not receive their salaries regularly. By a government decision, the salary of civil servants was cut by 50 percent 3 months ago.

Ndjamena has become a dirty city. Most of the districts are full of rubbish despite the fact that the UNHCR has allotted 50 million CFA francs (1 million) Fr to the City Council for the improvement of sanitation in the capital.

This uncertainty regarding Chad's future has also had repercussions at the international level: The meeting of fund donors for the country's reconstruction, scheduled for 15 and 16 April in Nairobi, has been cancelled. In fact, none of the countries approached agreed to attend, it is indicated from reliable sources in the Chadian capital.

GOVERNMENT DEFEAT, NDJAMENA SITUATION DESCRIBED

AB161141 Paris AFP in French 1105 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Text] Yaounde, 16 Apr (AFP)--Hissein Habre's FAN once again inflicted a military defeat on Chadian Government units on 8 April about 400 km northeast of Ndjamena while insecurity envelops the Chadian capital, it was learned from reliable sources in Yaounde.

The clash between the FAN and the regular army units occurred at the Ndjamena-Faya Largeau axis, between Salai and Koro-Toro. Government losses in men and equipment were described as "substantial" by the same sources. However, no additional information could be obtained at present in the Cameroonian capital.

It is further learned that Ndjamena is now experiencing an "alarming" rate of crime. Several persons--especially taxi drivers--recently have been killed in the Chadian capital. These crimes appear to be of a sordid nature although they are not altogether unconnected with the worsening of the political climate that has prevailed in Ndjamena for some time, the same sources claim. In fact, the militia and law enforcement agents responsible for security in the Chadian capital have not yet received their last paychecks and also apparently have been somewhat demobilized, it is stated.

Finally, it is stressed in Yaounde that "Radio Moundou," operated by the southerners, is increasing its open criticism of President Goukouni Oueddei's regime which it accuses of not assuming its "responsibilities" to restore peace in Chad.

Political life appears to be at a standstill in Ndjamena today where, according to rumors, there will be a ministerial reshuffle, report observers on the spot.

It is noted in Yaounde that this situation is obviously linked with the failure of the recent counteroffensives launched by the Chadian National Army against the FAN and with President Goukouni Oueddei's refusal to negotiate with Hissein Habre.

OAU TO SEEK UN HELP FOR CHAD PEACE FORCE

AB241400 Paris AFP in English 1213 GMT 24 Apr 82

[Text] Nairobi, Apr 24 (AFP)--The Organization of African Unity (OAU) will soon send a delegation to New York to try to obtain financial support from the United Nations Security Council for the hard-pressed OAU peace-keeping force in Chad, it was reported here today.

OAU chairman and Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi had asked in December for U.N. support for the 5,000-strong force, but the security council said that it needed the written permission of the Chadian Government before taking such action.

Such a letter has since been sent, but observers are now asking whether the help may be too late.

OAU officials have said that Chad's "picture militarily has not been a bright one."

Peace-keeping force commander, Nigerian General Geoffrey Ejiga, told Mr Moi in a report that the situation was "rather sombre" and Nigeria, which has furnished most of the troops, has indicated that it wants its contingent withdrawn as soon as possible.

The general has also asked Mr Moi for authorization to reinforce troops around the Chadian capital "because of the rainy season and because of the need to provide adequate security for Ndjamena."

The troops were also encountering serious transport problems as a result of the rains, the general said.

Meanwhile, Chadian Government forces have been suffering defeats at the hands of the armed forces of the north of rebel leader Hissene Habre, Gen. Ejiga said.

Observers noted that the transitional government of President Goukouni Oueddei is now equally hard-pressed politically. There are serious splits within the government, which rejected the call by the OAU's committee on Chad for a cease-fire for February 28 and the organization of elections before June 30. The committee has threatened to recall the peace-keeping troops if these conditions were not met, but the OAU has not moved to fulfill the threat.

ETHIOPIAN COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED--During his one-week visit to Ethiopia, Congolese Minister of Foreign Affairs Pierre Nze was received by the chief of state, Mengistu Haile Mariam, in Asmara, provincial capital of Eritrea. Following the visit, the chief of Congolese diplomacy signed a general cooperation agreement on Tuesday, an agreement accompanied by two attached protocols on trade and air relations. In a communique published on the occasion, the two countries reaffirm their support for liberation struggles in southern Africa. They also condemn "the repeated aggression" of South Africa aimed at the so-called "Front Line" African countries and demand "immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the South African terrorist forces of invasion from Angola." ALGERIAN-CONGOLESE LUMBER COMPANY--Algeria and Congo have agreed to set up a joint company, whose main office will be in Brazzaville, for the production and processing of 100,000 cubic meters of wood annually. A large share of the volume (42,000 cubic meters) will be shipped to Algeria, and the rest will be processed locally at Ouessa, at an industrial complex set up jointly. According to the Algerian daily EL MOUDJAHID, completion of the project, "which is totally free of any commercial interest, illustrates the type of North-South relations which Algeria is trying to promote with other Third World partners." OVERVIEW OF GENDARME ACTIVITIES IN 1981

[Article: "1981 Outcome: Positive Results for National Police Force"]

> [Text] "Fear of the police is the beginning of wisdom." National police statistics for 1981 demonstrate the accuracy of this well-known saying.
> The heads of the force have prepared a status report for our readers in the form of a commentary on the past year's statistics, from which it emerges very clearly, both in the area of traffic and delinquency, that the number of accidents and offenses is inversely proportional to the efforts put forth by representatives of the law. And our readers will be pleased to note that national police efforts are very clearly on the increase.

In comparison to 1980, 1981 marked a considerable increase in work performed by the police force. This is particularly noticeable in the traffic division, where the number of cases rose from 4,907 to 8,678, and in the criminal division, from 1,145 to 1,522.

Traffic Police

In the traffic division, let us first analyze the accidents.

Reported accidents went from 190 to 202. The number of fatalities remained stable at 15, but the number of injuries increased: 187 compared to 175.

The reasons for this increase in accidents are to be sought partly in increased highway traffic, but particularly, and this must be stressed, in the overly high rate of driver offenses. If the basic causes of the accidents are analyzed, they are in fact related to driving offenses--42 accidents due to speeding, 42 due to reckless driving or passing, 9 due to refusal to yield, and only 2 due to purely mechanical reasons.

An effort must therefore be made in the area of driver education, and in the first place this means a crackdown.

The crackdown (remember that the number of vehicle incidents increased from 4,907 to 8,678) has made it possible to moderate the increase in the number of accidents, which is proportionately well below the increase in the amount of traffic.

Police force efforts to obtain such results involved:

--training its personnel through a system of continuous instruction;

--specialization. In fact, 1982 has seen the implementation of a specialized motorcycle squad within the traffic police division.

In 1982, drivers should still expect systematic crackdowns on serious violations. The police will be intransigent, especially in cases of speeding--the major cause of accidents in the Republic of Djibouti. To assist them in their investigations, they should be implementing a radar speed-clocking device shortly, delivery of which is expected.

Drivers, be cautious. Respect the speed limits. Watch out for reckless driving. Help the police to curb the continuing increase in the number of accidents still to be feared in 1982, a year which should see a considerable increase in the number of vehicles operating in the Republic of Djibouti.

Criminal Police

Although the total number of cases increased (1,522 as compared to 1,145 in 1980), felonies are decreasing: 11 willful homicides in 1981 as compared to 21 in 1980. Of these 11 homicides, 10 were solved and resulted in the arrest of the murderers.

The number of assaults and batteries fell from 307 to 264.

There was also a decrease in the number of thefts (247 instead of 273). Of the 247 thefts reported, 223 were solved, enabling the apprehension of 307 perpetrators, co-perpetrators or accomplices.

Although violence in Djibouti is on the decline, and we must congratulate ourselves on it, new offenses related to the development of modern life are still appearing:

--Violations of the legislation on checking, which increased from 14 in 1980 to 83 in 1981.

--Breaches of trust, and forgeries, from 42 to 64.

--Fraud, from 19 to 38.

--Drug-related offenses, from 3 to 22.

Here again, the police must make a continuous effort to effectively combat, through training, new forms of delinquency and the inventiveness of delinquents.

To be perfectly capable of acting effectively against all types of crime, the police force in 1980 established a national research and documentation division. This division assists the squads in their investigations and it places staff who are specially qualified in technical police work at their disposal. It also has a criminal file and a fingerprint file available on a 24-hour basis.

These efforts have led to a rather exceptional success rate in investigations: 223 thefts out of 240, or 93 percent, solved. These results are not unrelated to the halt noted in the growth of traditional crime--potential criminals are in effect weighing the risks they run of being locked up.

Finally, it must be noted that although such rates of success demonstrate the value of the investigators and the integration of the police among the population, they also show that the mentality of the Djibouti people is particularly healthy: a criminal is neither protected nor hidden, as he is considered a danger to society.

The police force performed many other missions during 1981: bank police, policing of aliens, military police, maintaining the peace, honor guard, maintaining order, etc. The emphasis has intentionally been placed on traffic and criminal police, because it is through these missions that we realize the police force cannot do a good job without the people's assistance.

It is in the service of these people that the force will continue to develop its activities in 1982 in order to better assure the peace and safety of all.

Getting To Know the National Police Force

The national police force, which recently named a new leader, Capt Hoche Robleh Idleh, is composed of the following:

--the command;
--two intervention squads;
--two companies composed of divisions (squads) with the general mission of criminal, military, administrative and traffic police;
--research and documentation division;
--marine police, responsible for coastal surveillance and sea control.

Note that the national police force is the only one to exercise criminal police authority in the interior districts. But its authority also extends over all of the national territory through the various locations of its squads.

Aside from its duties, outside the capital it also oversees the function of border police.

OBIANG OBJECTS TO SPANISH AID ADMINISTRATORS

PM260921 Madrid YA in Spanish 7 Apr 82 p 13

[Unattributed report: "Spanish Press Is Misrepresenting Real Situation in Guinea"]

[Text] "The Spanish press is misrepresenting the real situation in Guinea, and in order to explan what our situation is I will seek the permission of King Juan Carlos and the prime minister to address the Spanish parliament." Guinean President Teodoro Obiang Nguema made this accusation on Spanish National Radio during his recent visit to Rabat.

Obiang asked Spain to respect his sovereignty. In this connection friction centers on the Spanish proposal to appoint three officials to control Spain's assistance to Guinea. Concerning this issue, Obiang told national radio: "Relations between Spain and Equatorial Guinea should be treated with great delicacy, because there have always been problems in the past. At this moment, the minor friction existing between Guinea and Spain is technical. It seems that there is no easy harmony between the Spanish and Guinean proposals: Spain has proposed the appointment of three Spanish officials as executives in the Guinean administration. From the political viewpoint, these appointments do not square with the facts, because this appointment of executives is improper--even though Spain is the country which colonized us and is attempting to do what is best for our development--because this means that they are people holding power as ministers, and that is where the friction lies. We have consulted international organizations and certain states, and they have agreed that the Spanish formula, which could be a real failure, cannot be accepted."

Concerning Spanish assistance, President Obiang described it as "acceptable and substantial," but maintained that it "should be increased and be as tangible as possible."

Guinea is currently preparing for the donors' conference, which will be held in Geneva from 19 April under UN sponsorship. Concerning the role which Spain should play at the conference, Teodoro Obiang stated: "It will be extremely important. I will recall the speech I delivered 12 October 1979, when we decided to give Spain preferential treatment. I believe that this is the right moment for Spain to reciprocate the preference Guinea gave it at that time."

Concerning Guinea's internal situation, President Obiang Nguema made this analysis: "Politically, we have surmounted all the past difficulties. A reconciliation has been achieved. We are taking positive steps toward democratization. In this connection, presentation of the constutition to the people is envisaged on 3 August--the anniversary of the freedom coup."

SPANISH BANKS UNBLOCK FUNDS--Spanish banking officials have decided to suspend the freeze on Equatorial Guinean assets deposited in branch offices of the Bank of Spain (Central Bank) and the Foreign Bank, it was learned Saturday from financial circles. The freeze on the assets of the Equatorial Guinean Central Bank was ordered in February following a complaint of an enterprise in southeast Spain, the Hispano-African Transport Company, which could not collect a debt of 800 million pesetas (2.4 billion CFA francs) owed by the Equatorial Guinean Government. For their part, authorities in Malabo hinted that they would begin proceedings against the enterprise inasmuch as the goods delivered did not correspond to what the contract stipulated, they claimed. The decision to unblock the Equatorial Guinean funds was made possible by the formal commitment made by the Spanish Central Bank to enter a debit of 800 million pesetas into the account of the Central Bank of Equatorial Guinea with the Bank of Spain if the Spanish courts should so rule. FRENCH AGREEMENT RELATING TO MINING INVENTORY SIGNED

Libreville L'UNION in French 18 Mar 82 p 4

[Excerpt] At the Ministry of Mines and Petroleum on 10 March, France and Gabon signed an agreement relating to the mining inventory along the Trans-Gabonese Railroad. Signing for Gabon was Etienne Guy Mouvagha-Tchioba, 2d deputy prime minister and minister of mines and petroleum. Representing France was French Ambassador to Gabon Robert Cantoni.

The agreement, signed on Wednesday, represents the mere sum of 110 million CFA francs. It marks the interest of the French Government in our mining research program. This is but the first manifestation (for this ambitious program) of support that will be expanded and then stabilized over a period ranging from 7 to 10 years.

Work will be in three phases: first of all, radar cartography of the entire territory by the Aeroservice Corporation USA. The air survey operation has already been completed and the results are now being put together. For this program, Gabonese Government financing is some 1 billion CFA francs. SODETEG [General Enterprises and Technical Studies Company] will be in charge of overseeing the work.

The second phase involves geophysical reconnaissance by air. Financing for this program totals 2 billion CFA francs, shared by the Gabonese Government, in the amount of 1 billion, and the EDF, in the amount of 1 billion. As in the case of the first phase, SODETEG will oversee the work.

The third phase will mainly have to do with soil prospecting. Three autonomous teams of geologists will be organized to cover 15,000 square kilometers a year. The National Geological Service will be one, the Ministry of Mines and Petroleum has said. In addition, support from the Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC) will make it possible to have a team from the Geological and Mineral Prospecting Office (BRGM) and the Gabonese Government will set up a third autonomous team of geologists.

The agreement also states that the General Mining and Geology Directorate will coordinate all work with the support of a group of geologists financed by the Aid and Cooperation Fund.

The cost of earthwork is some 10 billion CFA francs, spread out over about 10 years and covering half of the national territory. It should be noted that the agreement signed last week partially covers the 1981 program of the BRGM and at the same time, makes it possible to begin the establishment of the group supporting the General Mining Directorate.

For the sake of history, it should be recalled that information gathered as part of the preceding mineral plan, nearly all of which has now been studied, has yielded encouraging results and some, such as the Dourekiki barite deposit, are on the eve of industrial development, according to the General Mining Directorate.

The need to find new information, within the framework of planning the postoil period and the promotion of new types of production, has thus led competent authorities to draw up a new mining inventory, mainly beginning, in the initial phase, with the Transgabonese zone, a privileged path of penetration for this type of operation.

EQUATORIAL GUINEAN PETROLEUM DELEGATION--A large delegation from Equatorial Guinea, headed by Policarpo Mesuy Mbe, minister of mining, industry and energy, is now in the capital to attend negotiations in the oil sector with Gabonese Ministry of Mines and Petroleum officials. Work began yesterday afternoon at the Ministry of Mines, presided over by Secretary of State Paulin Obame Nguema, who was assisted by the ministerial delegate for commerce, Mrs Seraphine Oyane, the general director of hydrocarbons, Samuel Dossou Aworet, the deputy director of foreign trade, Ella Mba, and several other high officials. The Equatorial Guinean delegation is made up of Deputy Minister of Commerce Jean Olo Mba, the technical director of the presidential staff, Damian Ondo Mene, the ambassador to Libreville from that brother nation and several technical experts. The purpose of the meeting is to analyze the oil cooperation agreement signed in November 1979 by the two countries. LOCAL WOODS IN HOUSING--There has been constant talk of social housing recently, the purpose of which would be to ensure that every citizen would have access to property based on his means and that every Gabonese might have his own house. This is a policy which I personally like because it is aimed at making us all the owners of a house and a piece of land so that our children may have a nice place to live. I know that considerable resources are being made available to organizations in charge of housing. Already, developments are cropping up here and there, bearing witness to the authorities' determination to give all citizens decent housing. As for me, I would point out, however, that they are lacking in imagination. Specialists always come from somewhere else, with their prefabricated houses made from their wood, forgetting that our main resource is wood and that Port-Gentil has the best plywood factory in the world. I would also like to see prefabricated housing of okoume instead of oak, birch and other European woods. When will we make the most of local materials? "It would be interesting," Rawiri said at a press conference, "to visit each other more often and perhaps become complementary countries." FOOD AID SOUGHT--The Republic of Guinea-Bissau will request food aid from the International Community for 1982 in the amount of 47,197 tons of grain to cover the country's shortages in those food products. This information is contained in a circular letter from the Office of Planning of Food Security, sent by the Ministry of Economic Coordination and Planning to foreign organizations and countries. This decision is based on a study made recently in this regard which indicated that 1981 was a normal year of agricultural production in the country, estimated at 120,000 tons of grain, 80,000 tons of which was unhulled rice (including 15 percent losses, and seeds and bran) and 40,000 tons of other grains--corn, sorghum and millet. Therefore, these results show a food shortage of 40 percent in view of our large domestic grain consumption. The request for aid also includes other food necessities amounting to about 3,000 tons of cooking oil, 1,000 tons of milk and 2,000 tons of sugar. In making this food proposal, the Ministry of Planning plans to stock 15,000 tons of grain as an emergency reserve, construct supply warehouses and set up a program aimed at offsetting food shortages in future years. It also anticipates, among other plans, the financing of production projects involving sales products which will contribute to the National Development Fund, to be established. USSR, GDR WOMEN'S DONATIONS--Extensive aid was granted by Soviet women to Guinea-Bissau, and additional aid was promised by GDR women after a two-week visit made by a delegation of the CNMG [National Committee of Guinea-Bissau Women] to the USSR and the GDR. The delegation, headed by Comrade Teodora Inacia Gomes, alternate member of the PAIGC Central Committee and deputy national secretary of the CNMG, also included Comrade Alzira Reis, an officer of the Guinea-Bissau Women's Organization; it returned to Bissau last Thursday. The Soviet women offered the CNMG a 25-seat bus, two Niva automobiles, sewing machines for the new sewing center, and five scholarships, two for treatment and two for rest. The Soviet comrades promised to make two "Titina Sila" emblems and, in time, supply two 16-mm movie cameras, thread, toys, paper, pencils and notebooks for the congress. It was also decided to send two delegations--one before the congress and one after. Meanwhile, since the principal objective of the CNMG delegation's trip was to attend the 11th Congress of German Women at the invitation of that organization, the representatives of the Guinea-Bissau women were in the GDR where they met with high-level German leaders to whom they explained the situation of the CNMG and the preparations of the next congress and offered a token of appreciation to the German women in the presence of the first secretary of the Party Organization of the Rostock Region. The German women, in turn, promised to aid the CNMG and will soon send a list of items to be given. When the work sessions were finished, there was a program involving visits to various places in the country. Comrade Teodora Inacia Gomes called the visit a "total success" in that "it greatly served to develop cooperation among our three countries, particularly among our kindred organizations." COMMENTARY ON 'SAUDI TIMES' ITEM ON BHAYAT POST

Port Louis ADVANCE in French 26 Feb 82 pp 1, 4

[Article by Nordney]: MMM-PSM Prime Minister and Assistant Prime Minister]

[Text] The SAUDI TIMES speaks of Mr Bhayat as the future assistant prime minister of Mauritius. We do not know whether this is a mistaken impression or a mistaken interpretation, or whether Mr Bhayat has actually passed himself off as such, but it is a fact that many Mauritians are wondering about Mr Berenger's intentions in selecting Mr Jugnauth to be prime minister, and Mr Harish Boodhoo as assistant prime minister.

It is rather amazing that in the case of an MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/Mauritian Socialist Party] alliance victory, Mr Berenger himself will not become prime minister. It must be admitted that it was Mr Berenger's fierce determination which prevented the MMM from falling apart. Mr Jugnauth only appeared after the first struggles, when the MMM had already taken shape. Why then, if Mr Berenger is the very incarnation of the MMM, was Mr Jugnauth chosen?

The reason is obvious. The rural population is almost entirely composed of Hindus. Ramgoolam's long reign has made the Hindus believe that the prime minister must be a Hindu, which is not necessarily true. But, as any change would be too abrupt and would risk resulting in an effect contrary to the one intended, it would be best to proceed with caution. Consequently, the choice of Mr Jugnauth.

If Mr Jugnauth becomes prime minister, we are sure that he will be so in name only. Under the political system which the MMM is proposing, it is the secretary general of the Party, not the prime minister, who holds the power. Which means that Mr Berenger will still be the strong man. Even if the political system stays the same, it would be easy to reduce Mr Jugnauth to powerlessness by surrounding him with some very independent ministers and high officials.

But, will Mr Jugnauth ever be prime minister? That is the big question.

Part of the MMM has grudgingly accepted Mr Jugnauth's selection. It would have preferred Mr Kader Bhayat or, if worst came to worst, Mr de l'Estrac. Worse still today, the assistant would be Mr Boodhoo.

It is therefore not difficult to understand why Mr Jugnauth had to be defeated in 1976. In 1982 there will certainly be an attempt to get rid of him again. Mr Jugnauth's presence is necessary to draw the vote of the Hindus throughout the island but, in his own district he can be defeated. In this case it would not be due to meddling, but rather to the Riviere du Rempart electorate.

Even if Mr Jugnauth is elected, after the elections nothing prevents the MMM from taking a new vote and choosing Mr Berenger. The DAILY TELEGRAPH of 3 April 1981 feels that this will happen: "But if the PSM/MMM alliance holds up to the election most observers believe Mr Berenger, who is only 35, will emerge as the next Mauritian Prime Minister.

What can be done against Mr Jugnauth in his district can also be done to Mr Boodhoo, assistant prime minister designate. Mr Boodhoo's presence is also important in attracting the Hindu vote from across the island, but it is possible to get rid of him in Riviere des Anguilles.

If Mr Boodhoo is defeated in Riviere des Anguilles, Mr Kader Bhayat could very well become assistant prime minister as the SAUDI TIMES has it.

COMMENTARY ON MMM-PSM CONGRESS

Port Louis ADVANCE in French 1 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by R.: "They Have Forgotten the Essential"]

[Text] The leaders of the MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/ Mauritian Socialist Party] who held a congress yesterday at the cinema "celebrating the 46th anniversary of the Worker's Party" have forgotten the essential. They have, in fact, forgotten that the Worker's Party began its struggle with workers, particularly sugar industry workers--who were the only well organized workers--and they "forgot" to ask a representative of the worker's union of this industry (or, failing this, the president of the GWF [General Workers Federation]) to speak, preferring as usual to make this demonstration a political forum.

Considering the number of workers who lost their jobs so that the UASI [Union of Artisans of the Sugar Industry] and SILU [Sugar Industry Laborers Union] would be recognized by the commission for industrial relations, it is amazing that Mr Berenger--disregarding his personal feelings--did not ask Dr Ram Seegobin, SILU director and chief creator of "Laijt trvayer," to come address the meeting yesterday. As for the former union negotiator, today he has gone over to management's side and is--as everyone knows--president and general manager of Intracorp, a company which, according to the figures published in the MAURICIEN, has made a lot of money in developing our trade with the Seychelles.

Part of the speech made to the Legislative Assembly by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam on 13 June 1967 while trying to make the opposition represented by the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] understand that association or integration with Great Britain was out of the question, was published out of context yesterday to imply that Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam was against independence. Obviously, the MMM/PSM opposition, running out of arguments, is stopping at nothing in its aim to discredit the Worker's Party and its leader, and it is surprising that Mr Harish Boodhoo, who knows Sir Seewoosagur better, did not "budge" when Mr Berenger spoke such nonsense.

We will come back to this.

NORTH AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION TO CREATE JOBS

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 21 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] A hiring program established by the government in the event of construction of the North Airport indicates that about 2,320 jobs can be created for a period of 4 or 5 years. One thousand additional jobs also could be created in the satellite sectors of transportation and in companies which produce construction materials.

These job figures do not include Chinese technicians, the Project Coordinator, his assistant, and technical personnel, a grand total of about 50 persons. According to the hiring program, about 1,100 laborers, 450 specialized craftsmen and 550 assistant tradesmen, 55 technicians, and 125 work-coordination personnel are necessary for work to be carried out on this airport, whose cost at the beginning of January was 1.2 billion rupees.

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, minister of finance, who will discuss the projects with financiers in Mirabella, Spain, was notified before his departure by A.V. Chettiar, minister of state for communications, of an offer from consultants from the Airport Authority of India for the financing and construction of the Plaines des Roches airport. As a matter of fact, during his recent mission to India, the minister of state had new discussions with these consultants, who are prepared to find financing for the elusive project. Contrary to the opinion of French experts and those of the World Bank, whose findings favor the renovation of Plaisance (800 million rupees), the Indian consultants feel that Plaines des Roches will become a focal point for commercial activities in the Indian Ocean region. One report had already estimated that the number of passengers for Mauritius will total 550,000 in 1985 and 750,000 in 1990, while the tonnage of merchandise and mail will increase from the present 7,200 tons to 14,500 tons in 1985 and to 25,500 tons in 1990.

Given the fact that construction would not be completed until 1986, in the event it is started this year, the authorities are of the opinion, based on a French report, that assistance from the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation (CCCE) should be requested for renovation of the Plaisance airport.

Chinese assistance, which could not be increased, is kept at 175 million rupees for this project.

MFSSA WANTS NORMALIZATION OF RELATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 25 Feb 82 p 4

[Text] An association known as the Mauritius Friendship Society of South Africa [MFSSA], whose president is Raj Ramrachia, has officially requested Prime Minister Seewoosagur Ramgoolam to establish diplomatic relations with the Republic of South Africa. Such normalization of relations between the two countries could be effected at the level both of embassies and of consulates, according to Ramrachia, who has just returned to the country after a 1-year stay in Durban.

The initiative of the association, which was founded in April 1981, was motivated by a desire to this effect expressed by our compatriots living in South Africa, according to Ramrachia, whose association now claims as members about 3,500 of the 45,000 Mauritians living in South Africa. The absence of an accredited representative from Mauritius to Pretoria is an obstacle, he said, to prompt settlement of administrative problems when they arise for expatriates.

Aware of these difficulties, the president of the Mauritius Friendship Society of South Africa, whose office is on West Street in Durban, recently met with the South African minister of foreign affairs, Senator Owen Hoorwood, and with other members of the government to discuss with them relations in general between Mauritius and South Africa, and in particular the abolition of entry visas for Mauritians to South African territory.

Ramrachia also asked them to study the possibility of permitting a large number of Mauritians of all races to study in South African universities. On the same occasion, he expressed the wish for the normalization of relations between Mauritius and South Africa.

In support of his request, the association president recalled that it was thanks to the intervention of the association that an end was put to attacks against our tourism industry--attacks made because of the bias of a South African newspaper on behalf of Portugal. In an advertisement in color, the newspaper SUNDAY TRIBUNE had published in bold type a slogan harmful to our tourism industry.

MMM-PSM MEETING AT TRIOLET REPORTED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 3 Mar 82 p 4

> [Text] Repeated denunciations of sectarianism, severe condemnation of the Labor Party for its alleged use of it, and warnings against sectarianism traps were the high notes of the regional meeting held by the MMM-PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/Mauritian Socialist Party] alliance in Triolet, the prime minister's stronghold, yesterday before a crowd estimated at around 3,000. The interest in this meeting was explained by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam's resounding remarks in the same location last Sunday, remarks regarding the alleged inclinations of the current leaders of the MMM against independence for the country. Assuming the offensive, as in Belle-Rose the day before, rather than the defensive, the MMM leaders, before an attentive audience stunned by the violence of the attacks on "Labor" and Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, again recalled "Labor's" past and still affected association with Sir Gaetan Duval's PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] which continues to proclaim its anti-independence sentiments 13 years later.

The accusations made against the MMM by the prime minister again allowed the MMM leaders to dispute the validity of such allegations and to challenge the Labor leader to prove their merit. "We are challenging the prime minister to identify any MMM leader who would have fought against independence. It is possible that some of our current supporters may have been associated with such a campaign for which they cannot be held responsible, but, we repeat, it is a complete untruth on the part of the prime minister," declared Messrs Paul Berenger, Aneerood Jugnauth, and Kadar Bhayat respectively in a major effort at explanation before the inhabitants of Triolet gathered in the post office courtyard decked with banners and flags in the MMM/PSM colors.

Mr Paul Berenger, last speaker at the meeting, raised the volume and strongly criticized the Labor Party, capitalizing in specific on "Labor's" desire to go to the elections with the PMSD which, he recalled, "was an obstacle to the Labor Party's socialist goals during its last 5-year term. Now Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam wants to make an electoral agreement with this same PMSD."

The secretary general of the MMM, as had those who preceded him at the podium, delivered severe warnings against sectarianism and stressed that the voters should not allow themselves to be led by sectarian sentiments, but should consider the country's true problems; these problems being, in particular, the poor management of the country's affairs in general by the present "government caretaker," its failure on the diplomatic level where our image has been tarnished, corruption in the country, fraud, scandal, etc.

But, what is even more serious for the government, alleged Mr Berenger, is the surge of sectarianism which the Labor Party, according to him, would have liked to unleash in the country in support of the Libyan affair. "We all agree," he said in this regard, "that the Libyan diplomats assigned to Mauritius acted beyond the limits of diplomacy. But what was criminal on the government's part was to have let things come to a head and then to have chosen a moment that it felt to be propitious to try to fan mass hatred in the country."

Fortunately, the Mauritian people were not fooled and did not fall into the trap. But many other traps will be set during the electoral campaign. Consequently, the voters must remain vigilant, declared the secretary general of the MMM. Violently attacking Sir Satcam Boolell, minister of agriculture, he reproached him in particular for setting himself up as the only authorized representative to the Common Market for the protection of our 500,000 ton sugar quota.

The warning against the dangers of sectarianism, which is capable of "falsifying the results of the next election," was resumed yesterday by all the speakers indiscriminately: Dr Ramjuttun, Mr P. Conjoo (MMM/PSM candidates in Pamplemousses and Triolet), as well as Messrs Harish Boodhoo, Aneerood Jugnauth, Kader Bhayat, and Rashid Soobedar. It was in this context that Mr Soobedar, a candidate himself in the Military Quarter-Moka district, enumerated in an emphatic speech an entire list of problems confronting the country: unemployment, devaluation of our currency, inflation, and public scandals, to demonstrate that these are the problems which should guide the voters in the 11 June election, and not communal considerations.

Mr Kader Bhayat attacked the Mauritian Islamic Party [PIM] in particular, "a communal party," he stressed, "which is poisoning the minds of the people." He appealed to the members of the Moslem community not to allow themselves to be influenced by the PIM campaign, asking Moslems in certain districts not to vote on 11 June.

Mr Prem Coojoo, who also spoke in support of the MMM/PSM alliance's anti-communalism campaign, tried to make it understood that it was the struggle between capitalism and the poor which should inspire the voters and not communal spirit.

In a long speech, Mr Jugnauth, for his part, stated that the next elections would assume an importance comparable to the 1967 elections, where the stake was the country's independence. Although the country obtained political independence in 1967; in 1982, economic independence, aimed at promoting worker emancipation, must be sought. He also stressed "Labor's" attempts to use sectarianism, dwelt on the MMM/PSM alliance's plan for society within the context of a 5-year plan, and predicted the defeat of the Labor Party in the next elections, as the electorate should, according to him, inflict another bitter defeat on Labor as in the partial elections in Pamplemousses/Triolet in 1970. Finally, he denounced the "sectarian" slogan which is brandished "with the sole aim to frighten."

This argument was resumed by Mr Harrish Boodhoo in his speech. Presenting himself as a religious man, he gave a firm guarantee that respect for religious freedom would be the chief concern of an MMM/PSM administration, which has also planned for the establishment of a "Religious Authority" in its program. He declared himself convinced that Mauritius would never topple into the sectarian camp and made reassuring remarks on this subject. He also said, in concluding, that the current leaders of the MMM and the PSM are the true bearers of Emmanuel Anquetil's and Guy Rozemont's Labor torch.

DIFFICULT SUGAR PROTOCOL NEGOTIATIONS FORECAST

[Text] The minister of agriculture, Sir Satcum Boolell, who returned yesterday from Brussels, where he had taken part in the signing of the agreement legalizing the price of sugar for 1981-82, foresees difficult negotiations with the EEC over revision of the sugar protocol which expired last month. Sir Satcam, who participated in the start of negotiations during his stay in Brussels, said the EEC does not wish to grant one more ounce of its quota allocated to the countries of the ACP [African, Caribbean, and Pacific countries associated with the EEC] group.

"This is a sign that we will have difficulty preserving our quota and our interests as a whole," Sir Satcam Boolell said. The minister also recalled that several countries of the ACP group are attempting to obtain quotas from the EEC, and because of the current situation, it will be a bitter struggle to preserve the Mauritian quota, which by itself represents almost one-third of the overall quota granted the ACP.

"For the near future, we do not know who will represent the sugar interests at the time of these negotiations. For us, however, it is a vital question for the entire country, and every ideological consideration or other influence should be relegated to the background. If I am still in the government, I will defend Mauritian interests to successfully accomplish this task, so that our interests will not be harmed," Sir Satcam Boolell said.

As for the conclusion of the agreement with respect to price, the minister feels that the support of the ACP group, including the non-sugar-producing countries, brought about this happy result, which is a victory on a basic question. Sir Satcam Boolell expressed his appreciation to the Mauritian ambassador to Brussels, Raymond Chasle, and to the representative of the Chamber of Agriculture, Charles Boulle, for their sustained efforts during the negotiations. Sir Satcam Boolell said that he was happy about the results of these negotiations, which took place under his chairmanship and also in his capacity as spokesman for the ACP group.

FLOUR PRODUCTION PROJECT LOAN ACCORD REPORTED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 2 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Barring the unexpected, Mauritius will produce all the flour it needs from imported wheat in exactly two years and two months. An agreement on the loan to finance construction of a flour mill within the port was, in fact, signed this past 25 February by the minister of finance, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, and Wila Mung'Omba, president of the Arab Development Bank, at the headquarters of this institution in Abidjan. The loan is for 120 million rupees and is repayable in 20 years. A four-year grace period will be granted. The interest rate is 8 percent per year.

According to the most optimistic forecasts, the flour-mill construction project will create 185 permanent jobs in the industrial sector and will reduce by 54.8 million rupees (in foreign exchange) subsidies which have been granted by the government to this foodstuff since the first year of the program's implementation. It is estimated that the savings will total 118.7 million in the year 2000.

The project will require the construction of silos with a capacity of 20,000 tons, which will provide storage for flour and rice. The development of infrastructural facilities for the transport of grain from the port to the silos is also planned.

The total cost of the project is estimated at 335 million rupees, of which 261 million rupees will be obtained in foreign exchange and 74 million rupees in Mauritian money. The loan from the ADV [African Development Bank] represents 35.8 percent of the total cost. The balance (84 million rupees) will be financed by the Arab Economic Development Bank of Africa and the Mauritian Government (131 million rupees). The flour mill will be managed by the National Trading Corporation.

The bank loan contracted by Sir Veerasamy in Abidjan is the seventh of its kind requested and obtained by Mauritius.

ELECTRIC, SUGAR COMPANIES STUDY ALTERNATE ENERGY SOURCES

Coal To Replace Oil

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 21 Feb 82 p 1

[Text] The three energy sources which will be used by the Central Electricity Board (CEB) for the production of electricity until the year 2000 are waterpower, bagasse, and coal in the respective proportion of 1:2:3. Of our current resources for the production of electricity, only waterpower will continue to play an important role in the year 2000, according to "guestimates" made by CEB engineers. Heavy oil, which last year contributed 271 million kwh to the total production of 362 million kwh, will be only a minimal factor in the year 2000, with 20 million kwh out of annual production of 1.18 billion kwh, while coal will contribute 485 million kwh in the year 2000.

This decision to replace heavy oil with coal was made in light of the high cost of heavy oil and with a view to diversification of energy resources.

Production of electricity by the CEB last year is as follows: waterpower, 61 million kwh; heavy oil, 271 million kwh; and bagasse, 30 million kwh.

Projects for electricity production for the next 20 years are:

Year	Waterpower	Oil	Bagasse	Coal
1985	100m kwh	291m kwh	54m kwh	--
1990	110m kwh	45m kwh	150m kwh	290m kwh
1995	120m kwh	20m kwh	250m kwh	365m kwh
2000	125m kwh	20m kwh	350m kwh	483m kwh

Bagasse Thermal Power Plant

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 21 Feb 82 p 12

[Text] The first project within the context of the government's policy to improve electricity production through the use of bagasse will be implemented on the sugar property of Flacq United Estates Limited (FUEL). The cost of this thermal power plant, which will use bagasse and will become operational for the 1984 sugar harvest, will be over 100 million rupees, according to initial estimates. The French Central Fund for Economic Development (CCCE) has agreed to participate financially in the construction of this bagasse-fueled thermal power plant by contributing a loan of 38 million French francs (about 65 million rupees) (L'EXPRESS 23 Jan 82), and some official circles are of the opinion that FUEL be given a credit line of about 33 million rupees. The remainder of the financing will have to be found in the money market.

Within the framework of increased electricity production for the national electricity network, through the use of bagasse by the FUEL sugar mill, production capacity will be raised from 6 to 8 million kwh to a figure of 35 to 40 kwh between now and mid-1984.

According to official sources, the installation of equipment--including a 20-mw unit, a more powerful steam generator, and a turboalternator, among others--is to take place at the beginning of the second quarter of 1984. The production of 35-40 million kwh by the FUEL sugar mill alone equals the entire production of electrical energy by the country's sugar mills for the 1981 cutting season.

FUEL's energy production when the bagasse-fueled thermal power plant is operational in 1984 will not be available except during cutting periods. Officials of the Central Electricity Board (CEB) are of the opinion that between now and 1984, a formula will be found to spread out over the entire year the production of electricity produced from bagasse. Palletization is envisaged to effect this spreading out of production; however, given the newness of the palletization process, the sectors concerned are waiting with a certain amount of impatience for the results of experiments conducted recently in Hawaii.

According to certain official quarters, the FUEL bagasse thermal power plant project goes back to the last decade. According to certain officials of the Central Electricity Board, this organization, which buys the electricity produced by the sugar mills, had established certain "incentives" in its rates to encourage the sugar mills. In this respect, it is emphasized that the Medine sugar mill has installed equipment which permits it to produce 12 million kwh in a good cutting period. However, the FUEL bagasse thermal power plant project does not come under an overall plan, the authorities concerned emphasize, because, for the time being no one is sure what comes next, after FUEL. In fact, the Mauritian authorities are now awaiting the report of the TRANSENERG [expansion unknown], which is headed by Joseph Olivier, on the use of bagasse before developing any future plans.

In view of the increases in the price of the heavy oil used to fuel the powerplants, the CEB authorities are of the opinion that bagasse could in the next 10 years meet one-fourth of our energy needs (150 million kwh out of total consumption of 600 million kwh); this could increase to 250 million kwh produced by bagasse out of total consumption of 960 million kwh in 1995, according to the "guestimates" of CEB engineers, culminating in 350 million kwh as bagasse's contribution to a total consumption of 1.18 billion kwh in the year 2000. For bagasse to assume this rather important role in the country's electricity production, however, authorized sectors feel, based on projections, that the country will need "at least a dozen FUELS." And that poses the thorny question of the centralization of Mauritian sugar mills.

What is more, in its policy aimed at a certain amount of independence from heavy oil in the production of electricity, the CEB describes 1982 as the watershed year for the use of coal as a raw material for production of electricity.

In fact, according to authorized sources, this year will see a political decision to proceed with the construction of a coal-fueled thermal power plant. A feasibility study will be conducted this year by an engineering consulting bureau, probably the French Electric Company (EDF), on the construction of a coal-fueled thermal power plant; the cost of one unit with the capacity for producing 200 million kwh annually is estimated at about 400 million rupees.

Let us emphasize the fact that a delegation from London Shell, which owns stock in coal mines abroad, visited Mauritius recently. According to certain well-informed sources, members of the Shell delegation were "well versed" in the coal sector. They reviewed the possibilities for replacing oil in the production of electricity. As for the pollution generated by this coal-fueled thermal power plant, the authorities feel that, in view of the site selected, the pollution risks are minimal as of the moment. Every precaution will be taken to avoid an ecological catastrophe in the country. The first coal-fueled thermal power plant will probably be built in the port region, alongside the plant of the Mauritius Chemical Fertilizer industry (MCFI).

MMM-PSM MARKS INDEPENDENCE DAY, STRESSES UNITY

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 13 Mar 82 pp 1,4

> [Text] A patriotic meeting organized by the Mauritian Militant Movement/Malagasy Socialist Party [MMM/PSM] was held at Triolet yesterday afternoon to mark the 14th anniversary of independence. In their speeches to the large gathering at Trois Boutiques, the leading officials of the MMM/PSM alliance--Armoogum Parsooramen, Kader Bhayat, Paul Berenger, Harish Boodhoo, and Aneerood Jugnauth--avoided partisan politics and concentrated on the feelings of patriotism and national pride which should inspire every Mauritian on this 12 March.
> The speakers also emphasized the unity of the Mauritian people and country.

A. Parsooramen affirmed that Mauritius' achievement of the status of a free and independent state was a decisive stage in our history. "Instead of undertaking thorough work for the island's progress, those at the head of the country have led us into social, political and economic crises. We must now restore the confidence of the Mauritian nation." To this end, he added, we must work in unity and harmony to meet the challenge. The country must become economically independent. Discussing respect for Mauritian territorial integrity, he denounced those who have called for secession of Rodriguez and renunciation of our rights to Diego Garcia and Tromelin.

He then talked about the new man who must be created. We must learn to stand on our own feet.

Kader Bhayat affirmed the country's great responsibility toward the 100,000 or so children born since 12 March 1968. Mauritius is clearly overpopulated, he said, and we must therefore mobilize all our resources to deal with the situation. It is outrageous that our bill for imported products has risen to more than 1 billion rupees, while a group of privileged people use about 40,000 arpents of crown land as a private hunting ground. K. Bhayat said that he believes every inch of land should be used to the benefit of the Mauritian people.

He also criticized those who seek to divide the Mauritian people by promoting communalism and caste feeling.

Paul Berenger expressed regret that in his message to the nation Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam had chosen to speak in the tone of a party chief rather than of a head of government. "He gave an electoral speech rather than an address to the Mauritian nation," P. Berenger said.

He went on to disucss two themes: (1) unity of the Mauritian people, and (2) unity of Mauritian territory.

Paul Berenger recalled the great moments in Mauritian history which created the unity of the Mauritian people--from 1790 to 1803 during the French Revolution; the campaign by Adolph de Plevitz for the Indian immigrants; from 1907 to 1911 when Laurent's Liberal Action with the support of Manillal Doctor led a fierce struggle on behalf of workers; in 1936 when the Labor Party was established; and in 1939 the emergence of Jan Andolan de Bissoondoyal. He also referred to the efforts to stir up communal conflicts and religious clashes, and the creation of the vile slogan "Malbar nous pas oule" [translation unknown; presumably Creole].

After recalling that some had strongly opposed independence, P. Berenger emphasized that the welfare of the Mauritian people depends on strengthening our independence in respect to foreign countries and extending democracy in all its forms.

Discussing the territorial integrity of Mauritius, he said that all who have contributed to the dismemberment of Mauritian territory--Diego Garcia and Tromelin--and who have spoken about secession of Rodriguez deserve only the contempt of the Mauritian people. He concluded with the assertion that it is wrong to claim that independence and democracy are threatened.

Harish Boodhoo said that the purpose of the meeting was above all to pay tribute to the slaves and coolies who began the long struggle which led to independence. He spoke about the pride each Mauritian must feel on seeing the national flag and hearing our national anthem. "Our motto will be: Country Above All," H. Boodhoo said. He added that we must struggle hard to achieve social, economic and cultural independence for the country.

Aneerod Jugnauth explained that the organizers of the demonstration had chosen Triolet for the location for two reasons: 1) Each year the fair is held at Port Louis, and 2) to pay tribute to the people of this part of the country, who played an important role in the independence struggle.

Independence symbolizes freedom in its most natural form, A. Jugnauth said. He condemned those who had opposed indendence for selfish interests. "They are individuals who have contempt and disdain for their own freedom," he said. He added, however, that those who have been responsible for governing the country since independence have not lived up to their responsibility. They have not been able to create a patriotic dynamism among the Mauritian people, let alone a Mauritian nation. Instead of the people having been led to unity, we see dissension and division everywhere. He continued: "These people cannot halt evolution and progress. We face a great challenge. We must face up to our responsibility to create unity and patriotism so that independence will be respected. If the people are divided we will not be able to protect the national entity and sovereignty."

After the speeches of the MMM/PSM leaders, there was a cultural celebration with performances by several groups including Triola Ke Laika Lok, Grup Dockers' Flat, and Gowree. Dr Dinesh Ramjuttin was the master of ceremonies at the event.

DETAILS PROVIDED ON FISHING BOATS SINKING, LOSSES

Two Boats Sink

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] Two fishing boats belonging to a firm in Beira sank on Sunday at pier No 1 of the port when they were being readied to go to sea, according to local sources who spoke to our reporter in the provincial capital of Sofala.

When the paper went to press, the cause of the accident was not known. The boats, "Toto" and "Muazi," had recently been in the RENAB shipyard for general repairs.

Sources close to the local maritime administration indicated that no lives were lost and salvage operations were already underway. A committee of experts was also set up to determine the causes of the accident.

In other news, our reporter in Beira said that bad weather forced three other boats belonging to EMOPESCA to go aground in Moma, Nampula Province.

Efforts to rescue the crews of these boats are being made; however, there are communication problems because of the bad weather. There have been no reports of loss of lives.

In the Mozambique canal, in Pebane, MOSOPESCA boat "MTKO 3" went adrift after losing its rudder and its crew was in danger.

The appropriate authorities are making strenuous efforts to save the crew members and five ships.

Bad Weather Blamed

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] David e Silva, director of the Fishing Industry Administration, said yesterday that six of EMOPESCA's shrimp boats ran aground on the coast of Nampula Province in the high winds and choppy seas caused by tropical storm Justine. AIM [MOZAMBIQUE INFORMATION AGENCY] also quoted Silva as saying that investigations were continuing to determine what caused the two EMOPESCA boats to sink at dawn last Sunday in the port of Beira.

Only two of the six damaged boats returned safely on their own. The other four are still beached near the Angoche Islands, Nampula Province.

The violent tropical storm caused the disaster and fishing boats at sea were immediately in danger. They were caught unprepared in an area without shelter and were unable to move to a safe place because of high winds and waves.

The situation was not criticial because the coast has sandy beaches and no leaks or other damage was reported, so the four EMOPESCA boats ("Salia," "Lalana," "Tambiza" and "Save") will most likely be refloated today because good weather is forecast.

Each fishing boat is approximately 22 meters long, can hold 25 tons of shrimp and has a crew of 22.

In other news, more details were available about the other two EMOPESCA boats which sank at No 1 in the port of Beira. According to information from AIM, one of the fishing boats, "Toto," had a flag in a horizontal position which became entangled in one side of the other boat, the "Muazi," also docked at the pier and both boats sank; four crew members of the latter boat and one from the former were rescued.

There are no indications of sabotage and the investigation is concentrating on the possibility of negligence by crew members.

The refrigeration units of the "Toto" were being checked before it set out to sea the next day and the "Muazi" was getting ready to leave that very Sunday.

EMOPESCA will begin operations to salvage these two boats this week.

Three Boats Disappear

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 26 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] Three EMOPESCA boats disappeared and two sank last weekend off the coast of Nampula in the tropical storm Justine. According to David e Silva, 8 of the 20 crew members from one boat have been listed as missing. All-out rescue efforts have been extended to the open seas.

This maritime tragedy occurred last weekend when the weather worsened abruptly and forced the crews of many shrimp boats fishing there to head quickly for the Angoche Islands, especially the Island of Fogo.

It was previously thought that four fishing boats damaged by the high seas had taken shelter from the tropical storm at nearby islands. However, rescue efforts on Wednesday indicated that only two boats had run aground and the whereabouts of the other three is not known.

The beached vessels, the "Tambiza" and the "Save," are on the islands of Coroa and Cazuarina, respectively. The "Tambiza" was extensively damaged but all its crew members were rescued by helicopters; they are now safe and sound in Angoche.

The "Save" which went aground on the rocks has eight crew members listed as missing.

Its 12 survivors were taken immediately to Cazuarina Island and then to Angoche.

A third EMOPESCA boat, the "Salia," has not been in radio contact with the Angoche coastal station since last Sunday. The crew sent a message saying it was grounded and gave the coordinates for rescue operations; they were not accurate because rescue ships in the area could not locate the "Salia."

The "Lalana" also sent a radio message to shore that its engine was damaged and it was unable to return. It has sent no other signals. The "Monapo" is also missing; as of last Tuesday, it was thought to be safe and expected back in Angoche. When the paper went to press, there was no more information about its location.

Silva said that maritime authorities, the Mozambique Air Force and TTA [Mozambique Air Transportation and Service] are continuing the search.

Other boats in that area were asked to help. Ships of other countries in the area devastated by the storm were informed of the situation and asked to cooperate with our authorities.

Twelve Survivors

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The 12 surviving crew members of the "Save" who took refuge on Coroa Island were visited yesterday by Mozambique maritime authorities and then evacuated, and the crew of the "Tambiza" was flown from Coroa Island to the hospital in Quelimane for treatment, according to a Radio Mozambique news item on 26 March 1982 from its reporter in the capital of Zambezia.

The radio report said that the fishing boats "Salina," "Monapo" and "Lalana" with approximately 60 crew members abroad were still missing.

Radio Mozambique, on information from its reporters in Beira and Quelimane, said that the search was continuing but there was nothing to report.

TTA company planes and helicopters, six boats from EMOPESCA and EFRIPEL and air force planes are involved in the rescue efforts. The TTA management ordered that its pilots and rescue teams make every effort to locate the ships which have lost radio contact with land.

A report from Quelimane indicated that a large Chinese cargo ship was in grave danger and its location was not known.

All the boats were hit by the tropical storm. Although the information was confusing, we know that rescue efforts yesterday centered around the islands of Carolina and Fogo.

FISHING AGREEMENTS SEEN NOT GUARANTEEING FAVORABLE RESULTS

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 21 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Calane da Silva: "Pillage on Our Coasts:]

[Text] Whereas we do not have on our table the amount of fish we should have, whereas, despite signed fishing agreements, we are still not the ones most benefited, whereas our state, cooperative or private fleet does not yet manage to supply our market adequately--for reasons I shall not mention in this article--whereas all this is happening, it hurts me deeply to learn and have verified that scandalous pillage is occurring on our coasts.

Boats of various nationalities with which we have no agreement station themselves along our shoreline, infiltrate our territorial waters here and there, cast giant nets or use special boats with a suction system and proceed to plunder our resources, raze our fishing schools and shoals, destroy the ecological balance of the entire area and totally jeopardize our future major source of food supply and highly profitable export product.

When I was vacationing with my family in Pomene at the end of last year, one of the subjects I brought up several times with the proprietor of the hotel--an individual connected with fishing--was precisely that of the violation of our waters and the theft of our marine life.

The proprietor took us to one of his warehouses and showed me a number of buoys which had floated to shore after tearing loose from the nets cast by those pirate boats.

A few days later while still in Pomene, we went to the highest spot in the area to visit the lighthouse and, in late afternoon, saw in front of us in the large cove the sea had worn away five large fishing vessels on their criminal errand. They were boats without a flag and at the time--I remember well--fierce anger gripped my throat at the frustrating thought that we did not have our own vessel, properly armed, to give those ocean thieves a real fitht.

Later, in Maputo, conversing with the commander of a coastal ship, I learned that an average of 50 to 100 boats operate along our coast in constant violation and scandalous pillaging.

Many of those fishing boats have "mother" boats or processing boats anchored farther away to which they deliver the daily theft.

This is really intolerable. For example, when a South African boat was recently intercepted and seized in our territorial waters, no one rejoiced. But, as is obvious, for the overall pirate fleet this was only a minor scare.

I believe that with better coordination between our own fishing vessels and coastal ships with maritime and aerial authorities, vigilance would be doubled and this could begin to result in systematic combat against these thieves of our marine resources.

If we do not begin to act soon, when our fishing sector is better organized and has greater production capacity, it will be very difficult to obtain the fishing results our coast promises.

In conclusion and in this regard, I remember perfectly that when we were in Pomene, in an excursion which lasted only three-quarters of an hour in a small boat only 300 meters from the beach, we caught more than 100 kg of fish, using a line; however, in the two days which followed the day we saw the pirate boats, we caught only a single fish after four hours of struggle...and that was just luck.

USSR OFFICIAL REVIEWS MINING, GEOLOGICAL COOPERATION

[Excerpts] "At present, the basic objective is cooperation in the area of geology and mines," said Semen Skachkov, chairman of the state committee for foreign economic relations, concerning cooperation between Mozambique and the Soviet Union. Speaking to the press agency, NOVOSTI, Skachkov gave an analysis of the development of economic relations between the two socialist countries on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the signing of the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique]-USSR Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation.

With regard to cooperation in the area of geology and mines, which he defined as the basic objective of these relations at present, he asserted that this cooperation will be in the form of the geological prospecting of deposits of coal capable of being converted into coke, rare metal ores with their subsequent extraction and processing, and prospecting for hydrocarbons on land and in the sea.

"There is also to be cooperation," Semen Skachkov continued in the NOVOSTI interview, "in the agricultural sector, particularly in the state cotton industry being organized in Nampula Province where preparations are underway for the drilling of wells to obtain water for irrigation. In Gaza, the work consists of drawing up general plans for using the hydraulic resources of the Limpopo River Valley.

He also spoke of cooperation in the area of professional training including the installation of laboratories and machine shops in two schools for agricultural technicians and six industrial schools.

Prospects for This Five-Year Period

In the same interview, Semen Skachkov said that prospects for Soviet-Mozambican economic and technical cooperation in the present decade are enhanced by the program for economic and commercial cooperation subscribed to in May, 1981.

He gave his assurance that in the present five-year period the scope of bilateral cooperation will be greatly increased.

"A number of Soviet organizations are going to help in the exploration of coal deposits and rare metal mines and the construction of an ore enrichment company which will produce concentrated tantulum.

"In this same five-year period we shall begin geological prospecting south of Beira and expand the cooperative program in the cotton sector to increase the production of raw cotton. Material, scientific and organizational groundwork will be laid for later development of this sector, including the training of qualified personnel."

With regard to the program aimed at mechanizing agriculture in Sofala, he said there are plans for joint construction "of an agricultural machinery plant and a number of maintenance shops for that type of equipment."

He also said there are plans for greater cooperation in the training of national cadres in the fishing and other spheres.

"In general, our bilateral cooperation has favorable prospects for development. As Comrade Brezhnev said, 'We are convinced that Soviet-Mozambican relations will have a great future,'" Semen Skachkov said.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH FRANCE

EA231948 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Text] Over the next 4 or 5 years France will participate in projects covering various sectors, from telecommunications to agricultural development. The total value of French investments in those projects will be not less than 2.2 billion francs, which is about 13.2 billion meticals.

The French participation was agreed upon this week in Paris at a meeting of the France-Mozambique joint commission, which was led by the Mozambique minister of planning and the French minister of cooperation.

Commenting on the Paris meeting yesterday, Planning Minister Mario Machungo said Mozambique and France are proving that it is possible to have just cooperation that is not based on exploitation, between industrialized capitalist countries and developing countries, where the political will exists.

Mario Machungo indicated that the cooperation agreed upon in Paris is economically based on four priorities: achieving self-reliance in food production, meeting our essential needs in information and health, developing infrastructures and reducing energy limitations on industrial development.

The Mozambique-France joint commission also agreed on French participation in the construction of the Nacala-Entrelagos railway and the railways cadre training school and maintenance of the agricultural equipment center and the agricultural development of Magude region, which covers about 40,000 hectares.

France will also participate in the development of telecommunications, the Caia cotton project and the transportation equipment industry.

The two countries also signed a food aid convention according which France will supply 4,000 tons of wheat to the areas hit by natural calamities. The two countries also agreed on a 30 million-metical fund for educational studies.

Minister Mario Machungo said the agreement just signed with France represents a significant advance in cultural, scientific and technical cooperation. He said the two countries will study new fields of cooperation.

Mario Machungo also said that the France-Mozambique agreement is a new kind of cooperation for Western countries and that it will encourage the principles of the new international economic order.

Questioned on the position of France as a member of the EEC, Minister Machungo said that it could be a positive factor showing that it is possible to establish ties of cooperation not based on inequality between industrialized capitalist countries and developing countries like Mozambique.

Mario Machungo said that in Paris the two parties seriously considered joint action to fight apartheid in South Africa, the economic sabotage and blockade waged by Pretoria against the Southern African countries and the South African designs to build a constellation of state.

Mario Machungo added that France is determined to support our country in the political struggle and in the defense against the attacks perpetuated by the South African racists. Such cooperation, the planning minister commented, is an invaluable contribution to the establishment of peace in this zone of our continent.

PARTICIPATION IN LEIPZIG FAIR PRODUCES ORDERS

[Excerpts] "Without boasting or false modesty, our participation this year in the Leipzig Fair in the GDR was a success. We presented more than one trade. We have imprinted a dignified image of our country on that fair," Pacheco Faria, the national assistant director of trade operations of the Ministry of Foreign Trade, told reporters yesterday. As revealing facts of our good participation, he made reference to special attention given to our pvailion by Erich Honecker, secretary general of the SED [Socialist Unity Party of Germany] and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the GDR, as well as the two gold medals received by the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

"Although it was smaller than some, our pavilion was at the level of the best," said Pacheco Faria.

The delegation of the People's Republic of Mozambique which went to the GDR was headed by Minister of Foreign Trade Salomao Munguambe. In addition to the director of the pavilion, who is the chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, and officials of the ministry, we were represented by the following firms: Citrinos, Enacomo Exportadora, Mademo, Intermecano, Intermaquina and Interelectra.

The pavilion was divided into three areas: a commercial area, another with general information about Mozambique, and a third stressing relations between the RPM and the GDR.

"We received two gold medals, something that is unusual at the same fair," said Pacheco Faria. The first medal was given to Minister Salomao Munguambe and was a prize for promoting and giving luster to the fair by the quality of our pavilion.

The second medal was won by our shrimp which, in competition with identical products presented by other countries and firms, obtained 19 of a possible 20 points in the voting and "this is a good indication of the quality of our product and its ability to compete on the international market," he said.

During the negotiations conducted at the fair, our firms concluded contracts for $8 million, selling cashew nuts, cotton, cotton husks, tea, citrus fruit and copra. Various imports, especially equipment, consumer goods and electrical materials also were negotiated although, for technical reasons, the contracts have not been signed as yet.

MACHINERY TRANSPORTATION DIFFICULTIES REVIEWED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpts] Various construction machinery--motorized dump cars, excavators and graders, among other equipment--are awaiting removal by their users. This machinery has been at the STEIA for some time and is now at the park intended for equipment for delivery, which is at the location of the former CODAM in the 25 Junho neighborhood, a suburb of Maputo. This was revealed to our newspaper yesterday by Jose Guerra, director of the STEIA South Territorial Zone Office.

According to the director of this office, this situation arose because those who are to use the equipment assisted by that firm are having problems transporting the material to work sites, and some others do not remove the equipment when it is not the type they had requested.

Another factor at the root of this problem is the machines destined to the north of the country are unloaded in Maputo, and this presents a transportation problem.

The director of the office explained that 15 days is the maximum time after assembly when the machines arrive from the factory for them to remain at the park.

About this matter, Jose Guerra said that "constantly we have to purchase batteries to replace the original ones and periodically we have to move the machines because they cannot be left without movement for a long time."

Among the machinery is an excavator that was unloaded in 1979 for the Zambezia Integral Construction, the official of the STEIA office also revealed.

However, efforts are being made to remove that construction machine by the intended user.

STEIA is a national assistance firm for construction equipment and employs about 289 workers.

Lack of spare parts was the main difficulty for the full operation of various sections which make up the offices sector, with the exception of some sections; namely, those of machines and tools and rakes.

In conclusion, the director revealed that an office will be opened soon in Chokwe to give help with equipment in Gaza Province.

GRADUATION OF TECHNICIANS--This year, the National Technical Education Board graduated almost 4,000 technicians in various fields, of whom almost 1,500 have completed mid-level courses. This was revealed by the director of that board of the MEC [Ministry of Education and Culture] Andre Carvalho during an interview with NOTICIAS. According to him, it is envisaged that, during the forthcoming years, an equal number of specialists will be trained annually to respond to the country's growing needs for specialized manpower. He also reported that technical education will change throughout the years to respond to the demands of the national educational system. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Mar 82 p 8] 11634

POWER OUTAGE IN QUELIMANA--Rudolfo Warela, an official connected with electric light distribution of Quelimane, told our correspondent that heavy rains during December and January, which caused deterioration of underground electric network cables, are the cause of lack of public lighting in that city. To normalize the situation, a team of electricians is now repairing the break in the aboveground network of Julius Nyerere and 7 Setembro avenues, in one of the neighborhoods of that provincial capital. Not only the breaks, but also the lack of mercury lamps contributed to the deterioration and collapse of the posts on Samora Machel Avenue, another Quelimane artery affected by the situation, said Rudolfo. About this matter, Rudolfo Warela said that "we are doing everything possible to make replacements with the lamps we have at this time." In conclusion, he spoke about the difficulties of transportation to cover emergencies and also to control the entire network. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Mar 82 p 3] 11634

ITALIAN TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRAINING--The Ministry of Posts, Telecommunications and Civil Aviation of Mozambique and the DAM S.P.A., an Italian enterprise of studies and projects, signed a contract yesterday for preparation of a project for the Center for Professional Telecommunications Training of Mozambique. The project is financed on the basis of a 19,000-conto donation by the Department for the Cooperation to Development of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, with Mozambican participation of 4,000 contos. A note from the planning cabinet of the Ministry of Posts, Telecommunications and Civil Aviation states that the main objective of the architecture and engineering project is professional training for cadres for the operation and maintenance of the national telecommunications network. According to the same note, the communique was signed by the director of the planning cabinet and by the director of the DAM S.P.A. The Italian ambassador was present at the signing ceremony. Italy is participating jointly in the project of the National Telecommunications Network in the framework of bilateral cooperation and of the Transportation and Communications Commission of Southern Africa (SATCC). COOPERATION WITH SWAZILAND--Swaziland is interested in increasing cooperation with Mozambique, especially in the port and railway sectors. This was announced on Wednesday by Swazi Prime Minister Prince Masitsela Dlamini during the opening ceremony of (Etieni) railway station, about 3 kms from the Mozambique border. In the first 3 months of this year, Swaziland exported through Maputo port a total of 83,000 tons of various products. It is expected that Swaziland will export through Maputo port about 700,000 tons by the end of this year. [EA170530 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 16 Apr 82]

ABD ROAD CONSTRUCTION FINANCING--Road construction will begin in Zambezia Province this year between the Ligonha River and Alto Molocue, according to information given to the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE reporting staff by Rocha Lobo, director of CETA [African Workers Confederation]. A project of great importance for the development of that area, the Ligonha-River-Molocus road construction is being financed by the African Development Bank [ADB], and the work will be performed by CETA which placed first in international competitive bidding in which several firms which specialize in that sector took part. Moreover, speaking of the general work to be performed by CETA, Rocha Lobo told us that the construction of the central-northeast highway is proceeding on schedule, despite problems caused by a shortage of liquid fuel, lubricating oils and other types of backup material. JOINT NIGER-GUINEA COMMUNIQUE CLOSES VISIT BY TOURE

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 17 Feb 82 pp 2, 3

[Article: "Joint Communique"]

[Excerpts] On 13 to 16 February 1982, His Excellency Ahmed Sekou Toure, the secretary general of the State Party of Guinea, the President of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea and the supreme authority of the Revolution, made an official visit to Niger. The trip was made at the invitation of His Excellency Col Seyni Kountche, President of the Supreme Military Council and Nigerian head of state. Toure was accompanied by Mme Andree Toure and a large delegation.

The Guinean head of state and the delegation accompanying him received a warm and fraternal welcome from His Excellency Col Seyni Kountche, President of the Supreme Military Council and Nigerian head of state, and Mme Mintou Kountche and from the Nigerian Government and people.

During his stay, the Guinean head of state went to Maradi. He visited the Tarna National Agronomic Research Center (Maradi), the Regional Training Center for Agrometerology and Operational Hydrology (AGRHYMET), and the headquarters of the Niger Basin Authority, and he met the samariya at the Oumarou Ganda Cultural Center.

These visits and meetings enabled the Guinean head of state to measure the extent to which the Nigerian people, and Nigerian youth in particular, have been mobilized in the process of setting up the Development Company.

The Guinean head of state had talks with the President of the Supreme Military Council and head of state.

Taking part in these talks were:

On the Guinean Side

Comrades

Damantang Camara, a member of the National Political Bureau and president of the National People's Assembly;

Dr Abdoulaye Toure, a member of the National Political Bureau and minister of foreign affairs;

Abdoulaye Diaw Balde, a member of the National Political Bureau and minister of domestic trade;

Mahmoud Fofana, a Central Committee member and secretary general of Forekaria;

Kouramoudou Doumbouya, a Central Committee member and Guinean ambassador to Niger;

Mariama Sow, a Central Committee member and secretary of the Organization of the Revolutionary Women's Union of Guinea;

Koumba Diakite, a Central Committee member and secretary general of the National Youth Committee;

Dr Alecaut Bangoura, permanent secretary of the National People's Assembly and a member of the Conakry I Federal Bureau;

Mariama Sire Diallo, secretary of the Organization of the National Workers Committee of Guinea;

Richard Habe, general director of the Guinea Air Company.

On the Nigerian Side

Garba Sidikou, minister of higher education and research;

Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation;

Hamid Algabit, minister of commerce;

Ary Toubo Ibrahim, minister of rural development;

Mamane Oumarou, minister of youth, sports and culture;

Mahamane Sani Bako, director of the cabinet of the president of the Supreme Military Council;

Allele El Hadji Habibou, ambassador;

Sandi Yacoube, secretary general to the minister of foreign affairs and cooperation;

Salaou Barmou, permanent secretary to the National Commission for Establishment of the Development Company;

Fatoumata Diallo, president of the Nigerian Women's Association (AFN);

Mounkaila Yacouba, secretary general of the Samariya National Office;

Abdourahamane Hama, director of political and cultural affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation.

With regard to bilateral relations, the two heads of state expressed satisfaction with the excellence of the ties of freindship and cooperation between their two countries and expressed their desire to expand and deepen them in all fields, especially political, economic, social, scientific, and cultural.

With this in mind, a treaty of friendship and cooperation and an agreement concerning cultural, scientific, and technical cooperation were concluded between the two countries at the end of these talks. With a view to promoting this cooperation, the two heads of state agreed to set up a multisectoral Joint Grand Commission between their two countries. They also agreed to institute regular consultation on issues of common interest.

In the African context, the two heads of state reiterated their devotion to the basic principles of the OAU Charter, especially those relating to the elimination of colonialism, noninterference in the domestic affairs of states, and peaceful settlement of conflicts.

They recognized that the crisis situation prevailing in Africa is such that it comprises dangerously the stability of the continent and is detrimental to the consolidation of the African states' independence, to their economic and social development, and to the realization of African unity.

This is why they recalled the urgent necessity of protecting Africa from struggles for influence and from expansionist and hegemonic intentions which interfere with the sovereignty and basic interests of the African states and peoples.

Mentioning the situation in the West Sahara, the two heads of state expressed the hope of seeing this situation evolve rapidly toward a just and equitable solution, in compliance with the resolutions and recommendations of the OAU.

In this respect, they reaffirmed their adherence to the decision of the 18th OAU conference of heads of state and government and to the decision of Nairobi III recommending the organization of a referendum in the West Sahara.

Concerning Chad, the two heads of state indicated their serious preoccupation with the evolution of the situation in that country.

They are convinced that reconciliation between the different Chadian factions and termination of foreign interference in the Chadian conflict constitute indispensable conditions for a definitive and long-lasting peace.

They also renewed their support for the efforts of the Organization of African Unity directed at restoring peace to this country, in particular the sending of a neutral Inter-African Force, and they expressed satisfaction with the results of the recent meeting of the OAU Permanent Committee on Chad, held in Hairobi.

Examining the situation in South Africa, the two heads of state denounced the dilatory maneuvers which stand in the way of a solution to the Namibian problem. They reaffirm their determination to do everything possible within the framework of the international organizations to which the two countries belong for the accession of Namibia to independence, in compliance with Security Council Resolution 435.

In addition, they firmly condemned the odious and criminal policy of apartheid cynically practiced by the racist and illegal South African Government, and they expressed their total and unconditional support for the South African nationalists in their struggle for national liberation.

As for inter-African economic cooperation, the two heads of state emphasized the necessity for economic regrouping between African states and noted with satisfaction the beneficial effects of their cooperation within the Economic Community of West African states and the Niger Basin Authority, to which both countries belong. In this regard, the two heads of state expressed satisfaction with the successful evolution of the Niger Basin Authority, as well as the progress made in realizing the objectives of ECOWAS.

In this context, they also emphasized the necessity for immediate application of the Lagos plan for action and the final agreement, which offer an adequate framework and a total strategy enabling African states to develop joint economic cooperation and to realize their development objectives.

As far as the situation in the Middle East is concerned, the two heads of state said they were convinced that the conditions for a just, total, and long-lasting peace lie in Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and from the holy city of Jerusalem, and in the recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people, of whom the PLO is the sole, legitimate representative. The two heads of state renewed their active solidarity for the Arab peoples in general, and for the Palestinian people in particular, in their struggle for the liberation of occupied territories and for an equitable and complete settlement of the Palestinian question through the recognition of this people's sacred and inalienable right to a homeland.

They also emphasized their profound concern for the peace and security of the Middle East, [a concern] prompted by Israel's decision to annex the Golan Heights. Without reservation they condemned this decision, which in every respect is contrary to standards of international law.

With respect to the Iran-Iraq conflict, they urgently appealed to the belligerent parties involved in the crisis to renounce the use of force and to resort to appropriate peaceful means to resolve their dispute.

In this respect, the Nigerian head of state insisted on paying worthy homage to the Guinean head of state for his unflagging efforts in support of the Mediation Committee of the Islamic Conference Organization.

At the end of his stay in Niger, President Ahmed Sekou Toure said he was highly encouraged and strongly impressed by the progress and achievements made in all fields by the Nigerian people, who have been mobilized and organized under the wise and resolute leadership of President Seyni Kountche. President Seyni Kountche insisted on expressing to President Ahmed Sekou Toure the admiration which he himself and the Nigerian Government and people have for the heroic experiment in nationbuilding being conducted by the Guinean people under the direction of the Guinea State Party and the perspicacious impetus of President Ahmed Sekou Toure.

President Ahmed Sekou Toure invited President Seyni Kountche of pay a visit of state and friendship to the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea. President Seyni Kountche accepted this invitation with pleasure. The date of the visit will be set later by mutual agreement.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON SENEGALESE LEADER'S VISIT

PA181923 Paris AFP in French 1820 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Text] Niamey, 18 Apr (AFP)--Niger and Senegal have signed a friendship and cooperation agreement, according to a communique issued at the end of a "friendly working" visit to Niger by President Abdou Diouf of Senegal.

The communique says that the purpose of the visit was to "promote and strengthen bilateral cooperation in the political, economic, social, scientific and cultural fields.

President Diouf and his Niger colleague, President Seyni Kountche, stressed "the identical views held by their government on bilateral issues, as well as on current African and international problems.

The two presidents expressed their "confidence" in the OAU committee on the Western Sahara problem and made "an appeal to the parties in conflict and to all African countries to make every effort to achieve an agreement," the communique says.

According to the communique, Niger and Senegal expressed their approval of the OAU's decision to send an inter-African force to maintain peace in Chad.

The two countries also stressed the responsibility of the contact group at the United Nations "to denounce the occupation of Namibia by South Africa."

As for the Middle East, the communique says that Niger and Senegal feel that the settlement of the crisis "necessarily demands Israel's unconditional withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem."

Finally, the two countries expressed their hope that negotiations for a "new economic order, that is more just and balanced," will resume soon.

President Abdou Diouf, who arrived in Niger last Saturday, will leave Niamey for Paris on Monday morning.

UNDP REPRESENTATIVE DISCUSSES AIMS OF VISIT

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 19 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] Michel Doo-Kingue, UNDP assistant administrator and regional director for Africa, arrived in Niamey yesterday morning. He was met at the airport by Tchernaka Yacouba, secretary general of the Ministry of Plan, and Wannis Semerdjian, UNDP resident representative in Niger.

Mr Doo-Kingue said his visit has two main purposes: "To review with the Niger Government the whole range of our cooperation at a time when we are entering our third period of cooperation, 1982-1986." He added: "As you know, the UNDP attaches special importance to the least developed countries, of which Niger is unfortunately one. Moreover, these countries will be receiving a substantial increase in assistance from us during this coming 5-year period. For Niger, this sum will increase from $20 million to $45 million. Thus, for our part, there will be a relatively substantial increase.

"In a word, the main purpose of my visit to Niger is to review with the Niger Government the health of our cooperation, and to lay out together the main features of our cooperation over the next 5-year program period. We hope that the cooperation program developed for all the Sahel countries can be presented to the UNDP council for approval in February 1983. Therefore, it is time to complete planning of these projects, and this is one of the main reasons for my visit.

"The second purpose of my visit is to discuss with the Niger Government the followup to the UN conference on least developed countries held in Paris. I had the honor of being the chairman of some of the preparatory meetings during which the cases of Niger and many other Sahelian countries were studied in the presence of various lending institutions. This important conference enabled us to judge how much assistance the Niger Government would need to assure a satisfactory followup. Also, since Niamey is the headquarters for a number of regional organizations to which UNDP makes a substantial contribution, I will also take the opportunity to consult the Niger Government on our entire cooperation with Africa, particularly in the framework of cooperation with the regional organizations with headquarters in Niamey."

LEFTIST SATISFACTION ON DECENTRALIZATION ISSUE REPORTED

Parliamentarians' Remarks

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 27 Jan 82 p 24

[Article: "After Interview With President of the Republic: Satisfaction Among the Leftist Representatives of the Overseas Departments"]

[Text] Consulted yesterday in Paris, most of the leftist representatives present in the capital expressed their satisfaction following the DOM [Overseas Department] parliamentarians' interview with the president of the Republic on Monday.

The first point, which most brought up: Francois Mitterrand first listened to his interlocutors. The procedure employed shows obvious concern for dialogue and concert, which is greatly to the credit of the president of the Republic. For more than an hour, then, he listened, registered everyone's remarks, destroying in the process one of the arguments of the local right, which had dared to put forward the theory that decentralization would be imposed from Paris.

The president also tore to pieces some false arguments profusely used in the present political battle.

For the moment, lets recall two presidential observations: "the quality of being French" is being threatened only by the few minority groups;--"decentralization with a single assembly is not synonymous with 'dropping.'"

But the main point of Monday's meeting, as Aime Cesaire quite rightly notes, consists in the president's faithfulness to point 58 of his program. That is to say that the decentralization law will be applied to the DOM while taking circumstances into account. This prompts Ernest Moutoussamy to say that "they are moving toward specific and forward looking decentralization with a single assembly proportionally elected."

This point having been established and having given rise to deception of the Right, the discussion has apparently shifted ground slightly since Monday. Now, as W. Bertile emphasizes, it is a matter of knowing which type of propositional voting will then be applied. Apparently there are three competing propositions: integral proportional voting for the entire department; proportional voting by arronddissement; or uninominal voting with two rounds. In fact, this last solution has very few advocates and the debate--which has only just begun--involves only the first two possibilities.

Bertile's Statement

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 27 Jan 82 p 24

[Statement by Wilfrid Bertile, socialist deputy from Reunion: "A Problem: The Method of Electing the Future Assembly"]

[Text] Wilfrid Bettile (the socialist deputy from Reunion) made the following statement to us:

"The president received everyone and everyone was able to express himself. The opinions expressed were thus very diverse. In response, in the synthesis which he made, the president pointed out:

1. That apart from small groups, whose nonrepresentativeness is obvious, the quality of being French, if one may put it so, is not in jeopardy. Thus there is incomprehensible agitation on the subject of dropping.

2. Overseas decentralization is arising under particular conditions. In his own words, the president finds the existence of two assemblies "superfluous." Owing to his experience as a former county councillor, the president is, on the whole, a departmentalist. Thus the theory may be put forward that the term "departmental" will be retained.

The only problem consists in the method of electing these new county councils. The president noted that the canton, with uninominal voting, remains a very strong argument favoring those who militate in favor of the representativeness of the small communes. The method of election thus remains to be determined. I personally have the impression that there will be a move toward proportional voting by arrondissement.

It will be noted that a commitment has been made for a timetable. The president indicated that the bill will be examined in April by the National Assembly. Beforehand, it will, of course, be submitted for evaluation by the county councils.

Such being the case, we have no control over the timetable with respect to the date of the elections. With the shuttling between the Assembly and the Senate, a general election must logically be expected toward the end of 1982, the beginning of 1983 at the latest. The question is whether it will take place before or after the municipal elections.

REACTION TO ARDF CHIEF'S SWITCH ON AUTONOMY ISSUE NOTED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 26 Jan 82 p 3

[Article by D. Lallemand: "Alain Defaud Has Become Advocate of Self-Determination"]

[Text] Mr Alain Defaud, the leader of the ARDF [expansion unknown], is turning out to be a resolute advocate of the Reunionese people's self-determination. Does this surprise you? Just think about it. Recalling the words "of candidate Mitterrand who solemnly affirmed that the inhabitants of the overseas departments are alone qualified to decide their future," he declares, "what a deception, what a bitter surprise...when the decision was made to establish a single assembly under the banner/under the colors of the PCR [Reunionese Communist Party] (sic!)"

For Defaud it doesn't matter that a majority of Frenchmen decided in favor of Point 58 of F. Mitterrand's program on 10 May 1981 and consequently ratified the bill for the single assembly. To this national majority, he opposes an alleged departmental majority which, according to him, would have "rejected the bill for a single assembly."

A curious turn of events! ARDF, which not so long ago categorically denied our people the right to self-determination, is today discovering its merits. Defaud, who not so very long ago absolutely did not want to hear about the Reunionese' right to self-determination is today challenging the French Government in the French National Assembly on the right to reform our institutions.

How can such a reversal be explained? It is quite simple. Defaud was against self-determination when there was a rightwing government in France, ensuring the local reaction the preservation of its privileges. Today, he is for it, because France has a leftwing government determined to put an end to the privileges of the local reaction and because the proportional election planned for the single assembly will cause his political friends to lose the dominant positions which they have acquired in past years by fraud, corruption and falsehood.

Two hundred years ago, during the French Revolution, when the Convention first dedicated itself to the abolition of slavery, Defaud's spiritual ancestors, in order to escape the obligation of freeing their slaves, did not hestitate to preach the independence of Reunion! How far will Alain Defaud go on the path to self-determination?

PHOTO CAPTION

Entangled in his contradictions, Alain Defaud of the ARDF is today discovering the virtues of self-determination.

Several days ago, he declared that his organization is "apolitical". His principal ally, however, is the FMD [expansion unknown], which presents itself as the fer-de-lance of the rightwing opposition. From contradiction to contradiction, Alain Defaud unveils his true objective which is to prejudice the true interests of Reunion and the Reunionese.

IMPORTANCE OF VOTER REGISTRATION NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 13-14 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Article by Momar Seyni Ndiaye: "Seizing the Opportunity"]

[Text] The decision to extend the voter registration deadline calls for certain comments, not the least of which is the notoriously poor turnout. There is no need to dwell on the matter. Moreover, it would serve no purpose to continue to deplore a fact on which there is unanimous agreement and which is incomprehensible, not to say inadmissible.

Rather, for the parties -- both majority and opposition -- it is a question of taking advantage of this opportunity offered by the government in order to encourage their members to give the coming elections the attention they deserve. It would be even more incomprehensible and inadmissible if the figure of 3,000 registrations a day is not reached between now and the month of May. All things considered, this average should be exceeded if we want to reach the anticipated number of 2 million voters, or an increase of nearly 500,000 over the last elections.

Two million voters out of a population neighboring on 6 million is not a difficult challenge, must less a wager, especially since all the conditions exist so that every Senegalese of voting age may choose his camp and express his loyalty and commitment to it. Voting is a prime means of doing so, at least for political groups that are assured of a solid electoral base and those that truly believe in the verdict of the ballot box.

However, extension of the deadline alone is not sufficient. It is true that since mid February, the government has released the sum of 40 million CFA francs needed by the administrative committees in charge of registration operations. The information effort must be continued and intensified. Beyond the bulletins, we must make the Senegalese people aware of the importance of registration. In order to do so, it seems indispensable to organize a periodic information campaign in all languages in order to reach all strata of the population. This concern for widespread information is in no way partisan politics. It is aimply a means of arousing interest through every possible effective means.

The outcome of the elections is in itself important, but it is even more important for the Senegalese people to be happy about the country's political situation, for them to realize that in Senegal, voting is a duty, even if that duty is not accompanied by any obligation or coercion.

GRAIN DEFICIT OF 30,000 TONS ESTIMATED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 12 Mar 82 p 3

[Article by Sidy Gaye: "Grain Deficit of 30,000 Tons"]

[Text] The estimation of grain needs and supply at the close of the 1981-1982 season witnessed the introduction of a new approach this year. Before next year's harvests, Souleymane Ndiaye, food aid commissioner, said, we shall need 35,000 tons of grain in addition to harvests already in and anticipated imports in order to cover all our millet, rice, corn and wheat needs.

This shortage of 35,000 tons of grain constitutes one-fourth of the previous year's level. This year, it was estimated at 30,000 tons of consumable grain -- that is, food products already husked and ready for immediate consumption. This new report, instituted thanks to the yield coefficients worked out by the Food Technology Institute (ITA), also makes it possible to better judge our needs, especially since foreign aid is generally delivered in consumable products and not in the unprocessed, unhusked form (grain) previously used in making estimates.

Nevertheless, whether it be a matter of 35,000 tons of grain or 30,000 tons of readily consumable grain, the deficit, as small as it is, compared with preceding years, is at least surprising when one refers solely to performances this year in the millet harvest.

The 1981-1982 season was in fact the one during which farmers planted the most millet since independence. With a gross production of over 700,000 tons, it is in third place among performances in the domain since our accession to international sovereignty.

With the exception of the 1978-1979 season, yield, which was somewhere around 800 kilograms per hectare, are also the highest national average ever attained. However, despite these remarkable performances and after deducting seed, the inevitable losses -- some 15 percent of total production -- and if one goes solely by this new criterion of using directly consumable grain, millet production scarcely exceeds 430,000 tons, some 60,000 tons below our real needs. However, this could be partially made up by the largely surplus production of corn.

Recalculated at a little over 80,000 tons at the time of harvesting in recent weeks, a tonnage of over 57,000 could be guaranteed to families after husking and the deduction of seed and possible losses. Our corn needs scarcely exceed 23,000 tons, meaning that there would consequently be a surplus over nearly 35,000 tons which could cover over half of the millet deficit.

Valid Substitute

This possible substitution is not possible with respect to rice and wheat, mainly because of the solidly rooted food habits of part of the population. Nevertheless, as in the past, the customary deficit in these two types of grain could be made up by import operations partially financed by consumers and the rest by a subsidy from the Equalization and Stabilization Fund.

As a result, in order to meet all our needs this year, we would have to import a little over 250,000 tons of rice, adding to the some 34,000 tons produced nationally. The same will be true of wheat not yet produced in the country. The 66,000 tons needed, mainly used in making bread, will be totally imported.

Finally, one can consider that in more general terms, by virtue of its production from the 1981-1982 season (millet, sorghum, corn and rice) and import operations throughout the year (rice and wheat), Senegal could have 841,000 tons of directly consumable grain. With overall needs put at 871,000 tons, there would consequently be a shortage of 30,000 tons of directly consumable grain.

CROCKER REMARKS ON NAMIBIA--The DAILY NEWS says that the American assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Mr Chester Crocker, has claimed that the South African regime has accepted the electoral proposals put forward by the Western contact group on Namibia. Mr Crocker now calls on the Frontline States and the Namibia Liberation Front, SWAPO, to accept the proposals and sent their decision. But, the DAILY NEWS says, Mr Crocker has termed SWAPO and the Frontline States as an obstacle to the achievement of independence for Namibia. The paper says the Western contact group came forward with two different proposals. Now, which one has been accepted by the South African regime? The two proposals were: a single-member constituent assembly, or proportional representation, or both. The second was for a combination of the two. In January, SWAPO rejected the system which calls for one-man two votes election. The Frontline States supported the SWAPO position. The rejection was on a matter of principle. This is because the suggested system is an unprecedented departure from the norm. It is undemocratic and unacceptable, even in the context of South Africa's own limited electoral system. GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF MUSLIM YOUTH HELD IN UPPER VOLTA

Youth Committee Chairman's Speech

Ouagadougou L'OBSERVATEUR in French 1 Feb 82 pp 6-7

[Text] The Fourth General Assembly of the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee of Upper Volta was held last weekend. The solemn opening ceremony took place on Friday 29 January at the Maison du Peuple in the presence of a representative of the chief of state, members of the Executive Committee of the CMRPN [Military Committee for the National People's Recovery], the grand chancellor of the national orders of distinction, members of the diplomatic corps, a representative of His Majesty The Moro Naba, and a number of members of the Muslim community in Upper Volta, including the grand imam of Ouagadougou, El Hadj Abdoul Salam Tiemtore.

After a reading from the Koran by a young student from a Madersa school [Islamic school] and a chant from this same holy book, the local president of the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee of Ouagadougou, El Hadj Pitroipa Mamadou, welcomed the invited guests and wished full success to the work of the conference.

Following him, the president of the Executive Council of the Muslim community, Dr Balla Traore, speaking in the name of the grand imam of Ouagadougou, welcomed the guests. He called for mankind living on this planet to work together to achieve social peace, and he appealed for tolerance, a sense of moderation, and wisdom. Dr Traore then discussed the Muslim religion in terms of a world where "everything is permitted." In this context he underlined the elements characteristic of the Muslim religion as being the rigidity of its structure and the correctness of its thought.

Speaking next, the national president of the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee, Moussa Sanogo, declared that according to Sura [Chapter] 8, Verse 73 of the Koran, those who are not believers should help each other and that those who do not do this will be condemned by history. He further added that in Sura 49, Verse 10, this is stated in stronger fashion, calling for harmony in relations between brothers. Continuing his speech, he recalled that the general assembly was the occasion to bring the faithful more closely together around a center of interest which includes: God, the Prophet Mohammed, the Koran, and the fatherland. Moussa Sanogo then spoke of the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee and its Madersa schools.

He said that the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee is an integral part of the Muslim community, of which it is the primary dynamic and permanent organ, functioning autonomously. Its principal purpose is to combat illiteracy in all its forms, opening up Islamic culture to the youth of our country through the establishment of Madersa schools. This situation gives the committee the double privilege of being under the supervision of the ministries of National Education and Culture and of Youth, Sports, and the Arts.

Speaking further of the Madersa schools, he said that it was important to underline that these involve educational establishments providing, in Arabic and French, all of the disciplines (history, geography, natural sciences, physics, mathematics) in accordance with the processes of modern instruction. He said: "After completing high school our students continue their studies in various friendly Arab countries. The receive scholarships from these countries or have their studies paid for by their parents. At present more than 500 young people from Upper Volta are carrying out their studies in colleges, high schools, and technical institutions of the universities and institutes of such Arab countries as Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Syria, Algeria, Iraq, Kuwait, and Qatar."

Touching on the theme of the general assembly, he emphasized: "We are all in agreement that we must participate in the economic, social, and cultural development of our country. But how should we place our stone in the building of the nation of Upper Volta? We have to find ourselves again and organize ourselves. Now what do we find? We find that young Muslim intellectuals are only distantly interested in the problems of their religion. Some of them are ashamed to state that they are Muslims. They seem to see in Islam a kind of backward religion, full of mysteries. We must therefore undertake an effort to demystify our religion and, as a beginning, to give children from 6 to 13 years of age basic religious training. For in reality, Islam is a factor for development, and we remain convinced that the levers of authority in any modern state are faith and science, whatever the resources of this state."

He continued: "Faith (without which nothing is possible; with which nothing is impossible) should glavanize people in to action, and science should find the most appropriate solutions for our problems. We must evolve in the direction of history to be in conformity with it."

He said: "Speaking of women, the Koran as well as Islamic tradition display an attitude of respect."

He declared: "You know that people have said a great deal recently about the expansionism of Islam, of a holy war, etc. The idea of declaring war, even a holy war, against anyone at all is far from our mind. Our efforts are in no sense aimed at fighting or opposing anyone. However, we think that in Upper Volta the Muslim religion, which includes more than 40 percent of the population, can if it is better organized than it is at present, constitute an important, living force in the task of national construction."

Further on in his speech, Sanogo indicated that the desire of the Muslim community is to unite in work, thought, and action all Muslims of good will who join in thinking of culture and progress in the sense of a dialogue and of the most complete opening of opportunities for all. Consequently, they wish to banish religiuos fanaticism by changing people's thinking.

He then spoke of the path which Muslim youth are seeking. He emphasized that their path is already set because they believe in God. However, he made it clear that the path involved is that of faith in the Muslim religion, as well as unity.

In this context, he remarked that an examination of conscience by our youth has tended to show that nothing positive can be done where there is division, that nothing viable can be done where there is disorder. and that nothing constructive can be done where there is anarchy.

Sanogo concluded his speech with this continuing stress on unity of action, an appeal for a closing of the ranks, and an examination of conscience in terms of the problems of the development of the Muslim religion, Islamic society, and the fatherland. The closing ceremony took place yesterday at 1600 hours at the Maison du Peuple. We will come back to [this topic] later.

New President's Address

Ouagadougou L'OBSERVATEUR in French 10 Feb 82 pp 8-9

[Text] From 29 to 31 January the Fourth General Assembly of the Muslim Cultural and Youth Committee of Upper Volta was held. At the conclusion of its work, a new Executive Bureau [was appointed], headed by El Hadj Sanwidi Kouka Ousmane (see L'OBSERVATEUR No 2268 of 2 February], who made the following speech at the close:

Dear guests and members of the conference.

You will easily understand my feelings in speaking before this august assembly in the name of the Muslim youth of Upper Volta.

I thank God and the Prophet Muhammad (may God's grace be on him) for having designated me, through you, to serve Islam, our religion. I am deeply grateful to this general assembly for this priceless sign of confidence. With the help of the Almighty, I swear to do everything I can to deserve your confidence. With your support, the Executive Bureau which you have just installed --and in the name of which I thank you once again--will perform its mission without fail.

As my predecessor, President Sanogo Moussa, said at this lectern during the opening session of our conference, we have met here to strengthen our unity around a center of interest which is : God, his prophet, the Koran, and our fatherland, Upper Volta.

We speak to all our Muslim brothers of Upper Volta and throughout the world, to our brothers, our mothers, our brothers and sisters, and we extend our sincere wishes for a happy new year in 1982 from the Muslim community of Upper Volta and from its Cultural and Youth Committee. We also express our best wishes for the happiness and prosperity of the people of Upper Volta and for the unceasing and growing progress of Islam in the world, and particularly in Upper Volta.

Honored guests, we are appreciative for your having sacrificed some of your precious time to honor with your presence the closing ceremony of our Fourth General Assembly.

We speak to our delegates from the various departments who, for 3 days and 2 nights, have tirelessly and on a high level conducted our discussions, which have led to the conclusions which we have just presented to you. We extend to them our thanks and our feelings of gratitude.

We have noted with happiness a certain examination of conscience on the part of the Muslim youth of our country in terms of better organizing themselves with a view to their participation in the economic, social, and cultural development of our fatherland.

Moreover, this is the theme for reflection which we have proposed to our Fourth General Assembly and which will be discussed during the study sessions that will soon be organized for this purpose. Without opening the discussion at this time, I would like to emphasize that this theme will be presented under the sign of unity, the unity of action of all Muslims of Upper Volta.

We issue an appeal to the Muslim intellectual youth of our country. Get out of your indifference with regard to the problems of your religion, so that all of us can work to resolve them.

Before concluding, I would like to add my voice to that of all those who, before me, have given well-deserved homage to El Hadj Oumarou Kanazoe, a man of God who has done so much to ensure that Muslim brotherhood is not just a word. May the Almighty grant him health and vigor so that he will continue his work in the service of the cause of Islam and of his country.

SATISFACTORY COURSE OF RELATIONS WITH PORTUGAL REVIEWED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3376, 19 Apr 82 p 1096

[Excerpts]

Portugal is slowly carving a new role for itself in its former African colonies only seven years after some 700,000 refugees fled the crumbling colonial empire, (writes Richard Wallis of Reuters).

General Antonio Ramalho Eanes has been making a state visit to Angola, the first by a Portuguese President since Angola became independent in 1975. The visit marks more than just a reconciliation with the people who fought for 13 years against Portugal's colonial rule. As with his visit to Mozambique last November, President Eanes will also be the first Head of State of a Nato country to go to one of the main areas of Soviet influence in Africa.

Much of the credit for the thaw in relations between Lisbon and its former colonies goes to President Eanes himself, he has long striven to win the confidence of the five Portuguese-speaking former African colonies. Apart from Mozambique, he has already visited Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde.

The president's Angolan trip shows how close he is to fulfilling his dream of seeing Portugal act as a bridge between the rest of Western Europe and the former Portuguese colonies.

With President Eanes in Luanda is Portugal's Deputy Foreign Minister Leonardo Matias.

Mr. Matias in a recent radio interview said that one of the main reasons why the ex-colonies were turning to Portugal again was disillusionment. The biggest problem appears to have been with East Bloc goods and advisers, paid for in precious hard currency, but not always suited to the needs of the countries paying.

Rediscovery of its former African markets has also helped Portugal's economy at a time of international recession that has badly hit the country's traditional clients.

Last year, Angola became the fourth largest market for Portuguese goods behind Britain, France and West Germany, having been the ninth in 1979 and 1980. Only France managed to sell Angola more than Portugal's 13,800m. escudos ($230m.) worth of exports in 1981.

The way for a boom in trade with the ex-colonies was cleared when the first right-wing Portuguese government since the 1974 revolution decided two years ago that it would quietly shelve outstanding compensation claims. This has enabled Portuguese banks to open credit lines for four ex-colonies totalling $325m. For a country with a total foreign debt of $10,000m., this is generous, and it is precisely because of Portugal's financial limitations, that the authorities are looking to richer partners, including the EEC, for help in expanding this market.

A growing number of Portuguese firms are being asked back to help boost agricultural output to pre-independence levels, sort out ports and communications problems and put the ex-colonies' fledgling industries back on their feet, but they find it hard to offer much needed credits.

The Lisbon government has also been sounding out Britain, West Germany, France and Sweden during the last seven months on the possibility of trilateral co-operation projects in the ex-colonies. This would involve bringing Portuguese firms in on development contracts awarded to — and financed by — these countries. The Portuguese contribution would be a cheap labour force that shares a common language with the locals and often has a long experience of working in Africa.

JOINT GABONESE-YUGOSLAV COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Libreville L'UNION in French 25 Mar 82 p 4

[Excerpts] A joint communique was issued yesterday at the conclusion of the official visit of the president of Yugoslavia to Gabon. The following is the text of that final communique:

At the invitation of the president of the Gabonese Republic, Omar Bongo, the president of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Sergej Kraigher, paid an official visit of friendship to Gabon from 22 to 24 March 1982.

The two parties examined prospects of economic cooperation with special attention. They emphasized that the fruitful development of this cooperation is an important factor in all relations between Yugoslavia and Gabon.

On the occasion, they noted that Yugoslav enterprises are taking an active part in the completion of economic development projects in Gabon.

Both parties expressed satisfaction with the quality of cooperation relations between their countries and stated their determination to develop and diversify them even further in order to make them respond to real possibilities and bestow upon them long-term stability.

Once again, both presidents noted that in addition to cooperation in the field of civil engineering, transport, forestry and oil prospecting, there exist real possibilities of expanding or intensifying cooperation in agriculture, geology, mining, electric power and other fields.

Both parties particularly emphasized the need to further balance commercial trade through an important increase in such trade.

They stressed the need to link scientific and technical cooperation with economic cooperation and they pointed up the usefulness of the biennial program of scientific and technical cooperation.

The president of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Sergej Kraigher, and the president of Gabon, Omar Bongo, expressed concern with the constant deterioration in the international situation.

They noted with satisfaction their identical views on the analysis of the international situation and that of developing countries in particular, emphasizing the importance of the activity of nonaligned nations in the search for solutions to major problems existing in the world and of the coming summit conference of the movement.

In this connection, they agreed to strengthen their mutual cooperation, their unity of action and their solidarity on the basis of the authentic, fundamental principles of the policy of nonalignment.

They issued an appeal that disputes and conflicts between nonaligned countries be resolved by peaceful means so as not to weaken their capacity for action.

The president of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the president of the Gabonese Republic dealt with the situation in Africa in particular. They noted that despite the significant successes won by African countries, this situation is quite serious because of the rivalries of blocs, the threat to the independence of certain countries, the remnants of colonialism, neocolonialism, racism and apartheid and the grave economic problems facing the countries of Africa.

Consequently, they give their full support to the fortunate initiatives and the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to settle the complex political and economic problems of the continent in order to assure all nations and peoples of peace, security and accelerated socioeconomic development.

Both parties expressed their profound concern over the situation in southern Africa. They vigorously condemned the racist regime of South Africa because of the illegal occupation of Namibia, the application of the system of apartheid and racial discrimination and the acts of aggression aimed at neighboring countries, particularly the independence of the People's Republic of Angola.

They noted the need to take urgent measures in order to implement the UN plan on the granting of independence to Namibia, as contained in Resolution 435 of the Security Council.

With respect to the crisis in the Near East, both parties vigorously condemned the continuing acts of aggression perpetrated by Israel against Arab nations. They reaffirmed their conviction that peace and stability in the region can only be restored through Israel's withdrawal from all territories occupied since 1967 and by the granting of the inalienable right of the people of Palestine to the creation of an independent state under the leadership of the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

They harshly condemned the annexation of the Golan Heights as one more act of the policy of aggression and expansion of Israel.

Expressing their concern over the prolongment of the conflict between Iraq and Iran, both parties stated their conviction that the settlement to the problem should be found by peaceful means, based on full respect for the principles of the UN Charter and the policy of nonalignment.

In order to restore peace and security in Southeast and Southwest Asia, both parties expressed their support for a peaceful settlement of the crisis in Afghanistan and Kampuchea on the basis of the resolutions of the UN General Assembly, demanding the withdrawal of foreign troops and full respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and the nonaligned status of those countries.

Both parties urge international opinion to maintain and intensify its pressure on all parties involved so that the Middle East, Southeast and Southwest Asia and Central America may cease being areas of conflict and effectively become zones of peace and so that southern Africa will free itself once and for all from the reign of arbitrary rule, on the basis of the pertinent resolutions of the United Nations, the Movement of Nonaligned Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

The great powers bear heavy responsibility in these matters.

The problem of international economic relations was examined with great care during the talks.

Both parties emphasized that the gap between developing countries and developed countries continues to grow, constituting a grave source of tension in the world.

They noted that the establishment of the new international economic order is of prime significance because it governs the maintenance of international peace and security.

Both nations will make the greatest effort, together with other developing countries, so that overall negotiations will soon be initiated within the OAU.

They also emphasized the importance of cooperation between developing countries and the need to seek collective autonomy as an important element in the establishment of the new international economic order and the rapid development of underdeveloped nations.

[The president of Yugoslavia] was presented with the Grand Cross in the Order of the Equatorial Star by the Gabonese chief of state, whom he in turn made a member of the Order of the Yugoslav Grand Star of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Both parties expressed satisfaction with the results of the official visit, especially since the talks confirmed the identical views and positions of Yugoslavia and Gabon on all matters examined, thereby constituting a major contribution to the continuing development of cooperation and understanding between the two friendly, nonaligned nations.

On behalf of the Office of President of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, President Sergej Kraigher invited Gabonese President Omar Bongo to visit Yugoslavia. The invitation was accepted with pleasure. The date of the visit will be set at a later time.

OMBOUE TO BE SUPPLIED WITH WATER, ELECTRIC POWER

Libreville L'UNION in French 25 Mar 82 p 2

[Article by Ogandaga-d'Ekarapango: "Water and Electricity Soon"]

[Excerpt] In a year, the city of Omboue, capital of the Department of Etimboue, will have water and electricity. The cornerstone of the technical facilities involved took place in Omboue on 20 March, at a ceremony presided over by Minister of Energy and Hydraulic Resources Divungui-Di-Ndinge.

Minister of Planning Pascal Nze and Minister of Reform of State Enterprises Augustin Hervo Akendengue attended the ceremony, along with a number of prominent regional figures.

Upon its arrival by plane, the delegation was welcomed by the different local authorities, headed by the prefect of Etimboue, Antoine Ledoux Mba Nguema, and the president of the departmental assembly, Pierre Marie Nkero. After the welcoming ceremony, the delegation was immediately taken to the site, where the local community organization group had organized a suitable welcome.

Two speeches were delivered on the occasion, first of all, by the president of the departmental assembly, who welcomed the members of the delegation. He thanked the chief of state for this fortunate undertaking, which once again shows the interest which President Omar Bongo and his government have ceaselessly demonstrated in the well-being of the Gabonese people. Before concluding his remarks, Nkero repeated the unswerving attachment of the people of Etimboue for the policy of national renewal.

Speaking in turn, Divungui-Di-Ndinge thanked the local people for the warm welcome reserved for the delegation. Divungui said that the water and electrical systems for the city of Omboue will enable the people in the area to improve their living conditions. Divungui also said that notions of social progress are increasingly linked to the presence of clean water and electricity.

It should be noted that the work at Omboue involves: a pumping station with a flow of 10 cubic meters per hour; a water treatment station that can be expanded to 50 cubic meters an hour; a water tower with a capacity of 160 cubic meters; and 4,500 meters of pipes to distribute water throughout the city, requiring the setting up of four terminal fountains.

On the other hand, electricity will be supplied by a thermal power station supplied by three generators making it possible to distribute electricity at medium and low tension and to provide lighting for the main arteries of the city. The project also provides for the construction of an administrative building, two workshops and three housing units. The entire project will cover an area of 5,000 square meters and work will cost 1 billion CFA francs.

'COPYING LIBYA' ACCUSATION DENIED IN LAGOS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 3 Apr 82 pp 4-5

[Article by Edward Ameyibor]

[Text] THE Ghana High Commission has in a statement in Lagos denied that Ghana is copying the political system of Libya.

Reacting to an eight-page press statement by Ghana's former envoy to Nigeria, Alhaji Yousif Patty in which he made a number of allegations against the ruling PNDC, the High Commission said Mr Patty's allegations were baseless and untrue.

In a five-page statement, the High Commission urged the Nigerian public to dismiss the allegations as political propaganda calculated to cause unnecessary apprehension and create ill-will for the PNDC.

The five-page statement said Alhaji Patty's claim that there were Libyan soldiers in Ghana was "a figment of the imagination".

It traced events leading to the overthrow of the Limann administration which it accused of economic mismanagement and tribalism in appointments.

The statement explained that Ghana's present connections with Libya" confirms the PNDC's belief in international solidarity and mutual respect for the sovereignty of nations."

Alhaji Patty is presently seeking political asylum in Nigeria.

The statement said the PNDC's first preoccupation had been the elimination of cheating in the society and the formation of people's defence committees as a machinery for the protection of human rights of the common man.

It said since Alhaji Patty had not been in Ghana since December 31 last year, he was not in a position to say anything accurately on the situation at home.

It, however, assured him on the authority of the Ghana government that he was free to return home without let or hindrance because he is not a wanted person.

But it cautioned that in his new role as a political refugee, Alhaji Patty should always bear in mind the strong bonds of friendship that exists between Ghana and Nigeria and refrain from any activities or pronouncements likely to mar this "long, cherished and excellent relationship.

Meanwhile, Nigeria's External Affairs Minister, Professor Ishaya Audu, has said Alhaji Patty's application for political asylum would be considered on its merit.

He added that as an ECOWAS citizen Alhaji Patty need not have asked for political asylum.

Alhaj. Patty in his statement alleged among other things that the PNDC was copying blindly Libya's "crazy" political system which he said was neither capitalist, socialist nor communist.

He also said he could not live under a regime which has no respect for human rights.

PAPER ATTACKS ISRAEL, ZIONIST 'EXPANSIONARY' POLICIES

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 8 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Atrocities in West Bank"]

[Text] The Zionists who rule Israel are at it again. They have now succeeded in getting a closer grip of the West Bank and they evidently intend to evict the Palestinians from there so that Jews can occupy the place.

Anyone who has read the Old Testament properly knows two things about the Jews: Any time they felt strong enough they used the power to the suppress neighbouring communities or countries. They also believed that they are a superior race so they seek to purge their midst of all non-Jews.

The combined effects of these wrong attitudes is that the Jews have always been an expansionist, racist, and oppressive people.

And anyone who has read the New Testament properly knows that God disagreed with those attitudes and always punished the Jews in various ways, including sending them into exile, to prove that the Jews were deceiving themselves.

The Zionists--the extreme racists among the Jews who formed the ruling class--were too self-opinionated in their racial superiority to understand God's indirect disapproval of their activities. So Jesus came and told them directly that God did not create any superior race on earth and that the Jews were by no means better than the Arabs among whom they lived.

The Zionists did not like this truth, because it deflated their ego, so they organized and killed Jesus. The Zionists still rule the Jews and they keep their anti-Jesus anger alive by getting all primary schools in Israel to teach Jewish children up to today that Jesus was neither the son of God nor any messiah.

All that may be taken as history; but history repeats itself and every true Christian knows the word of Jesus the Christ will come to pass: that so long as the Zionists continue to use their power--if it is God-given power--to oppress other people, they will never escape God's punishment. Mark it, it is in the Bible. They will be defeated again one day!

Nazi Methods

Israel's current expansionist policy at the expense of its Arab neighbours has quite a different dimension in the light not only of the Zionists' own purposes but also of its wider neo-colonist relationship.

The tools are also more formidable not only in the light of Israel's dangerous military build-up but also because the Zionists, having collaborated with Hitler even against ordinary European Jews, are ready to use Nazi methods in annihilating the Palestinians and other Arabs in the West Bank, Golan Heights and South Lebanon.

It is clearer everyday that Israel has become a millstone round the neck of the United States of America, because the U.S. is increasingly being seen as the only dedicated supporter of the oppressive and expansionist drive of the Zionist state.

In the last two weeks since the Israeli government declared direct rule over the West Bank, many Palestinians have been killed in cold blood by Israeli occupation troops on the orders of the Israeli authorities. In true fashion, such Nazi methods of suppression as throwing bombs into houses and crowds are being used by the Israeli authorities to enforce the Israeli dictatorship over the Palestinians in the West Bank.

Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights and the West Bank, and the replacement of Israeli occupation troops in the Sinai by the troops of Israel's friends have made the Camp David pact a firmly dead letter.

With the odds so thickly stacked against them, the Palestinians and Arabs are fighting stoutly against the Zionist expansion in the Middle-East. Ordinary Arab people are tearing up Israeli citizenship cards and throwing them in the faces of Israeli soldiers in the Golan Heights and the West Bank.

The Palestinians are fighting a cause of survival that will ultimately triumph. The Bible has messages telling the world that Israel's oppressive policies have not found and will never find favour in the sight of God. Christian America therefore has a moral, Godly duty to turn Israel from another steadfast course towards doom.

PNDC OFFICIAL REAFFIRMS SOLIDARITY WITH DPRK

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 8 Apr 82 p 8

[Text]

THE PNDC Secretary for Culture and Tourism, Mr Asiedu Yirenkyi, has said that Ghana has a great deal to learn from the history and struggle of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) for the revolutionary process going on in Ghana.

The Secretary made the observation when speaking at the exhibition of books and photos held in Accra on Tuesday at the Arts Centre to mark the 70th birthday of President Kim Il Sung of the DPRK.

The exhibition was mounted by the Embassy of that country. Mr Yirenkyi said Ghanaians likened the experience of the people of the DPRK to theirs since historically, the Koreans fought basically against the same enemy of imperialism and its local collaborators.

He, therefore, used the opportunity to reaffirm Ghanaians solidarity with the peoples of the DPRK and the democratic and popular forces in South Korea in the struggle for the re-unification of Korea.

Mr Yirenkyi added that the exhibition was an eloquent testimony of the cultural and scientific advances achieved by socialist Korea on the basis of independence, self-reliance and socialism.

He pointed out that the history of the people of the DPRK was one of determined struggle against Japanese colonialism and the U.S. imperialism intervention coupled with its allied reactionary feudal and merchant classes for the independence of their country.

The Ambassador of the DPRK, Mr Cho U Jin, said his Government and people valued their friendship with Ghana.

GOLD SHAFTS NEGOTIATIONS REPORTED WITH SWISS BANK

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 15 Apr 82 p 3

[Text]

NEGOTIATIONS are going on between the Government and the Union Bank of Switzerland for a loan to sink two more shafts at the Prestea and Tarkwa Gold Mines.

Each shaft is estimated at 125 million dollars.

A GBC news bulletin quoted the chairman of the interim management committee of the State Gold Mining Corporation Mr Barko, as saying that the Tarkwa belt is the largest expanse gold in the world.

He said the committee was taking steps to treat about 20 million tonnes of gold ore at Pepe near Tarkwa

It was therefore, taking delivery of a washing trommell with a large milling capacity from the Ghana Consolidated Diamonds Limited at Akwatia.

Mr Barko suggested the establishment of a Gold Exploration Company as a subsidiary of the State Gold Mining Corporation.

He explained that such a company was needed to explore the commercial quantity of the country's gold resources to ensure the establishment of more mines.

Mr Barko blamed the former management of the corporation for the neglect of the Prestea and Tarkwa mines and alleged that about three million dollars worth of equipment imported for the Prestea mines were abandoned by that management.

According to the Financial Controller of the corporation, Nii Nortey, the State Gold miners were facing serious financial problems.

The corporation, he said made about ₵5 million a month in revenue as against a total working cost of ₵15.3 million.

Meanwhile, a committee of enquiry has been set up to probe the operations of the Dunkwa Alluvial Gold Mine to try to save the nation from losing the ₵110 million invested in it.

Instead of the expected production level of 3.005 ounces of gold a month, the Dunkwa dredges produce only 305 ounces.

IMPROVED POLICE ACTION REQUESTED FOR CRIME WAVE

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 7 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Curfew, Armed Robbery and the Revolution"]

[Text] Curfews all over the world are imposed for a number of reasons, the main one being security.

Since the initiation of the current revolution and the introduction of curfew hours, a variety of reactions have been recorded. While fishermen complained that the hours were not convenient for occupational reasons, discotheque and 'nite-club' operators complained that their source of revenue was being blocked.

There was also the rather flimsy argument from some housewives that the curfew should be permanent because it disciplined their husbands.

On a more serious level, the curfew has instilled some amount of discipline in national life as a whole.

Wild night life, with its attendant crimes, has been curtailed. Some quantity of petrol, however little, has been conserved; and many will be those who will confess that they have been saved some level of expenditure which was their lot during the night.

Then the GRAPHIC also recorded a number of proposals which favoured the curfew because of the peace people enjoyed throughout the night.

A few weeks after December 31, this peace was nonexistent for a section of the population who were harassed and molested by armed personnel. Public reaction was so heavy that armed personnel were virtually withdrawn.

Now, the criminals in the society are at it again. The thieves, robbers and wicked enemies of the people are up again stealing from house to house. Reports from all the regions of the country indicate that the midnight robbers have started their business with all force.

It is almost unimaginable that at this time when all hands are being put to productive efforts, some enemies of the revolution should be bold to continue to perpetuate their evil deeds.

The GRAPHIC is very much concerned about this trend of affairs which could be used to destroy the good intentions of the revolution.

We therefore call on the Provisional National Defence Council to strengthen the arm of the law on curfews. Armed police personnel should be detailed along all the corners of the country to check movement of citizens during curfew hours.

While we caution on any possible misuse of weapons on innocent citizens who may be in town doing essential services, we would like the People's Police to ensure that all the criminals caught are harshly dealt with.

The criminals in our midst should be exposed once and for all. The revolution should give no room for lazy unproductive elements.

SPORTS SEEN NOT DIVORCED FROM POLITICS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3376, 19 Apr 82 pp 1057-1059

[Article by John Kugblenu]

[Excerpts]

John Kugblenu discusses the significance of the Black Stars' victory in the 13th African Cup of Nations Competition held recently in Tripoli.

THE CONGRATULATORY message from the chairman of the ruling PNDC government to the Ghana national football team, the Black Stars, on Friday, March 19, 1982, bore a tone of simplicity. The message said that the chairman had nothing to offer the footballers and their handlers but simple words and that Ghana had nothing to offer except a place of honour for themselves and their children. "What you have won without expectation of any promised material reward is a tribute to your revolutionary strength. The revolution thrives on women and men who fight without any expectation of any reward but for the glory of their people," the message said.

The Black Stars had just won the 13th African Cup of Nations Competition for the unprecedented fourth time in far-away Tripoli (Ghana won the competition in 1963, 1965 and 1978). They had beaten host-nation friendly Libya Arab Jamahiriya by 8-7. Ironically, the Ghanaian victory came on the same day that a consignment of 24,000 metric tons of crude oil from Libya arrived at the Tema harbour. It was the first consignment of 500,000 barrels of crude oil, estimated at about $20m., granted to Ghana by Libya.

Birds of the Same Feather

Sports and politics are often birds of the same feather and tend to flock together, despite international attempts to separate them. Thus, a group of worried Ghanaians who had gathered to watch the final match live on television expressed concern and fear that a Ghanaian victory over Libya may jeopardise the infant "hand of friendship" which the Arab Jamahiriya had extended to Ghana after the December 31, 1981 Revolution. That friendship hand had come filled with such gifts as drugs, food, newsprint, crude oil and a promise to supply Ghana with crude oil for the next 15 years on concessionary terms. The group of concerned Ghanaians argued that the friendship, benevolent hand may either recede completely or partially or may be less generous should Ghana win over Libya. Thought of what may happen to that hand should Ghana win could have a psychological effect on the Ghanaian players and their handlers, the worried Ghanaians maintained.

If the Ghanaian players shared the concern of their compatriots at home, it was not very apparent from their performance. On the contrary, what was more obvious was that the players were in no mood to compromise their pride and determination. After a marathon 120 minutes of play, the game ended in one goal apiece. The 13th African Cup of Nations contest had to be settled through the rule of penalty kicks.

At the airport, a member of the PNDC reiterated that the win in Libya was "a victory for the revolution." That Ghana played Libya in the final match was also a victory for the African Revolution, the PNDC member said. Ghana's victory was very much linked to the revolutionary wind blowing in the country, a section of the media maintained.

Though not very perceptible, the psychological significance of the victory may equal its political importance. Psychologically, the victory was a momentary gratification; it marked a kind of escape for the people from the harsh realities of the economic and social mess in the country. For a people who have long endured the battering of soaring inflation, unemployment, social and economic retrogression, the triumph in Libya was a welcome relief.

Regaining Lost Glory

Ghana, a bank official argued, may be economically deprived; she may also be in a "bottomless pit" and may have lost much of the cream of her skilled manpower, including leading footballers, to other nations. But the victory in Tripoli signifies that with hard work, discipline, determination and "revolutionary strength", the nation can regain some of her lost or missed glory in many areas other than football.

Another member of the PNDC used the occasion of the Black Stars' victory to remind Ghanaians that the nation has the potential to be first on the African continent not just in football but also in such other areas as education and agriculture.

The question which remains on the minds of critical observers of the Ghanaian situation is: will "the revolutionary strength" which was exhibited in football in far-away Tripoli be channeled into hard work in other areas at home? Economic and social resuscitation in Ghana lies in hard work and not mere rhetoric and emotional response. Similar rhetoric and emotional display greeted the victory of Ghana in 1978 when the national football team won the 11th African Cup of Nations contest in Accra. Ironically, the same national leaders who were hailed in 1978 for Ghana's victory were jeered barely a year after on their way to face the firing squad.

Specific Plans

The events between mid-1980 and December 31, 1981 are well-recorded, and are indicators of the futility to nation-building of rhetoric and emotional response to such events as a soccer victory and religious visit. The success of the present revolution in transforming the socio-economic structure of Ghana lies in the ability of the leaders and the people to translate "the revolutionary wind" blowing in the country, the rhetoric and emotionalism into specific and concrete plans which will be painstakingly implemented.

PROTEST AGAINST COCOA CO-OPS

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 2 Apr 82 p 8

[Excerpt]

COCOA farmers in Ashanti have protested to the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) against the green light given to the Ghana Co-operative Marketing Association to purchase cocoa, alongside the Produce Buying Division, as from the next cocoa season.

In a 12-point petition presented to the PNDC on Tuesday, Nana Barima Twum Kodua, assistant cocoa and coffee chief farmer of the Ghana National Farmers Council, who led a delegation to the Burma Camp, drew the attention of the PNDC to an AFRC Government White Paper (September 1979) which banned the Co-operative Marketing Association, among other agencies, from cocoa purchases.

The farmers, therefore, asked the Government to rescind the decision to enable harmony to prevail in the cocoa industry.

According to them, the association had once failed the nation by incurring huge debts when it was in cocoa purchases and asked that they (farmers) be invited to help in the operational and marketing aspect of the cocoa industry.

They also complained that since they were kicked out of the distribution system, they had been finding it extremely difficult to come by their basic needs and farming inputs.

The farmers pledged their support for the PNDC and its agricultural policies and hoped it would meet the needs of farmers to enable them to become more productive.

Brigadier J. Nunoo-Mensah, Chief of Defence Staff who received the petition, promised the farmers that the PNDC would look into their grievances and find better solutions to them.

NORMAL WEEKLY FUEL ALLOCATIONS PLANNED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3376, 19 Aug 82 p 1102

[Text]

The government has described an unfounded and unsubstantiated rumours that the crude oil from Libya cannot be refined in the country. At a news conference in Accra, the PNDC Secretary for Information, Mr. Ato Austin, said the rumours were meant to throw dust into the eyes of the public. He said this was not the first time Ghana had used Libyan oil, and the country had started to use Libyan crude oil as far back as 1963. The country had even received oil from the Middle East with even higher sulphur content than that of Libya, he said.

Mr. Ato Austin explained that long queues at petrol filling stations were partly due to the fact that the face value of coupons far exceeded the oil supplies the refinery could produce. The government was therefore taking steps to streamline the coupon system. Mr. Ato Austin said specific petrol stations would be allocated to tro tro and minibuses to help ease the transportation problem. He gave an assurance that the fuel situation would be normalised within two weeks. Mr. Ato Austin added that the crude oil debt to Nigeria had been renogotiated and Nigeria had resumed supplies.

Meanwhile, the Tema petroleum refinery has resumed the normal weekly allocation of 840,000 gallons of refined fuel for public consumption. This is part of plans to solve petrol problems facing motorists, and to reduce the long queues at petrol filling stations. Special operations for increasing fuel supplies in all the regions of the country have also started. These have become possible because deliveries of crude oil imported from outside have already started coming in to the Tema refinery. The resumption of normal weekly allocations will increase fuel supplies in the system by about 200,000 gallons a week. Since February 1 the normal weekly allocation fell to 740,000 gallons, and then went down to 640,000 gallons on March 15. The reduction of weekly supplies became necessary because of uncertainties as to when imported crude oil was going to be delivered. The rationing was therefore needed to ensure that what was in stock was used wisely and fairly.

'HOLY WAR MOVEMENT' BANNED--A newly-formed organisation which calls itself "The Holy War Movement" at Sefwi Bibiani in the Western Region, has been banned with immediate effect. The ban followed reports to the Western Regional Secretary, Dr M.A. Appiah, who was on a four-day tour of the district, that the executive members of the movement were undermining the revolution. The executives who were arrested at Bibiani last Thursday, were later released after investigations. They have, however, been asked to report daily to the Bibiani Police. They are Mr A.L. Jamparah, a teacher at Bibiani, chairman and a former member of the local people's defence committee, Mr J.K. Addae, vice-chairman, Mr S.F. Obeng, secretary, Mr Eric Osei, and Mr John Donkor, both executive members. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 27 Mar 82 p 1]

JUDICIAL SYSTEM WARNED--The present judicial system will be replaced with people's tribunals if the system fails to champion the cause of the suffering masses. A representative of the Interim National Coordinating Committee (INCC) of PDCs, Mr Kwesi Ampofo, who stated this at the inauguration of the PDC of the Attorney General's Department said the present legal system had not lived up to the expectation of the majority of the people. According to him the present judicial system has come to "overthrow" the country's traditional legal set up and has instead instituted a system which increases the exploitation of the people. Mr Anpofo therefore called on the members of the legal profession to monitor the activities of multinational companies whose main aim is to make large profits at the expense of Ghanaians. "Since you are the very people who have collaborated with these foreigners to exploit your own people, you must ensure that this tendency changes. Failure to do this will incur the people's wrath," he warned. He asked legal practitioners to appreciate the present change in the country and change accordingly. PDC'S ON PROBATION UNTIL JULY--A member of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC) has disclosed that people's defence committees are on probation until July when their activities would be reappraised. The member, Sergeant Daniel Alolga Akata-Pore, was inaugurating the Medium Mortar Regiment and the Border Guards People's Defence Committees, at a joint ceremony held at the Volta Barracks at Ho. He called on military personnel to identify themselves with the problems facing the nation by helping to defend and enhance set aspirations. They must also consider themselves as part of the community by embracing all community orientated activities like farming projects, road and other constructional works, he said. He advised members of the committees to exchange ideas with their civilian counterparts since the PDCs were accountable to the people. Sgt. Akata-Pore stressed the need for vigilance and patriotism on the part of the military to defend the nation from known external and internal adversaries. PDCs, he said, are not being formed for witch-hunting or as anti-officer cliques, and reminded those in authority on the need for effective leadership for the well-being of the people. He appealed to the military to assist in educating the people, the majority of whom are still illiterate. He reiterated that parliamentary democracy had failed to project national aspirations, and that "we want to change the pattern for a better society." EEC TRAINING GRANT--The European Economic Community (EEC) has approved a grant of approximately two million United States dollars to the Ghana government for the financing of a multiannual training programme for the period 1982-85. A statement issued by the EEC office in Accra yesterday said the aim of the programme, which had been drawn up under the provisions of the Lome "Two Convention" was to improve Ghana's capacity in managerial and technical skills in both the public and private sectors. According to the statement, it was foreseen that the majority of the community's assistance in this field would be channeled into inter-institutional cooperation with training institutions such as the Ghana Institute of Management and Public Administration (GIMPA), the National Vocational Training Institute (NVTI) and the Centre for Development Studies of the University of Cape Coast. In addition, specific training awards will be allocated to train craftsmen and technicians, in priority fields such as agriculture, rural development, public works, energy and mining, the statement added. FORMER OFFICIALS WANTED--Three persons including the former head of the Military Intelligence, Col. Annor Odjidja have been declared wanted people. A press statement issued in Accra yesterday and signed by Mr Ato Austin, PNDC Secretary for Information named the other two as Mr Kofi Batsa, Publicity Director of the dissolved People's National Party (PNP) and Mr Francis Poku, formerly of the Special Branch. The statement said that in spite of repeated statements asking them to report either to the police or military authorities they had failed to do so. These persons, it stressed, have committed grievious offences against the people and the nation for which they have to answer. The statement, therefore, asked the public to co-operate with the police and military authorities to effect the arrest of the three men. [Text] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 6 Apr 82 p 1]

GBC POLL ON RAWLINGS--According to a Ghana Broadcasting Corporation survey an overwhelming majority of Ghanaians rate Flt-Lt Jerry Rawlings' first 100 days back in power either as fair or good. Interviews with Ghanaians have shown that 58 percent rated the first 100 days as "fair" while another 25 percent described them as "good." According to the GBC survey, only 17 percent of people interviewed felt that Flt-Lt Rawlings' initial period was poor. Asked what they felt about the 10 pm to 5 am curfew in force since New Year's Eve, 60 percent of those interviewed said it should be lifted, adding that the police had been taking advantage of the curfew to extort money from the public. Some also complained about molestation and harassment of the civilian population by the ruling military. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3376, 19 Apr 82 p 1102]

ROYALTIES TO EMERGENCY FUND--With immediate effect, all royalties on land, mineral, timber and other natural resources due to the traditional councils in the Western Region are to be paid into a newly-created people's emergency development fund. The fund will be administered by representatives of the people's armed forces and the police, the regional administration, the regional house of chiefs and the regional people's defence committees. The Regional Secretary, Dr Appiah, addressing a meeting of the Wassa Fiasse traditional council in Sekondi, warned that companies, organisations and individuals who fail to comply with the directives will have their assets forfeited to the state. Those who receive or pay such royalties should submit to his office within 21 days the list of all royalties paid within the last five years. PEOPLE'S MILITIA PLANNED--A people's militia is to be established the country. The standing army will, however, be retained. Corporal Peter Tasiri, PNDC military representative for Upper Region who disclosed this at a durbar of the people of Pusiga-Pulimakom Local Council area, said every able-bodied citizen would be taught how to use the gun. Civilians, Cpl Tasiri explained could then no longer be terrorized and the gun would serve as a compromise. He said the training would serve as a compromise. He said the training would keep all the 14 million Ghanaians vigilant and in combat readiness for any foreign invasion and internal anti-revolutionaries. Present were the PNDC Secretary for the Upper Region, Dr Awudu Tinorga, Mr John Ndebugre, Secretary for the Northern Region, and Mr Amenga Etego, Upper Regional PDC coordinator. AFRICAN MODE OF WORSHIP--The Reverend Dr Kwabena Damuah, member of the Provisional National Defence Council (PNDC), at the weekend called for the Africanization of the mode of worship by churches and sects in line with the country's Cultural Revolution. Speaking at the Independence Square in Accra on Saturday where a mass concert was staged as part of activities to mark the just-launched Cultural Revolution, Rev. Damuah observed that culture and religion were inseparable tools that should be used to serve God. He explained that culture involved every aspect of a people's life; for that reason, every new religion in the country should be modelled to fall in line with the culture of the people. To this end, he called on all religious groups operating in the country to adapt and adopt the pouring of libation and drumming as part of their liturgy because they form integral part of the African traditional worship. The PNDC member also noted that custom demanded that parents cater for their children, but regretted that most parents had failed to perform their responsibilities. The Secretary for Culture and Tourism, Mr Asiedu Yirenkvi, called for a change in the lifestyle of Ghanaians to make them more African in outlook. DEPOSITED 50-CEDI NOTES REFUND PROMISED--The ¢50 notes deposited at the banks will be refunded to the owners within two months. In addition, a decision would be announced on the withdrawal of money by those with deposits exceeding ¢50,000. Mr Ato Ahwoi, a member of the National Economic Review Committee, disclosed this when he addressed delegates of Cocoa, Coffee and Sheanut Farmers Association in Accra yesterday. He explained that the deposit of ¢50 notes at the banks was to enable Government to sort out counterfeit notes which had damaged the country's economy from the system. On those who have more than ¢50,000 at the banks, he pointed out that investigations were being conducted into their backgrounds and those who made genuine wealth would have their money intact. He also pointed out that those who made uillions by dodging tax would be made to pay their due. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 7 Apr 82 pp 1, 3]

ICA TEAM LEADER 'OPTIMISTIC ABOUT FUTURE OF COOPERATIVES' IN NATION

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 26 Mar 82 p 4

[Article by Mlanju Reeves]

[Excerpt] A three-man fact finding team from the International Cooperative Alliance (ICA) left the country yesterday after a five-day visit during which they held talks on the development of cooperative in Liberia.

The team which arrived Sunday from a regional council meeting in Banjol, Sene-Gambia, met Wednesday with the Minister of Agriculture, Major Alfred Fromayan. At the meeting, Minister Fromayan was reported to have expressed interest in the development of multi-farming cooperatives.

They had earlier met with the president of the Liberia National Federation of Co-operatives (LNFC) and the Assistant Secretary General of the Liberia Federation of Labour Union (LFLU).

Headed by its vice president, the team comprised Messrs. Peder Soiland, who is also chairman of the Norweigian Commission for Co-operative Development; Elif Bremdal, Education Director for the Regional Office for West Africa and Babacar N'Diaye, ICA Regional Director for West Africa.

The team's visit came upon the invitation of the Liberia Confederation of Free Trade Unions (LCFTU), following an appeal to the Norwegian Trade Union for an expert to study trade possibilities in Liberia.

Earlier in 1970, the Liberia Federation of Labour Unions (LFLU) appealed to the ICFTU for assistance following a workshop on job creation.

An expert from the Norway Co-operative Movement, Mr Kunt Fjaestad, came in October last year in response to ICFTU's invitation and visited cooperatives in areas near the Sierra Leone border, including the Mano River mines and the National Iron Ore Company (NIOC).

Before leaving, the ICA team leader, Mr Soiland, said he was optimistic about the future of cooperatives in Liberia. He added that it is a long-term issue, but with the right interest the realisation will be attained.

History

The president of the Liberia National Federation of Co-operatives, Mr. Peter Bull, thanked the delegates for their visit. He also hoped that Liberians will be trained in Norway to manage co-operatives in Liberia in the near future.

EROSION OF SUPPORT FOR PRC OF CONCERN TO MILITARY

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3375, 12 Apr 82 pp 969,970

[Text] MASTER-SERGEANT SAMUEL KANYON DOE, the Liberia military ruler, will celebrate this weekend two years of transition from the humiliating harshness of the Barclays Training Centre into the cosy pleasures of the Executive Mansion. It will be a weekend of stock-taking and telling Liberians how far he has steered the revolution in the last two years. For the last years, Mr. Doe has largely lived up to the rule of many African politicians where winner grabs all, or more often than not, the vanquished either knuckle under or get clubbed down.

It would have been folly and short-sightedness for anyone to have expected Mr. Doe to dramatically scrap the rule anyway. Yet, though there is no power that restrains military rulers (and a great many autocratic rulers in civilian clothing), Doe's sudden abrasiveness and anxiety to get rid of many of his colleagues and veer the revolution suddenly off course, have made many of us wonder just how far this will all lead to.

Perhaps the question is not whether Mr. Doe remains in power or not. That still doesn't matter anyway. After all, no one man, be it a civilian or not, has a monopoly to rule. Rather, it is a question of who rules Liberia "in the cause of the people".

The signs from Monrovia in the last 12 months or so are now clear that enthusiasm for the revolution has seemingly paled and the sincerity of the revolutionary aims of the military coup two years ago, were nothing but a smokescreen. There must always be a fine line between acting in the cause of the people and becoming a military tyrant.

True, Mr. Doe has often been boastful that his revolution was in the cause of the people; but that was over several months ago. While he continues to talk reassuringly, he has either eliminated his most trusted revolutionary colleagues or cannot account for the death of some of the country's most respected men let alone the ordinary killings by some reckless drunken PRC soldiers throughout.

However, having got himself firmly settled, Mr. Doe should now concentrate his energies on taming his soldier friends who like most of the PRC leadership still believe that the revolution has only just begun. No! That was over many months ago.

The erosion of support for Mr. Doe's government is not, in fact, so serious as to make it unlikely to win a snap election. Even so, it is enough to worry the military leadership. For many Liberians, the fruits of the April 12 revolution have not fallen as bountifully or as fast as expected. Rice which was meant to "stabilise" Liberia after the coup is still being imported in large quantity and remained sold between $20 and $26 per 100lb. The Liberian Produce Marketing Corporation (LPMC) is still groping in a financial mess and purchases farmers produce only on an irregular basis; cash and major goods are in short supply. In the urban areas many of the benefits of earlier higher wages are being dried up to inflation, now jumping at 25-30 per cent compared to 17 per cent at the time of the coup. Soldiers have become the main thieves, killing is rampant and corruption in high places is reportedly astronomical. Soldiers, though the highest paid group (between $700 and $800 a month) some of them with the Sixth Infantry Battalion in the Bomi Territory, recently waylaid a military pay team and made off with £60,000. Four of the soldiers, First Lieutenants Emmanuel Totaye and Fred Dean and Second Lieutenants David Kien and Edward Johnson, have since been shot by a firing squad.

Storm of protest over embezzling

At the same time a storm of probes and orders to restitute public funds expended for personal use by several officials is continuing in both the private and public sectors of government. The managing director of the National Ports Authority, Anthony Tapeh, his deputy W. K. Garnett along with Hilton Richards, the acting controller, have all recently been sacked for reportedly pocketing $1.5m. The Bureau of General Auditing has also been instructed to audit "without delay" six of Mr. Doe's right-hand men at the Executive Mansion. Among them are acting minister of state for Presidential Affairs, Willie A. Givens, deputy minister of state for Presidential Affaris, D. Dweh Chieh and the director of Special Security Services, Thomas Gbaku Wright. Similar auditing is reportedly going on in the Ministries of Education, Finance and Public Works.

While there has been progress in replacing indigenous Liberians in the civil service and other government offices, the advancement in the private sector has been much slower. One of the stated goals of the April 12 trauma was to narrow wage differentials and improve the lot of the poorest paid but Mr. Doe and his government now apparently find themselves caught up in conflict between these aims and an appetite for luxury and extravagance.

It is important that on this occasion of its second birthday, the PRC government should make known more clearly its long-term economic strategy. The code of investment drawn up in 1980 which encouraged foreign capital investment with the rider that it should be more oriented to domestic development of the Liberian economy. There is little evidence that the PRC has succeeded in persuading foreign investors about the salubriousness of Liberia's climate.

What has been evident is the support coming from the IMF which put up SDR55m. (about $65m.) to support the 1981/82 budget under a new standby arrangement. The US has also continued to be more generous to the PRC than it ever was to Tolbert: some $80m. in various types of aid are expected from this source for the 1981/82 year, of which a significant proportion is in military assistance (from new housing to military equipment).

One striking measure taken last year was the ending of the subsidy on rice imports which, it is said, would have cost, $9m. in 1981. Cynics noted the turnaround from April 14, 1979, which had brought this "revolutionary" government to make the same price increase to at least $24 per 100lb. bag (65 per cent broken) in Monrovia, and higher in other parts of the country. General Podier in particular took time explaining the need for the increase, but the grumbling of the population was not limited to this increase alone. The rate of inflation looked to be steadily climbing.

In general, the economic picture in Liberia has been bleak, and the only glimmer of light on the horizon could come from the prospecting for oil that continues. In the meantime, Lamco announced losses for the third successive year, and said it would need more government support to maintain operations. Rubber prices continued fluctuating with a downward emphasis.

The burden of large recurrent expenditure on the government's narrow revenue base was demonstrated by strikes by teachers, and then by nurses and paramedical personnel who protested at overdue payments and non-fulfilment of a promised pay increase. As in other countries, the public sector wage bill is posing increasing problems to the Liberian Government, and these cannot be solved in isolation from the rest of the economy.

If there are any conclusions to draw about the state of Liberian society, they would include the fact that Commander-in-Chief Samuel Doe is presiding over one of the periods of extended crisis in that country. In the strictly political sphere, the promise of a handover to civil constitutional rule in 1985 has not dispelled the mounting pressure for an early handover. There will be a curious hiatus between the completion by the constitutional commission, and the promulgation. The recent "escapade" whereby five students leaders were on the brink of being executed before being sent back to campus under the description of "future leaders" made many people unhappy. However, it was just another excess of arbitrariness.

The PRC has not convinced everybody that it is working in the cause of the Liberian people, and some sceptics are convinced that instead of working, the regime is just having a fine old time gaining weight and assets.

Neutralised Left

In both of these spheres, there is a growing concern that the 1980 coup only served to neutralise the genuine left in Liberian politics, to clean out the ossified True Whig Party, and resurrect it in the 1982 form of a whole range of influential advisers. The appointment of Baccus Matthews as Director of the Cabinet was confirmation for some people that "the old firm" was still active, that, indeed, the alleged convergence of interests between the True Whig Party and the PPP (née PAL) had come to full flower. Another disturbing conclusion that some people want to draw is that after the advent of the PRC, Liberia has never been so completely safe in the hands of the US, which it is alleged, has been swinging state policy on African issues such as Polisario membership of the OAU, any which way it pleased. What is certain is that this coming year is going to be even more important in the history of Liberia than the last. /

DOE ANNOUNCES TAX COLLECTION DRIVE, ECONOMIC REVIVAL MEASURES

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 14 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Excerpt]

Tax delinquents who fail to meet their obligations will now be made to pay their taxes as government has launched a vigorous campaign for collection of real estate and other taxes.

Announcing the launching of the campaign in his Redemption Day Message Tuesday, Head of State Doe directed the Finance Ministry to immediately provide the PRC with a complete list of all those who have not met their tax payment.

"We will use every means to collect arrears, including legal action. This also applies to those who have neglected paying their utility bills," he told the nation.

C-I-C Doe recalled that in his Christmas message last December, government took a number of measures to revive the economy. These included a reduction in the price of beer and stout; more than 50 percent reduction in transhipment fees of goods throughout Liberia, and the removal of many check points to eliminate harassment of motorists.

He said it was however observed that other factors continue to hamper successful economic and commercial activities in the country.

The PRC Chairman noted that the nation's industrialization program designed to reduce our dependence on imported goods has not worked satisfactorily. As a result, he added, "we are still importing most of our essential commodities."

He continued: "It is important to mention that in order to provide added relief to our people we will discontinue whatever practice existed for generating needed increases in revenue through high taxes. Instead we will concentrate on expenditure control and improved tax collection."

On payroll padding, C-I-C Doe said a tremendous amount of revenue has been lost as a result of this act. If this national crime is allowed to continue, millions of dollars of taxpayers' money will go down the drain, he warned.

He therefore appointed a "Watchdog Committee," chaired by the Vice Head of State, to study the situation without delay.

The members of the committee who will be appointed by the Vice Head of State for approval of the Head of State, will be assisted, as needed, by an independent auditing firm.

As a further means of improving the nation's financial situation, through increased foreign investment, the Head of State also announced the appointment of a committee to review, with great soberness, our Investment Incentive Code.

The committee, to be chaired by the Minister of Commerce, Industry and Transportation, will carefully review the investment incentive code and make recommendations on how best government can guard against the disadvantages of monopolies. It will also ensure that the privileges offered in the code are not abused, wrongfully applied or inefficiently enforced.

MINISTER INSTITUTES MEASURES TO REDUCE EXPENDITURES

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 29 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

The Government of Liberia has instituted measures to control expenditure for the fourth quarter of fiscal 1981/82. The measures become operative as of April 1 this year.

According to a circular released yesterday by Finance Minister Gow Alvin Jones, gasoline allotment for all ministries and agencies will be reduced by 50 per cent.

According to Minister Jones, each ministry and agency will institute internal policies by which distribution of its gasoline allotment will be used for personal and utility purposes.

Another measure is that repair works on all Government of Liberia assigned cars will be personally undertaken by officials to whom cars are assigned.

Each ministry and agency has therefore been asked to submit a list of vehicles in its fleet to the General Services Agency (GSA), indicating particulars on cars assigned to officials and those being used for utility purpose.

Minister Jones said in an interview yesterday that these measures are necessary in these times of financial constraints on the national economy.

GOVERNMENT GIVES TWO-WEEK ULTIMATUM TO INDEBTED FIRMS TO PAY DEBTS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 16 Apr 82 pp 1, 6, 8

[Text]

The Government of Liberia has given a two-week ultimatum to companies, commercial houses and individuals who are indebted to Public Corporations and Government Agencies to settle their obligations.

Speaking Thursday at a news conference, the Minister of Finance G. Alvin Jones said this action was in line with Head of State Doe's recent pronouncement made in his Redemption Day message concerning the collection of outstanding revenue, taxes and legitimate payments owed the Government of Liberia and Public Corporations.

Minister Jones said the amount of $100m was due public Corporations and the Liberian Government by concessions, Commercial houses, and individuals.

He said any commercial house, concession or individual failing to meet their obligation after the two-week grace period would be forwarded to the Head of State for appropriate action.

Minister Jones said payment of such debts should be made directly to the Ministries, Agencies and Public Corporations concerned adding, "a taskforce comprising of the Ministries of Finance, Justice and Defense has been set up to enforce the payment of such debts."

He named the Liberia water and Sewer Corporation (LWSC), Liberia Electricity Corporation (LEC), Liberia Petroleum Refinery Company (LPRC), Liberia Telecommunications Corporation (LTC) and Air Liberia as major corporations where outstanding arrears was high.

He called on all those concerned to cooperate by setting their obligation to Government and Public Corporations adding, "if any service is disconnected the individual affected would have to make full payment of the amount owed before reconnection is carried out.

NATION'S FIRST RURAL NEWSPAPER APPEARING ON NEWSTANDS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 16 Apr 82 p 6

[Excerpt]

The "Bong Crier", the nation's first rural newspaper, is today making its appearance on the newsstand.

Inaugurated March 5th by the Ministry of Information as a Pilot project of the UNESCO, UNDP and Liberian Government sponsored program to set up presses in rural Liberia, the paper is to provide practical information aimed at improving the cultural techniques, health, economic and social conditions of rural inhabitants.

Mr. Henrie Thompson, Editor-in-Chief of the paper, put it explicitly during the March 5, inauguration ceremony when he said the paper's aim is to fill the information gap currently existing between the urban and rural areas.

Based in Gbarnga City, Bong County, the "Bong Crier" is an eight-page, four columned newspaper. There are plans to increase the number of pages to 12 as soon as additional material and supplies arrived.

For the meantime, the paper will appear on the newsstand in Gbarnga City once every forthnight.

Internal Affairs Minister Col. Edward Sackor, has appealed to the Korean Government for assistance in the areas of transportation, communications and farming.

need for farming equipment to effect government farming projects.

A package was presented to Ambassador Lee by Minister Sackor which outlined the importance of transportation in Liberia.

According to the package, the Ministry of Internal Affairs has identified a project, the Monrovia Central the sanitary condition of the city and promote driver's training programme.

In brief remarks, Ambassador Lee asked Minister Sackor to furnish him with a copy of his Ministry's current development plan.

He also urged the Government of Liberia to undertake State farms that could help boost its road production.

He said though Liberian people were engaged in individual and cooperatives farming, the government could initiate its own farming programs for self-sufficiency in food.

BOWEN NOTES NATION'S SUCCESS IN 'OPEN REGISTRY'S' GROWTH

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 2 Apr 82 pp 1, 6

[Excerpt]

Liberia's Maritime Commissioner, Philip T. Bowen, has told the tenth annual assembly of business people in shipping that the efficient growth of Liberia's "open registry" has been possible because the system was flexible and not subject to pressure from politicians and trade unions.

Mr. Bowen said Liberia's "open registry" has been very attractive to ship owners, legal and financial communities, because it has, to a large extent, preserved freedom of contract in international commerce.

According to the Press and Culture Counsellor at the Liberian Embassy in London Commissioner Bowen who was addressing the 1982 Sea Trade Conference recently on money and ships at the London Grosvenor House Hotel, spoke on the topic "vessel and finance and the open registry System."

The maritime chief noted that because of Liberia's success in the open registry, the system has been repeatedly confronted by the International Transport Workers' Federation and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

He said that UNCTAD was in the process of drafting an international convention defining the requirements for the existance of a so-called "genuine link" between flag of registry and vessel ownership.

He also observed that the UNCTAD's project was being promoted very vigorously by some oil producing nations and the Soviet Union, "presumably as a means of enabling them to secure a foothold, if not a straglehold, on bulk cargo carriage."

Expressing his views on UNCTAD's role in the future development of the world ' s fleets, Commissioner Bowen said he doubted if in the long run UNCTAD's plans would play a significant part in the development of the world's fleets.

He said that the Government of Liberia has always supported the position that every nation has the legitimate right to develop its own national fleet, and cannot subscribe to the view that a shipping program such as the "open registry" impedes the progress and development of national flag fleets.

Mr. Bowen then called on lenders and vessel insurers to pay close attention to the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organisation's (IMCO) Conventions when they examine their options in the field of vessel registry.

He reiterated that the Liberian Maritime program would expel from its registry, considerable number of ships that do not meet acceptable standards of safety at sea.

BRAZILIAN TEAM ARRIVES TO ASSESS REFINING COMPANY'S POTENTIAL

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 30 Mar 82 pp 1, 6

[Excerpt]

A three-man top level Brazilian team, representing Petrobras Comercio International S.A., a subsidiary of INTERBRAS, Brazil, has arrived in the country to conduct an assessment of the marketing potential of the Liberia Petroleum Refining Company.

The exercise, according to the Managing Director of the Liberia Petroleum Refining Company, Dr. Cletus Wortoson, is intended to determine the new direction which LPRC intends to follow in the marketing of its products.

The team which arrived here last Saturday evening from Brazil, will be in the country for about six weeks during which time its members will tour the country to conduct their studies.

Led by Mr. Jose Roberto Simas, the delegation's visit to Liberia is a follow-up to one paid to Brazil in 1981 by a Liberian delegation headed by then the Speaker of the PRC, General Nicholas Podier.

During the Liberian delegation stay in Brazil, according to Dr. Wortoson, contacts were established with Petrobras to have a high level team visit the LPRC to help set-up an effective, nationwide marketing programme.

Speaking during a luncheon tendered in honour of the delegation Monday at local hotel Dr. Wortoson said the geographic and socio-economic similarities which exist between Brazil and Liberia could be the basis for meaningful co-partnership and cooperation in the near future.

Dr. Wortoson, said there is urgent need for Liberia to take advantage of the growing technological know-how of Brazil.

fident that result of his delegation's work here would be in the interest of both Liberia and Brazil.

He said there is dire need for countries of the so-called third world to cooperate in economic and other ventures that would ensure improved living conditions for their respective peoples.

Mr. Simas thanked Dr. Wortoson for the hospitality accorded his mission and expressed the hope that in the future, such cooperation will take on a wider dimension.

MINISTER NOTES STEPS TAKEN TO RAISE AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTIVITY

Lusaka DAILY OBSERVER in English 12 Apr 82 p 7

[Article by Westmore Dahn]

[Text]

Over the years, Liberia's agricultural productivity has remained very low primarily because most farmers in the country remain at or near subsistence level of production and consumption.

To alleviate the situation so as to expand agricultural output for maximum economic and social gains for all the people, the Ministry of Agriculture, since the People's Redemption Council (PRC), took over power, has set definite goals and direction under which the ministry can reach the masses.

In an interview recently, Agriculture Minister Captain Alfred M. Fromoyan said unlike in the past when the ministry operated without direction and focused its attention mainly on scientific method, his administration will pursue agricultural development within a framework that permits maximum effect and coordination with other agencies of government relating to all aspects of rural development.

He said the ministry would also seek active participation of all Liberian farmers in development and added that development process and activities would not be confined to selected groups or farmers.

Minister Fromoyan further said that development programs under his ministry have now been designed to create conditions within which development could occur. He said, "Only the people can effect agricultural development; and the people can effect development only if they are provided the necessary incentive, motivation, knowledge, means and support". The ministry will assist people to develop their resources and potentials, Fromoyan added.

Strategies

To attain the development objectives of his ministry, Minister Fromoyan revealed that nine strategies have been designed by his administration. They are: Development of an effective agricultural extension service; Providing necessary technical information and service in support of development; An expanded and coordinated agricultural research effort; Agricultural training; Insuring that other institutional and infrastructural support is adequate and coordinated; Restructuring the agricultural development role of parastatal bodies; Planning in support of agricultural development to include improved capability for agricultural sector policy analysis and recommendations; International assistance, and Providing adequate and appropriate administrative and logistical support

Rice

In addition to the restructuring of the ministry's program so as to cater to the rural people, the Agriculture Minister said since the PRC took power in 1980, the Agriculture Ministry has been able to produce 260,000 pounds of seed rice to be distributed to local farmers. He noted that a reasonable portion of the seed rice has been given to the Ministry of Internal Affairs to be used on the communal farms.

Captain Fromoyan said with new motivation in the Liberian people as a result of Head of State Doe's pronouncement to increase agriculture production, he was confident that rice production in the country would double this year.

He hoped that his ministry would produce about two million pounds of seed rice during the next planting season.

Small Farmers

Minister Fromoyan added that his ministry would render more technical assistance to small farmers than larger farmers to enable them (small farmers) to produce more food for consumption and commercial purposes.

He said farmers would be assisted in land preparation and would also be aided in dealing with child care and balanced diet.

To lessen the work load on farmers, the Ministry anticipates introducing the use of animal power and power saw.

The Egyptian government has been contacted to assist in training the animals in soil ploughing, etc.

Fromoyan said food preservation and animal breeding would also be introduced shortly by his ministry.

Financial Assistance

To make the ministry's programs successful, Minister Fromoyan said the U.S. Government through the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) has been requested to grant Liberia a loan of $20 million which, he said, is "likely to materialize."

He said the Agriculture Ministry has been able to negotiate a loan of $28 million for the second phase of the Lofa County Agricultural Development Project (LCADP), while another loan of $26 million for the phase two of the Bong County Agricultural Development Project (BCADP) is being worked out.

The German Government has been approached to carry out feasibility studies to explore means of carrying out the second phase of the Nimba County Agricultural Development Project (NCADP).

Private Investment

Minister Fromoyan also disclosed that private institutions have expressed their desire to establish rice plantations and beef factories in the country.

He appealed to friendly donors to assist his ministry in meeting its goals set towards "self-sufficiency in food production".

VIEWS ON STATE OF POLITICAL PARTIES, ELECTION PROSPECTS GIVEN

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 11 Mar 82 pp 5, 6

[Interview with Sir Gaetan Duval, leader of the Mauritian Social Democratic Party, by Lindsay Riviere, date and place not specified]

[Question] Gaetan Duval, for several years now you have been openly expressing the deisre to give up active politics and see someone else succeed you. Yet, for the third time in 15 years you are getting ready to lead the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] in the general election in June, and you obviously seem very involved in the fight. What meaning does this fight have for you?

[Answer] In a little country such as ours, I realized that it would really be an unhoped-for event for two leaders to be able to emerge in a single generation. We see the trouble the Labor Party is having finding itself a new leader, even though Ramgoolam is 82 years old. So I am finding myself in the thick of the fight again precisely because in the course of the last 5 years, no leader has appeared who is capable of breathing so much life into the PMSD, or arousing so much unity as I can. So I see myself fated to run in the election again at the head of the PMSD, to lead the fight.

I assure you that I am not looking forward to it! Since last 14 June, after an attempt at getting away and saying farewell to my friends, I was caught up in the machinery again by the 7 September matter and having to pick up Francois' challenge. After all, I could not leave politics at the time of a challenge like that one! So here I am today leading my party to the election because of the force of circumstances.

[Question] Despite your wish to see potential successors appearing, as soon as one does appear, (Blackburn, Francois, to mention only them) you are immediately seen in anatagonistic situations with them, as if you were having trouble accepting not being the only spokesman for your traditional constituency. In this respect, are you not playing the same game as Ramgoolam?

[Answer] The fact is that I do not believe in ready-made leaders. So I do not believe that you can send a man to England to take a three-month course of political training and make a leader of him. That is the case with Philippe Blackburn.

I will state right now that I have a lot of friendship for Philippe Blackburn. But in my opinion, a leader must first be free. Before expecting to be responsible for others,he must first be free of himself. Now, I am sorry to say so, but can a sugar industry employee say that he is really free? Moreover, being the leader of the PMSD presupposes being the leader of the general public in Mauritius, or at least a good part of the general public, and in terms of its two components, the middle-class milieu, and the working-class milieu too. Now, Philippe Blackburn by his own admission is absolutely incapable of having a dialogue with the working class. He is not trained for it.

Since 1981 I have been inviting Blackburn to come into the PMSD as secretary general.

[Question] With a view to possible succession?

[Answer] Yes, absolutely. With a view to a succession that I wanted to be immediate, but that he refused. I said to him: "Come in, bring your friends with you, and make yourself known. After a certain time, I will leave the leadership to you." He answered: "No. You must lead your party to the elections. Later, we will see." He had not yet founded the RPL [expansion unknown]. It would have looked much better for him to join the PMSD and become its leader than to appear later as the nominee of certain sectors.

As for Francois, that is the big disappointment. It was I who appointed him deputy leader of the PMSD. It was I who appointed him leader of the parliamentary group and spokesman for the PMSD in the cabinet. It was I who observed his ministry with the greatest interest, but I soon saw that he would not be up to the job, and that was when he made a fool of himself at the 1 May meeting. I instantly doubted his ability to lead a party. After that, I saw him being stubborn, bringing in police, expelling people from residence halls. That was not the conduct of a leader. There is stubbornness and arrogance in Francois' personality! Then, he upsets the others. So I decided to stay on.

No More Threat to Ramgoolam

[Question] Outside the issue of leadership of the general public, what do you feel you represent in the country today?

[Answer] Certainly a lot of good feeling! And in all communities. In fact, it is not just a question of me personally: Homo Creolus (Creole man) is liked in all the communities. There is a strong current of liking for him among Indians and Chinese, and an absence of resentment among the Moslems. Over the last 20 years, the Creole has become very reassuring for the other ethnic groups. And I take the credit for the fact that I have always avoided offending the other communities and avoided demanding anything from the other communities in an aggressive manner. Today as PMSD leader I am well liked outside the general public. Why? Because I no longer constitute a threat to Ramgoolam or the PTR [Labor Party].

So I think I am starting negotiations with a lot of good feeling toward me. I no longer look like a potential replacement for Ramgoolam. But to everyone I look like an excellent minister of foreign affairs with the ability to promote good relations with the world abroad and assure the development of Mauritius. That is my public image! That is how the people sees my activities in any government. I have no illusions about it: if I have a lot of Indian votes, it is because the Indians do not think that I am going to take over the leadership of the government, but because I am an indispensable complement to Ramgoolam's activities, also.

I consider myself the only one at present able to "create movement," and that, by the way, is my election slogan. "With Gaetan for Movement!" Between MMM changes and Laborite ultra-conservatism, I shall represent "movement."

'Stronger Than Labor Party'

[Question] And what, in your opinion, does the PMSD still represent, in terms of image and influence, as an organized group?

[Answer]The PMSD is still one of this country's three great parties. You see, I do not believe in opinion polls. Ramgoolam can have his polls, but I see the situation differently: the PMSD is a force to be reckoned with. And, at this time, I consider myself stronger than the Labor Party. I believe that the Labor Party is weaker at the moment than many people think. That is my personal intuition.

[Question] And what would that be due to?

[Answer] The PTR has been constantly in a bad way since 1948, and was down to 36 percent at the last elections. What would be likely to bring it back up again? Its administration over the past 5 years? The new image it is trying to give itself? No. The PTR has gone down a lot.

But the resilience of the Labor Party is such that I think it is capable of making up lost ground between now and the elections, if only because of ethnic sensitivities.

The PTR is still, in fact, a party composed strictly of Indians, and even so at present rates, I think there are not over 60 percent of Indians disposed to vote Labor. I note that that does not amount to much: that comes to 60 percent of 40 percent of the population.

Against the PTR as it is, what do we in the PMSD represent? It would seem that we have made some gains on the working class side.

'Middle Class Most Divided'

[Question] It has been said that the other component of your traditional constituency is looking elsewhere....

[Answer] The middle class is the most divided of all the classes! A tiny group is RPL, but "believing, not practising" RPL, if I may put it that way. They are in agreement with the RPL, but they will not vote RPL. There are people who believe that ideally there should be technocrats in office, that Dinan would do better than Ringadoo, but when the time comes to choose, they will not vote RPL.

Then, there are many middle class Laborites, especially in a particular group that say that last time the MMM nearly won, and that one should vote Labor to keep the MMM out. You know who I mean.

There are some others, faithful to the PMSD, who really hope for an alliance. And then a little group of adventurers, attracted by the MMM, intellectuals or opportunists who think they would benefit from an MMM regime, like in the Seychelles.

[Question] The choice will also be in terms of teams. Now, as it stands at the moment, the PMSD does not make much of an impression for its team prospects, does it?

[Answer] I do not see the MMM making an impression because of its team either. The problem with us -- and it is against my inclinations -- is that I have to wait until 15 March to make up my team. But team there will be, with young people certainly better than at the last election.

But the importance of the team should not be exaggerated: at the last election, Professor Lim Fat, bear in mind, was beaten by absolutely unknown people. It is a mistake to think that a team that is credible at the administrative level will necessarily be better at the election level.

Anti-MMM Front not Favored

[Question] Let us come to the election stakes themselves. Observers are wondering if anti-MMM people can take the risk of going to the election divided?

[Answer] I do not believe in an organization, a group of people from all directions for the sole purpose of shutting out the MMM. I don't believe in that and I will not be a part of it!

I am not taking that card. If that happened, I would prefer to be Mauritian Social Democratic Party outside of it, and have the nerve to take my chances.

If one has to assemble all the anti-MMM factions in Mauritius for the sole purpose of devoting oneself to conscious, organized ultra-conservatism and not be able to move an inch afterward, then I am not a buyer and I am saying so loud and clear!

I am only making an alliance with the PTR because I believe that in our two parties we shall be able after the elections to find men who think alike, a majority of ideas, which will make progress, which would have the same concept of the foreign policy necessary for Mauritius and the development of Mauritius. If that happens, I can even see the two parties melding into a single organization after the next 5 years!

'Moving Toward Terrible Confusion'

[Question] What is your evaluation of the present relationship of forces in the country?

[Answer] I just do not see, at the present rate, an MMM/PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party]majority in the country. I think even that the MMM has lost ground as compared to 1976. I was at their meeting on Place Monseigneur Margeot, Rose Hill. I did not see any enthusiasm there!

I also believe that the tension between the PSM and the MMM will go on increasing. You see, Boodhoo is a communalist, above all! Everything proves this, his past, his training, his Seva Shivir. Boodhoo has always reacted like a communalist. The only reason that he made an alliance with the MMM was to destroy Ramgoolam. The alliance is only holding up today because Boodhoo is the prisoner of his own troops now. As you might say,"I am their leader, so I have to follow them!" But it will be seen that the PSM will drift deeper and deeper into communalism, stop playing the game of the alliance, on the quiet, ask for votes for its own candidates, and not those of the MMM. That is going to happen, trust my experience on this, and it is happening already!

Then we shall see the others voting for their candidates. Look at the Moslems; they are starting to get the impression that the others are not going to vote for them. That is really a pity. Look at Peroo, whom Ramgoolam is refusing to put on the slate! Moslems are thus absolutely isolated. The Creole today appears as reassuring to the PTR constituency as the Moslem appears suspicious on the other hand. This situation is one that I personally deplore, but that is the way it is. We shall see the PSM and the MMM regarding each other with more and more mistrust, therefore.

That is why, on the basis of all that and of other factors, I say this: unless two solid organizations confront each other between now and the elections, the country is moving toward terrible confusion, in which there will be people voting PSM and not MMM, or MMM and not PSM, or people who will vote "communal" or people who will vote for individuals. You will see that the first people to get a surprise will be the voters themselves. Nothing can be taken for granted in these elections!

Ramgoolam: 'Scientific Robot'

[Question] And what, in your opinion, is the state of mind of SSR [Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam] when he thinks about the various possible alliances?

[Answer] Ramgoolam has turned into a living computer, to which all the pollsters in the world pass on information! I have not seen him personally for a long time, but I am told that he has become a veritable scientific robot, assimilating all the statistics from the Americans, the French, the SSS [State Security Service] etc. How he will digest all the figures I have no idea. And as usual, no decision. Nothing new in that!

[Question] Why his apparent serenity, in your opinion?

[Answer] Lack of awareness! They do say that often ignorance is the basis of serenity. Ramgoolam still believes that everyone can be manipulated. He does not expect that any of these organizations (PMSD, RPL, and so on) cannot be manipulated. Even Boodhoo! How long has he kept on hoping to get Boodhoo back again! And even still today, he must be thinking that he can recuperate Boodhoo. So he is waiting for his chance. He thinks that if there is a problem, he can always send a mutual friend to see me to make me see reason.. He will not change.

[Question] Do you personally believe that you are still his first choice today?

[Answer] I do not know. Logically, I should be his first choice, for do as you will, there are only three political personalities in Mauritius: Ramgoolam, Beranger, and Duval. If one has a possibility of making an alliance with Duval, one is not going to make an alliance with Eliezer Francois!

Ramgoolam knows perfectly well that when he forms an alliance with Blackburn, he is making an alliance with capital. And when he makes an alliance with Francois, he is making an alliance with a little clique. With me, it is different, let us tell things as they really are.

[Question] Then you are expecting him to make a move?

[Answer] Yes, but I have not much time, and I will not wait for ever. I have some candidates who must resign from the government. Let him retire Francois once and for all!

[Question] Are you making this a matter of personal pride?

[Answer] No, of political logic. For Francois is not a man who has changed parties. He claims to represent my PMSD. There cannot be two PMSDs in this business. Ramgoolam must choose. If he wants to absorb Francois into the PTR, that is no problem so far as I am concerned. I have nothing against that. But if he wants to negociate with the PMSD, negotiations must be with me. Francois is a usurper. So Ramgoolam must choose. We are now in the same situation as two popes, one in Avignon, and the other in Rome.

In fact, Ramgoolam wants me to take Rey and Chong Leung. To which I reply, "But if they are such good candidates, keep them in the PTR. Why send them to me? I do not have any property rights whatever over the PMSD deputies. I have no copyright on people! Take them and leave me alone!"

That is the crux of the matter. We have already discussed the number of candidates on the slate in the past, and I have been very reasonable. For me, it is not a matter of 18 or 20, but valid candidates. Whether they be called PMSD or PTR, for the needs of the cause, no problem! But good candidates!

It is not very important for me to have a lot of people around me. A little touch of humor. I will tell you a story. Once, in surprise, I asked Bissoondoyal this question: "What, you are only accepting 5 candidacies from Ramgoolam?" To which he replied with a smile: "Duval, how many ingrates do you want me to have elected?" These things have an effect on me. Why fight all the time over individuals who by tomorrow may be potential turncoats? More seriously: the essential thing is the desire to have good candidates. What does it matter whether they are Laborites or PMSD. I say just let us sit down and see, precinct by precinct, who are the best.

[Question] And where is the RPL to be placed in all this?

[Answer] The RPL wants, and is going to have, an alliance with Ramgoolam. In any case, the RPL was planned and brought into existence to replace us around Ramgoolam.

[Question] If the PMSD-PTR agreement comes about, how do you see the sitution on the field? Can you see Labor partisans playing the game as easily as the PMSD partisans?

[Answer] I see them playing the game even more easily than the PMSD partisans. I believe that 100 percent of the Labor partisans want an alliance, and I see it proven every day. The PMSD today is making the Labor constituency feel safe . It helps to block the road to office against the others. The PTR-PMSD alliance will not cause the Laborites any problems, therefore. Quite the contrary. There are circumstances in politics in which 2 and 2 make 5.

[Question] Let us imagine three scenarios, the first a victory for the alliance, the second a defeat for the alliance and the third a three-sided fight without a clear winner. The Alliance wins, shall we say, comfortably. What is changed, what continues? And in what way would the country be spared the situation that it has been experiencing for the last 5 years?

[Answer] If the Alliance wins, it will win easily. But I have to imagine an alternative within an alternative. The Alliance will win with a majority of people who think as I do. The PTR has, indeed, evolved. Grass-roots support has remained the same, but the thoughtful people at the top have evolved, and there is no longer that "Fabian philosophy" that used to be the PTR basis. In the PTR today there is a majority of pragmatic, realistic people. With that, there is a majority in favor of movement, of a realistic foreign policy, so we would do everything that is included in our platform. The unemployment problem in Mauritius would be solved in no time with political stability. On that hypothesis, Mauritius would be on its way again! With 300 Taiwanese factories, some liberal fiscal measures and alignment with the rest, everything would get going again.

[Question] According to your logic, the MMM is part of the problem, while according to Ramgoolam's, that party is part of the solution?

[Answer] Yes, indeed!

[Question] If that is so, still assuming there is a victory, how do you see the future relations of such a government with respect to the opposition?

[Answer] Certainly a liberal attitude! You know, my relations with certain members of the opposition have improved considerably the last few years. I have no trouble sustaining a dialogue with Jugnauth and Bhayat, for example. Absolutely none.

[Question] However, you would not, like Ramgoolam, hope for a national unity government?

[Answer] Why not? I cannot see the MMM, as the MMM, participating in the government, but I can see extremely cordial, courteous, normal relations between the government and the opposition.

Basically, what bothers me most with the MMM is its foreign policy. Just as the PCF [French Communist Party] today still creates problems for the socialists in France with their foreign policy, the MMM in the government would create even more problems for us with its foreign policy. But in terms of collaboration, anything can be envisaged.

[Question] Can you imagine yourself sitting in the government next to Jugnauth?

[Answer] Why not?

[Question] What about Berenger?

[Answer] Berenger, no!

[Question] Let us imagine the other scenario. Defeat of the alliance. It is a break with two decades, of a certain political and economic order. How do you react to that?

[Answer] If that happens, I expect immediate catastrophe. We already have 60,000 unemployed. We would soon get up to 100,000 unemployed. This is not France. We do not have 25 billion francs in reserves behind us, as Mitterrand does. All we have is debts!

Any political adventurism is going to cause panic and unemployment at once, and that is where it gets dangerous. For I do not see, and I do not expect, that Messrs Berenger and Jugnauth will want to take bayonets to people, but I do see a chain of events at the end of which they resort to outside help to put down a social situation that they would no longer be able to control. For let there be no illusions: the West is really jittery about the MMM. All of history shows that people trained under marxism do not give up power. We shall end up like the Seychelles.

[Question] On that hypothesis, what sort of opposition would you expect, then? And could you yourself live under an MMM regime?

[Answer] That would depend on my performance. I am something of an idealist myself. If I have the confidence of a lot of voters, the MMM would have to cope with me, then, and even if it were to be very embarrassing for me, I would stay in Mauritius to protect my supporters. But if I were no longer under consideration, I would certainly leave Mauritius.

[Question] The third hypothesis is that everybody go to the elections separately. What would happen then?

[Answer] It is perfectly possible to imagine the parties going to the elections separately. Then the MMM would again be seem emerging as the strongest party, but without a clear majority. What would happen then? It would be back to 1976 again, but we would have a heroic situation. For, I tell you this, I would not be inclined (let us say, I would be less inclined) to block the MMM's way to power. I am weighing my words: Let us say I would be less inclined to obstruct the MMM at all costs, unless the MMM developed its 1976 aggressiveness.

If the MMM keeps the little bourgeois position it has today, and asks to try out a minority government experience on the basis of its platform, and only that platform, without excesses. It will be very difficult for me to say to the people: "It is absolutely necessary that Ramgoolam be returned to office." Let the Laborites tell themselves that: perhaps I shall not always be in the same frame of mind as in 1976.

I have not much to lose. I am no longer a candidate for the position of prime minister. If Ramgoolam does not say "yes" to me between now and 15 March, I am off to put in my candidacy in the 21 precincts along with my friends, and we shall see.

[Question] Are you really serious about this suggestion of running everywhere?

[Answer] Absolutely serious. I will submit my foreign policy to a plebiscite.

[Question] Then that raises an institutional issue for certain, for there would be no definite elected representatives until you made up your mind about one precinct, if you were elected in several?

[Answer] Exactly. Some times there has to be disorder to get order. I am very seriously thinking about the matter. I am convinced deep down that the MMM has lost ground, that all the parties are less strong than in 1976, as things stand. There is a huge swamp of people who have not made up their minds. So the fight is wide open. If Ramgoolam does not want us, I will try my luck and we shall see.

LABOR PARTY EXPECTED TO FORM ALLIANCE WITH PMSD

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 16 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] The Labor Party will go to the general elections in company with the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party], and Sir Gaetan Duval will be Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam's principle interlocutor in view of the grand alliance of the Right to face the MMM-PSM[Mauritian Socialist Party]. A meeting between Sir Seewoosagur and Sir Gaetan Duval could take place during this week, and in this context, the secretary general of the Labor Party, Sir Kher Jagatsingh, has been delegated by the prime minister to arrange the meeting. Sir Seewoosagur has asked Eliezer Francois to settle his problems with his former leader so as to be able to take part in the alliance.

Summoning his ministers and former parliamentarians to his office yesterday afternoon, the prime minister talked for over 90 minutes about election strategy for confronting the MMM-PSM at the 11 June general election. He expressed the hope for a grand coalition of all the anti-MMM-PSM forces. He spoke of the importance of Sir Gaetan Duval's presence in the alliance, but at the same time he gave E. Francois the guarantee that he has no intention at all of kicking the minister and his friends out of the government as demanded by Sir Gaetan Duval. He did however ask E. Francois and his friends to settle their problem with their former leader so that the grand alliance can be concluded in the near future.

Touching on the question of the slate, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam announced to his colleagues that "many of you" will have to withdraw to make room for a young team. "Don't be frustrated, support the Labour Party, because the next general election will be most crucial," he said to those who will be left on the sidelines.

So far as his ally, the Moslem Action Committee, is concerned, he asked its party leaders to concentrate their efforts in the Port Louis precincts. Thus he made the announcement that the Labor Party is against the presence of CAM [Moslem Action Committee] candidates in rural areas, as well as at La Caverne/Phoenix..

At the end of the meeting, members of the Francois group, realizing that the fact that they will be sacrificed in favor of Sir Gaetan Duval, left the government building with some bitterness. Robert Rey, the deputy speaker, left K. Purryag and I Seetaram calling out the phrase "we shall continue to be friends."

Let it be stressed that after the meeting yesterday afternoon, Sir Kher Jagatsingh had a long talk with Sir Seewoosagur. According to information received, Sir Kher Jagatsingh pressed the prime minister to begin negotiations with Sir Gaetan Duval as soon as possible.

With the definite conclusion of an election alliance with Sir Gaetan Duval's PMSD, the Boolell clan is consolidating its positions in the Labor Party, especially from the point of view of succession at the head of the party. The Boolell-Duval partnership will constitute an important pressure group for advancing within their government some ideas inspired by the extreme Right. According to some information, elements close to the Boolell clan will officially run as PMSD candidates if they are not endorsed by the Labor Party.

In the event that the Labor Party has to choose a successor to Sir Seewoosagur, Sir Satcam Boolell will have more chance than his rivals, if the Labor Party and the PMSD return to office and if the parliamentarians are the ones to designate the next prime minister.

MMM/PSM MEETS WITH GWF TO EXPLAIN POLICIES

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 11 Mar 82 pp 1,4

[Text] The meeting between the General Wrokers Federation [GWF] and the Mauritian Militant Movement/Malagasy Socialist Party [MMM/PSM] lasted for 2 hours and made it possible to clarify a number of points on both sides. Agreement was reached on most of the issues raised. The MMM/PSM was represented by Paul Berenger, Lloyd Baligadoo and A. Parsooramen, and the GWF delegation was led by its chairman, France Soopramanien.

The secretary general of the MMM and minister of finance and labor in the eventual MMM/PSM government discussed at length the details of the New Social Consensus proposed by the MMM/PSM. He referred to its various provisions and to his editorial "Program, New Social Consensus and Trends" published in LE NOUVEAU MILITANT of 2 March.

The GWF was informed that the MMM/PSM, in addition to meeting with the unions, plans to meet with the Mauritian Employers Federation for a similar discussion and clarification of certain points. During the meeting with the GWF several points were raised about the speech from the throne and the budget which the MMM/PSM is preparing.

The secretary general expressed hope that the unions will give even more careful consideration to their future role under a leftist government, to the details of their participation, and to the right to unemployment compensation, while noting that the responses of some unions to a series of questions in a poll published by LE NOUVEAU MILITANT on 1 February 1982 proved to the MMM/PSM that much work remains to be done in the area of study and greater knowledge, for example on the Industrial Relations Act amendment, the Pension Fund and the law on dismissals.

The GWF also provided some information about its participation in the recent FSN congress in Cuba at which seven delegations abstained from voting on the final resolution, which had avoided mentioning Poland. The GWF did not vote on the resolution; it had decided not to be present at the time of the vote.

The meeting also gave the MMM/PSM the opportunity to explain its positions on a number of issues in anticipation of its coming to power on 11 June: 1) the minimum living wage, wages and compensation, salary scales; 2) the 40-hour week; 3) the 13th month; 4) the Industrial Relations Act and the Public Order Act; 5) the Labor Act; 6) domestic employees; and 7) previous dismissals under the Industrial Relations Act. In this connection, assurance was given that the MMM/PSM government will do everything possible to see that justice is done. Moreover, all the agreements between the GWF and the present government which resulted from the various hunger strikes will be honored in full by the MMM/PSM.

France Soopramanien said after the meeting: "I am personally satisfied with the detailed answers we have obtained. This will enable the GWF to take a position on these issues in the future."

A second meeting between the MMM/PSM and the GWF is planned soon to continue the discussion.

FRANCOIS' REACTION REPORTED--The Labor Party is doomed to vanish if it contracts an election alliance with Sir Gaetan Duval. This statement was made by Eliezer Francois during his party's meeting at Les Salines, minutes after he met with Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam. Mr Francois made a violent attack on the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] leader. He also issued a severe warning to the Labor ministers trying at all costs to form an alliance with the PMSD. "No mistakes, no betting on a three-legged horse," he shouted to the Labor leaders. It would thus seem that Mr Francois is planning to turn down the prime minister's suggestion that he come to terms with his former leader for the sake of a grand alliance of the Right in opposition to the MMM-PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party]. According to other indications, the Francois group and the RPL [expansion unknown] will meet shortly to try to find some common ground, so as to do without Duval as intermediary in connection with an alliance with Laborites. The RPL is holding a press conference today to explain its position on the election agreement issue. [Text] [Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 16 Mar 82 p 1] 12149

UDM NOT CONTACTED--Will the UDM be a part of the grand coalition of the Right proposed by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam? So far, the leader of the party, Guy Ollivry, has not been contacted. In a statement to LE NOUVEAU MILITANT, Guy Ollivry confided that his party has always favored a third force and that its policy has not varied."If other parties can convince us of the contrary, we are ready to listen," Mr Ollivry said. Guy Ollivry stressed that for the moment the UDM stands alone and expects to go to the elections alone. [Text] Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 16 Mar 82 p 1] 12149

FRANCOIS RENAMES PARTY--The members of the Mauritian Social Democratic Party, who last year dissociated themselves from Sir Gaetan Duval to make common cause with Eliezer Francois, yesterday announced the launching of a new party, the Mauritian Party, whose emblem will be a white carnation on a navy blue background. Summoning the press to his regional office in Beau-Bassin yesterday, Mr Francois, the party's leader, indicated that the decision to have a new name and a new symbol became necessary after the judgment passed at the end of last week by his honor Judge R. Lallah. [Excerpt] Paris L'EXPRESS in French 14 Mar 82 pp 1, 2] 12149

TRANSPORTERS' UNION HAVING PROBLEMS IN CARRYING GOODS

Niamey SAHEL HEBDO in French No 306, 22 Feb 82 p 19

[Article by Binta Mahamane: "Complete Reorganization of the Transporters' Union is Imperative"]

[Text] Three weeks ago, the head of state, Col Seyni Kountche, was on a working visit to the Togolese Republic. On his return to Lome, Colonel Kountche stated that "20,000 tons of goods were in the port of Lome....At the port of Cotonou, we know that we have available 44,000 to 45,000 at the moment. The transporters' union cannot say, therefore, that the government is not in a position to give them goods to transport...."

So over 60,000 tons of goods were in storage at the ports of Lome and Cotonou.

After the head of state's statement, "the ball was thrown back and forth" among the transporters' union, the customs, and the transport agents.

According to the transport agents, the problems of getting food from Lome to Niamey, for example, is due to red tape at the customs office. On the other hand, the customs office asserts that more often than not the trouble is with complicated formalities and a communication problem. The transporters'union, through its president, Elhadji Bonto Forno, feels that if transporters are informed that there are goods in storage at the port, they get their trucks ready quickly to bring the goods to Niger, giving priority to foodstuffs, of course. "We are coming up to the inter-harvest period," Elhadji Bonto Forno went on; "because of that, our major concern is to get all the foodstuffs brought in in time. We are not having any problems among ourselves, because as transporters we are all aware of the decisive role we play in this struggle for the welfare of the Nigerien people. But," he added, "the bottleneck is at the customs, which holds us up on turn-around." The transporters' union at present has vehicles available that enable it to bring in all the goods in time.

At the present moment, dozens of trucks have brought foodstuffs from the port of Lome to Niamey.

As concerns the port of Cotonou, El Hadji Bonto Formo asserted that "so far the transporters have received no authorization to go as far as Cotonou to get the goods; Parakou is as far as they can go. That is a drawback for the transporters." So far as the Lome-Niamey line is concerned, each vehicle takes 5 days for the round trip. The cost of transporting a ton of foodstuff from Lome to Niamey is estimated at 27,400 francs. Consequently, a 25-ton truckload comes to 685,000 francs. On the other hand, a 20 to 25-ton truckload of cigarettes from Lome to Maradi costs 1.4 million francs. Although the destinations are different, the difference is still striking: 715,000 francs!

In view of difficult circumstances, the transporters hope that the authorities will revise the transport costs per ton of foodstuff from the port of Lome to Niamey, for exampleTo enable them to solve a certain number of problems, in particular vehicle maintenance, they say. Reaffirming their support for the Supreme Military Council and the government, the transporters acknowledge that they will spare no effort for a complete reorganization of their union, so as to insure the proper delivery of goods.

MINISTER MEETS WITH CADRES--Within the framework of meetings of explanation and raising awareness of the new path of development of the new Niger, Capt Moumouni Djermakoye Adamou, chairman of the Implementation Board of the Development Company, in the presence of the secretary general of the Board, Salaou Barmou, met on Tuesday afternoon at the former National Assembly with Nigerien cadres of the mixed economy companies of the city of Niamey, who came in great numbers. Captain Djermakoye set the discussion at once: "we have to elicit the willing and active participation of the public in building the nation, and give it the possibility of managing its own affairs." In addition, he made an effort to enlighten the minds of one and the other in these terms: "The Development Company is not a political party, and even less a matter for the military or the government in power. It is an ideal Nigerien framework for Nigeriens to better prepare the future of the nation's economy. It is in fact a school for democracry, but a quiet democracy, of which the aim is nothing but the economic development of the country." Then the secretary general was to reveal to the participants the organizational chart of the Development Company. The participants listened with sustained attention to both speeches, asked many questions, including some about the role of the private sector in the new path and about certain economic features of our country , particularly the abundance of these small industrial units. On the whole, questions of great importance, therefore, to which the minister gave clear and specific answers. [Text] [Niamey LE SAHEL in French 18 Feb 82 pp 1, 2] 12149

RETURN OF AYATOLLAH--The "Ayatollah of Kaolack" has been freed after less than four months in Senegalese gaol. Ahmet Niasse was sentenced in absentia to one year's detention and extradited from Niger in January where he had been held since April 1981. He was accused of spreading false information, insulting members of government and trying to register an illegal organisation (he tried to start an Islamic political party but it is against Senegalese law to have a party linked to a religion). Soon after his release he appealed to his supporters, some of whom are still resident abroad, in Libya and Niger particularly, to abstain from all subversive activity. He said about 15 of his supporters had already returned to Senegal in anticipation of his release. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3375, 12 Apr 82 p 1028]

AGRICULTURAL OBJECTIVES--President Diouf has announced the objectives of the 1982/1983 agricultural season. At a recent meeting of the National Committee of the Parti Socialisto (PS), the President, who is also the Secretary General of the PS, said the results of the 1981/1982 season had been generally satisfactory because of the favourable rains and because of the agricultural politique of his government (raising producer prices and writing off peasant debts of more than 20m. CFA francs in 1981). Production in 1981/1982 was; oilseed groundnuts, 878,000 tonnes; edible groundnuts, 5,300 tonnes; cotton, 36,000 tonnes; millet and sorghum, 736,000 tonnes; niebe beans, 26,000 tonnes. 634,000 tonnes of groundnuts had been purchased by February (about 71 percent of the total crop), whereas only 12,000 tonnes of millet had been purchased. President Diouf said producer prices would remain at their present level for the 1982/1983 season, despite the falling world price for groundnuts, the principle export of the country. For an analysis of producer prices in Senegal, see WEST AFRICA, March 1. The President also predicted that fish production would be 400,000 tonnes by 1975 (landings in 1980 were 359,000 tonnes). The prediction falls short of the figure given in the 1981-1985 Plan for fish production which predicted over 500,000 tonnes. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3375, 12 Apr 82 p 1028]

CAMP FOR NEW PIONEER LEADERS INAUGURATED

Victoria NATION in English 13 Apr 82 pp 1, 10

[Text]

THE minister responsible for youth, Mr. Ogilvy Berlouis, yesterday opened a Pioneer leadership camp.

Mr. Berlouis said he was proud to be opening the two-week camp at Anse Boileau, which is being attended by 160 section leaders of the Young Pioneer and Pioneer movements.

The Minister of Youth and Defence said that the camp and the National Council for Children seminar for Children at Risk, which he had opened at the Maison du Peuple earlier in the day, showed the importance that the Seychelles People's Progressive Front attached to the young.

Mr. Berlouis said that because the children would be tomorrow's leaders, it was the duty of everyone to help educate and train them.

It is the first time that a camp for Pioneer section leaders, a new leadership group in the movement, is being held and the youngest Pioneers, called novices, are also attending. Leadership camps in the past were for group leaders only.

Eighty of the section leaders are attending the camp this week and the other half will attend next week.

Section leaders, recently introduced in the Pioneers, have enlarged the number of leaders in the movement. They help group leaders to maintain discipline among the rank and file.

BACKGROUND ON ELECTIONS, NOMINATION PROCESS GIVEN

London WEST AFRICA in English 5, 12 Apr 82

[Two-part article: "Towards Elections in Sierra Leone"]

[5 Apr 82, p 911]

[Text] Options for Stevens

SIERRA LEONE goes to the polls this month to elect their representatives for the 105-seat House of Representatives. This past weekend primary "elections" should have been held at constituency level to pick the actual candidates to be nominated on April 5. Voting for the candidate to be sent to Parliament is scheduled for April 30. Many who had doubted whether President Siaka Stevens would hold the elections of which he had spoken have now switched their speculations to his even more often mentioned resignation.

The rejuvenated electoral commission is seemingly all set to carry on its part of the selection procedure. As if to give a semblance of independence, it has recently recommended the dismissal of some of its provincial commissioners because of a tip-off that the commissioners had allegedly been bribed by some candidates to commit fraud by exchanging boxes at the polls. The commissioners have reportedly been hurried into retirement. In addition the electoral commission continues to lecture its senior staff on their supposed duty to the nation and why they should be seen as being above factional politics during the coming general elections. That may all seem beside the point; after all, most of the senior staff members of the electoral commission and 80 per cent of its junior staff are political appointees who are almost certain to stick to their political allegiance during what many now regard as crucial elections.

The point that should be considered is the President's attitude as a whole to the elections. He is the only person who can either make or break the elections; he can throw the country into more violence, thuggery, division, scepticism and disbelief, or he can remain above individual interests and stick to his guns and see to it that the elections remain free and fair. Tough options!

Right to choose denied

To begin with, Stevens' model of a selection before election has been much criticised by many of his countrymen who feared they have not been given their actual constitutional right to elect candidates of their choice. But those who grumble over this often forget that Sierra Leone's Independence and Republican-amended Constitutions have since been changed to the 1978 one party Constitution which calls for a scrutinised selection procedure by the local constituencies and the APC central committee before the floor is opened to the electorate.

All the same, Stevens, a great admirer of the Tanzanian Ujamaa Constitution (much of the one-party Constitution has been modelled on it) has been anxious to hold the elections and give his new Constitution a try.

Retirement plans

But quite apart from this, President Stevens may want to use the election to test his personal popularity (not the government's) especially since the labour unrest of last December and the growing criticism of his administration. He may be determined to show to his critics and the world that though his Republic is a one-party state, he can bring about changes when the people request it.

His decision also to go ahead with the election may also be part of his retirement plans. This makes it all the more reason why the election is being seen as crucial and very important. Although many of Stevens' aides have been quick to point out that in politics all things are possible when Stevens late last year announced his retirement plans, Sierra Leonean political commentators are agreed that the President will go.

This is not because he wishes to go but rather because his health is failing, the economy has declined and his once father-of-the-nation popularity has been bruised with growing scandals, corruption, bribery, nepotism and inefficiency throughout the administration. And more recently he has been threatened by a coup d'état. He realises if he stays any longer, the country may slip through his fingers. For these reasons, Stevens feels that a general election may provide a basis though not a guarantee for a peaceful transition of power.

There are still some who are urging the President to stay on but unlike a few years ago when the President discreetly backed an APC-financed demonstration to ask him to continue in office, he has reportedly dismissed these recent demands.

He knows that he cannot continue to misjudge the political barometer and any such repeat of a sponsored, nationwide demonstration for him to stay in power, will certainly almost backfire as soon as it was begun. Generally, Stevens appears to be holding out against sectional interests and calling for a free and peaceful election. At a recent rally he told his people, "any area where the elections are conducted peacefully will be considered by the government for special benefits."

[12 Apr 82, pp 995-7]

[Text] "Too Many Ambitious Men"]

AS THE countdown for Sierra Leone's crucial general election continues some 600 or more candidates are known to have gone through the selection and primaries. Never in the history of the country have there been so many people running for so few seats — 105 — in a single general election.

During the last few months, a large number of lawyers, diplomats, civil and public servants have vacated office to contest the election. These were added to the large number of seasoned politicians and MPs who continue to insist that under no circumstances would they back out for the newcomers. This has made the campaign the more interesting since candidates have been careful to avoid attacks on government policies and other scandals. They know if they did, their selection by the central committee would have been thrown into jeopardy, furthermore, Sierra Leone is still in a state of emergency.

For these reasons candidates have limited their campaign strategies to more of personal attacks rather than an onslaught on government record. The number of new faces in the election are formidable and would seem to add a new fillip to Sierra Leone's politics; but the sincerity of the newcomers with regard to the country's problems is what is still in doubt. If the dismal record of the last rush by intellectuals and other young educated to go into politics in 1977 is anything to go by, then the new political aspirants can as well stay out and change their minds.

But many people, not least the educated, are agreed that politics in Sierra Leone today is a very lucrative business, a short cut to getting rich over night. Not surprisingly, many have joined the hustling to get into Parliament.

Among those who have resigned or vacated their offices are Sierra Leone's Ambassador to Belgium and the EEC, Dr. Hassan Kanu. He is a very experienced negotiator whose record in Bonn as Ambassador helped Sierra Leone get a large chunk of West German development aid and road development projects. He is a close relative of First Vice-President Sorie Koroma and seems likely to contest in the latter's Port Loko seat while Koroma himself takes over in his old Freetown Central One constituency. Though Kanu is being opposed by a few obscure candidates, the indications are he is almost certain to win. The only odds that may appear against him is his adverse exposure in the last Auditor General's report.

Former Ambassador to Rome, Vienna and Budapest, Birch Conte, is a hot favourite in a Bombalili constituency against a former Labour minister, Formeh Kamara, and a little known banking executive, Sanni Sesay. Kamara is widely known to have conceded defeat already — he tells friends that his chances to win are "doubtful" — but he plans to fight to the finish. Sesay, whose flamboyant campaigning has had all the trappings of an American election, may pose a threat to Conte, but his lack of colour and a substantial past in public life are serious political mishaps for him.

On the other hand, Conte's record in Rome, particularly at a crucial time when Sierra Leone's food and agriculture were in serious crisis, has been quite remarkable. He got the FAO to his country's assistance and quite recently concluded negotiations with the Austrian government to reactivate the defunct DELCO iron ore mines whose sudden closure a few years ago cost at least 1,000 jobs. It's difficult to place Conte with any of the many scandals which have recently hit the country's public servants.

Cambridge-educated and a senior political executive at the Commonwealth Secretariat in London, Dr. Abass Bundu, is one of the many new faces for the general election. A tough-talking diplomat, Bundu has been under enormous pressure from friends and relatives to step down because some point out Sierra Leone politics is too much in a topsy-turvy and rocked by scandals, and Bundu cannot cope. But Bundu once told this writer: "I see the whole election as a challenge. If my people want me to represent them in Parliament, who am I to say no? After all I've been out too long and I consider it time that I go to help in my country's development."

Bundu's challenger Kamara is not of much consequence but the final outcome cannot be predicted since many of Bundu's minister-cronies are themselves sternly opposed to seeing him enter politics to challenge them for cabinet posts.

Among the few civil servants, is the dismissed financial secretary Joe Amara-Bangali. Amara-Bangali is holding out in a Bo West constituency against the current MP, Philip Moseray. Moseray may even step down for Bangali in the final run up but if he does not, Bangali's victory would look like cutting knife through butter. This is not to say that Bangali's campaign is without a hitch. He would probably have to explain himself out of some financial deals.

Lawyers attracted

The election has also attracted the law profession. One of Freetown's best known lawyers, Eke Hallowel, is believed to be contesting in one of the country's controversial seats, Freetown West Two. With him are one of President Stevens' sons, Alex, and East German-educated Murado Kamara, the current MP. It will be a tough battle; if the election should turn out free and fair, then Murado is likely to have the edge. Another prominent lawyer in the election is sports commentator, Edward Akar, brother of the late broadcasting celebrity and Ambassador to Washington, John, who took friends and relatives by surprise when he announced his bid for Parliament in Rotifunk in the Moyamba district. With financial support, allegedly from a well-known Afro-Lebanese, Akar may easily walk over his main rival Mr. F. S. Bundu, the current MP who is yet to explain why his self-help project in Rotifunk did not materialise.

The KDDA, the Kambia District Descendant Association, a sort of political mafia with claims to the country's top posts, is reported to be filling in Mr. Abdul Rahman Sesay in one of the Kambian constituencies. Sesay, director of the Road Transport Corporation, is being opposed by a Mr. Cham, a relative novice to Sierra Leone politics and just back from the US. Mano River Union deputy Secretary-General, Mr. Sheku Sesay, is also known to be quitting to stand in the election but even his friends, like many others, are asking why he has to leave his post to go into politics.

Some well-known former Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) supporters before the one-party declaration are known to be making a fresh attempt to go into Parliament. One of them is Daramy Rogers. Rogers is vehemently opposing agriculture minister Dr. Joe Jackson in the Bo Town One constituency. But if the people of Bo should want to vote for a minister who can put across their case for development in a government which continues allegedly to be largely dominated by northerners, then Jackson should remain in Parliament. Jackson has had the rare record of being the longest-serving successful Agriculture Minister in the history of the APC government. A former SLPP sympathiser, Jackson continues to be a symbol of peace, standing between the government and a turbulent area known for its anti-APC activities.

Another prominent old hand in the defunct SLPP, is Mr. M. L. Sidique who is opposing foreign minister, Abdulai Conteh in the Kambia West constituency. The contest promises to be a fierce one, but even APC strategists concede that Sidique, a former provincial secretary, is likely to have a knife-edge victory over Conteh. According to these sources, Conteh is arrogant and seems to be living in a world of his own far from the realities of those who elected him to power. Nevertheless, Conteh can claim to have the President firmly behind him, particularly for his distinguished record as foreign minister. When all is said and done his successes will stand out and be taken into final consideration.

WEST AFRICAN ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION MEETING HELD

Role of Trade

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 8 Apr 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Delegates to the third Biennial Conference of the West African Economic Association which opened in Freetown yesterday were reminded that the significant role of trade and its ramifications for economic advancement are still very relevant at the present time.

In an address, the Acting development Secretary, Mr David Minah on behalf of the Minister of Development and Economic Planning, said that despite the rhetoric of the New International Economic order, the contemporary Economic scene was replete with evidence of adverse terms of trade for developing countries.

Mr Minah noted the ravages of the present world economic order on the trade and development efforts of developing countries.

He said it suggested the need for greater efforts to be directed to the fostering of trade links among developing countries within the framework of regional markets.

In his speech, the outgoing President of the West African Economic Association, Professor H.W. Yaidoo, reflected briefly on the current international economic situation and suggested areas in which the association can provide professional service to the ECOWAS Secretariat.

Such areas, he stressed, would promote the association's practical usefulness and demonstrate the collective commitment to help improve knowledge and understanding of the sub-region.

The three-day conference which attracted most of the member-states of ECOWAS will discuss important aspects of trade and its supportive reinforcement in the sub-region.

Meeting With President

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 14 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] The new executive council of the West African Economic Association yesterday had an audience with President Siaka Stevens at the State House.

The Council was introduced to the President by the outgoing President, Professor H.W. Yaidoo.

They expressed profound gratitude to President Stevens and the government and people of Sierra Leone for the hospitality which was accorded them during their meeting.

Professor Yaidoo briefed the President about the association, an academic body of economists from member countries of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

President Stevens expressed pleasure that the association held its third biennial conference in Freetown and spoke of the great economic potentials of the West African sub-region which he maintained could be properly harnessed for remarkable economic success.

Dr Stevens hoped that the experience which they have gained during their meeting would put them in good stead towards the development of the sub-region.

The meeting was attended by the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Dr Sama Banya, the Financial Secretary Mr Val Nylander, the Acting Development Secretary, Mr D.A.B. Minah and the Deputy Governor of the Central Bank, Mr J.T.S. Wright.

CHURCHMAN LOOKS AT AFRIKAANS CHURCH SPLIT

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 5, 6, 7 Apr 82

[Three-part series by Dr Jacques Kriel]

[5 Apr 82 p 11]

[Text]

Political turmoil in South Africa is mirrored in the country's Afrikaans Reformed churches and their offshoots in black communities.

In a three-part series beginning today, DR JACQUES KRIEL, former Minister of Health in Bophuthatswana and rector of the University of Bophuthatswana, describes from a verligte churchman's viewpoint the history of the churches and the problems and challenges they face.

The terminology surrounding the three Afrikaans churches and the "ethnic" churches which were established as a result of missionary activity is confusing even to Afrikaners.

The oldest and largest of the three white Afrikaans churches is the Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk, (Dutch Reformed Church) with its 1.7 million white members.

The other two are the Hervormde Kerk, the official name having retained the Dutch version — Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk — with about 250 000 members, and the Gereformeerde Kerk with about 130 000 white members.

The differences between the three white Afrikaans churches are mainly historical and not theological.

For the first 200 years after the Dutch colonised the Cape, the NGK was the only church of the emerging Afrikaner nation. It was actually a branch of the Hervormde Kerk in Holland, and the terms Nederduitsch Gereformeerd and Nederduitsch Hervormd were used interchangeably at the Cape.

When the church in Holland underwent a schism the theologically conservative section split off as the Gereformeerde Kerk.

As the Cape was at that time under British rule the split did not have an immediate effect.

During the northern migration of the Afrikaner after 1836 the NGK experienced great difficulty in maintaining an effective ministry to its widely scattering flock. The spiritual ministry therefore devolved on laymen, the heads of households.

The theological interpretation of the Bible which arose during this time — in which the history of the Afrikaner nation was interpreted in terms of the history of Israel — was later to have profound theological and political implications for Afrikaners and for South Africa.

Due partly to a shortage of ministers — the traditional Dutch source of ministers being cut off by the English colonial government — and partly to the Anglicisation policy of the government, a large number of ministers were brought to the colony from Scotland.

The Anglicisation goals failed: most of these ministers eventually identified with the Afrikaner cause. They also established a strong theological tradition which is still bearing fruit today.

For example, Professor John de Gruchy of Cape Town says the young Andrew Murray and his brother John "injected a new evangelical enthusiasm into the church, profoundly shaping Dutch Reformed theology and piety at a critical moment in its development."

Not only did these two have a decisive influence on the early development of the NG seminary established at Stellenbosch in 1859, but Andrew probably became the first South African religious writer to become known and loved far beyond its borders.

In spite of numerous calls for help to the NGK's Cape Synod, its members in the Transvaal Republic were without any ministers.

In desperation the Transvaal Volksraad eventually wrote directly to Holland. In 1852 the Rev van der Hoff arrived from the Hervormde Kerk in Holland, followed in 1859 by the Rev Dirk Postma from the Gereformeerde Kerk.

Although they undertook not to transplant the Dutch schism to African soil, their personalities were so incompatible that their adherents established two separate churches: the Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk and the Gereformeerde Kerk, the members of which were nicknamed the "Doppers."

The Cape NGK, alarmed at the division among its previous members in the Transvaal, hastily sent representatives to gather those who had not become followers of either Van der Hoff or Postma.

There was a short-lived unification between the NGK and the Hervormde Kerk which later broke down, leading to protracted legal proceedings over church property.

The last few years have seen renewed discussions about closer union but no dramatic advances have been made.

The three churches acknowledged allegiance to the same basic confessional documents. They are kept apart by social and functional issues.

At the risk of complete superficiality with regard to those issues, one could characterise the churches as follows:

- The Hervormde Kerk is theologically weak but on sociopolitical issues its stand is ultraconservative and it consciously identifies itself as a "volkskerk."
- The NG Kerk is theologically strong and has the strongest political influence but is plagued by a fear that any change in its "political stance" will lead to a massive defection by conservatives to the Hervormde Kerk.

The church mirrors society: National Party leaders since Dr Verwoerd have been hampered in planning for social change by the nearly pathological fear of causing a schism in Afrikanerdom.

The Gereformeerde Kerk is characterised by a strictly orthodox Reformed system of church government and liturgy but also a very strong awareness of the authority of Scripture in all matters.

It was this awareness which led to the development of the church structure uniting all congregations regardless of race under the control of one general synod. Nevertheless I do not think it either untrue or unkind to say that very little of the true unity of the body of Christ is to be seen in the daily life of the church or its members.

Next: The challenge of "ethnic" churches.

[6 Apr 82 p 10]

[Text]

From its inception at the Cape the Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk was aware of its missionary responsibility, and converts were made from among the indigenous Khoi-Khoi population and imported slaves.

For the first two centuries it was the practice to accept these converts as regular members of the congregation. They took part in church services and activities irrespective of race or colour.

With the development of colour-consciousness among the white colonists, pressure must have built up in the church against this practice, because it surfaced as an issue for discussion in 1829.

The continued objection against the presence of "non-whites" at services and especially at Holy Communion led to renewed pressure on the synod of 1857.

This is considered by many to have been the date marking the official beginning of apartheid in the NGK. But, read correctly, the synod's decision is no justification for apartheid in the church.

It made a concession which "allowed" non-white members to meet in a separate building as a temporary measure to accommodate the weakness or lovelessness of some of its white Christians. But the establishment of separate congregations or even a separate church was clearly never envisaged.

It is a strange quirk of history that the 1857 decision initiated a period of tremendous missionary zeal in the NGK which lasted for more than a century.

The NGK established three churches on ethnic and cultural grounds: the Sendingkerk, working mainly among the so-called coloured population; the NG Kerk in Afrika, the so-called black church but not differentiated further according to African ethnic groups; and the Reformed Church in Africa, still in its infancy and working among the Asian population.

What was formulated as a temporary concession to the weakness and lack of Christian love and concern of some white members in 1857 has now become the firm policy of the church.

Although the NGK's missionary activity was greatly blessed, its missionery policy has precipitated the most serious crisis in its history.

The three "daughter churches" also referred to as "sister churches" are demanding that the confessional unity of the four churches should also find expression not only in structural unity but in a united rejection of discrimination and apartheid.

Professor David Bosch of the University of South Africa argues convincingly that the NGK's missiological policy is not part of the Reformed tradition but is in fact a heresy that strikes at the very foundation of the church.

The policy has not only reflected but has also strengthened the socio-political policy of apartheid. But the church is now discovering that both its scriptural and its Reformed base are being questioned and its relationship to its daughter churches threatened.

The NGK has justly been proud of its loyalty to and disciplined application of the Reformed theological tradition. Even after theological training in South Africa became established, Holland still remained the theological homeland.

Several developments disturbed this relationship. Firstly there was a shift in Reformed theology in Holland which was interpreted in the NGK establishment as being modernistic and liberalistic.

At the same time the Dutch government and churches began to question the South African racial policy and the NGK's justification of that policy.

At Cottesloe in Johannesburg in December 1960, NGK leaders joined other churchmen in adopting a stand strongly questioning the basis of aspects of government policy.

But as the policy of apartheid in Church and State hardened and especially after the NGK synods — under direct pressure from the Government and indirect pressure through the Broederbond — reversed their positions on the Cottesloe recommendations, the NGK came under increasing pressure from reformed circles and became increasingly isolated in the church community.

Following the Cottesloe debacle, top synodal posts in the church hierarchy were increasingly filled by people who were politically safe but theologically inept.

Now, even within orthodox faculties, students are being exposed to a much wider range of thinking than before.

It should be clear even from this rather superficial overview that the NGK is not the monolithic, uniformly verkrampte structure it may appear to be from the outside.

Because the Afrikaner's view is basically religiously-oriented, no real change can be expected in the political context without a fundamental change within the NGK. But no change can be expected in the church without a radical shift in its theological position.

An urgent search is taking place to define the church's posture in a manner both relevant to the needs of the situation and scripturally justifiable. The recent publication of the book "Stormkompas" (Storm Compass) is an important example of the search.

The conviction runs very deep in Afrikaner society that the traditional way of life — institutionalised by the State, legitimised by the NGK and thoroughly enjoyed by all white South Africans whatever their political convictions — is in fact Biblically based and thoroughly Christian.

"Stormkompas" fundamentally challenges this basic assumption on Biblical grounds.

Next: The intimate relationship between church and party.

[7 Apr 82 p 18]

[Text]

The relationship of the white Ned Geref Kerk to the Afrikaner nation and the National Party is a classic example of church identification with a reigning socio-political system.

It is the intimate relationship between church and state (or party) which has created the image of the NGK as a loveless racist church. All the negative feelings evoked by the internal policies of South Africa are projected on to the NGK.

Since the Church Ordinance in 1804 in which Governors Janssen and De Mist formally dismantled the church-state relationship, the NGK has always officially denied that it is either a State Church or a "Volkskerk" (a national or people's church).

Formally this is correct, but as Professor John de Gruchy of Cape Town has pointed out, the NGK has become a good example of a volkskerk through sharing historical processes.

It has not only completely identified with the (Afrikaner) national ideology, but even interprets Scripture in terms of that ideology rather than judging ideology in terms of Scripture.

In contrast to the NGK, the Hervormde Kerk has openly chosen to be a volkskerk, and has even incorporated the crest of the old Transvaal Republic into its official emblem.

This identification of the church with (Afrikaner) national socio-political and cultural ideals, interests and aspiration can best be understood by a look at history.

The church shared the sufferings and triumphs, the fears and hopes, the defeats and victories of the people. At times it was the only recognised body which stood by the Afrikaner people, regardless of the consequences.

It became part of the (Afrikaner) national reconstruction planning team after the two Anglo Boer Wars, the Depression and the migration to the cities.

During the two wars it went on commando with the people with churchmen acting not only as chaplains but in some instances actually taking up arms. Some early leaders of the Afrikaans language movement were Cape-based NGK ministers.

The completion of the translation of the Bible into Afrikaans was a religious and cultural achievement of no mean stature.

But it was during the Depression that the church really played a major role in support of the Afrikaner people. It was the prime mover behind the "volkskongresse" on the so-called poor white problem.

It launched massive community development projects. When the traumatic move to the city started, where Afrikaners formed the unskilled, uneducated and exploited working-class of the time, it moved with the people and tried to alleviate the trauma.

It became the main spokesman on educational and social matters of an economically destitute, politically immature and relatively powerless people.

One wonders to what extent this year's volkskongres on education was a nostalgic throw-back to those times when such congresses brought light, hope, direction and certainty in a time of crisis.

The compassion which the church showed for the Afrikaner in this time of crisis was not wrong. In fact, a study of the strategies adopted could teach churches a valuable lesson today.

But in the process the church began to identify ideologically with the social, cultural and political ideals and goals of the people.

The identification of church and state found a structural and institutional expression in the Afrikaner Broederbond. Here political, cultural and church leaders worked closely together to lead the Afrikaner out of the economic, cultural and political wilderness.

Church, political and cultural ideals coalesced and became indistinguishable.

The church initiated legislation, for example by asking for the introduction of the Mixed Marriages Act and the Immorality Act.

This explains Prime Minister Mr P W Botha's irritation when the NGK General Synod in 1978 changed its mind by stating that mixed marriages between Christians could not be prohibited on Biblical grounds, although they were "highly undesirable."

On the other hand the state directly, and indirectly through the Broederbond, squashed politically undesirable theological developments — for instance NGK support of the Cottesloe conference decisions.

It is probable that action taken against the Rev Beyers Naude was a combined state/church effort to suppress dissension within the church, possibly co-ordinated by the Broederbond whose papers he had been instrumental in leaking to the opposition Press.

But the silencing of Beyers Naude did not succeed in silencing prophetic voices in the NGK.

There is a long NGK tradition of dissent over discriminatory practices within church and society, one often overlooked by unsympathetic observers.

Today there are so many dissenters one can mention only a few. The two best known and possibly the unofficial leaders are Professor David Bosch, professor in missiology at Unisa, and Professor Jaap Durand, at present vice-rector of the University of the Western Cape.

The problem of the identification of church and community — whether that community is the oppressor or the oppressed — is the basic issue facing the NGK and indeed all Christians and churches in South Africa today.

The Rev David Botha, moderator of the NG Sendingkerk, has pointed to the striking similarity between the present language of the Allan Boesaks (a prominent NGSK theologian) and the Desmond Tutus, and that of the protest language used by the NGK in the 1930s and 1940s when protesting about injustice suffered by the Afrikaners.

Now, of course, the NGK and the Government see these statements as dangerous.

Ton Vosloo, editor of Beeld, points out in an article in "Stormkompas": Afrikaner leaders were then not locked up for this type of talk because they had one thing which the non-whites today do not have: a political voice in central government.

The church is not called to transfer its loyalty from one worldly system to another but to adopt a totally new posture.

It is called to be weak, to renounce the grasping for the levels of control by which others think they can govern history. Christians must be taught how to be a loving, compassionate, united and integrated alternative community.

NAMIBIA SETTLEMENT WITHOUT SAVIMBI SEEN DIFFICULT

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 8 Apr 82 p 14

[Editorial: "Namibia and the 'Savimbi Factor'"]

[Text] THE Pretoria Government and the Windhoek Government ... Swapo and Angola and the United Nations ... the Front-line States and the Western Five ... as if the all the diverse strands of a Namibian settlement were not already complex enough, another new one has lately begun to appear with increasing insistence. It comes in the bulky presence of Dr Jonas Savimbi, head of the Angolan resistance movement Unita. For six years he has led an effective guerilla war in pursuit of the share in Angola's government out of which he was cheated in 1975. This week he asserted that he would have to be party to any settlement involving a UN peace-keeping force.

His claim is reasonable enough. Unita controls, or moves freely in, a very large part of southern Angola, including the border zone which would be demilitarised under UN occupation. From Pretoria, often alleged to be among Unita's chief sponsors — a charge which both sides are at pains to deny — there have also been reminders of the "Savimbi factor."

Dr Savimbi's need is for influential recognition abroad. A few months ago he made considerable headway in Washington, on a visit which included a meeting with Secretary of State Haig and three with Dr Chester Crocker. Back in the Angolan bush this week, he staged what seemed like an excellent public relations exercise aimed at further bolstering his image. He released 17 Portuguese prisoners who testified to Unita's discipline, its humane treatment and the extent of Angolan territory it controls.

It underlined the fact that a Namibian settlement is scarcely practicable without Dr Savimbi's co-operation. Nor, of course, is it possible without the co-operation of those in power in Luanda, who give Swapo's guerilla war its territorial backing. Logically two sets of negotiations should proceed in tandem — Namibian peace and reconciliation between Angola's warring factions. This would seem to be the long-term aim of United States policy. Simultaneously it would get the South Africans out of Namibia and the Cubans out of Angola. It would be an enormous feather in the Reagan Administration's cap.

It would also be a massive relief to all concerned (including probably the Cubans). So besides complicating matters in the short term, Dr Savimbi's intervention may well point the way to overall peace in this war-weary south-western corner of Africa.

WRAB, COMMITTEE OF TEN VIEWS OF PROGRESS IN SOWETO REPORTED

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 13 Apr 82 p 21

[John Knoetze and Ntatho Motlane interviewed by Drew Forrest: "Progress in Soweto?"]

[Text] "Up to the end of last year, most of our development work was buried underground in the shape of electrical cables, water and stormwater drainage pipes," said the West Rand Administration Board's Mr John Knoetze. "Now it's coming to the surface."

"For example: roads have been tarred and pavements laid. In Diepkloof, hopelessly low water pressures have been rectified and the sewerage system in Orlando East has been upgraded."

These changes, said Mr Knoetze, are the first fruits of a scheme aimed at renovating and extending essential services in Soweto, initiated in 1980 and due for completion in 1984.

Coupled with it is a programme for the electrification of Soweto, as well as projects designed to modernise and extend existing houses and add 15 000 units to the present housing stock.

The redevelopment scheme followed a long period of stagnation in the provision and maintenance of both housing and essential services in Soweto. From the early sixties until 1975, the Government, in pursuance of its apartheid policies, stressed homeland development to the detriment of black urban areas.

There can be little doubt that any change in policy is the direct consequence of the 1976 upheavals in the black townships and creeping official recognition that urban Africans could not be wished away.

Late in 1979, at about the same time as Mr Knoetze's move to Wrab, the Greater Soweto Planning Council was set up under the chairmanship of former postmaster-general Mr Louis Rive.

Soon after, the TPA panel, with representatives from the three tiers of Government, the CSIR and specialist civil engineering bodies, was formed to investigate the scale and likely cost of upgrading essential services.

In its report, the panel estimated the cost of the upgrading exercise at R400 million. The Government responded by agreeing to guarantee a loan for R150 million and work started on the improvement of the sewerage system, water and metering and roads and stormwater drainage.

According to Mr Knoetze, about R50 million has been spent to date on the upgrading programme and expenditure will be increased from April 1 this year to about R4 million a month.

In his chairman's report, progress up to the end of February this year was broken down as follows: 30 km of roads and streets, 15 km of stormwater drains, 6 km of primary water pipelines, 35 km of secondary water pipelines.

One high-level water reservoir has been completed of the four that are planned.

On the controversial issue of service charges, Mr Knoetze said it had been his approach from the outset to place these on an economic footing. "We were losing about R32 million a year when I arrived," he said. "This has now been reduced to R12 million."

He said the policy was one of increased monthly payments on a differentiated basis — so that better-off residents would pay economic rates, while those unable to do so would be exempted.

Progress in attacking Soweto's massive housing backlog (the current need is estimated at 35 000 new units, rising by 4 000 each year) has been unspectacular. Mr Knoetze was adamant that no new housing schemes could be initiated without improvements in the township's infrastructural services.

No government-financed housing was built in 1980. Last year, the private sector built some 500 houses in Greater Soweto, while Wrab started work on an 800-house scheme for the lower and middle-income groups in the Soweto township of Chiawelo.

Approval has been granted for projects in Tabulani (53 houses, 440 flats), Dobsonville (1 200 houses), Diepkloof Extension (1 200 houses) and Chiawelo (400 flats) — but construction will begin only when Government funds become available.

Schemes for the building of 4 900 houses and 3 500 flats in Protea North and South, Dhlamini, Meadowlands and Naledi South are, according to Wrab, in various stages of planning.

Despite the recent Treasury cutback in the housing allocation, Mr Knoetze believes the target of 15 000 new housing units on existing land in Soweto can be reached within three years.

While accepting that the ultimate solution of Soweto's housing crisis rests on the acquisition of more land, Mr Knoetze said this was "not a pressing issue."

"The density of Soweto can be increased to accommodate a further 500 000 people," he said.

On the home ownership issue, Mr Knoetze said about 1 400 99-year leaseholds had been registered in Soweto up to the beginning of this year.

"Some people are trying to politicise leasehold," he said. "But the fact is that the people have accepted it. The real bottleneck is the cost of land surveying."

The electrification programme was another area where, said Mr Knoetze, Soweto residents have tasted the first fruits of redevelopment.

According to Wrab's monthly newsletter, "New Horizons," 1 082 houses have been newly wired and supplied with electricity under the scheme which aims to electrify some 110 000 Soweto houses over a three-year period.

About 30 000 houses have been wired in addition to the 24 000 wired and connected under the old system.

Other areas of tangible advancement cited by Mr Knoetze were:

- The completion of the first of 10 health centres offering preventive care, which are designed to take the pressure off Baragwanath Hospital.
- A crash programme early in 1980, involving army help, to clear Soweto's accumulated rubbish.

Mr Knoetze also said that a project for the building of 400 classrooms in Soweto at the cost of R6 million would be concluded in June this year.

"Mr Knoetze is a sympathetic man with his heart in the right place — and I'm sure a good civil servant — but he's been given an impossible job to do.

"Our view in the Committee of Ten is that no real progress can be made in Soweto, or any other black urban area for that matter, under the present political dispensation."

The words are those of the Committee of Ten's controversial chairman, Dr Ntsatho Motlana, who spoke to The Star from his Soweto surgery.

Dr Motlana agrees that recent months have seen some physical change in Soweto — although he comments wryly that trenching operations for the laying of cables and pipes have made the township "less habitable."

"The electrification programme seems to have been tackled with some enthusiasm," he added, "although one must never forget that it is a monument to the sacrifices made by our children in 1976."

But he stresses that people "are not aware that anything special is happening."

What impresses him most is the almost total lack of progress in the key area of housing development — the offspring, he believes, of the Government's continued unwillingness to view blacks as a permanent part of urban South Africa.

"Since 1968, when we were told the Government decided to scale down house-building for urban blacks, there has been no evidence of mass low-cost housing in Soweto.

"The few houses that have been built are strategically placed on the main roads into Soweto, so that tourists can see them. And they are largely the work of the private sector, for people with means."

He cites an example of houses erected with private capital in Dobsonville, which were finally priced at between R22 000 and R32 000 and which stood empty for "almost a year."

"As a civic leader, I visit homes where every room has to serve as a house in itself. I know of people who have been on the waiting list since they were moved to Diepkloof from Sophiatown in 1955.

"They talk of planning, planning — I will believe there is a Government commitment to black housing development when I see brick on brick."

Attacking what he described as the "severe underfinancing" of black housing by the Government, Dr Motlana took issue with the allocation of housing funds by the Department of Community Development.

"The practice has been to favour Whites, Coloured people and Indians over blacks, rather than divide the money according to needs," he said. "Once more, this is because blacks are considered temporary sojourners in urban areas."

For Dr Motlana, it is the Government's continued denial of black freehold rights which speaks most eloquently of its standpoint.

"Leasehold may be cheaper than freehold, and it may offer virtually the same title," he said. "But the denial of freehold is a discriminatory measure, and is seen as such by blacks."

It is the political connotations of 99-year leasehold, rather than its cost, which has doomed it to failure, Dr Motlana believes.

"When blacks hear of formerly white land which has been released for freehold purchase, regardless of cost, they snap it up," he said. "At Bosplaas, for example, there were smallholdings on sale for up to R20 000 — now they are just not available.

"Wrab is trying to get round this problem by imposing horrendous service charges.

"The upshot is that widows and pensioners in a low-income area like Orlando East are paying R35 a month for a two-roomed house which is not even maintained — unlike in the old days of the Johannesburg City Council's administration."

Dr Motlana said Wrab's policy of "differentiated" payment of service charges — by granting exemptions to those who could not pay the full amount — "couldn't and didn't work."

"You can't have the entire Orlando East community of 6 000 applying for exemption. Even if they did, they would be given the standard instruction to take sub-tenants."

A crucial test of the Government's good faith in regard to Soweto housing, Dr Motlana said, would be the immediate acquisition of more land — specifically "all the vacant property from here to Randfontein."

"Instead of extending Soweto's boundaries, John Knoetze talks of increased density."

"This is really too much when you consider that blacks outnumber whites three to one in the Johannesburg area, while whites occupy 10 times as much land.

"The trouble is that the Government seems to have neither the readiness nor the political courage to address itself to the land issue."

Dr Motlana stressed that influx control regulations, and the insecurity they engendered, were a major factor inhibiting development in black urban areas.

The "essence of Government thinking" was its ruling that part of the profits reaped by the administration boards should be redirected to house-building in the homelands.

"The East Rand board is infamous for its decision to devote resources to the building of a capital city in that place called Lebowa, rather than build houses in its own area."

And while the Government would not build homes, it was "more than willing to erect hostels for migrant workers at an untold cost in terms of social problems."

"The key thing is to drop this nonsensical canard that Africans are not South Africans," Dr Motlana said. "I am convinced that the authorities have not made the psychological leap to accepting the permanent presence of urban blacks, who are entitled to decent permanent housing.

"In the meantime, we all pretend we're moving forward, while we stand still."

NEW ALLIANCE TO TEST BLACK CONSCIOUSNESS MOVEMENT

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 7 Apr 82 p 23

[Article by Jon Qwelane]

[Text]

A new movement will be born in Maritzburg over the Easter weekend, where for the first time in decades, blacks and whites will come together to forge a new alliance that could post a threat to black consciousness and its adherants.

The threats are not necessarily ideological, but stem more from the kind of financial backing and exposure that the new group is likely to receive.

It has been said behind the scenes, in somewhat cloak-and-dagger settings, that the birth of the new movement is the result of growing disillusionment with the BC view that blacks need to stand together, and on their own, to dismantle the shackles of their bondage.

Several BC groups will take part in the seminar, which will mark the inaugural congress of the movement that has yet to be named.

But has BC failed the people, as some suggest?

Before setting BC against the new movement, one needs to recall some of the pillars of Black Consciousness as a philosophy.

The most important — yet widely misconstrued — concept is that while BC is pro-black in the main, it is not anti-anybody else. BC sets out to "liberate" the black individual psychologically first, and physically next.

The reasons as propounded by the movement's founding fathers were that for the black man to really realise his worth he had first to recognise himself as a fully-fledged entity within his own society. He had to realise that he was not inferior to anybody, and conversely accept that he was not superior to anybody. He had to know that he was equal to everybody else around him.

In the search for this identity, he had to bear in mind that he was the "oppressed" and had only himself to look up to in order to bring about the collapse of that oppression — hence slogans like "Black man walk tall" became very popular.

This obviously led to another premise — that if one was oppressed and one sought solutions for the crushing of that oppression, then one had to operate with one's own kind in a common united cause.

In other words, whites were viewed as the "oppressors" and could not come and join hands with black "oppressed" people to rid them of that oppression.

But BC also stated that while co-operation and contact with whites should not be banned; it had to be avoided or kept at a minimum.

The inevitable question had to come: What about those blacks operating within the system such as homeland leaders and black security policemen?

Giving evidence during the marathon SASO-BPC trial in the Pretoria Supreme Court, Mr Steve Biko, honorary life president of the BPC before his death in security police custody, told the court: "There is no such thing as a black policeman.

"Anybody who collaborates with the system becomes a colourless lackey who is unwanted within the black community and also spurned by the very white society with which he wants to assimilate."

The Hammanskraal congress of Azapo resolved that BC had a role to play even after the "liberation" where it could then be translated into "human consciousness" whereby people would have to learn to live as man and man, not as black and white.

A new movement, comprising white liberals and radical blacks who will be drawn from many facets of black thinking, will be born in Maritzburg shortly.

In many ways it will be like the days of the banned African National Congress where "progressive" white liberals were accepted in the fold.

The movement aims at doing away with many of BC's accepted standpoints. But whether it will in the end topple BC as a guideline remains to be seen.

BC may not have funds and all the extras that go with the new ANC-style movement, but it undoubtedly has stood the test of time.

PRETORIA DISCOUNTS SWAPO COMMUNIQUE'S CLAIMS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

A CLAIM by Swapo that it had progressed to the outskirts of Windhoek in its latest incursion into the traditionally White areas of South West Africa was absurd, a spokesman for Defence Headquarters in Pretoria said yesterday.

He was asked to comment on a report by the Angolan news agency, Angop, quoting a Swapo statement as saying two South African soldiers had been seriously wounded in a clash with "insurgents" on the outskirts of the city.

The Swapo "war communique", monitored in Lisbon, also claimed three South African soldiers had been killed on a farm 35 km from Grootfontein in north-eastern SWA.

The statement added that Swapo "dominated the military situation" in the White farming areas around Grootfontein, Otavi and Outjo.

"This pathetic attempt (by Swapo) at propaganda is absurd," the SADF spokesman said.

The Swapo statement issued in Luanda, said its "guerrillas" had pushed their current attacks to the outskirts of Windhoek.

Angop also quoted the communique as saying Swapo carried out a mortar attack on April 20 on a military camp near Ondangwa, killing several South Africans, including an airman identified as Alwyn Maad, and causing heavy damage.

Security force headquarters in Windhoek reported last week that a White civilian contractor and a Black worker were killed and six other workers injured on April 20 in a mortar attack on a school and hotel complex being built near Ondangwa.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the SWA territory force told Sapa's Windhoek representative that Swapo's limited incursion was failing.

"Indications are that the whole offensive is turning sour for Swapo," he said. "Most of the insurgents not killed by security forces are heading northwards, back to Angola."

On claims by Swapo that the organisation had pushed its raids to the outskirts of Windhoek the spokesman said: "This claim is pure, unadulterated rubbish.

"It is becoming increasingly clear that Swapo and its Marxist ally in Luanda want to, at all cost, keep from their supporters the embarrassing defeats suffered by these terrorist-infiltrators at present.

"The infiltrators are at present scurrying (skarrel) like rats in an attempt to evade the security forces and death."

Initial attempts by Swapo to turn the incursion into a "massive propaganda victory" had "failed miserably".

"The terrorists in the territory will be traced and destroyed if they do not manage to again escape across the (Angolan) border."— Sapa

IMPACT OF FALKLAND CRISIS ON SA STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE DISCUSSED

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 7 Apr 82 p 25

[Rob Soutter interviews Paul Moorcraft: "SA is a Leper--With or Without Simonstown, Says Foreign Expert Falkland Fiasco No Sudden Boon"]

[Text] The Falkland Islands dispute is proving to the West the value of a strategic base like Simonstown — but South Africa is unlikely to benefit.

"The crisis may even worsen South Africa's international position," said international affairs expert Mr Paul Moorcraft in an interview in Johannesburg yesterday.

"Both Britain and Argentina, being totally opposed to communism, are potential allies of this country. But if war breaks out it is absurd to think either country will openly turn to South Africa and Simonstown. This country is an international leper," he said.

If the Argentinian government is humiliated — and any political step down or military defeat could suffice — the government may fall, opening the way for a communist takeover.

VULNERABLE

"This would make South Africa's secret interests and alliances in South America even more vulnerable than they are at present."

The crisis has also exposed both the critical time delay built into the West's reaction to a military threat, and the geographic limitations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

"Neither of these problems bode well for South Africa, insolated at the southern tip of the African continent and threatened by the Soviet Union.

"Britain had to know trouble was brewing in the South Atlantic but was too cautious to react with the necessary measures. These should have included an immediate airlift of troops to the Falkland Islands."

The West's lack of strategic bases outside the European theatre has been underlined by the need to send a naval task force more than 13 000 km in two weeks to try to restore British prestige.

The Soviet Union on the other hand has naval units stationed throughout the world's oceans, able to steam to a potential trouble spot with minimum delay, said Mr Moorcraft.

"Fortunately for Britain, the Falkland Islands are one of the few places in the world where a naval battle could take place without Soviet interference," he said.

"The United States, which is desperately trying to avoid having to choose between two allies, will be aiming to keep the Soviets out."

The crisis lends greater credence to the South African Government's argument that the West should defend its sea routes with strategic bases and particularly Simonstown, said Mr Moorcraft.

"The West has until now considered Simonstown as irrelevant in the sphere of modern warfare.

"Military strategists have concluded that there is no need to defend the Cape sea-route, because if Nato ships were sunk there, with or without strong defences, the escalation to nuclear warfare would be inevitable."

They believe there would be no time to indulge in convoys which is the traditional justification for defending the Cape.

"But the Falkland Islands dispute has shown there are other considerations apart from nuclear war, and has indicated the need for conventional answers to conventional military threats," he said.

The crisis in the South Atlantic involves several countries which are anti-communist and far from Nato's defensive umbrella. Both Australia and New Zealand are lined up behind Britain and like South Africa are within a week's sailing of the Falklan dislands. Should Britain attack Argentina however, the government in Buenos Aires is unlikely to turn to Pretoria.

This affirms the South African Government's stand on Simonstown and its concern with maintaining pro-Western bases in the Indian Ocean.

"Island bases are becoming increasingly important strategic points.

"But this recognition will not make the West turn with open arms to South Africa and it is pointless to keep on dangling Simonstown like a carrot.

"South Africa does not realise the depth of hostility in the world towards this country."

And if Argentina is defeated by Britain in a naval battle, the government in Buenos Aires is very unlikely to enter into a South Atlantic Treaty Organisation with South Africa which Pretoria has favoured for years as a logical extension of Nato.

But the Falklands fiasco could have some advantages for the West — and perhaps South Africa in the broader sense, he said.

It has brought the rightwing hardliner and potential friend of South Africa Mr Francis Pym into the British Government.

"Whether Mr Pym can restore British self-confidence as Churchhill did remains to be seen. But he could be more favourable to South Africa."

UMLAZI WATERPIPE BOMBED--A section of water pipe, about 2,5m long was blown out by two bombs at the water canal supplying the Umlazi Black township to the south of Durban, just before midnight on Saturday. The police were on the scene within minutes of the explosion and cordoned the area off. It is believed that the bomb had plastic containers and was composed of TNT. The pipe was blown several metres high and water gushed into the air. Workers from the City Engineers Department in Durban were called to the scene and repaired the damage by 11.30 a.m. yesterday. CED said the water supply to the township has not been badly affected by the explosion. He said that the fractured part had been replaced. The police have not said who was responsible for the explosion although it is thought to be members of banned African National Congress. This was the first incident of sabotage in the Durban area for many months after a wave of bomb explosions earlier this year in which several Government buildings had been attacked as well as two car showrooms. Subsequently, a gang of about six Blacks were arrested in connection with the explosion and are due to appear in court under the Terrorism Act shortly. It is alleged that the gang were all members of the ANC. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Apr 82 p 3]

CLOTHING FACTORY STRIKE--Durban--Workers at the Ninian and Lester clothing factory in Pinetown downed tools yesterday in protest over wage and other demands. Production came to a standstill when the entire 6 am shift stopped work, a spokesman for the Fosatu-affiliated National Union of Textile Workers said. The spokesman said worker dissatisfaction centred on three issues: Postponement of wage negotiations; Delays arising out of procedural clauses for union recognition; The alleged sacking of three workers last Friday. Last November, the factory experienced a similar work stoppage, but the dispute was settled when workers agreed to go back to work and management undertook to finalise the outstanding issues over union recognition. "Workers are now impatient that finalisation of the agreement has been dragging on for so long. One of these issues is the disciplinary procedure, which could have settled the dispute over the dismissed workers," the spokesman said. Management was not available for comment.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Apr 82 p 12]

RANCH CONFISCATED--Filabusi (Zimbabwe)--Fifty farmworkers, on orders of the government, yesterday took control of a Zimbabwean ranch allegedly abandoned by its owner last month when he left the country for South Africa. It was the first time the two-year-old socialist government had ordered an outright seizure of land from Whites, who own two-fifths of the country's farms, observers said. The Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr Kumbirai Kangai said in a statement the departed owner's employees "should now manage the farm as their own property." The ranch in Filabusi, southwestern Zimbabwe, was owned by Mr Lawrence Hutton. In the past, the government had negotiated property deals directly with resident and absentee owners as part of an avowed policy to settle tens-of-thousands of landless Blacks. The workers, some of whom have worked for various owners on the ranch for up to 45 years, complained to district government officers that their boss had unexpectedly quit the property and they had not been paid three months' back wages. The farm manager, Mr Russel Clarke-Nell, told reporters on Sunday Mr Hutton was now living in Port Elizabeth.--Sapa-AP [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Apr 82 p 14]

OFFICIAL APPEALS FOR ILO HELP

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 15 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Mashumi Twala]

[Text]

SWAZILAND still needs all the help it can get from United Nations agencies.

This has been emphasised by the Deputy Prime Minister, Senator Ben Nsibandze, speaking at a reception in honour of visiting Assistant Director General of the International Labour Organisation, Mr. Elimane Kane, at the Swazi Inn Hotel.

He said: "As one of the developing countries and given our special geo-political and economic circumstances, we shall continue to request all the assistance that you can render, and it is for this reason that I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to request you your excellency to view our submissions with sympathethic consideration."

Senator Nsibandze said he was mindful of the occasional financial problems faced not only by the ILO but other members of the United Nations family.

"However, even considering that, permit me Mr. Assistant Director General to renew our humble plea for continued technical assistance," he said.

He explained that the Swazi nation was living in a world that is going through troubled times, saying: "we are faced with a variety of problems of under development, hunger, ignorance, poverty and disease and to make matters worse, nearly all developing countries are facing an ever rising tide of unemployment, a position which is a sure cause for social, economic and political instability, and it is for this reason that we look up to the United Nations specialised agencies of which ILO is one of them."

He pointed out that Swaziland is very proud of her association with International Labour Organisation which dates back to the colonial era and that when Swaziland regained her independence, she continued to strengthen the fruitful association.

"Today we can say with a measure of confidence that working hand in hand with ILO we have spared no effort in finding peaceful solutions for improvment of working conditions of our labour force, in strengthening and maintaining harmonious industrial relations, as it is in this way that we can ensure social, political and economic stability," said Senator Nsibandze.

He annouced that since 1975, the Swazi government had approved a total of 30 conventions.

He mentioned a few of the programmes of assistance that had been received from the ILO. "I have in mind the lecturers that have assisted us at our college of technology, where we produce much needed manpower for the various sectors of the economy.

Already we have revised and enacted several pieces of legislation designed to improve our employment, industrial relations, as well as our immigration formalities. Parliament has just passed the Industrial and Vocational Training Bill, a draft bill for workmen's compensation has just been completed

MPR OFFICIALS PREPARE FOR CENTRAL COMMITTEE SESSIONS

Session Prepares for March Meeting

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 24 Feb 82 p 7

[Text] At 10 am on Tuesday, in the party's city at N'Sele, the president and founder of the MPR [Popular Movement of the Revolution] and president of the Republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, opened the planning session to prepare for the fourth session of the MPR Central Committee.

This seminar, which will last until Saturday, is in preparation for the fourth regular session of the Central Committee which begins on 1 March in the Palace of the People.

In this historic city of N'Sele, which marked the birth of the party almost 15 years ago, the members of the Central Committee, far from the daily distractions of Kinshasa' hustle and bustle, will, with cool heads, examine the country's overall situation in minutest detail. They will also involve themselves in a detailed analysis of their work methods in light of the lessons drawn from previous sessions.

Considering that 1982 is a big political year, the session which begins its work on Monday and marks year two for the Central Committee, the last of the party bodies to be established, will no doubt have to prepare for parliamentary and municipal elections, as well as the MPR congress in particular.

Other state and party tasks will capture the attention of its members within the scope of the mission that devolves upon this body: to conceive, to inspire, to lead and to decide.

[Editorial: "A Basic Problem"]

[Text] The planning session of the MPR [Popular Movement of the Revolution] Central Committee in preparation for its March session opened on Tuesday in N'Sele.

From the views set forth in the various analyses made by observers and the departments involved emerges the fact that a reorganization of higher and university education in our country is required. Practical goals for our educational system must be established. Resolutions and proposals have been formulated by various university officials to translate their aspirations into a type of education which could be adapted to encourage Zaire's development.

In fact, if we refer to history, we discover that the colonial power adapted education in Zaire to its own immediate needs; requiring only some auxiliaries for its administration and some technical services. The other jobs could be filled by whites from Europe. And this method worked well to safeguard its position and its interests, and further its rule.

Maintaining this type of educational system is no longer justified, as it was designed for "elitist" purposes. Today, a different one is required. Considering the current problems which affect our country's development, we must arrive at a type of education which will encourage technical training or training which will lead directly to a given profession.

All education officials in Africa are affected by this problem. In this regard, they should take a keen interest in the concept of modern and authentic African education, as opposed to educational models borrowed from Europe. In other words, transposing educational models which do not correspond to the heritage, the natural dispositions and the cultural identity of African countries is not likely to elicit sufficient, voluntarily granted efforts, nor to develop the ability to grasp problems, to define priorities, or to conceive and promote the types and forms of education which can contribute to solving identified problems and making best use of existing resources.

Although this problem is already being dealt with on the African level, and the next meeting of the ministers of education and state commissioner for higher education in Lusaka, Zambia is to examine it, it is essential that the foundations for applying these changes be already established and prepared in our country. Thus we will avoid the risks that any abrupt change in educational programs brings.

These plans are all the more useful since Zaire has its own cultural identity as well as its specific development needs.

OFFICIAL SAYS CENSUS OF EMPLOYERS, WORKERS PLANNED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 24 Feb 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Monsa Iyaka Duku]

[Text] In a statement made to our paper recently, the state commissioner for labor and social security, citizen Mbaya Ngang, announced that his department will be proceeding with a general census of Zaire employers and workers in the near future. All the arrangements have been made so that this operation will proceed in an orderly fashion.

The importance of this operation is not to be disregarded, as it is still true that several companies are not operating according to the rules and many are evading state control. Consequently, thousands of workers have no social security, because they are not registered with the INSS [National Social Security Institute], or even with UNTZA [National Union of Workers of Zaire].

This operation is therefore very timely, as the Executive Council has just asked the Department of Labor to do everything possible to protect Zaire's work force. This study will surely lead the Executive Council to regulate the importation of foreign labor.

In other matters, the state commissioner for labor and social security is leaving Kinshasa on Friday for a working trip to Lubumbashi. He will join the delegation of the INSS board members who left Kinshasa on Tuesday to examine the situation in the office for awarding family allowances now operating in Shaba with a view to gradually expanding it.

After Lubumbashi, the delegation will go to Kisangani and then to Mbuji-Mayi on a similar mission. During its stay in the major towns of the regions it is visiting, it will also study methods for paying pensions.

CNECI PAYS DEBTS--Depositors to whom CNECI [National Savings and Real Estate Credit Fund] still owes money can withdraw it on Wednesday, 24 February 1982, at the Fund's teller windows, citizen Kayanda Buloba, administrative agent, revealed to AZAP [Agence Zaire Presse]. At the conclusion of the provisional management committee meeting on Monday, he specified that the operation will begin in the morning for those depositors who turned in their passbooks last Friday and Saturday, and after that will continue for other depositors. The official withdrawal (order for bank transfer) from the Department of Finance and Budget has already been prepared for this purpose, he also announced at the end of this meeting, which was chaired by citizen Londole Lok Ekofo, secretary of state for the budget. The decision thus relieves the depositors' concern over withdrawal of their funds following dissolution of CNECI. [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 24 Feb 82 p 1] 9693

ZAIRIAN MILITARY REPORTEDLY MISTREAT ZAMBIAN CAPTIVES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

ZAIREAN military authorities at Kipushi are ill-treating 19 Zambians detained there since March, a mother of one of the captives charged in Ndola yesterday.

Mrs Mabel Knight Mwansa, a nurse at Ndola Central Hospital, said her son Harry is among 15 males, two females and two children being held at Kipushi since their abduction at Mokambo border post on March 1.

"My son and others are in a terrible state. They are denied food and are beaten everyday. The Zairean soldiers are saying they will not release the Zambians until Zambian authorities release two Zairean soldiers allegedly abducted in Solwezi," she said.

Among the Zambian captives are Pascal Mbulo, a relative of Women's League Executive secretary Mrs Chibesa Kankasa, Michael Mutale, the son of Kitwe women's regional secretary Mrs Betty Chimfwembe and Elford Banda of house number 9229 Chimwemwe township in Kitwe.

Mrs Mwansa said she had escorted her son to Kawambwa on March 1 up to Mokambo. While waiting for a bus she sent her son to buy refreshments on the Zairean border where he was immediately abducted with other Zambians. When she went there to complain she was told off.

She rushed to Mufulira district governor's office to file a report on her missing son.

Between March 1 and 10 she made several trips to and from Zaire in an effort to trace her son with the help of diplomats at the Zambian consulate in Lubumbashi.

"On March 10 I was accompanied by Mr B. Mwandu, a Zambian consul officer, to Kipushi where we were informed the Zambians were being held. There, the Zairean military authorities demanded K70 and a bag of mealie meal before showing us the prisoners but after pleading that I wanted to see my son to give him some food they finally opened a windowless hut and my son came out with others," she said.

Mrs Mwansa stayed at Kipushi for a week feeding her son and others. She said there the captives looked weak because of lack of food.

The Zambian consulate in Lubumbashi promised her the captives would be released before the end of March after Member of the Central Committee for the Copperbelt Province Mr Alex Shapi and Shaba province governor Mr Mandungu Bula Nyati meet to discuss the issue.

GENERAL URGES ZCRS TO USE ZAMBIAN PERSONNEL IN SENSITIVE AREAS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

COMMANDER of the Zambia Army Lieutenant-General Malimba Masheke has urged the Zambia Red Cross to consider using Zambian personnel during operations in sensitive areas.

And Gen Masheke attacked Red Cross societies in Namibia and South Africa for not maintaining their neutrality.

He said there was need for a well coordinated and executed approach to the provision of services to people by both the Red Cross Society and the army.

The army chief noted that in carrying out its work the Zambia Red Cross could have come across problems related to operating in the same area as the army.

Military activity was secretive by nature and suspicions easily arose where non-military people asked to enter military operational areas, he said.

In an address to the national council of the Zambia Red Cross Society at the weekend Gen Masheke said a lot of problems could be solved by the ZRCS and the army by coordinating their efforts.

"In this respect I make an appeal to you (Zambia Red Cross) to consider using Zambians.

"My appeal should not be interpreted to mean that non-Zambian personnel of the Zambia Red Cross Society are not welcome."

Gen Masheke warned that without a common and co-ordinated strategy to these situations the hope for success would be as "remote as a horse giving birth to a buffalo."

This strategy was called for after the realisation that disasters were often not predictable.

As a people's army, the Zambia Army stood ready for the national call of service particularly in emergency situations.

On Namibia and South Africa he said there were a lot of people who had become displaced and were suffering in many ways.

These people equally needed similar help as the Red Cross was giving elsewhere.

"I am aware that the ZRCS is not accountable for the misdeeds of their sister organisations in Namibia or South Africa, but I believe that you are part and parcel of the International League of the Red Cross Society," he said.

PRESIDENT Kaunda arrived back in Lusaka last night from Pyongyang, Korea, where he had led a 57-man delegation to attend the 70th birthday celebrations of Korean leader Comrade Kim Il Sung who has accepted an invitation to pay a state visit to Zambia at a date to be announced.

The acceptance was communicated to President Kaunda by Comrade Kim Il Sung when he paid a farewell visit to Dr Kaunda's guest villa.

Dr Kaunda recited a poem dedicated to Comrade Kim Il Sung's leadership. He described the Korean leader as a man who had the welfare of mankind at heart and for whom it was an honour that Zambia should be counted as among some of the friends.

ANTI-CORRUPTION BODY TO PROBE 'INCREASINGLY RAMPANT' CORRUPTION

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 18 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Patu Simoko]

[Text]

THE newly established anti-corruption commission is already being inundated with reports on alleged corruption of public workers.

The commission will start investigating cases of corruption in the public service — said to be increasingly rampant — within the next few months.

Anti-corruption commissioner Mr Justice William Bruce-Lyle told the Sunday Times that a team of investigations officers had been hired and would report for work 12 days from today.

Mr Justice Bruce-Lyle, who is acting Chief Justice, said numerous reports on alleged corruption of public workers were already pouring in. These reports would have to wait until the commission becomes fully operational.

The investigators, who start work on May 1, are mostly university graduates and will undergo a two-month intensive training course after which investigations work will start.

Mr Justice Bruce-Lyle reiterated what Mr Wilted Phiri, then home affairs minister, said in Parliament that it was becoming increasingly difficult to investigate cases of corruption.

He dismissed suggestions that the anti-corruption commission would only duplicate the work of the Special Investigating Team on the Economy and Trade (SITET), the Zambia Police, and the Party Leadership Code committee.

The anti-corruption commission has been granted unprecedented powers and will be responsible to the President in its operations.

When Mr Phiri, now special assistant to the President presented the Anti-Corruption Bill to the National Assembly in August 1980 he said: "Compared to the first half of last year in which 17 cases of corruption were reported to the police, 85 cases of corruption have been reported to the police during the first half of this year.

"This represents an increase of 500 per cent," he explained. In a number of cases public workers entered into corrupt deals through which they offered favours to firms which in turn credited their illicit bank accounts abroad.

Conceded the failure by both SITET and the Zambia Police to arrest the situation the minister said: "Time and again the powers now held by the police of SITFT have proved inadequate to permit the assembly of enough hard evidence to prove all of the elements required for a successful prosecution under existing legislation on corruption contained in the Penal Code."

And during the interview with the Sunday Times, Mr Justice Bruce-Lyle, who was flanked by SITET expert Mr Len Norman, who will head the investigations branch as senior assistant commissioner, said once operational the anti-corruption commission would be fully geared to handle the situation.

According to the establishment register for the Zambian anti-corruption commission initially there will be 16 investigations officers, four senior investigations officers, two chief investigators under the supervision of a senior assistant commissioner.

The commission has been granted wide-ranging legal powers including searching the premises of any public institution at any time of the day without any warrant — the only exception is premises of the armed forces.

And Mr Justice Bruce-Lyle emphasised during the interview that the Act would be enforced retroactively. Investigations would be carried out into how some public servants amassed wealth even before this Act was enacted.

The commission has been given powers to investigate public officers who are visibly living beyond their means.

According to the law, an officer who "maintains a standard of living above that which is commensurate with his present or past official emoluments," and owns property beyond his affordability will be probed.

These investigations have been extended to "any bank account, share account, purchase account, expense account or any other account, or any safe deposit in any bank."

Any person holding back such information may be locked up for five years or in addition be fined K5,000.

INTERNATIONAL ACCOUNTING FIRM SAYS NEW TAX SYSTEM TO HARM BUSINESS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Apr 82 p 4

[Excerpt]

THE controversial Income Tax (Amendment) Act 1982 Bill passed through Parliament unchanged and received Presidential assent on April 4. It was published in the Government Gazette on April 8.

In its latest edition of Update a firm of international accountants, Deloitte Haskins and Sells, summarises the changes.

In an introduction the authors say that all businesses will be badly affected by the new tax payment system.

Farmers have been favourably treated with a further reduction in their maximum rate of income tax, but there is still no proposal to introduce legislation to remove the major disincentives for individual farming through an incorporated body.

"The welcome changes proposed in the Bill must be outweighed by the proposed tax payment system which threatens the existence of many private companies and other businesses in Zambia," says the summary.

Interest

Major changes are in the new tax payment system, undistributed profit tax, tax rate, equity levy, capital allowances, personal allowances and deductions and exempt interest.

Under the new tax payment system businesses are required from 1982/3 to pay income tax quarterly on an advance estimate of profits for the year with additional penalties for large underestimates of tax. Minor transitional provisions for the payment of 1981/2 income tax are included.

Undistributed profits tax has been abolished and replaced by the commissioner's discretionary powers to counteract transactions designed to avoid, or reduce, tax payable.

The standard rate of company tax has been reduced to 45 per cent from 50 per cent and the maximum rate of tax on farming income to 15 per cent from 25 per cent.

Where the equity levy charged on parastatal companies with low tax payments exceeds the income tax due for the year the income tax charge is cancelled.

An investment allowance of 20 per cent is now given on new plant used in a manufacturing business rather than only on plant to be used in the manufacturing process. New capital allowance for rural soft drinks manufacturers are proposed which are disadvantageous for the first three years of ownership.

Increased personal allowances and deductions for payments to pension funds or retirement annuities are proposed. Election is now possible to split the married allowance between husband and wife.

MUNDIA URGES UNZA TO SUPPLY MORE INFORMATION ON ECONOMY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

PRIME Minister Mundia urged the University of Zambia to play a greater role in supplying information to the Government on economy for it to make informed policy decisions.

He said financial economics covered monetary fiscal, prices and incomes policy matters. Research into these areas was of vital importance to the Government to make suitable programme adjustments.

Economics not only dealt with the terms of trade between countries but involved various geographical parts of the country and particularly between the rural and the urban areas.

All these areas needed to be explored by dedicated and committed researchers. And the Government looked forward to their findings.

The Prime Minister said this at the University of Zambia yesterday when he launched the University's Bank of Zambia chair of financial economics at the Great East Road campus.

The bank's chair is part of Unza but aims at promoting a working relationship between the university, the bank, the Party and its Government and other financial institutions.

Part of its function is to conduct research into financial economics and to integrate research into teaching programmes both in undergraduate and graduate programmes at Unza.

Mr Mundia said the decision to re-align or devalue currency was one which should depend on a very clear perception of the working of the economy and should consider the effects such re-alignment would have.

Decisions of this kind rested with the Government on advice from the Bank of Zambia.

"It is, therefore, in the national interest that we are able to look to unbiased sources of information and opinions on the state of the economy."

On unemployment, he said it was the most serious problem that Zambia had ever faced.

The scourge could not be contained by stop-gap measures.

He noted that only limited jobs were available even for highly qualified people.

"We are fighting a battle now just to maintain the numbers that are already in full employment. It is for this reason that I have stressed the need for exploiting and expanding the opportunities that do exist in informal employment areas."

MINISTER SAYS GOVERNMENT PRUNED CIVIL SERVICE BY THOUSAND JOBS

[Excerpt]

THE Government pruned the civil service by about 10,000 jobs between 1980 and 1981 in an exercise to achieve effectiveness, Minister of State for the Civil Service, DR MUTUMBA BULL said in Parliament yesterday.

Dr Bull's breakdown of the reductions in the civil service, Police and Prisons and Teaching Service commissions over the last three years as follows:

In 1980 the establishment had 80,916 vacancies;

In 1981, there were 72,853 vacancies and:

In 1982 the figure dropped to 70,901 vacancies.

The pruning was aimed at achieving a high degree of efficiency, she said during a question and answer session in reply to Liuwa MP, Mr NATHAN NAMUCHANA who asked what the Government had done in view of the country's sagging economy.

Vacancies in the civil service arose when officers retired, were dismissed or died.

Some vacancies became available when projects were completed.

Dr Bull said since last year, the Government had restricted the growth of the civil service by freezing employing people to fill vacant posts. This meant that no money was provided by Parliament for such vacant posts.

MPS GRILL MINISTERS ON TEACHING OF SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 23 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

MEMBERS of Parliament yesterday grilled the Government on why the teaching of scientific socialism had been introduced in some institutions of learning without the consent of the people.

The backbenchers also asked whether the introduction of the subject would mean abandoning the philosophy of Humanism.

They grilled Minister of Education and Culture, Mr Frederick Hapunda in Parliament yesterday over the issue.

The minister said scientific socialism was being taught not to turn students into communists but to make them aware of its ideals like any other subjects under political education.

He was answering Luwingu East MP, Mr John Chalwe on reasons for introducing the subject when scientific socialism had not been discussed and approved by the UNIP National Council and the public.

Mr Chalwe asked Mr Hapunda to tell the House who decided on this policy without consulting the masses.

Matero MP, Mr Francis Nkhoma said the minister was aware of the difference between "socialism, which is communism as an ideology, and mathematics, and geography which are purely academic disciplines."

Zambia decided to adopt Humanism as embodied in Humanism Part One and Part Two.

Mr Nkhoma said he planned to bring a motion on this issue.

At this point, Minister of Health Mr Ben Kakoma asked whether Mr Nkhoma was in order to debate the matter instead of proceeding on his point of order.

Halted

Speaker of the National Assembly Mr Robinson Nabulyato halted Mr Nkhoma's contribution and proceeded to the next item on the order paper.

Kapoche MP, Reverend Ben Zulu asked Mr Hapunda whether the philosophy of Humanism had been abandoned in schools and replaced by scientific socialism.

Mr Zulu asked why the Government wasted efforts in printing Humanism Part One and Part Two books.

Mr Hapunda said the ministry was teaching political education and students would be exposed to some of its important aspects.

Once scientific socialism was included on the syllabus and accepted by the Party and its Government, the ministry did not intend to put it to public debate.

EDUCATION CAMPAIGN TO INDUCE PEOPLE TO LOOK AFTER INDUSTRIAL FORESTS URGED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Apr 82 p 2

[Excerpt]

MINISTER of State for Lands and Natural Resources Mrs Bathsheba Ng'andu has appealed to the public to stop the wanton destruction of industrial plantations through fires if timber requirements are to be realised.

The Industrial Plantation Division (IPD) lost about 100,000 trees every year because of bush fires which represented a terrific loss in revenue.

Unless such destructive tendencies were stopped, the nation would find it dificult to attain self-sufficiency and would continue to depend on imported timber.

Mrs Ng'andu appealed to the Party on the Copperbelt to mount a political education campaign to teach people the need to look after industrial forests and she welcomed efforts taken by the office of the provincial permanent secretary towards achieving this goal.

Efforts complete

The minister was speaking at the start of her two-day tour of industrial plantations and other forestry sections on the Copperbelt accompanied by chief conservator of forests Mr Backlaws Chivabwe.

Efforts to transform the Industrial Plantations Division into a corporation were almost complete, she said.

The new company to fall under the Ministry of Lands and Natural Resources will be known as the Zambia Forests and Forest Industry Corporation (ZAFFICO).

Mrs Ng'andu hoped that once it became a corporation it would strive to do better and ensure that all the country's timber requirements were met.

ISLAMIC EDUCATIONAL TRUST BUILDS COLLEGE OF HIGHER ISLAMIC STUDIES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Apr 82 p 7

[Text]

THE Islamic Educational Trust of Zambia has constructed a college of higher Islamic studies at which Muslim children will be taught traditions of their religion.

The college, which is two km from the Lusaka International Airport turn-off was built out of donations from the Muslim community in Zambia.

According to the trust's publicity chairman Mr Haroon Ghumra, the college would enrol about 20 students when it opens in three months' time.

Mr Ghumra said the first phase of the project involved construction of 12 hostels costing about K100,000.

The trust would soon launch a second phase of the project which would involve the construction of an administration block and if funds permitted, a vocational training centre for children from a cross section of the Zambian community.

The college idea was first mooted in 1977 but its construction started in 1978 when funds became available.

Among the things that would be taught are moral values, advanced religion and technical skills for effective nation building.

It was not yet decided how long the courses would take but all tuition would be free.

Students would be selected on merit and priority would go to those with a basic Islamic knowledge and should be fluent in reading the Ouraan.

He urged Muslims who have promised to make contributions to the trust to do so now so that the second phase of the project could start.

[Excerpt]

THE output of the Zambia National Service (ZNS) camps and the rural reconstruction centres reflects very little profit measured against the total financial input.

This came to light in Parliament yesterday when Minister of State for Youth and Sport Mr Aston Phiri gave figures of agricultural produce from the camps and centres with the funds pumped into them.

He gave the figures of both the produce and the capital investment in reply to questions from Kawambwa MP Mr Titus Mukupo who asked what revenue had been collected from the camps and centres and an indication of what proportion the revenue was to the total financial input.

Expenditure

Mr Phiri said the total agricultural produce from all the camps was worth K83,455.60 against a total expenditure of K51,380.36 during the 1978/79 season and K406,454.90 against a total expenditure of K119,833.10 during the 1979/80 season.

For the 1980/81 season a total revenue of K673,223.78 was realised against K269,662.84 spent on inputs.

The revenue collected was from various crops including maize, sunflower, cotton, wheat, rice and groundnuts.

It was only the 1980/81 season figure which cheered some MPs while others felt there should have been an improvement considering the machinery and the huge number of people involved in production work.

Total agricultural produce from rural reconstruction centres for the period 1978 to 1981 was worth K1,128,456.52 but Mr Phiri did not give the financial input figures.

UNZA ADMINISTRATION FAILS TO CLOSE EAST ROAD CAMPUS

Mwanza To Issue Statement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Apr 82 p 4

[Text]

THE Great East Road campus of the University of Zambia should have been closed last Thursday had the administration followed one of the university council's regulations to the letter.

The regulation stipulates that the university is to be closed for five months in the event of students declining to attend classes for any period exceeding three days — but the administration waived this requirement hoping the class boycott would end.

The university's vice-chancellor Dr Jacob Mwanza said yesterday the administration had not enforced the council's requirement because "we have been waiting and hoping the boycott would be ended."

But this morning Dr Mwanza will issue a crucial statement outlining the decision the administration has taken in view of the students' determination to continue the boycott which enters its seventh day today.

Indications are that the university will be closed and most students who reside in Lusaka have already moved their luggage to their homes in anticipation of closure.

Dr Mwanza could not reveal the decision he is going to announce today because "we have been asked not to talk to the Press about this thing for the time being. But we will definitely make a statement outlining our stand at about 10.00 hours tomorrow."

He did not say who had made the request not to talk to the Press.

He said in event of closure, external assessors, who are due in Zambia in June for the final examinations, would be asked not to come.

The students have stayed out of classes since the beginning of the university term on April 12 to press their demands that four expelled student leaders and 15 others suspended be reinstated.

The university administration took the action because the student executive had clearly abused their freedom by their behaviour and arrogance against public property and legally constituted authority.

"The union executive had demonstrated this by issuing circulars framed in unrestrained language and by other acts of indiscipline clearly contemptuous of university authority."

When the university reopened the students refused to attend lectures and have since defied appeals from Minister of Education and Culture Mr Frederick Hapunda, Dr Mwanza and campus principal Professor Kasuka Mwauluka to resume classes.

They have pledged to go back to classes when their colleagues have been reinstated.

The boycott has sparked off a flurry of behind-the -scenes consultations among the administration, Freedom House and the ministry.

Last week Unza authorities held talks with Mr Hapunda and undisclosed officials at Freedom House in a bid to find a solution to the problem.

The students' cause is understood to have won the sympathy of some lecturers especially in the school of education and among staff development fellows.

The students have collected donations on the campus to enable their colleagues to meet the cost of challenging the action of the administration to expel them in court.

Only Kaunda Can Resolve Deadlock

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE nation should somehow escape from the dangerous deadlock at the Great East Road campus of Unza. The stalemate has been compounded by rigidity, ideologies and partisan politicians. We may need new rules for new problems.

Since nobody is quite sure what to do everybody backs into familiar positions and stays put. So there they are moored, bombarding each other with conventional foolishness while the nation clamours for common sense and pragmatism to prevail.

The students are boycotting classes until those expelled and suspended are reinstated. The Unza administration naturally does not want its authority to be undermined.

So from that premise the closure of Unza is imminent. This would be the ultimate calamity. Student careers would be destroyed. Public capital invested in the production of skilled manpower would be wastefully dissipated.

It would also scatter around the country disaffected students. The nation would then be playing right into the hands of its enemies because idle hands make for mischief.

The nation understands the solidarity felt by the students for their comrades. But the fact is that offences have been committed. Property, including food, has been destroyed.

The public has been inconvenienced in their legitimate business. Students who wish to resume classes have been intimidated. The students have even attacked the Press.

Yet, in every country in the world outside fascist dictatorships, the right of journalists to report without being molested is inviolate. Also, the students' mode of protest is irrational.

They are wrong to think that by boycotting classes they are using a weapon against the administration. That weapon damages themselves and future generations of Unza students.

Further, there is no sign of public responsibility or national spirit amongst the student leaders.

But as the main story on this page shows, the Unza administration has shown deplorable weakness. The present defiance of authority also shows the lack of communication between the students and the administrators. This is vital in any institution.

Must the nation therefore throw up its hands in despair and allow its highest institute of learning to be closed? Surely the nation is not as helpless or immature as that.

So, as a newspaper, we echo what our sister, the Sunday Times of Zambia said yesterday in pleading with the students to return to classes today. We go further than that.

Our proposal, which we make without any qualms, could preserve the autonomy of the university and begin to build a bridge between the students and the administrators.

There remains only one individual with university office who has taken no part in this dispute. This is none other than the chancellor himself, President Kaunda.

Unhappily, in Zambia we ask far too much of our President. It seems grossly unfair that just as he has returned from a most exhausting journey to North Korea, he should find this crisis at Unza.

We are sorry to suggest an extra burden for our over-worked President.

But we believe that he alone can save the nation from tragedy. He as chancellor is the only arbitrator with the power to resolve the Unza deadlock which he will be the first to recognise as a threat to the nation's security and political future.

The President should not have to involve himself personally. But as chancellor we feel that he might consider appointing an independent tribunal to examine every aspect of the crisis.

Such a tribunal could preferably be chaird by a judge and composed of only two other people. It should report within a week, for the matter is not complicated but is very urgent. But the suggestion should be practical.

So, on the possible announcement of the appointment of a tribunal, the students must resume classes immediately. Those who do not do so should have their Government grants withdrawn. The nation does not pay taxes to subsidise idle sunbathers.

The Unza administration should also guarantee that it would accept the findings of such a tribunal. So both sides will have made a slight concession and Unza would not be closed at all.

MINERS REJECT PENSION PLAN

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 25 Mar 82 p 1

[Text]

KITWE MINERS HAVE rejected the new pension scheme which comes into effect on Thursday next week.

About 300 miners mostly technicians and artisans yesterday walked out of a meeting called to brief them on the new scheme, at Rokana club.

They claimed they were not consulted on the new pension scheme by the Mineworkers Union of Zambia MUZ which initiated the scheme recently.

What the union agreed to was something the miners had earlier thrown out when asked for views on the matter, they claimed.

Nchanga Consolidated Copper Miners [NCCM] assistant personnel manager, Mr Barncly Lombe whose fourman team first showed the miners a film explaining the new scheme, was bombarded with questions as he tried to illustrate it.

The walkout came while Mr Lombe was trying to tell the miners that under the MUZ constitution, the union was empowered to negotiate and sign agreements with management on behalf of its members.

Most miners said they had no quarrel with the mine managements. What they did not like was that the union agreed to the scheme when members had originally rejected it few months ago.

They also asked why no union official had come to attend the briefing session.

FARMERS SAY WHEAT PRODUCTION PLAN MUST BE BACKED BY CAPITAL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Apr 82 p 4

[Text]

COMMERCIAL farmers have expressed doubt about the success of long-term wheat production unless the programme is fully backed by capital and other incentives.

response to the farmers' anxiety the Government has gone all out to mobilise resources from within and outside Zambia to boost crop production by at least 50 per cent by next year.

In addition to the increased participation by Canada into the venture the Agricultural Finance Company (AFC) was last January reported to have recruited 40 farmers for its massive scheme expected to produce 90,000 tonnes of wheat by end of 1983.

Although the idea sounds impressive commercial farmers warn that if 50,000 hectares of wheat and barley is to be achieved in ten years then some 4,600 hectares a year need to be added to the irrigated crop area.

"It is unlikely that this amount of development will take place unless massive backing is given to the industry in the form of electrical supply machinery, irrigation equipment, seed fertiliser, chemicals and back-up research to ensure that disease factor does not overtake production" they say.

In the latest Productive Farming, an official journal of the Commercial Farmers Bureau (CFB), the farmers contend that demand for wheat is in the region of 180,000 metric tonnes a year which would cost some K50 million to import.

FARMERS BUREAU ASKS GOVERNMENT TO INCREASE MAIZE PRICE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Apr 82 p 2

[Excerpt]

THE Commercial Farmers Bureau has appealed to the Government to increase the producer price of maize to encourage overplanting to ensure a surplus in the production of maize during seasons of inadequate rainfall.

An editorial in the latest issue of Productive Farming magazine says overplanting of the crop will help offset a deficit during bad growing seasons which have been experienced frequently in recent years.

"If we can achieve more than three months surplus over our yearly needs we can export to Zaire and Angola both of which are able to pay in hard currency."

The editorial stresses that farming was a gamble and the Government should be aware of this and continue to set realistic prices that encouraged maximum planting.

The Government should come back this season with another incentive price in order for those farmers who have taken a loss this year to respond with even a greater acreage next year.

Once the farmers are in a surplus, the Government can adjust production as it chooses by greater or smaller increases in the producer price.

"But until we get the combination of a good price and a good rainy season the Government's room for manoeuvre is rather limited."

The commercial sector produces between 40 and 45 per cent of the marketed maize in the country but in a bad season such as the present one the commercial farmers' share of the crop will rise as high as 55 to 65 per cent.

This fact highlights the value of the commercial sector's contribution to evening out what would otherwise be a wildly fluctuating production curve of feast or famine.

"This is not to say that commercial yields will not be affected by the current miserable season but those farmers who planted their crops in November and used 500 kg or more of fertiliser per hectare will have at least a break-even crop."

MINISTER OPENS FIRST SORGHUM, MILLET WORKSHOP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Apr 82 p 7

[Text]

LACK of official policy on millet and sorghum has hampered the development and production of the two crops in Zambia.

It was high time the Party and its Government developed a clear policy on the crops, assistant director of agriculture and research, Mr Winter Chibasa said yesterday.

He was speaking at the official opening of the first ever sorghum and millet workshop, opened by Minister of State for Agriculture and Water Development Mr Justin Mukando at Mount Makulu Research Station.

"We in the research branch cannot and will not formulate our own policy guidelines.

"But we have the responsibility of drawing the nation's attention to potential technologies and production systems. We have a duty to solve problems, provide alternatives and open new horizons," he told the minister.

Crops like maize, soya beans, sunflower, cotton, wheat and rice have had their producer prices increased on several occasions to boost production, but missing from this list were millet and sorghum which were grown by the majority of rural farmers.

Initiate

Supporting Mr Chibasa, Mr Mukando said the problem with the development of sorghum and millet in Zambia did not lie with production as such, but there were agronomic issues needing to be solved first.

The main problem was with marketing and eventual utilisation of the crops. Potential end users or processors of the crops had also not come forward to initiate the development process of the crops.

He said the crops' potential was almost unlimited but the increased production above existing levels would require full and complete cooperation from potential processors and end users.

Giving an example, he said it had already been demonstrated that sorghum flour could substitute wheat flour up to 20 per cent without affecting the quality of bread.

"This means that we can save at least 20 per cent in foreign exchange in wheat imports."

He told the workshop that commitment was there but certain facts needed to be considered before the authorities could make a policy on the issue.

MINISTER SAYS TRUCKS DONATED TO BOOST FOOD PROGRAM 'MISUSED'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 23 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

SOME trucks donated to Zambia by friendly countries and international organisations to boost the operation food production programme are being misused by administrators in provinces, permanent secretary in the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development Mr Namukolo Mukutu said in Lusaka yesterday.

He had received "very disturbing reports" that some trucks were being used to ferry civil servants on transfers while some of them were put to jobs totally unrelated to agriculture.

Speaking when he received 71 new trucks from Minister of Works and Supply Mr Haswell Mwale at the Mechanical Services Department (MSD) Mr Mukutu warned his ministry would deal stiffly with any administrator found misusing the trucks.

The trucks were acquired for use in transporting farm produce and implements and this was why they were deployed in districts.

There was supposed to be enough agricultural activity in all districts to keep the trucks occupied and administrators must find alternative transport for any other use.

On the new trucks Mr Mukutu said they came at a critical time when his ministry was bracing itself for this year's harvest.

He said although the harvest would not be a bumper one the ministry expected enough maize to keep all the trucks constantly on the road.

And handing the keys for the Fiat and Mitsubishi trucks to Mr Mukutu, Mr Mwale urged the agricultural ministry to ensure drivers of the vehicles had enough time to adjust themselves to the machines.

He said if the drivers had to go on long trips now a good number of the trucks were likely to be smashed because they had complicated systems.

It had been necessary for the Government to bring in sturdy trucks which could reach more remote areas where private transporters had found it difficult to reach because of poor roads.

PROLONGED FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE MIGHT HAVE 'FAR-REACHING' RESULTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Mar 82 p 4

[Text]

THE prolonged foot-and-mouth disease in the Southern Province might have far-reaching consequences to farmers and beef consumers in towns if it continues.

Unless the disease is controlled and the ban on livestock movement lifted within the next six weeks, commercial cattle will start to die through overcrowding and starvation, leading ranchers in the province have warned.

General manager of Zambezi Ranching Corporation (ZRC) Mr Eric King said yesterday the effects of the recurring disease were aggravated by poor rainfall this year.

Speaking in a telephone interview from Mazabuka, Mr King said: "Because of poor rains, there isn't enough grass for grazing. At the same time, a lot of cattle that should have been sold have to be kept and fed on the farms."

There was great danger that cattle would die from overcrowding and starvation as stock concentration was not eased by sales.

ZRC runs several ranches in the Southern Province, mainly in Mazabuka, Choma, Kalomo and Zimba with animal husbandry experience stretching from pre-independence days.

Mr King said when cattle no longer graze on their own, serious feeding starts. The corporation spends up to K5,000 monthly on cattle feed and general health of the animals on a single farm.

"You can imagine what it would mean if we had to spend such amounts of money and at the same time pay the workers for a whole year while we are not selling any cattle."

Meanwhile, the major vaccination campaign against the foot-and-mouth disease has been completed in the Southern Province, say veterinary sources in Choma.

But the campaign would have to be repeated in three weeks and a general inspection made before any decision would be taken to lift the livestock movement ban.

The livestock movement restriction this year is likely to worry small-scale farmers who normally depend on cattle sales for money to send children to school and meet other expenses.

BRIEFS

UNIP-MPLA COOPERATION PROTOCOL--The Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) and the United National Independence Party (UNIP) yesterday signed a protocol of co-operation embracing a wide range of fields. Chairman of the Political and Legal Committee, Mr Reuben Kamanga, signed on behalf of UNIP and the visiting member of the Central Committee, Mr Alfonso van Dunem Mbinda signed for the Angolan Party. The protocol is intended to strengthen the existing ties between the two parties and widen the scope of co-operation in order to benefit peoples of both countries. Mr Kamanga hailed the completion of the protocol and said it was a culmination of official talks between Zambian and Angolan delegations and paid tribute to President Kaunda and the late Angolan leader Agostinho Neto and said the two leaders were the "pioneers" of the protocol because of their desire to see an improvement in relations. SWEDISH DEVELOPMENT AID--Sweden is to spend K27 million in development aid to Zambia during the fiscal year 1982 to 1983, Swedish ambassador to Zambia Mr Goran Hasselmark has said. Mr Hasselmark, who was speaking at the commissioning of the aluminium extrusion plant of Zamefa in Luanshya by Zimco director-general Mr James Mapoma on Tuesday, said his country was committed to invest in Zambia's development projects. The K27 million would be used for the development of projects in agriculture, health and education. He said Sweden was looking forward to the expansion of bilateral relationships with Zambia. The envoy said Zambia was one of the most important trading partners of Sweden in Africa and was happy that one of the Swedish companies had invested in Zamefa. The development cooperation which exists between the two countries should be exploited to strengthen the ties. He called on workers at Zamefa to feel proud of working for such a company which was contributing a lot to the economy of Zambia. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Apr 82 p 5]

PRIME MINISTER MUGABE STRESSES NATIONAL UNITY

Harare THE HERALD in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by Ndaba Nyoni]

[Text]

NO Zimbabwean should suffer because he belongs to a tribe which is not part of the Government, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said in Harare yesterday.

Speaking at a luncheon attended by more than 1 000 pupils from Group A and B primary schools in Harare and Mashonaland East, he said the Government did not feel that since it was predominantly black, only black people were important.

"There is no great tribe or superior race in Zimbabwe. We all have equal status and Government will always care for us in the same way regardless of race or tribe."

He said that in the past people had regarded themselves as black, white, Coloured or Asian and in some cases as Zezuru or Ndebele.

"Our cultural and racial background should not divide us. Indeed we should, from our cultural backgrounds, be able to contribute to the national culture of our country so that whatever our cultural backgrounds are, they should be used for building up the national concept of oneness.

"We should feel we are one, although we have separate lives at home and nobody should interfere with that."

Mr Mugabe said all races had to accept one another as friends and look for those areas of agreement which would continue to bind the different races and cultures in Zimbabwe.

Zimbabwe's independence had a meaning to everybody and from the day of independence, everyone owed one loyalty to the country, he said.

The Prime Minister said it was important for all Zimbabweans to teach their children to accept other races as friends and build in them a sense of unity.

"We should start doing so at the level of our children where we should influence the child in a positive way so that he grows up knowing what the rules of society are and who his or her neighbour is. This is how we would like to see the country develop."

He urged the pupils to work hard and be more disciplined.

"As we begin our third year of independence, I hope everyone will do his best at school because if you don't, the country will not do well in future."

Mr Mugabe told the pupils that in the next 15 to 20 years the Government would be depending on them and it was important for them to prepare for their future which they could successfully do by listening to their teachers and leaders.

He praised teachers and pupils for their good performance over the past two years.

The luncheon was also attended by Mrs Sally Mugabe; the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda; the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, and the newly-appointed Deputy Minister of Education and Culture, Senator Tsitsi Munyati.

The Prime Minister was entertained by displays of traditional dancing, school choirs, gymnastics, and music from Safirio Madzikatire, the Sea Cottage Sisters and the Brave Sun.

● Mr Mugabe rounded off the independence weekend last night at a gala performance of Mbuya Nehanda: Mweya Werusununguko (The Spirit of Liberation) at the 7 Arts Theatre in Harare.

MAHACHI ATTACKS MULTINATIONALS' RELUCTANCE TO COOPERATE

Harare THE HERALD in English 17 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text]

MULTINATIONAL companies are reluctant to go into joint agricultural ventures with the Government, the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, said yesterday.

The firms, which owned vast tracts of land, had also refused to grant unused land to the State, and had resisted going into joint-development ventures with the Government on some of their unused land.

The minister said several approaches had been made by the Government asking the multinationals to surrender some of their undeveloped farms and they had been unwilling to do so.

"Multinationals are capitalist and will give nothing free. All they want is to sell land to the Government," Mr Mahachi said in an interview.

"Some have said they are studying our proposals and requests and we hope they will see sense. The Government has said, 'give us what you cannot develop or let us develop together', but the response has not been encouraging."

The minister warned that if the companies continued to be negative, the Government would have to use its powers to force them to give away land. He pointed out that there was no quarrel about land being fully utilised because land was a great potential for the whole nation.

'NOT ENOUGH'

The companies had offered land to the Government for sale, but it was not enough. More was needed for the massive resettlement programme the Government had embarked upon immediately after independence.

Mr Mahachi explained that so far a total of 757 540 hectares had been acquired by the Government at a cost of about $15 240 000. The amount included land purchase and development.

Under the three-year programme, the Government would require 4 million hectares to settle 54 000 families at a cost of $240 million. There were plans under way to settle 10 000 families between May and August this year.

The minister said although there were problems in the exercise, significant progress had been made. He said the problems being encountered included lack of water, the security situation and misunderstanding of the programme by the people. "I should like to say that we are gradually overcoming these problems."

Land distribution would be an ongoing exercise and the determining factor would be the level of production. It was the wish of the Government that more food for local consumption and export should be produced by the peasant farmers.

FORCED

Priority in land distribution would continue to be given to people who earned their living from the soil. People in employment would not be allowed to own land on farms being acquired by the Government.

Mr Mahachi said the Government did not intend to act against employed people who were working their land in the communal areas, but would like them to invest money in improving their production for the benefit of all.

He warned that should they not use the land fully, the Government would be forced to either take it away or reduce its size and give more to those who could make maximum use of it.

The Government was determined to spread the wealth of the country evenly. People who had nothing to do had to be found something to give them a living, he added.

On squatters, Mr Mahachi said the problem was gradually being overcome. He said the Government had sympathy for people who had settled on farms after the war but would not condone any more such action after it had acquired land for settlement.

MINISTER SLAMS BULAWAYO'S INDEPENDENCE DAY 'APATHY'

Harare THE HERALD in English 19 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze criticised Bulawayo for a "conspicuously" apathetic attitude to the second independence anniversary.

Speaking at a pre-independence dinner on Saturday night, he said the spirit of rejoicing in all other centres throughout Zimbabwe was replaced by a "frightening apathy" in Bulawayo.

Apart from the absence of cheerfulness, independence decorations were lacking in the city and their scarcity seemed to speak the minds of the Bulawayans about independence.

"Even the freedom fighters who had lost their lives to make independence possible must have turned in their graves at the indifference shown by Bulawayo."

He did, however, appreciate the outward fears of the local people. These were due to divided allegiance to national identity.

As Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Ushewokunze added, he had a duty to make sure that all people of Bulawayo were protected and left free to celebrate their independence peacefully.

The city council also came under criticism when Dr Ushewokunze said he was surprised to find that the "city fathers saw it fit to cut their contribution to the independence fund from $10 000 to a paltry $5 000".

He said that because of the indifference to national identity in Bulawayo, he had convinced the Prime Minister that it was necessary to establish an office there.

"So you find me with an office in Salisbury (now Harare) and here in Bulawayo in Tredgold Building."

MINISTER CHIDZERO TOASTS ZIMBANK SUCCESS

Harare THE HERALD in English 23 Apr 82 p 6

[Textw

THE Government's moves in acquiring shares in Zimbank and joining the private sector have proved profitable, the Minister of Finance, Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero, said yesterday.

Addressing a lunchtime meeting of the board of directors of Zimbank in Harare, Dr Chidzero said the Government had dispelled fears that whatever it did would be riddled with bureaucratic inefficiency.

"This Government, if anything, believes in efficiency and achieving results. It is a worn-out theory that argues that Government participation in the private sector spells doom.

"On the contrary its participation can bring a new dimension, vigour and orientation and I am happy that Zimbank has been a phenomenal success."

PROOF

Zimbank's training programmes, its efficient handling of banking activities and its relationship with other national and international institutions were ample proof that participation between the private sector and Government could succeed.

It was the Government's business to make sure that Zimbank succeeded not through interference but by ensuring that there was efficiency, Dr Chidzero said.

The Minister added that it was also essential to ensure that the training given young Zimbabweans remained of a high standard to enable the country to show the world that it could succeed.

The chairman of the Zimbabwe Banking Corporation, Mr C. G. Tracey who presented a six-monthly report of the corporation to the Minister, said they were increasing their dividends from 12c to 13½c.

This, he said, was an indication of how well they had been functioning in the past six months.

"Since the Government became a shareholder in the bank the relationship which had been established had been a cause for delight and augured well for future association between the Government and the banking corporation," Mr Tracey said.

● The Business Herald says the company's latest interim report reveals that assets and liabilities have expanded by 33 percent since last year to $393 million.

Zimbank's directors have also announced an increased dividend for the six months ended 31 March, 1982, of 13,5 cents. This is 1,5 cents more than for the same period last year.

Profits have shown a healthy climb to over $4 million, representing an increase of 15 percent over 1981.

Directors of the bank, which has been 61 percent owned by the Government since January last year, are satisfied with its progress and expect year-end profits and dividends by far to exceed those of last year.

CO-OPS SPEARHEAD OF SOCIALISM, SAYS MUTASA

Harare THE HERALD in English 17 Apr 82 p 3

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S pioneering co-operative farming societies are the spearhead of its socialist future and their growth a vital ingredient of a successful resettlement programme, the Speaker of the House of Assembly, Mr Didymus Mutasa, said yesterday.

He told the closing session of a three-day seminar for collective farming co-operative secretaries and chairmen in Salisbury that their success would make it easier for the Government to resettle families on commercial land.

"Your failure means the failure of Government's efforts and therefore of socialism.

"You have to grow and spread because the Government's task would be made difficult without you. We cannot impose co-operatives on the people.

"The people must see your growth and be convinced of your socialist goal," Mr Mutusa said.

The seminar was organised by the department of co-operative development in the Ministry of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development.

Mr Mutasa told the co-operative leaders they had to set a good example through their administration, management, work relations, understanding of modern farming methods and keeping good and accurate records of all their farming activities.

He encouraged them to implement what they had learnt at the seminar while at the same time adapting it to their local needs.

The co-operative leaders had come from all parts of Zimbabwe including Nyafaru, Binga, Matabeleland and Salisbury.

The group was encouraged to aim at self-reliance and not to depend on the Government.

"It is your initiative and efforts that will make your co-operatives succeed.

"The Government can only give you minimal help whenever possible. But we will try to aid co-ops which are working very hard to improve themselves," said Mr Mutasa.

He called on the leaders to satisfy the Government and donors that they were putting an effort into improving their co-operatives.

"Do not be disappointed when the Government tends to sit back and leave you on your own. We will need to see concrete improvements.

"And when the Government does help your co-operatives, it expects you to help other people, particularly those around you," Mr Mutasa said.

'APOSTLES'

Calling them the "apostles of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe", in the socialist goal, Mr Mutasa said the co-operative leaders had to share all they had and spread their message throughout Zimbabwe to encourage others to form co-operatives.

Zimbabwe's few co-operatives could revolutionise the traditional passing on of family names from one area to the next by giving birth to new co-operatives that would adopt names like Cold Comfort and Nyafaru.

Mr Mutasa said even Europe had gone through similar stages of development "that we are going through today", and added the co-operatives were pioneers in the stage of socialist transformation in Zimbabwe.

"You are the backbone of the country and your efforts the mainstay of the economy.

"Do not envy the white-collar workers in the city because you are doing far more important work as pioneers in co-operative development spearheading socialism," said Mr Mutasa.

ANDERSEN CALLS FOR LOYALTY IN CIVIL SERVICE

DEDICATION to duty, honesty and loyalty to the State by civil servants will make Zimbabwe prosper, the newly appointed Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Chris Andersen, said yesterday.

Mr Andersen, who has special responsibility for training and recruitment, was regarded as one of the top-flight lawyers in Zimbabwe having been in the legal profession for 20 years. He served as Minister of Justice under the Smith and Muzorewa governments.

In an interview yesterday, the new minister said he would work hard to ensure that the best recruits could be obtained for the civil service to fill any vacancies and that the people who were appointed as a result of the presidential directive would receive training at all levels.

He said: "As a result of the presidential directive, there may be people — although suitably qualified -- who lacked experience. These are the people who should receive training at all levels."

Mr Andersen is not new to politics having been elected to Parliament in 1974 on a Rhodesian Front ticket, and recently resigned from the party that declared UDI in 1965.

Born in Johannesburg 46 years ago, Mr Andersen came to Zimbabwe with his parents at an early age and did his primary and secondary education in Harare before going to Rhodes University in South Africa for his LLB which he completed in 1958.

In the interview yesterday, Mr Andersen said the civil service was the most important organ of the Government and it was essential that it should be as efficient as possible and create the environment in which the State could develop and prosper.

"It seems to me that it is very important that civil servants should not only be adequately qualified and trained, but should also enjoy a high status in the community.

"The better their status, the higher will be the calibre of the persons who will be attracted to it," he said.

The State, he said, must provide the circumstances and opportunities in which public workers could exercise their talents to the best advantage.

Civil servants must be dedicated and appreciate that a service career did not make one rich. "It is also not a form of protected employment in the sense that their performance will not be subjected to critical scrutiny."

However, the best persons would not be obtained if satisfactory conditions were not offered.

He reiterated the Government's view that the people best suited for the civil service jobs were those who were loyal to the State as "opposed to expatriates".

Mr Andersen, who was sworn in by President Banana, said that a large number of white civil servants had left the country, whom the State could ill-afford to lose.

"I hope to be able to reassure those who remain that the Government is genuine in its objective to create a non-racial society and that they should participate in the challenge which is presented.

"The country is going through a period of adjustment and there is need to reconcile some conflicting interests."

He said he was on record for opposing any form of racial discrimination and in 1977 "I publicly stated that majority rule would come about as the world understood it and that discrimination should be removed. I believe in a non-racial society."

YOUTH MUST SPEARHEAD PROGRESS, SAYS PRESIDENT

Harare THE HERALD in English 19 Apr 82 pp 1, 3

[Text]

PRESIDENT Banana has called on Zimbabwe's youth to spearhead the total mobilisation of the country's resources and talents to transform society.

Addressing the mass rally at Rufaro Stadium in Harare, to mark Zimbabwe's second anniversary of Independence, the President said: "The struggle to transform our society will at times appear long and hazardous. The changes that Government envisages might appear too radical for some and too modest for others.

"All of us must be geared for change and accept the need for the transformation of our political and economic institutions for the mutual benefit of all our people.

"I call upon you, especially our youth, to spearhead this important phase of our revolution. Let us continue to score great victories in all sectors of our national life."

Outlining some of the country's achievements since independence, President Banana paid tribute to the successful integration of the national army, which he said some had rightly described as a "miracle".

He said the army commanders and the British military advisory and training team also deserved congratulations for the manner in which they had tackled a difficult and sensitive task.

"I am pleased to inform you that all ex-combatants in assembly points and war-disabled have now been successfully demobilised. The demobilisation of members of the armed forces who wish to return to civilian life is an ongoing exercise."

The President said there was no other way to secure peace and progress in Zimbabwe other than total unity. "A nation that is built upon the shifting sands of racial, tribal and regional prejudice cannot stem the tidal wave of the forces of negation and destabilisation.

"We must owe a single allegiance to a single nation under the progressive leadership of our present Government.

"The peace that we now enjoy is a very expensive peace. It was brought about by the precious blood of Zimbabwe's dedicated, gallant freedom fighters and heroes of our struggle for independence and nationhood."

In the past year, the Government had acquired 513 289 ha of land and a total of 12 209 people had been resettled on it, the President said.

He appealed to commercial farmers owning idle land to co-operate with the Government by offering it for sale so that it could be made productive by peasant farmers who are still in desperate need of land.

In the field of agriculture, President Banana said there had been many achievements, but in particular the establishment of a national extension service to cater for the needs of all the various agricultural sectors in the country.

He congratulated the Plant Protection Research Institute, which had successfully fought the outbreak of armyworm which had threatened to devastate the maize crop.

The Dairy Marketing Board was commended for having launched bulk milk collection schemes which would make the production of milk by small-scale farmers more viable.

Six youth centres had been established in Zimbabwe by the Ministry of Youth, Sport and Recreation, the President said.

The centres will have an intake of 10 000 young people by August.

He spoke of the dramatic increase in the enrolment of pupils at schools and of the higher intake at the University of Zimbabwe.

President Banana congratulated the Ministry of Home Affairs for preserving Zimbabwe's historical and cultural heritage and said that the Department of National Archives had started to reorganise and restructure the documentation of historical records and were preserving the history of the armed struggle for posterity.

The return of the Zimbabwe Birds from South Africa to their rightful place had been a notable achievement, as had the opening of a new museum at Great Zimbabwe, the President told the crowd.

"In the field of health, the Government has succeeded in the standardisation and unification of our health services, giving free health facilities to people earning less than $150 a month.

"Primary health care continues to be the cornerstone of medical reform."

Similarly, the Ministry of Justice had eliminated racial discrimination in the prison service and had established more than 1 000 village courts.

The President also commented on the Government's awareness of the need to upgrade the status of women and on the increased minimum wage introduced earlier this year.

He said: "The third year of our independence will see further changes designed to ensure an equitable distribution of responsibility in the Public Service." More than half the senior positions in this sector, the President said, were occupied by blacks and he urged the private sector to emulate the lead taken by the Government.

The establishment of district, urban and rural councils was carried out to ensure that all the people of Zimbabwe took part in the decision-making process.

A positive image of the country had been achieved through the work of the Ministry of Information, Posts and Telecommunications.

Zimbabwe, the President said, continues "to enjoy cordial relations with many countries regardless of their ideological systems and to date we have established diplomatic ties with more than 50 countries".

He said Zimbabwe was actively involved in the policy-planning programmes and economic projects of SADCC, "progressively to disengage our economies from incorporation into the political economy of the sub-imperialism of South Africa".

President Banana pledged the Government's support for a settlement of the Namibian issue under an undiluted United Nations Resolution 435, and committed Zimbabwe to continue to give the liberation movements of South Africa moral and material support.

He said there had, however, been setbacks in the past year, including the destruction of ammunition at Inkomo Barracks, the "brutal and senseless" bombing of the ZANU (PF) headquarters, the sabotage of the Pungwe River rail link with Mozambique and the discovery of arms caches.

"In times of adversity, it is important for the nation to close its ranks in order to expose and defeat the forces of negation that seek to destroy us and to set ablaze our beautiful country."

He urged the people to be constantly vigilant and "faithful custodians of our hard-won independence. Let us have faith in our Government and our country and be counted among the makers of its glorious future", he said.

PROPOSALS, EFFORTS TO CONTROL BIRTHRATE REPORTED

MacDonald's Suggestions

Harare THE HERALD in English 21 Apr 82 p 7

[Article by Leopold Hatugari: "Baby Boom: 'Ban on Banns Not the Way'"]

[Text]

BANNING men younger than 25 and women younger than 20 from marrying would not control Zimbabwe's population growth.

This was the public's overwhelming response to the suggestions on population control made by Mrs Dorothy MacDonald in The Sunday Mail, recently.

Mrs MacDonald, of the University of Zimbabwe, was reported as suggesting that men under 25 and women under 20 should be prevented from marrying, and also that polygamy be banned.

A series of Herald street interviews showed that while most people would agree with a law prohibiting polygamy, they were against stopping early marriages.

Everyone interviewed thought such a law would be virtually impossible to enforce; couples determined to wed could get birth certificates showing they had reached the legal ages.

The major weakness, however, would be that such a law would not necessarily reduce the birth rate.

"This sort of law seems to assume that children can only be born to people who are legally married," said a Mr Munyanyiwa.

"The fact is there are almost as many children being born out of wedlock today as those born to married couples. Raising the marriage age would therefore do nothing to keep down the birth rate.

"You would also need a law banning people from falling in love," he continued, "and I would dare any government to try that."

Mr Godfrey Marozva (28), who works for a printing and stationery firm, said: "That is not the way to go about the problem of a soaring population. People will have children whether they are married or not."

A pregnant mother of two school-going children laughed at the suggestion and said it would only increase the number of illegitimate children.

"People in our African community start to worry if a girl who is not at school has not had a baby before she reaches 18, and young men will usually not marry such a girl," she said.

High school pupil Miss Patricia Muchena agreed that ideally couples should only marry when they are out of their teens, as early marriages often end in divorce.

"But," she said, "I cannot see this being achieved with such a law. Not getting married is one thing, but not getting pregnant is quite another. It is the latter which definitely results in babies, not necessarily the former."

Mrs MacDonald's suggestions were "too rigid" for 24-year-old accounts clerk Mr Tendai Paai, who nevertheless supported the principle of population control.

"What is needed is to convince couples that it is advantageous to have small families, that quality is better than quantity," he said.

Another schoolgirl questioned had her own suggestion: "People should be able to marry at any age they please, but I would like to see a law requiring any parents with two children to be sterilised."

Education was the solution put forward by Mr J. E. Smith (72).

"The problem as I see it is one of carelessness and ignorance. What is needed therefore is education on how to prevent unwanted pregnancies and on the benefits of keeping families small," Mr Smith said.

Government Policies

Harare THE HERALD in English 22 Apr 82 pp 3, 12

[Text]

THE Government's social and economic policies should cut Zimbabwe's annual population growth rate within the next five to 10 years, a census official said yesterday.

In an interview in Harare, the census manager (administration and co-ordination) of the Central Statistical Office, Mr Joseph Mapondera, said colonial policies were the cause of the high population growth rate.

The rural people had been neglected and poor health and education facilities had been provided, he said.

"This resulted in a high infant mortality rate (children dying when very young), ignorance and insecurity during old age."

He said the policies affected the people's cultures and traditions and whenever a child died, the family would "immediately" try and have more children to replace the dead one.

If Zimbabwe's present population growth rate of 3,5 percent a year continued until and beyond the year 2000 this would mean that the country's population would be about 16 million.

"A rapid population growth rate in any country hampers the implementation of development programmes and the effect of Zimbabwe's growth rate on such programmes should now be carefully looked into and assessed."

Mr Mapondera said it had been internationally estimated that the ratio of population growth to investment in order to maintain the same standard of living was 1:3.

This meant Zimbabwe needed an annual increase of 10,5 percent in investment to maintain present standards of living.

About 50 percent of Zimbabwe's population is under the age of 15 and so the proportion of dependent people to those at ages of active production was high.

He said the population growth rate could only be decreased by implementing an economic development programme which would improve the quality of life among the long neglected rural people.

The Government had taken the right direction by providing free health and education for all.

He urged the private sector to participate in development programmes, especially those directed to the rural areas.

"Members of the public should co-operate in the August census because it will lay a fundamental basis for the country's success in the future," he added.

'HERALD' Comment

[Editorial: "A Pressing Need"]

[Text]

IF ZIMBABWE'S population continues to increase at the present rate, it is estimated that it will double to 15 million by the end of the century. That is less than 18 years away.

It would be a frightening prospect even for a country which had been able to keep pace with current demand for essential facilities for its people. Unfortunately, Zimbabwe is not so well placed.

It would take many years to provide what is needed for the present population, let alone attempt to provide for one that is growing at one of the fastest rates in the world.

So it is just as well that the subject of birth control, or child spacing, or family planning or some other synonym, is raised in public periodically. It is also most creditable that advice is to be available at the primary health care clinics to be set up in the rural areas by the Ministry of Health.

The subject requires education and the development of a sense of responsibility, rather than compulsion or the attempted enforcement of rigid rules which are bound to be broken.

There are, however, optimistic signs for Zimbabwe. Families are biggest where poverty is greatest, but Zimbabwe is not a poor country and before long it will be a richer one.

As more Zimbabweans enter the cash economy, as more improve their standard of living, as more women work and as more of the elderly are cared for in terms of socialist philosophies, so the need and the desire for large families will recede.

But these are long-term developments which will take people well beyond the end of this century. The need for immediate and continual public awareness of the dangers of over-population is pressing.

It is a task that many branches of government, national and local, must be involved in, in conjunction with the Child Spacing and Fertility Association.

NEW AUSTRALIAN SCHEME EASES WAY FOR EXPORTS

Harare THE HERALD in English 21 Apr 82 p 3

[Text]

ZIMBABWEAN exporters stand to benefit from a preferential trade scheme for developing countries introduced recently by the Australian government.

The scheme, which covers most manufactured and substantially processed goods, gives products from such countries a reasonable preference over the general tariff, according to the Australian senior trade commissioner to 41 African countries, Mr Barrie Rutter, who is based in Nairobi.

Products of interest to Zimbabwean exporters include footwear, textiles and clothing, which have recently been included in the scheme.

Mr Rutter is in Zimbabwe to set up and man the Australian stand at the International Trade Fair.

He said in an interview yesterday that to prevent developing countries like China and Taiwan from monopolising trade with Australia, the scheme covered only those countries whose trade had not exceeded 10 percent of Australian total imports.

Total trade between Zimbabwe and Australia now stands at about A$2 million a year.

"I would recommend to Zimbabweans that they capitalise on the scheme by sending sales delegations to Australia to get to know importers and thereby benefit from the 1983 import allocations.

"The Government must make the first move here, and organise such a delegation," he said.

Australia had taken a keen interest in trade with Zimbabwe. Soon after independence a trade team had visited the country, and this was followed up by a stand at last year's trade fair.

In May last year a Zimbabwean group toured Australia and found a wide range of markets for local products. At this year's trade fair, it was hoped to further extend commercial contact.

The stand will consist of a photographic display of 11 major firms in Australia — all of whom are new to Zimbabwe and who have something to offer the developing country.

Products manufactured by the firms include agricultural, mining and heavy industrial goods.

DETAILS ON TRADE WITH FRG REPORTED

Harare BUSINESS HERALD in English 22 Apr 82 p 4

[Text]

THE Federal Republic of Germany is Zimbabwe's second largest export market.

In 1980, the Republic bought goods from Zimbabwe amounting to Z$58.3 million, and sold goods worth about Z$52 million to Zimbabwe. Until November 1981, West Germany imported from Zimbabwe Z$67.3 million and exported to Zimbabwe goods amounting to Z$65.1 million.

Topping the list of goods bought by Germany from Zimbabwe are tobacco, cotton lint, ferrochrome, nickel and nickel alloys, raw coffee, abestos, tantalum ore, lithium, yarn or textile fibres, copper blister and steel.

Among the most important export items supplied by West Germany to Zimbabwe are industrial machinery and plant, textile machinery, vehicle parts, machine tools, iron and steel sheets, yarns and threads, pharmaceuticals, synthetics, plastics, chemicals, insecticides, electric machinery and motor vehicles.

Acknowledging the need for modernisation and extension to existing production facilities in Zimbabwe and the urgency of a number of new industrial projects, several West German companies have readied themselves to take an active part in the country's development.

This form of assistance will be channelled into priority areas such as energy, transport, mining, heavy and light industry, telecommunications, agriculture and other economically important fields.

A number of West German companies are not interested solely in buying and selling — but are keen to invest in Zimbabwe. The basis for this will be an agreement which encourages and protects capital investment.

Such a bilateral agreement between Zimbabwe and Germany, together with a treaty for the avoidance of double taxation, is now being negotiated.

The conclusion of both these agreements will provide a stimulus for the potential German investor in Zimbabwe and will introduce a sound economic partnership creating employment and growth with equity.

German investors, in addition, hope for a Zimbabwean law on the treatment of foreign investments and the transfer of part dividends.

West Germany is determined to create a two-way trade traffic between itself and Zimbabwe. Mr Jorrit Plambeck, the German export adviser attached to the Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries in Salisbury, actively promotes Zimbabwean exports to Germany.

Within the framework of the West German technical aid programme, Mr Plambeck offers assistance and advice to both the traditional exporters and the small entrepreneurs in the rural areas.

His chief objective is to develop a long-term export strategy for Zimbabwean products to be distributed in sophisticated markets, where there exists a special know-how on conditions such as pricing, design, financing, import regulations and the like.

Germany's co-operation with Zimbabwe extends beyond direct trade into other areas, aimed at encouraging Zimbabwe's aspirations towards economic independence.

Agreements laid down between the two governments include the provision of loans for Zimbabwe on favourable terms, the services of experts, scholarships for young Zimbabweans for training and studies in the technical, vocational and engineering fields, and other offers of economic co-operation.

This help is given continuously in a number of ways — through government, commerce and industry, the churches and through other private and public organisations.

Aid is also being channelled through international organisations such as the European Economic Community, United Nations, the World Bank and IMF — bodies to which West Germany makes substantial contributions.

West Germany provided much political support to the young Zimbabwe at the time of negotiations to accession to the Lome agreement, ensuring Zimbabwe had important advantages in co-operation with Western Europe.

These advantages include stabilising revenues from supplies of raw materials during periods of economic down-swing and customs exemptions on exports to the countries of the EEC.

The co-operation built up in recent years between the Federal Republic and Zimbabwe is dominated by the former's principles upon which relations are based with all African countries — co-operation, trust, confidence and solidarity.

SWEDISH TEAM SEEKS CODE FOR INVESTMENT

Harare THE HERALD in English 20 Apr 82 p 3

[Text]

SWEDISH businessmen are confident about Zimbabwe's stability but would welcome an investment code, Sweden's justice minister, Mr Carl Petri, said in Harare yesterday.

Mr Petri is leading a delegation of 27 Swedish businessmen and trade officials on a week-long visit to Zimbabwe.

In an interview yesterday, after a briefing from the Swedish ambassador, Mr Bo Heineback, and his staff, he said the delegation was looking into two-way trade, financing of trade and possible Swedish investment and joint ventures.

"We are very impressed with the development in Zimbabwe, with the stability of the country since independence. Financing any deals will be one of the main problems: we want to buy a lot and you want to buy from us.

"But we also want to look to the future, establish contacts and build up trade as finance and needs grow. Our countries are about the same size and have a lot in common, except we are somewhat ahead in development."

Mr Petri and a deputy head of the mission, Dr Sture Lindmark, vice-president of the Stockholm Chamber of Commerce, said capital equipment and technology would probably be emphasised on the trip because foreign currency was more easily obtainable.

Mr Petri said Sweden had a system of credits for countries like Zimbabwe, which could be extended.

A new agency, Impod, was considering requests from Swedish importers for import guarantees, said Dr Lindmark, a member of its board.

Another organisation, Swedfund, one of the joint sponsors of the visit with the Stockholm Chamber of Commerce, was already helping in joint ventures, the first being a firm making pressure stoves.

Mr Petri and the first secretary (commercial) at the Swedish embassy, Mr Lars Tillfors, said Sweden had a great deal of technology that could be exported to Zimbabwe.

"We have done a lot of research into many problems that face you and I don't see any need to invent the wheel twice. For instance, we have done a lot of work on energy. About half our power comes from hydro-electricity and we have no oil of our own either," said Mr Petri.

Mr Tillfors said one firm in Sweden had developed an additive which would allow 50-50 petrol-alcohol mixture to be used in ordinary cars.

The delegation, which arrived on Sunday, will be briefed today by the Ministries of Trade and Commerce and Industry and Energy Development.

This afternoon they will meet representatives of private sector organisations before attending a reception hosted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Richard Hove.

Tomorrow the Swedes meet the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, and Mr Petri will pay courtesy calls on the Minister of Justice, Dr Simbi Mubako, and the Minister of Parliamentary and Legal Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo.

Other members of the delegation will be engaged in individual business contacts. On Friday the team will visit the Bulawayo International Trade Fair.

BRIEFS

PARTY POST FOR USHEWOKUNZE--Bulawayo--The Matabeleland North provincial executive of ZANU (PF) yesterday announced the appointment of Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, the Minister of Home Affairs, as its new party provincial chairman. Dr Ushewokunze is the only ZANU (PF) MP for Matabeleland North and the provincial executive felt that appointing him chairman would provide a more effective link between the party in the province and the central committee and the Government. The move was initiated by the former provincial chairman, Mr Chigwendere and was adopted by the provincial executive districts and branches after they were consulted. Accepting his appointment Dr Ushewokunze said that his first task would be the restructuring of all provincial districts and branches culminating in a provincial election before the end of the year. The executive committee stressed that the appointment was not an election and all other posts of the executive committee would be filled in by elections in due course. TRADE WITH FRANCE--A $12 million credit agreement was signed in Harare yesterday between Zimbank and two French banks. The agreement, which will help the financing of imports from France by businessmen and industrialists with Government approval, was signed by the Societe Generale and the Banque Internationale pour l'Afrique Occidentale. Items eligible for financing include industrial plant equipment and technical documentation services. The interest rate was fixed at 10 percent a year, the current preferential rate for medium-term export finance. FERTILISER INDUSTRY--Windmill (Pvt) Ltd has completed a $470 000 capital investment and modification programme at its Coventry Road factory in Harare in a bid to cope with the increased demand for fertiliser. As a result the production of granular fertilisers has increased from 25 tonnes to more than 36 tonnes per hour as the factory now operates one of the largest dry-mix plants in the world. A new cooler costing $235 000 has been installed and the original cooler converted into a dryer to improve quality and save energy. A third bagging plant, due to become operational this month will increase bagging capacity from 1200 to 1800 bags of fertiliser per hour--a rise of 60 to 90 tonnes per hour. It will also boost loading capacity for deliveries by road and rail. [Text] [Harare BUSINESS HERALD in English 22 Apr 82 p 3]

COTTON HARVEST DROP--This year's cotton crop is likely to be 27 percent down on last year's production, says the president of the Commercial Cotton Growers' Association, Mr Alistair Davies. In a report in the Farmer magazine, he is quoted as telling a Commercial Farmers' Union meeting that the early break in the rains this season and unseasonable high day temperatures had severely affected yield potential. He also said the South African cotton crop was expected to be short of national requirements by as much as 100 000 bales, giving Zimbabwean brokers an opportunity to make substantial and valuable sales in that area. Mr Davies told the meeting that Cotton Marketing Board investigations had revealed there was a deliberate misuse of crop estimates submitted annually by growers. Blatant overestimates had been submitted in order to secure larger delivery quotas, creating difficulties in marketing and financing and effectively reducing quotas allowed to fellow growers. "The CCGA council has supported the CMB in the introduction of a penalty system against growers who consistently over-estimate their crop. Penalties will take the form of arbitrary quota reductions for offenders," he said. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 21 Apr 82 p 3]

CLOTHING WORKERS JOIN FORCES--The National Union of the Clothing Industry has now been registered to cover the whole country, the president of the union, Mr Nicholas Makumbira, said yesterday. Mr Makumbira said that registration made it impossible for employers to run away from areas covered by the Industrial Council for the Clothing Industry and start factories in places where they could exploit workers. "The organisation has managed to register 24 more interests of employees which includes designers, pattern makers, leather splitting machine operators, buffing machinists, ironers, mixsers, shavers, silk screen printers and various managerial and clerical posts," he said. "The union has submitted a memorandum to the National Industrial Council for the industry so that the definitions and grades for these jobs would be laid down." The council for the industry will meet on April 27 to approve these interests. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 23 Apr 82 p 3]

ZVOBGO CRITICISM HIT--The Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, has been criticised by the UANC for his remarks about a party choir taking part in the independence celebrations." Earlier this week the minister complained about the presence of the choir at the official celebrations in Chinhoyi. He also suggested that local authorities in Zimbabwe should close shops belonging to UANC members. A UANC statement issued yesterday said Dr Zvobgo's remarks were "seen as a violation of the freedoms which are enshrined in the Bill of Rights of the Lancaster constitutional agreement." The party had urged all its supporters to cooperate with celebrations organisers to "show oneness in these national celebrations." The Chinhoyi celebrations committee had officially invited the UANC to take part in events on Independence Day and the party had responded. "Our members have the full legal right to do so since the UANC is a legal movement which is part and parcel of the Parliamentary machinery responsible for making the laws of this country." To stay away from the celebrations would have been an unpatriotic act, the statement said. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 23 Apr 82 p 3]

UANC OFFICIAL QUITS--The UANC's former publicity and information secretary for Mufakose, Mr Tobias Pahwaringira, announced yesterday he had joined ZANU (PF). He said he had been convinced beyond doubt that the Government of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, stood for the interests of all the people of Zimbabwe. "I have travelled in several districts and have seen for myself what the Government is doing for the people. No other government has done this before," Mr Pahwaringira said. He said the Governments projects in the rural areas, particularly those on education, health and resettlement, were sufficient proof to convince anybody of what ZANU (PF) stands for. Mr Pahwaringira, who is chairman of Mufakose area council, urged other people still supporting minority parties to join ZANU (PF) in order to foster peace, stability and progress. He said there was a need for all Zimbabweans to be united so as to fight "the common enemy." The official, who has been a UANC member since 1973 described his former party as a dead organisation. TRADE WITH SWEDEN--Trade between Zimbabwe and Sweden has begun to pick up since it was established two years ago, the visiting Swedish minister of justice, Mr Carl Axel Petri, said yesterday. Speaking at a reception in Harare last night Mr Petri said the delegation was interested in fruits, tobacco, coffee and tea as well as other agricultural products. He said their discussions with Government ministers yesterday had been "fruitful and informative." The talks had centred on various issues although emphasis had been laid on investing in Zimbabwe. Yesterday the delegation met the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Richard Hove and today they are expected to hold talks with the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo; the Minister of Justice, Dr Simbi Mubako; the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo; the Minister of Finance and Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero and the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman. Mr Hove said the foreign investors had to have faith in the Government. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 21 Apr 82 p 1]

ZCTU SEEKS ACTING CHIEF--The Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions will hold a meeting on May 8 to appoint an acting secretary-general of the organisation. In an interview, the publicity secretary of the organisation, Mr Elphegio Soko, said the meeting, which would be held in Harare, was crucial and all executive members should attend. He said the organisation needed an acting secretary-general to look after its administration. The post has remained vacant since December when the former secretary-general of the ZCTU, Mr Albert Mugabe, was found dead in the swimming pool at his home. Those leading splinter unions would not be considered for the post. "We are working for unity among all trade unions in this country and we will not have anyone leading a splinter union to act as general secretary," said Mr Soko. "Those who jockey for the post must be people who work for unity in the trade union movement and among the workers of Zimbabwe." Mr Soko said the new secretary-general would be elected at a "special congress" which would be called after all unions have united. "We are a democratic organisation and it is our intention that the man who will fill the vacant post must be elected by the majority of the unions in the country." QUALIFICATIONS OF N'ANGAS--All spirit mediums and general traditional practitioners are required to indicate their qualifications after their names, says the president of the Zimbabwe National Traditional Healers' Association (ZINATHA), Professor Gordon Chavunduka. Spirit mediums must write the letters SM after their names and traditional practitioners must have TMP after theirs. Those who practise as both must indicate so by including the two abbreviations. This was to comply with the Traditional Medical Practitioners Act No 38 of 1981, said Dr Chavunduka in the statement. He added that traditional healers were of three main types: Spirit mediums who only carry out diagnosis but do not handle medicines; General traditional healers who used to be called herbalists; Those who are spirit mediums but also treat patients. PSU PASSING OUT--The Police Support Unit maintains its paramilitary role because dissidents have not yet been eliminated, Assistant Commissioner Don Rowland said yesterday. Mr Rowland, who retires as Officer Commanding the ZRP Support Unit this month was speaking at the passing-out parade of the unit's Squad 2/81 at Chikurubi Barracks. "It is now two years since hostilities ceased in Zimbabwe and one might expect that the police force today would no longer carry firearms. "Regrettably the hopes which existed of a total elimination of dissident elements and hostile acts throughout the country have not yet been achieved," he said. It was for this reason the unit had not been retrained in a "purely civil role," and its duty was to maintain and re-establish a law and order where necessary. The 15 men of the passing-out squad had been rigorously selected and intensively trained, Mr Rowland said. He told the squad: "You came here and have been referred to as mazayi, the eggs of the eagle; your passing-out marks the hatching of those mazayi, and you leave these barracks as manyana, fledgling birds still learning to fly." The best recruit of the squad, Constable Maponga, received a certificate. Mr Rowland noted that all the five white Support Unit officers taking part or assisting in the parade were due to retire. The men on parade, including 48 men in support, performed immaculate drill despite pouring rain and hail which swept across the square. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 17 Apr 82 p 3]

PRESIDENT ATTENDS PROVINCIAL PLANNING MEETING

EA302218 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0500 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and of the republic, returned to Luanda yesterday from Malanje Province where he had been paying a working visit since 26 April at the head of a party and government delegation.

In Malanje Province Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos chaired a meeting of the coordination commission for the economic and social development of the province held from 27-28 April. Here are the final conclusions of that important meeting:

1. The drawing up of a program to coordinate the projects to be implemented. They called for the establishment of a team of technicians in different sectors who will be directly linked with the projects to be implemented. The team will be under the chairmanship of the director for provincial planning of the Ministry of Planning. Accordingly, the planning minister will produce guidelines for the coordination program with the (?following in mind):

Para 1: The first phase of priority work will be implemented from the second half of this year for the solution fo current problems, in particular housing for national and foreign cadres, improvement of the water and electricity supply systems to Malanje town and improvement of communications and the (?supply) national cadres to the province.

Para B: A second phase will cover the development projects approved for implementation in Malanje Province. These projects will be included in the national plan as from 1983.

2. The Council of Ministers will activate and monitor the implementation of the program.

3. The team of technicians mentioned in point 1 above will propose to the Council of Ministers the necessary human, material and financial resources to be concentrated in the province and will also ensure the implementation of the program.

4. The relevant specialized industrial sectors existing in the country should be used for the construction of corn dryers and silos.

5. A team of foreign experts will be assigned to repair some buildings in Malanje town.

6. The center for professional training in the textile industry will be located in Malanje Province for the training of specialized workers in the textile sector.

UNITA ACTIVITIES, POLITICAL SITUATION REVIEWED

London AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL in English No 8, 14 Apr 82 pp 1-3

[Text]

Since December a diplomatic merry-go-round, with Luanda at the hub of the wheel, has been gathering speed so fast that the participants seem unable to decide whether the frenetic movement is leading anywhere worthwhile.

If there is to be any chance of getting South African approval of all the stages leading to Namibian independence, it is clear to all, including Luanda, that concessions must be made to Pretoria. Angola needs peace more than South Africa does, at least in the forseeable future. And with South African raids pushing ever deeper into Angola's Cunene province, the pressure increases on Luanda to negotiate a) the conditional withdrawal of Cuban troops north of a prescribed line and the reduction of their total number, and b) terms for somehow including Jonas Savimbi — ultimately through political accommodation — in the complex of domestic cum regional negotiations.

Whether it will be possible to maintain the momentum towards a resolution of Angola's internal problems if the South Africans (AC Vol 23 No 6) want to postpone indefinitely the Namibian negotiations, depends on whether the South African defence force can be persuaded to end its raids into Angola and its support for UNITA. The South African treasury may be most influential.

Superimposed on all this is US policy (AC Vol 23 No 1), which includes the reduction of Cuban troops, and less publicly, an insistence that MPLA is at least seen to be open to talks with Savimbi. For some time the latter has regularly sent letters to Portuguese officials, including President Eanes, in an effort to have Lisbon persuade the MPLA to talk with UNITA. Overleaf we examine in more detail what has happened on this front.

Angola's weakness is still caused by the twin devils of economic near-collapse and increasing physical insecurity. About 80% of foreign exchange still comes from oil receipts, principally through Gulf's Cabinda operations, but the rest of the economy, especially the once prosperous agricultural sector, is in a shambles. Food shortages are rife in all the major towns, including Luanda, while administration outside the capital remains feeble.

Security has probably deteriorated in the past year on every front:

1. South African military intervention has sharply increased. Attacks against SWAPO bases and other points throughout the Angolan infrastructure have occurred ever since independence. Now, however, there is a more concerted South African effort to paralyse not just SWAPO but Angola as a whole. Incursions last longer and go deeper — often over 150 miles into Angola. The province of Cunene, in the far south, has been systematically attacked since August. Since November, it has been effectively held as a South African 'buffer zone'. In November a highly skilled attack on the main oil refinery in Luanda itself, perhaps by South African supported seaborne commandos, greatly demoralised the Angolan leadership.

2. UNITA, with substantial South African logistical support, has expanded its activity as well. Its activity can be divided into several spheres:

a) There is some evidence that in all the provinces adjacent to the Namibian border, South African forces capture small towns that are then invested (sometimes temporarily) by UNITA troops.

b) UNITA still infiltrates deep into the southern and south-western provinces of Cunene, Mocamedes and Huila, organising its own military activity as far north as the provincial centre of Menongue (formerly Serpa Pinto).

c) UNITA controls — in the fullest sense — much of the sparsely populated south-eastern provinces of Cuando Cubango and Moxico, centred on the small town of Mavinga, where Western journalists have reported no government resistance to the UNITA presence. Military activity, however, is expanding from the region northwards towards Gago Coutinho and north-westwards towards the central plateau.

d) UNITA continues to sabotage the Benguela railway at will, with an average of one action a day, along the length of the line, and achieves a serious derailment every week. What is particularly notable is that the incidents are evenly spread all along the line, whereas two years ago they were concentrated along the central strip around Huambo and Bie.

e) In January, railway officials noticed a lull in UNITA activity. Subsequently it appeared that this marked a major movement of UNITA forces north of the railway. This dovetails with reports of greater UNITA activity in the north of the central plateau. There has been an increase in UNITA diamond smuggling towards the north-east. Towards the end of last year there were military attacks on the town of Cela in Cuanza Sul province within a hundred miles of Luanda. Aid organisations have reported continuing security problems north of the railway line. The Red Cross is unable to maintain food distribution centres south of it, although between 300,000 and 500,000 displaced persons (the number alters with climatic and security variations) still need help.

(i) UNITA is beginning to emphasise political rather than military aims, particularly its readiness to accept UN-supervised elections. Since the Ovimbundu, Jonas Savimbi's own ethnic group, number between 35% and 40% of the Angolan population (by far the biggest single group), UNITA believes it has the largest single block of support. This year is being named 'The Year of the Demilitarisation of the Revolution'. A party congress is expected within two months, to re-elect the 30-strong central committee and 19-strong politburo. UNITA morale appears high.

3. The virtually defunct FNLA, once under Holden Roberto, has partially resurrected itself in a revamped military form under Paolo Tuba and Henrik Vaal Neto heading the new COMIRA faction. Holden is out for good and in Paris (AC Vol 22 No 14), but according to some reports (including J. Regan Kerney in the International Herald Tribune in mid-December and more explicitly, left-wing Portuguese press reports), activity in the coffee-rich Uige and Zaire regions has recommenced. French mercenaries are allegedly involved.

4. The splintered Cabindan secessionist movement FLEC has again been seeking funds, in the USA and elsewhere, though military results have not been confirmed. The two factions, one under Luis Franque Ranque (based in Gabon), the other led by Nzita Henriques Tiago with his military commander Victor Jorge Gomes, are promising another bout of disaffection.

The Cubans, still estimated at between 15,000 and 19,000 throughout Angola, plus 5,000 technicians and other personnel, do little fighting, but secure the towns and the oil installations. The FAPLA forces (the official Angolan army) are reported to have improved. In particular, there have been efforts to recruit from among the Ovimbundu of the central plateau. But for the government in Luanda the overall security picture is bleak.

It is difficult to assess whether the Angolan-Senegambian thaw spells good news or bad for UNITA. President Abdou Diouf, less conservative than ex-President Léopold Senghor, may have decided to end his favours to Savimbi, or he may be interceding on his behalf. UNITA is probably exaggerating the degree of its involvement in the American-Portuguese diplomatic efforts. But Savimbi's success in keeping his movement alive — suggests that he must indeed play a part in the diplomatic jigsaw.

The extent of concessions that the Portuguese and especially the Americans are trying to extract from the Angolans in favour of the South Africans and their UNITA protégés may be too much for Luanda to tolerate. Indeed, Soviet influence may well also urge against concessions, although there have been suggestions that Moscow and Havana are increasingly disenchanted by the prospect of further years of propping up the Luanda government.

The MPLA elite is itself sharply divided by the current diplomatic wrangle. The party remains broadly split between the idealogues and the "Africanists" (nationalists) (AC Vol 21 No 4 and AC Vol 22 No 9).

Although to divide the MPLA, and its politburo in particular, into "black" and "mestico-white" factions is an oversimplification, racial factors are increasingly important. The Africanists, usually black, have more weight in government and in the ministries, but the idealogues, more drawn to Moscow, still hold sway in the party machine and in the information and press apparatus. The same schisms are apparent in the army and in the people's militia (ODP), though a growing majority of senior officers and most of the ranks are Africanists.

Of the Africanists, Roberto d'Almeida and Manuel Pacavira are strong, but the star of the erratic ODP boss Domingo Paiva has fallen, while Mendes de Carvalho, leader of the so-called "Catete Group" of black nationalists hostile to white and mestico influence (above all to that of Lucio Lara), was briefly said to be in disgrace. However, such reports seemed to be scotched when he reappeared as head of an international delegation. Lopo do Nascimento, virtually exiled by the dying President Agostinho Neto, has recovered much influence and is increasingly important within the Africanist camp, which is more enthusiastic for a rapprochement with the west and probably even with UNITA, though the exclusion of Savimbi is often mooted as part of any deal ●

FUTURE ECONOMIC PROSPECTS OF NATION VIEWED

AB021413 Paris AFP in English 0940 GMT 2 May 82

[By Marie Joannidis]

[Text] Luanda, 2 May (AFP)--The war against internal opposition and South African incursions--which has disrupted the Angolan economy--has made the country even more dependent on oil, its main source of revenue, at a time when even the largest producers are facing serious difficulties.

The oil glut and the resulting drop in sales had made Angola--still a small producer with under seven million tons last year--limit its ambitions somewhat. Priority now is on consolidating development projects underway in its offshore fields, notably off the enclave of Cabinda, where oil installations are protected by Cubans as well as Angola troops.

But an informed source said the aim was still to increase production to 10 million tons a year, or 200,000 barrels a day by 1985 compared with 140,000 barrels a day at the beginning of this year.

Following a decline in other sectors of the economy, oil now brings in almost 90 percent of export revenue. War and general insecurity is the principal explanation for the spectacular slump in coffee production, which now stands at 15-20,000 metric tons a year, compared with 240,000 before independence in 1975.

The drop in crude oil prices on the world market thus hits Angola still harder than the major producers in the Organization of Oil Exporting Countries (OPEC) of which Angola is not a member.

The government budgeted for receipts from oil of around 2,000 million dollars in 1981. But pressure on prices and a slight fall in production of certain fields due to technical difficulties has cut income by more than a quarter of this figure.

Thus, the Angolan authorities are following with keen attention developments on the international market and OPEC efforts to stabilize prices by curtailing production.

At the same time, Angola, which already has excellent relations with the major U.S. and European oil companies which operate on its territory, is apparently also seeking closer cooperation, notably with European countries, to boost its sales in the future.

The good-quality light Angolan crude is normally closely tied to the price of Arabian light, plus the surcharges normal for African oil. The last official price, fixed at the beginning of January 1981, was 38.75 dollars a barrel, but Erminio Escorcio, director-general of the Angola National Oil Company (SONANGOL) said that in fact he was currently negotiating individual prices with each client.

This seems to confirm that Angolan oil is currently fetching around spot prices of the free market.

SONANGOL's largest collaborator remains the U.S. giant Gulf Oil, which operates off Cabinda and was producing 85,000 barrels a day at the beginning of this year, more than 60 percent of the nation's total.

Other producers are PETRANGOL (a consortium of SONANGOL and Belgium's PETROFINA) and U.S. Texaco, but a newcomer is French ELF, which has already made two sizeable strikes.

The Angolan offshore fields south of Cabinda have been divided into 13 blocks, of which five have already been assigned to producers, including other European and American companies, and a Brazilian undertaking. An informed source said the authorities would only be assigning one newblock this year, to PETROBRAS of Brazil with the participation of PETROFINA and SONANGOL.

In Cabinda, Gulf's employees live 15 kilometers (10 miles) outside the town of Malongo, in a city built especially for them. All their food and other necessities are imported directly from abroad, there is no direct benefit of oil riches for the local population. In this context the authorities are examining the possibility of developing agricultural projects at Soyo, in southern Cabinda, to encourage the oil firms to invest locally instead of importing everything.

Oil industry bosses expect to see an increase in production in the long term, following the discoveries by ELF and new fields developed by Gulf, and in the shorter term by forcing out more oil with the injection of gas into Gulf's existing wells.

U.S. banks, notably Chase Manhattan, Morgan Guaranty Trust and Import-Export, have already agreed to grant Angola--which has no diplomatic relations with Washington--loans covering tens of millions of dollars in oil investment.

According to experts, this is the best proof that Angola possesses in its oil reserves a very important asset for its economy which is latently very rich in spite of the enormous difficulties it is currently experiencing.

EANES VISIT BRINGS BRIGHT TRADE PROSPECTS WITH PORTUGAL

London WEST AFRICA in English 26 Apr 82 p 1166

[Text]

President Antonio Ramalho Eanes has returned to Lisbon after a five-day visit to Angola saying relations between Lisbon and its former West African colony had entered a new era.

General Eanes, who was accompanied on his trip to Luanda by several members of Portugal's right wing government, said the Portuguese mission to Angola had achieved much more than it could ever have expected.

Announcing a gesture of Angolan goodwill, General Eanes said President Jose Eduardo dos Santos had promised that three Portuguese political prisoners, including a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Portuguese army, held in Luanda for the last six years, would soon be freed.

The thaw in relations between Lisbon and its former colony was highlighted by a new boost to trade when Angola provisionally awarded a Portuguese consortium a $200m. contract during the President's visit to Luanda.

The contract, for raising the level of the Cambambe Dam and increasing its generating capacity, is the single biggest awarded to Portuguese firms since Angola's independence. The dam, built by the Portuguese on the Kwanza river in 1972, supplies most of Luanda's electricity.

Angola is pushing for a 15-year credit on the project, which will take five years to complete, and the only question mark hanging over the contract is whether Portugal can come up with a satisfactory financial offer, according to Angolan officials.

The Portuguese industry minister Sr. Ricardo Bayao Horta said the government, which must provide the credits for the project, felt that it was essential everything should be done to make sure the contract went to Portuguese firms.

Angola has also asked Portugal to consider the possibility of taking a stake in coffee, sugar, cotton, sisal and fruit production in the country.

Before independence, Angola was the world's fifth ranked coffee producer and the second biggest sisal grower in Africa after Tanzania. Agricultural production slumped dramatically after the Portuguese left in 1975.

Angolan officials said the Luanda government had also agreed to allow Portuguese firms to take a stake in a certain number of Angolan companies and that Angola would itself be investing in Portuguese cpmpanies.

The two countries had also agreed that Angola would not allow foreign companies to sub-contract to Portuguese firms unless there was a firm economic justification. "If Portuguese companies are to do the actual work on a project, we want to deal with them directly and award them the contract," a senior official stressed.

During his stay in Angola, President Eanes had a number of meetings with President Dos Santos and met Sr. Sam Nujoma, head of the Angolan-backed South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) which is fighting South Africa for the independence of Namibia.

After the meeting the SWAPO leader said Portugal could play an important role as a NATO member and applicant to the European Economic Community (EEC) in enlisting western support for Namibian independence.

OIL FIND NEAR ZAIRE RIVER--Luanda, 24 Apr (ANGOP)--The Angolan National Petroleum Company [SONANGOL] yesterday announced in Luanda the discovery of oil in an offshore zone situated at the south of the mouth of the Zaire River named block three, by the French Company ELF-Aquitaine, the JORNAL DE ANGOLA, the Angolan capital's daily, stated on Saturday. Tests carried out through the exploration well Pacassa I between 3,328 and 3,337 meters deep, produced a flow of 850 cubic meters to more than 1,000 cubic meters a day. The French company, on the same occasion, confirmed its initial discovery of oil in block three last September following the sinking of the exploration well Palanc I. It is recalled that ELF-Aquitaine's exploration work in Angola, is carried out under a contract sharing production with the national holding company SONANGOL, which led to the establishment of a consortium composed of Mobil, Agip Nartagas and Inanaftaplin. OIL PROFITS FOR 1981--Luanda, 30 Apr (ANGOP)--The Petrangol Refinery, the only one in the People's Republic of Angola, made a profit of 629,390,940 kwanzas (about $20.9 million), states the 1981 activity report fo the board of directors of this oil company. In 1981, the company, of which the Angolan state, through SONANGOL, owns 78 percent of the shares and the Belgian company Petrofina owns 22 percent, refined 1,238,078 metric tons of crude oil, which is 1.2 percent more than in 1980, despite the stoppage in activity in December 1980. Petrangol employs 1,500 workers including 24 foreigners, 39 of whom were passed over by Petrofina and 245 hired on contract. Regarding the training of staff, the company has prepared a vast program which provides for instruction inside the country and abroad for middle and higher-level staff. It should be recalled that an act of sabotage perpetrated by a group of mercenaries on 30 November last year caused substantial damage to the Petrangol reservoirs including the storage and pumping station areas. A distilling unit was also destroyed and this caused activity to stop for about 3 months. [Text] [AB301524 Luanda ANGOP in French 1400 GMT 30 Apr 82]

EXIT RESTRICTIONS RUMORS DENIED--Luanda, 28 Apr (ANGOP)--In a communique published yesterday in Luanda, the constitutional and legal affairs committee of the People's Assembly of the People's Republic of Angola, denied certain rumors circulating throughout the country to the effect that a restrictive law will be passed regulating the exits of Angolan citizens over a 10-year period, and described them as ridiculous. In this connection, the communique indicates that there is no plan to revise the regulations governing the exit of Angolan citizens traveling abroad and denounces any information to the contrary. The communique adds that the Angolan state hopes in the near future to review the current regulations with a view to making them more liberal and not more restrictive. The communique stresses that this piece of slanderous information is the result of the deliberate distortion of the reaction to specific statements made by a few Angolan delegates at the last session of the People's Assembly during the discussions on the problems concerning the nationality law. To conclude, the document indicates that such defamation is part of a vast campaign of destabilization organized by the most reactionary international circles aimed at bringing about a brain drain of national cadres. BRIEFS

VISIT OF OAU DELEGATION--A high-ranking OAU delegation spent 24 hours in Ndjamena where it met the vice president of the GUNT [Transitional National Unity Government], Colonel Kamougue, and the minister of state for foreign affiars, Acyl Ahmat. Led by the minister of foreign affairs of Botswana, Archibald Mogwe, current president of the Ministerial Council of the OAU, the delegation arrived on Monday [15 March]. It also includes the assistant secretary general of the OAU, Peter Onu, and the Kenyan minister of foreign affairs, Dr Ouko. The delegation left the following day [16 March] on the regularly scheduled flight. It just took time to deliver to the president of the GUNT a message from the current president of the OAU, President Arap Moi of Kenya. Nevertheless, the OAU representatives reviewed different questions associated with peace efforts in Chad, during the course of a one-hour meeting with Colonel Kamougue. The delegation leader, Archibald Mogwe, avoided telling the press whether the position of the OAU had evolved since the last conference in Nairobi, which adopted a resolution that has been opposed in Chad. Concerning the future conference on reconstruction in Chad, which is to be held in mid-April in Nairobi, Mogwe let it be understood that its success will depend on the evolution of the political and military situation in Chad. He said that the interest of those providing funds for reconstruction is linked to the hope of seeing the "end of the tunnel." Clearly, the OAU diplomat wished to make the Chadian authorities understand that our country will only be able to obtain significant external assistance if it provides better guarantees of peace, security, and stability. UNHCR OFFICIALS'S VISIT--Noel Antoine, chief of the Regional Bureau for Africa of the UNHCR [United Nations High Commission on Refugees], has been in Ndjamena since Monday [15 March]. He plans to discuss with Chadian authorities and the leaders of the humanitarian organization in Ndjamena the operation of the assistance program for Chadians who have been repatriated to their country. This program, he said, has developed in a satisfactory way. He confirmed that UNHCR assistance should theoretically end on 31 March 1982. However, there will remain a certain amount of "goods" to be distributed. The UNHCR must determine, together with the Chadian authorities, the procedures for the distribution of food which will not yet have been given to the people by the "official" end of the program. MINISTER'S RETURN FROM TOUR--The minister of justice and the privy seal, Kassire Delwa Koumakoye, returned on Monday [15 March] to Ndjamena, following an extended trip which took him to five countries: Benin, Ghana, Mali, Senegal, and Mauritania. He delivered a message from President Goukouni to the chiefs of state in these countries on the political and military situation in Chad. Kassire said, "The message from President Goukouni was understood and even supported." The minister of justice also firmly explained the Chadian view regarding the Nairobi resolution. He reminded these chiefs of state of the obligations which they assumed concerning Chad at the time of the OAU summit meeting in June 1981. [Text] Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 17 Mar 82 p 16] 5170

GOVERNMENT DELEGATIONS END TOURS--The government delegations visiting the Chara-Baguirmi region have all returned to the capital. The delegation led by Dr Facho Balaam, minister of transport, public works, mines, and geology, visited the cities of Lignia, Dourbali, and Massenya. The delegation led by the secretary of state for the interior charged with refugees, Mr Yaoine, and which included the secretary of state for foreign affairs, Yangalbe Passiri, was in the Moyto-Bokoro sector. The members of the cabinet explained to the people they visited the essential aspects of the political and military situation in our country and asked them to support the actions of the GUNT [Transitional National Unity Government]. However, the major interest of these visits was to have allowed the people to explain their problems to the Chadian authorities. The improper actions committed by the combat forces were regularly denounced. [Text] [Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 17 Mar 82 p 16] 5170

STRENGTHENING OF TRADE UNION LAUDED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Apr 82 pp 2-3

[Article by Woubetu Taye: "Strengthening AETU"]

[Text] The Second Regular Session of the Central Committee of the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) has taken note of the significant contributions workers have made through their national organization, the All Ethiopia Trade Union (AETU), towards the revolutionary development campaign and cultural transformation.

AETU was also commended for its continuing struggle for laying the technical and material basis to hasten the transition to socialism. However, the Second Regular Session of the CC of COPWE resolved: "Though AETU has made an impact on all other aspects of the national struggle during its five years of existence, it is imperative that it should be restructured and reorganized to live up to its responsibilities at the current stage the Revolution has attained."

Accordingly, Proclamation No. 222/74 was issued on March 10, 1982 aimed at strengthening and reorganizing AETU. The proclamation states that workers will not be organized in Industrial unions only but also on territorial basis.

The plant unionts will be playing a greater role in the future in the protection of the health and welfare of the workers in addition to striving for increased production, care for machinery and other production equipment and the promotion of socialist competition.

Agitation campaigns for the setting up of plant unions were launched on April 3, 1982. Every possible effort was made to familiarize workers with the spirit of the new proclamation and the stage attained by the Revolution at present. This was followed up with the formation of election committees. Beginning yesterday, nominations of candidates for plant unions are underway. Names of candidates who meet the set criteria will be made official to members of the plant unions prior to balloting.

The criteria are: acceptance of the Programme of the National Democratic Revolution (NDR), non-involvement in corruption and embezzlement, non-deprivation of civil rights by court decision, mentally sane, non-addiction to alcohol and drugs.

Included are also the acceptance of Marxism-Leninism, notable contribution towards the establishment of the party of the working people, willingness to organize and lead workers. Faith in collective leadership and responsibility also accounts.

An Ethiopian citizen aged above 21 years can elect or be elected. A member unable to attend the meetings for reasons beyond his control can vote or be elected. Officers of unions at present occupying positions at higher levels can only start the process at the plant union level if they wish to be re-elected.

The plant unions will have 15 executive committee members: a chairman, a vice-chairman and a secretary. The chairman has to be confirmed by the General Assembly. The remaining 11 members will be assigned to various committees.

To be elected are also three members of the workers control committee.

Structural Set Up

Two or more plant unions of workers in a similar industrial enterprise and having a membership of 100 persons or above will consistute the woreda (district) industrial union. Similarly, the awraja (provincial) industrial union will be made up of two woreda industrial unions. At a higher, level, Administrative regions, two provincial industrial unions will form the Regional Industrial Union which will become part of the National Industrial Union.

The factories in our country being concentrated in a few urban centres, situations arise where the above structural organization can not be strictly adhered to. Special provisions were made in such cases to have workers interests represented.

If plant unions cannot be formed, they will be represented at the district level provided that an industrial union representing their trade exists. This being not fulfilled, they can go higher up the structural ladder and be absorbed at the provincial level. The process will be repeated at still higher levels--up to the National Industrial Union--the requirement at the various levels not being met.

The new and prominent element of the new Labour Proclamation is the establishment of AETU branches on territorial basis in line with government administrative structure: At woreda, awraja and administrative region levels.

The leadership at the territorial level will comprise of members from the eight industrial unions and acts in unison. This did not exist in the previous proclamation.

The new proclamation also allows for the establishment of AETU branches at various administrative levels where normal conditions are not met thus making it possible for workers to be represented in both ways--both trade and territorial.

Representation will be on numerical basis industrially and territorially. 500 members will constitute the AETU Congress. The National Industrial Union Assembly will comprise of the executive committee members and representatives of the Regional Industrial Unions from among which a Central and Control Committee of the Industrial Union will be elected.

Central Committee members of the National Industrial Union will be chairmen and members elected from among the Regional Industrial Unions. Members of the executive committee at the national level will not be less than five or more than seven. The workers control committees of the National Industrial Union will have three members.

The AETU Congress will be constituted of the executive committees of the National Industrial Unions, Regional AETU branch executive committees and representatives of workers in the various administrative regions. From among the Congress, members will be elected to AETU Central Council and Control Committee.

The AETU Central Council members will be: executive committee members of the National Industrial Unions, chairmen of the regional AETU branches, and individuals to be elected from among AETU Congress members.

The AETU Congress will be electing 36 members and alternate members to the Central Council. 21 will become members and the remaining 15 alternate members.

The AETU Central Workers Control Committee will have five members to be elected from the Congress. The congress will also name the chairman of the Control Committee.

Such a structure will, of course, contribute greatly towards the establishment of the working peoples' party and facilitate the activities of the workers control committees in their struggle against corruption, embezzlement and other social evils. It will also help boost the creative talent of workers, enhance the class struggle and strengthen the class alliance between peasants and workers.

One of the factors which makes the plant unions of great importance is that it is only at this level that workers can negotiate a collective agreement. The internal regulations of the various industrial unions has been left for formulation by AETU.

The eight Industrial Unions within AETU are: The Industrial Unions of the workers of Transport and Communications; Factories; Wholesale and Retail Trade; Water, Light and Gas; Service Institutions; Construction; Mines, Quarry and Mills and Agro-Industrial Workers Unions.

PROGRESS IN POSTAL SERVICES NOTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Apr 82 p 6

[Text]

ADDIS ABABA (EH) — The Ethiopian Postal Service has made a marked progress in activities in the post-revolutionary period, during which time the number of post offices around the country has gone up from 378 in 1973 to 800 at present.

This was stated by Comrade Gezahegn Gebre-Wolde, general manager of the Ethiopian Postal Service (EPS), in an interview with The Ethiopian Herald here yesterday. He said the postal service has shown a steady growth during the last several years. The trend is shown by the following figures, in 1974 the number of post offices went up to 502 while in 1975 it grew to 552. The breakdown of the figures reveals that in 1973 there were 84 main post offices, 211 sub-post offices and 83 visiting postman service. Today there are 95 post offices, 344 sub-post offices ad 361 visiting postman services.

According to the EPS general manager, postal service was introduced in Ethiopian in 1894. Most of the post offices in the country located in Kaffa, Illubabor, Gojjam, Wollega and partly in Shoa administrative regions. Comrade Gezahegn pointed out that this was due to the favourable road network existing in these regions. Second place is held by south-eastern regions that include Hararghe, Sidamo, Bale, Gamo Goffa and part of Shoa, and northern regions of Eritrea. Gondar, Tigrai and Wollo take third place in distribution of post offices.

Comrade Gezahegn said that the establishment of mass organizations has considerably contributed to the development of the postal service. The numbering of houses in urban areas has also facilitated the entire mail service. The general manager said that in addition to the establishment of mass organizations, the launching of the nation-wide literacy campaign has had a positive impact in the growth of the country's postal system.

Commenting on future plans, Comrade Gezahegn said we have to do a lot more in order to meet the postal service needs of the nation. He said we have to see to it that people will be able to receive their mail from the nearest post office. He said on the basis of the standard set by the Universal Postal Union (UPU) one post office is to give service between 3,000 to 5,000 people. He stressed once again that the creation of mass organizations has helped the development of the Ethiopian Postal Service and added that further results could be expected through the co-operation of mass organizations. The general manager said under an initiative provided by the EPS already 20 post offices are extending their services in 20 of the city's 25 higher associations. Construction of post offices is underway in the remaining higher urban dwellers' associations. The expenses for the construction of the post offices was borne by the higher associations.

The general manager said the programme is being introduced in urban centres in different parts of the city. Peasants' associations are encouraged to have similar services in the form of the visiting postman service. Comrade Gezahegn said peasants' service co-operatives are authorized to sell postage stamps and aero-gramme pieces in order to lessen the burden of the rural population, that usually have to walk long distances to get these services.

The Ethiopian Postal Service began showing marked progress in its activities from 1977 onwards and this was followed by the launching of the National Literacy Campaign. The EPS has over 1,500 employees, 850 of them representing permanent staff while around 700 of them account for postal agents, which figure also includes visiting postman.

REYA CC MEETING PASSES RESOLUTIONS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Apr 82 pp 1, 5

[Text]

ADDIS ABABA (ENA) — The Third Regular Meeting of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Association (REYA) wound up here yesterday devising ways and means for the execution of the resolutions of the Third Regular Session of COPWE and passing resolution on different organizational issues.

The meeting, during its three-day session, listened to reports submitted by regional chapters from the 14 administrative regions, Assab administrative province and within the Revolutionary Army.

The meeting reviewed the implementation of the resolution passed by the Second Regular Session of REYA Central Committee and made wide ranging deliberation on international affairs.

The meeting, noting the significant role it played in the formation of the National Workers Control Committee (NWCC) also devised ways in which its members will play in the structuring of the workers control committee at all levels.

The meeting issued necessary directives to members to extend solidarity in practice in the move taken to sterngthen the AEPA and AETU.

On the closing ceremony Comrade Hailu Tujuba, Chairman of the REYA handed over to Comrade Mulugeta Gebru, Chairman of the Eritrea REYA Chapter, the 100,000 Birr donation raised by the REYA chapters of the 13 administrative regions and REYA CC Head Quarters towards strengthening the Eritrea REYA Branch.

The meeting issued declaration that the youth of Revolutionary Ethiopia is poised to act as a rearguard and motive force in the successful implementation of the Red Star Multi-Faceted Revolutionary Campaign.

WEEKLY ROUNDUP OF NON-ENGLISH PRESS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 18 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Woubetu Taye in column "Views, Comments, Opinions"]

[Text]

In an editorial comment on this week's election of executive committee members of plant unions, Serto Ader, organ of the CC of COPWE, said that the working class has organized itself in the various mass organizations to intensify its struggle. However, the struggle will be more enhanced through the leadership of a vanguard working class party.

Economic development is decisive for the improvement of the quality of life of the working class. This can only be achieved by a strengthened workers unions and peasant associations which will help boost production, the paper editorialized.

Serto Ader also elaborated on the role of the two mass organizations as being instrumental in the implementation of government policy, inculcate socialist discipline in the minds of their members besides helping workers assert their rights.

The web of bureaucratic entaglements will be minimized through increased workers participation in decision making. Proper use and care of machinery and other production materials will be feasible by the establishment of Workers Control Committees. The reorganization of AETU and AEPA, the editorial said, will strengthen the activities of people's control committees to be set up.

This being so, workers should give utmost care to the election of office bearers at the various levels. Those running for office should be persons with a good record of achievement in the revolutionary struggle, creative and those able to become a link between the Revolutionary Government, COPWE and workers, Serto Ader stated.

Workers were urged to think twice before casting their vote for the candidates since it will be reflecting on their performance after election. They must learn from past experience, when persons interested in their own welfare were elected to leadership positions in trade unions thus embezzling union funds and misrepresenting workers interests.

The COPWE CC organ concluded its editorial by saying that nothing is unknown to workers about the personality of the candidates. Each and every one of them knows the path every worker tred during this past seven revolutionary years. Of vital importance is the utilization of this knowledge in the election of union leaders through the democratic forum granted to them. By this act of theirs they will greatly contribute to the forging ahead of the popular revolution.

Quality of Education

The Amharic daily, Addis Zemen, in its editorial Wednesday commended the efforts being made by the Revolutionary Government to improve the quality of education and enhance student discipline. The change in the timing of the start of the school year and the mandatory wearing of uniforms by schoolchildren had numerous advantages, the paper noted.

After noting that attempts in the past to have students wear uniforms were not successful, the paper called on school administration officials and parents to make the utmost effort for the implementation of the directive.

The wearing of uniforms by students will help to overcome the prevailing disciplinary problems among students. However, Addis Zemen cautioned, means should be found to enable parents with many children buy uniforms for their children without feeling the financial burden. One of the suggested means in the editorial is payment on instalment basis.

In a second page feature Tuesday, Addis Zemen, discribed the overall contributions of the youth. With the establishment of REYA, the youth has overcome the shortcoming imposed upon it by the lack of an organization. REYA is striving to increase youth participation in national economic development.

For the triumph of socialism, the success of the revolutionary development campaign and eradication of illiteracy, the young generation has made a remarkable contribution since the setting up of REYA, it was noted in the feature.

REYA embraces 19,526 basic organizations with a membership of over three million youngsters out of the nine million eligible for membership. The organization is attempting to put all youngsters under its fold, the feature said.

REYA was featured in connection with the holding of its Third Regular Congress of the CC.

The Oromo language weekly Berisa, commented on the need of the caution workers must make in electing their union leaders. For elections to leadership positions in any organisation, the political consciousness of the electors is essential, the paper stated.

The election of proper persons to various leadership positions in the mass organizations in the past were achieved through a hard and bitter struggle. Accordingly, now that elections are being held of union leaders, workers must scrutinize candidates, the paper editorialized.

It is only when workers well versed in Marxism-Leninism take up positions in the unions that problems connected with the daily lives of workers are tackled with properly. This not being achieved, workers will be unable to play the vanguard role in the revolutionary struggle, Berisa commented.

The Oromo language paper concluded its remarks by saying that cognizant of the fact that the role strengthened trade unions will play in the advancement of the revolution, workers must be able to use heir rights properly.

Control Committees

Al-Alem, the Arabic weekly on its part commented on the importance of the People's Control Committees. The sacrifices made by both workers and peasants to reach the current stage was noted by the paper.

The strict screening of candidates for the National People's Control Committee, which took a long time, was crowned with success. It has made it possible for people with creative ability and long years of experience and the ability to institutionalise a new system to become members of the higher committee, Al-Alem noted.

The struggle for socialist construction will advance forward under such situations. New Ethiopia will be built on sound foundations, the paper concluded.

Serto Ader, in a front-page article wrote that the resolutions adopted by the Third Regular Congress of the CC of REYA will contribute much towards the fulfilment of COPWE's mission. The youth were called upon to verse themselves in scientific socialism through their organization besides increasing the effort for the establishment of the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia.

After noting the contributions the youth have made in the on-going National Literacy Campaign, REYA called on the youth to increase its voluntary participation. It also disclosed its full support for the Multi-faceted Red Star Revolutionary Reconstruction and Development Campaign in addition to the issuance of a special declaration on the strengthening of its branch in Eritrea Region, Serto Ader, pointed out.

REYA CC THIRD REGULAR MEET IN PROGRESS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Apr 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] ADDIS ABABA (ENA)--The Third Regular Meeting of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Association (REYA) opened here yesterday at its Central Committee Office.

The three-day meeting will hear progress reports on the activities of REYA's 14 regional branches, the Assab provincial administration and the Addis Ababa as well as REYA Committee offices within the Revolutionary Army. The reports deal with youth participation in organisation, ideological dissemination and control activities.

The participants of the meeting will also be given educational briefings on different topics.

Opening the meeting, Comrade Hailu Tujuba, Chairman of REYA, said that Ethiopian youth are devoting their energy, intellectual resources and creative ability to the realisation of the objectives of the Revolution, he said.

The youth are also taking part in the task of socialist construction guided by a unified programme in accordance with the political organisational and ideological directives of the Revolutionary Government and COPWE.

Encouraging Results

Comrade Hailu outlined the encouraging results obtained by REYA in the field of organisation, ideological dissemination, participation in political and social fields in the military branch and in the building of the new proletarian culture.

The REYA Chairman informed the session of the progress underway in coordinating youth and enhancing their activities in various areas endeavour.

Comrade Hailu underscored the significance of the Third Regular Meeting of the REYA Central Committee which, he observed, coincided with the establishment of the national workers control committee, the launching of the Red Star Multi-Faceted Revolutionary Campaign in Eritrea region and the issuance of the decrees streamlining AETU and AEPA.

He also referred to REYA's strong international solidarity in the struggle against imperialism, racism, zionism and for world peace and economic and social justice.

Speaking about Ethiopian youth abroad, the REYA Chairman pointed out that through the full support and guidance of COPWE and in accordance with the decisions of the Second Regular Meeting of REYA Central Committee, Ethiopian students' associations affiliated to REYA have been set up in Europe, North America and Socialist Cuba.

He noted that REYA was made member of the International Democratic Youth Federation and Executive Committee member of the International Union of Students in recognition of the implacable anti-imperialist stand of Ethiopian youth. He also disclosed that REYA is to host in July an international meeting aimed at forging the anti-imperialist alliance.

The session listened to reports of REYA Committee offices from Shoa, and Arssi regions in the morning and Addis Ababa, Eritrea, Tigrai, Wollo, Gondar, Gojjam and Wollo regions in the afternoon panel.

The opening ceremony was attended by Comrade Wondimu Robi, COPWE Central Committee alternate member and Head of Youth Affairs in the COPWE Organizational Affairs Department, and Comrade Capt. Berena Wordofa, Head of Youth Affairs in the Political Affairs Department of the Revolutionary Army.

CHAIRMAN INAUGURATES MERCHANT SHIP, INSPECTS MARINE TRANSPORT

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 18 Apr 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] MASSAWA (ENA) — Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, yesterday inaugurated a modern merchant ship which was purchased by the Ethiopian Shipping Lines Corporation and observed the activities of the marine transport sector.

The new merchant ship named "Red Star" which was inaugurated by Comrade Chairman Mengistu was bought at a cost of 10,324,000 Birr to expand and strengthen the Ethiopian marine transport.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, Chairman of the PMAC and of COPWE and Commander-in-Chief of the Revolutionary Army, was shown around the various sections of the newly inaugurated "Red Star" by the captain of the ship, Comrade Captain Tekle Abraha, and also inspected the facilities of Massawa Port.

Speaking on the occasion, Comrade Yusuf Ahmed, the Minister of Transport and Communications and COPWE Central Committee member, said that in line with the directives earlier given by Comrade Chairman Mengistu to improve the nation's merchant fleet and their services two ships were bought for 21 million Birr — the "Red Star" and "Walwal."

The Minister explained that the two merchant ships were produced with the most up todate technology and expressed confidence that the ships would provide dependable services in the years to come.

Explaining that the past feudo-bourgeois regime had no defined policy on marine transport Comrade Yusuf further stated that following the transfer of the Maritime Transport Service to public onwnership and the establishment of the Maritime Transport Authority, a steady profit had been realized.

The Minister of Transport and Communications said that based on the directive given by Comrade Chairman Mengistu, a-20-year development master plan is under preparation, and that efforts are being made to upgrade the ports and train adequate professionals in this area of endeavours. In this regard he revealed that the first batch of 10 Ethiopians have graduated as commercial ship captains and that 23 engineers and four communication technicians were undergoing training abroad.

Comrade Yusuf stated that preparations are underway to buy additional merchant ships in line with decisions taken to this end.

After the end of the inaugural ceremony of the "Red Star", Comrade Chairman Mengistu inspected the "Karamara" liner and studied the master plan prepared to upgrade the port of Massawa during which he received a briefing on the plan by Comrade Yusuf.

Later Comrade Chairman Mengistu toured the port and its environs.

In the course of the inspection tour, Comrade Chairman Mengistu exchanged views with elders present at the inauguration ceremony at which time the elders expressed their heartfelt affection to the Comrade Chairman.

When Comrade Chairman Mengistu arrived at Massawa airport, he was accorded warm welcome by Comrade Yusuf and representatives of government and mass organizations of the Key Bahr province.

At the "Red Star" or Key Kokeb ship bouquets of flowers were presented to Comrade Chairman Mengistu.

Present at the inaugural ceremony were Comrade Amanuel Amde Mikael, Deputy Senior Minister, COPWE Central Committee member and Secretary General of the Red Star Multi-Faceted Revolutionary Campaign in Eritrea region, Ministers, COPWE Central Committee members and Executive Committee members of the Red Star Multi-Faceted Revolutionary Campaign.

Meanwhile Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, has congratulated the people of the Republic of Zimbabwe who are celebrating the Second Anniversary of their independence today.

In a message to H.E. Canaan S. Banana, President of the Republic of Zimbabwe, Comrade Chairman Mengistu extended warmest congratulations of the government and people of Socialist Ethiopia and that of his own to the brotherly people of Zimbabwe on the occasion of their independence anniversary.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu also extended best wishes for the peace and prosperity of the brotherly people of the Republic of Zimbabwe and for the personal well-being of H.E. President Banana.

ACTIVITIES OF ANIMAL, ANIMAL BYPRODUCTS TEAM NOTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 18 Apr 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] ADDIS ABABA (EH)--The Animal and Animal By-products Market Development Team, operating under the Animal Resources Department of the Ministry of Agriculture, is primarily engaged in the collection of data on livestock market throughout the country including the movement of trade animals.

In an interview with The Ethiopian Herald yesterday, Comrade Sintayehu Gebre-Mariam, head of the team, said such information would help identify potential areas on trade animals as well as the routes used for such purpose. He said the acquisition of such information will allow the team to establish the necessary facilities, namely, staging points or animal resting places. Staging points are to be set up with an average of 25-30 kilometres.

Discussing the matter further, Comrade Sintayehu said that by establishing staging points it is possible to maintain the weight of the animal and the quality of meat, since the animals are made to traverse long distances, during which time they could lose up to 30 per cent of their weight. He noted that this would in turn result in loss of income to the peasant because of the low quantity and quality of the final product.

According to the head of the team, as a rule the staging points will have a resting area, and watering and feed facilities for animals. The team plans to set up around 10 staging points on a 250-kilometre route. The staging points have already been identified and these will be located in Jibat-Metcha and Yerer-Kereyu provinces in Shoa region. Each staging point will be built over one hectare of land, which is estimated to cost about 15,000 Birr. The team's long-range plan is to establish 10 to 12 staging points annually until the whole will be covered by a network of routes linking consumer centres and meat packing plants with production areas.

Comrade Sintayehu said that there are also plans to establish check-points, mainly in border areas, where a substantial contraband business in cattle is going on. He said five of the planned 16 check-points are nearing completion and the remaining 11 are expected to be ready by the end of the next fiscal year. The check-points will serve a vital purpose in controlling the illegal movement of hides and skins into the capital city from rural areas. The check-points will be set up at ideal locations in Hararghe, Bale and Sidamo regions.

The other major activity carried out by the Animal and Animal By-products Market Development Team involves the improvement of hides and skins. The team sees to it that proper facilities, such as sheds, frames, salting tables, salting horse and stores are set up. The head of the team added that peasants' service co-operatives in Sidamo region have introduced the necessary facilities for the preparation of hides and skins. They are setting a good example to be followed by other co-operatives. The future trend is to encourage peasants' service co-operatives to take up this business on a large scale. The team is teaching the co-operatives the proper techniques on the handling of hides and skins.

According to information provided by the Ministry of Foreign Trade, in the 1980-1981 period Ethiopia has exported 3,094 tons of hides valued at 9.2 million Birr and 504,633 dozen of skins valued at 40.3 million Birr. Other exports made during the same period include more than 2,000,000 square metres of semi-processed hides valued at 2.6 million Birr and 342,438 dozen of semi-processed skins valued at 42.5 million Birr. The total earnings from this sector of the export market accounted for 11.4 per cent of the total national earnings from export.

Improper Handling

Comrade Sintayehu stressed that a large quantity of hides and skins are wasted because they are used for domestic purposes or due to improper handling. He said that if all the hides and skins produced in the country are brought to the market, Ethiopia would be able to get increased foreign exchange earnings from this same source.

The team has submitted a project for approval to the government regarding the use of wasted animal byproducts in rural areas. These include blood, meat, offal and other non-edible by-products. The project will be a service-giving venture teaching producers on the proper utilization of animal by-products.

Comrade Sintayehu also discussed, the marketing situation at present, which he stated is not properly organized. He said there are too many markets with no centralized system in the country as well as too many middlemen, that are amassing huge profits. He said the other thing is that the right type of animals are not reaching the market except for worked-out oxen and barren cows. He said the price made by peasants is not inviting and besides there are seasonal fluctuations in the market and prices owing to the imbalance in supply and demand.

The team's long-range aims are to centralize the market as well as create a network for gathering and disseminating market information. This is designed to stop the exploitation carried out by traders over producers, as they are better informed about prices and they are virtually the ones that determine the price of the product. The plan will eventually lead to the selling of animals by grade. The team will encourage co-operatives to practice a ranching system and will promote the same by providing the necessary technical assistance and advice. In this respect the team will work in close co-operation with the veterinary division so that animals will receive, the necessary veterinary services.

ETHIO-BULGARIAN TRADE TIES REVIEWED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Apr 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] ADDIS ABABA (ENA) — Ethiopian organizations dealing in export trade were briefed here Tuesday night on the strengthening of existing trade relations between Socialist Ethiopia and the People's Republic of Bulgaria in line with the mutual trade agreement reached between the two sisterly countries last year.

Held at the auditorium of the Chamber of Commerce, the briefing was given by Comrade Nedialko I Metchev the Commercial Counsellor of the Embassy of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, in connection with the international Trade Fair to be held from May 3rd to 9th in the Bulgarian town of Plovdiv.

Comrade Metchev spoke on the ways of further increasing the amount of trade exchange between the two countries and noted that a great stride had been made in this field following the upsurge of the Ethiopian revolution.

He also elaborated on the opportunities of implementing the trade and economic agreement which were signed last year in Sofia in accordance with the Session of the Joint Commission on Trade and Technical Cooperation of the two countries. The Counsellor explained the various development projects that could be run with the economic aid Bulgaria provides to Ethiopia.

Preparations have meanwhile been completed by Ethiopia to display a variety of commercial items at the forthcoming trade fair in Plovdiv.

MINISTER RETURNS FROM JOINT COMMISSION MEET IN ADEN

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Apr 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] ADDIS ABABA (ENA) — The joint commission which was recently established to implement the five year economic, scientific, technical and commercial cooperation signed by Socialist Ethiopia and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen has mapped out its action plans in accordance with the joint cooperation programme of action for this year following deliberations during its meeting in Aden last week.

This was stated by Comrade Wollie Chekol, Minister of Foreign Trade, on his return here after attending the meeting of the joint commission in the PDRY capital.

The joint commission, which oversees the implementation of the agreement by organising annual programme of action, has agreed to strengthen and widen air and sea communications and install a telephone line between Assab and Aden, Comrade Wollie disclosed.

He said that the joint commission also approved this year's programme of action while at the same time recommending further strengthening of cooperation in the Tourist Industry and the promotion of educational, cultural, economic and trade relations between the two friendly countries.

The Minister observed that the two countries have waged tremendous efforts to strengthen the economic and trade relations existing between them.

'YEKATIT' HIGHLIGHTS STATE OF FOREIGN TRADE

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Apr 82 pp 1, 5

[Text]

ADDIS ABABA (ENA) — The encouraging and satisfactory trend of Ethiopia's foreign trade situation has been highlighted in the latest issue of the Amharic Magazine Yekatit.

The magazine also features on the decisive role banks play to improve the country's foreign trade performance.

An interview with Comrade Wollie Chekol, Minister of Foreign Trade, published in the magazine contrasts the dynamic change that had come about in the foreign trade sector following the Revolution with the static and exploitative situation prevailing in the pre-revolutionary era.

Pointing out the characteristics of foreign trade in the pre-revolutionary period, it is pointed out that export permits were given to individuals who advanced the exploitative mechanism of the feudo-bourgeois system. These exporters limited their activities to few agricultural products and focused mostly on western markets.

As far as imports were concerned, importers during the feudo-bourgeois system were interested mainly in importing consumer goods thereby encouraging the uneconomic outflow of foreign exchange, it was explained by Comrade Wollie in the interview with Yekatit.

Following the upsurge of the Revolution, in view of the importance foreign trade has in the construction of a socialist economy, the Revolutionary Government established a separate Ministry to look after the foreign trade sector.

Comrade Wollie informs Yekatit that the share of the government in the export trade has risen from zero per cent prior to the revolution up to 70 per cent in the previous fiscal year. Similarly, the government's share in imports has risen from 20 per cent prior to the Revolution to 34 per cent at present.

A comparison of import values two years before the Revolution and nine years later show an increment of 205 per cent, according to Comrade Wollie, while in the safe period, export value registered an increment of 160 per cent.

It is stated in the magazine that 80 per cent of the foreign exchange earnings of the country is obtained from the export of coffee, hides and skins, oil seeds and pulses, vegetables and fruits, meat and meat products and other products.

In conclusion, Yekatit stresses the responsibility entrusted upon individuals and organisations engaged in the foreign trade to develop this important sector, and assures them of the readiness of the National Bank and the Commercial Bank of Ethiopia to render them utmost co-operation to facilitate their work.

MINISTRY, SIDE AID AGREEMENT--ADDIS ABABA (ENA)--The Ministry of Health yesterday signed a 2.5 million aid agreement with the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA) to stregnthen its rural health services in the regions. The money will be channelled towards the construction of a health training institution in Jimma and for the expansion of mother and child health care programme, the building of a health office in Hararghe region and the strengthening of the Training Department of the Ministry of Health. The agreement covers the period between 1982 and 1983 and was signed on behalf of Socialist Ethiopia. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Apr 82 p 1]

PEASANTS' VILLAGE IN GAMBELLA--A 140-hectare plot of land has been demarcated for a peasants' village in Gambella, Illubabor region, where 407 family heads have been settled, according to ENA report. It is understood that 407 families with 1,500 dependents were settled during 1980/81 in the village from among the Agnwak, Nuwer, Mejenger and Kumo nationalities. Construction work on residential quarters for prospective settlers is also in progress, it was disclosed. The Relief and Rehabilitation Commission has constructed in the village a warehouse, a clinic, a garage, a radio telecommunication facility, a flour mill and a residential quarter for staff who will be engaged in the settlement project. It was learnt that 140 of the settlers were declared literates while the remaining are attending follow-up classes. Comrade Simon Galore, COPWE Central Committee member and COPWE representative for Illubabor region, made an inspection tour of the village and was apprised on peasant association activities. 1,232 TECHNICAL, VOCATIONAL GRADS--ADDIS ABABA (EH)--1,232 students from four reorganized technical and vocational schools are expected to graduate at the end of this academic year, according to Comrade Sileshi Mulatu, chief expert of Technical and Vocational Education. Two of the four schools are located here in the capital while the rest two are found in Dessie and Illubabor, the expert disclosed. The students are trained on wood, metal, and electrical woks, it was learnt. During the two years training programme, they also study commerce and home economics. Meanwhile, 406 additional technicians are expected to graduate from the old Addis Ababa and Asmara technical schools, explained Comrade Sileshi. On the other hand, maximum effort is being exerted university-graduable to the students university-graduate teachers, the expert added. According to Comrade Sileshi, six technical and vocational schools will be opened in the next academic year. And that will raise the number of technical and vocational schools in the nation to 19, it was stated. It order to consolidate the training programme, the schools are at present obtaining assistance on agricultural and industrial field of studies from socialist countries, he concluded. BONGO INTERVIEWED ON COOPERATION WITH CANADA

AB270935 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 26 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The president of the republic, His Excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo, this morning granted two audiences at the renovation palace. The first audience was granted to the adviser to King Hassan II, Mr Ahmed Reda Dedira. On this occasion, the emisaary from Rabat delivered a message from His Majesty King Hassan II to the father of the renovation. The message was on relations existing between Gabon and Morocco. The two statesmen also reviewed international issues.

After these audiences in the morning, the head of state granted an important interview to a Canadian journalist, Mrs Ginger DuBois. With our correspondent, El Hadj Omar Bongo spoke about art and particularly about the movie "Tomorrow Is a New DAy." On international politics, President Bongo stressed the (?excellent) relations existing between Gabon and Canada.

[Begin Bongo recording] We have signed agreements on railroad [words indistinct]. Concerning the trans-Gabon railroad, we started with the first phase from Libreville to Buey. The second phase will begin from Buey and end at Franceville [words indistinct]. After the completion of this phase, a third phase, will also start from Buey and will end at the (Belinga) road junction and if we have the means we can exploit some iron deposits. But, the economic policy we have with Canada concerns first and foremost training, which we appreciate so much, because here we have a higher college of education charged with training college and government secondary school teachers. Canada's participation here is an aspect of our cooperation with Canada. The Canadian Government assisted us in building this college of education. There are also several young cadres who have been trained in Canada in the fields of art and science. Concerning the railroads, it is evident that during the construction of the second phase, which will begin next year or by the end of this year maybe, Canada has once again demonstrated understanding by agreeing to participate in the construction of this second phase of the trans-Gabon railroad. Also Canada is assisting us in the construction of some buildings, such as the new office of the Foreign Affairs Ministry. [End recording]

PRESIDENT'S NEW SOCIAL MEASURES ANALYZED

Dakar AFRICA in French No 139, Mar 82 pp 39, 40

[Article by Jean-Pierre Challard: "New Social Measures of President Omar Bongo"]

[Text] The Gabonese economy continues to feel the aftereffects of the shock of 1978-79, caused by the stabilization and recovery plan which was applied rigorously for 2 years and which was aimed at bringing under control an intolerable "overheating" of the economy. Analyzing and bringing under control the major financial and monetary imbalances, thanks particularly to the assistance of experts from the International Monetary Fund, certainly resulted in a more rational and more farseeing economic policy, avoiding as much as possible mere improvisations and the implementation of prestige projects.

Serious Social Problems

However, this kind of surgery, at the level of the major components of the economy, nonetheless neglected (or postponed) the treatment of important facets of the economy such as the disparities in income between different social and professional segments of the people. In the face of ostentatious and shocking expenditure by certain newly prosperous elements and the decline of the purchasing power of other citizens no longer able to meet the consecutive price increases, the Gabonese authorities recently undertook some essential readjustments. The normal play of the forces of supply and demand was unable to function in view of the "dictate" imposed by retail merchants, who manipulated weaknesses in the internal distribution networks.

Although the claims of the clandestine National Recovery Movement (MORENA) turned out to be inaccurate, and although the temporary closure of Omar Bongo National University had a rather personal character (the refusal of Rector Laurent Biffot), on the other hand the consequences within the labor sector at the end of December 1981 were based on more serious and more realistic reasons.

Only a few days later the government launched a frontal attack on this serious social problem, which had acquired regional proportions. The cabinet communique of 15 January 1982 ordered the increase of the minimum interprofessional guaranteed salary (SMIG), which went up from 30,000 to 35,000 CFA Francs. At the same time the tax-free indemnity for Gabonese workers alone went up one step, from 10,000 to 15,000 CFA Francs.

Thus, every worker of Gabonese nationality was assured of receiving at least 50,000 instead of 40,000 CFA Francs, or an increase of 25 percent, which was to raise Gabon to the highest ranks among the African countries in this respect. The SMIG, which had not changed for 3 years, had encountered all kinds of difficulty in following the successive increases in the prices of food products.

The inflation rate, which had stabilized at 8 percent in 1979, had shot up beginning in September, 1980, reaching the dangerious rate of 15.1 percent between 30 November 1980 and 30 November 1981. Although the index of 125 retail articles had risen at a rate of 15.1 percent, on the other hand the index of 113 wholesale articles had only risen by 8.0 percent. This proves that the control of the retail distribution networks is not very efficient, if not that these differences can be attributed to the disorganization of the retail market.

In the Libreville markets a stick of cooked manioc shrank in volume while becoming increasingly expensive. The plantain, which is the other basic food element in the Gabonese diet, was sold for up to 100 CFA Francs a "finger" at the retail level, which told President Omar Bongo that, to his great astonishment, the Gabonese monetary unit seemed to have become a 100 CFA Franc coin!

The day after the announcement of the increase in the SMIG, which therefore had not yet had any effect on salary slips, some unscrupulous merchants joyfully raised their package of 10 stocks of cooked manioc to 1,500 CFA Francs, which was equivalent to an increase of 50 percent. A few avenging "raids" but the Directorate of Price Control led them to calmer thinking. The merchandise was sold on the spot at the established price or, when the offense was repeated, was seized and distributed free of charge at the general hospital.

Legal Strike

Starting the following week, negotiations on salaries at the national level were to begin in the joint committees, following the increase in the SMIG. All social and professional classes participated through the trade union representatives, the representatives of management, and the leaders of the Ministry of Labor and Employment. The discussions led to readjustments which were to take effect from 1 January 1982, to be applied in mid-February, following approval by the national committee and remain in effect for the month of January.

Once these salary negotiations ended, the different parties opened discussions on the basic structure of the collective bargaining agreements. On Saturday, 6 February 1982, this basic structure was officially signed in the presence of Minister of State Jules Bourdes Ogouliguende.

Speaking to the Confederation of Gabonese Employers, represented by Sipamio-Berre, and the Gabonese Trade Union Confderation, led by Martin Allini, the minister recalled that contrary to what is generally believed, the exercise of the right to strike in Gabon was not prohibited. Articles 238 and 249 of Law 5 of 1978 regulate the procedure for collective labor disputes in this way: if all attempts at conciliation and arbitration set forth in the law are unsuccessful, the strike becomes legal.

On the day before [5 February 1982] another cabinet meeting had decided on an equally important measure of a social and professional character, in terms of its impact on the people. The monthly transportation premium payable to all workers went up to 5,000 CFA Francs for four trips per day and 2,500 CFA Francs for two trips per day. These premium payments had previously been fixed at 2,600 and 1,300 CFA Francs, respectively.

This new measure only completed the action taken in the preceding cabinet meeting, where it was clearly stated that, "The government intends to provide, as soon as possible and in accordance with the realities of the national economy, appropriate solutions for the existing problems in the labor sector."

During the course of the former cabinet meeting, presided over by Omar Bongo, the authorities equally stated that they wished to carry out a census of the unemployed and to find work for the idle or the unemployed (the word "unemployment" was, however, carefully avoided), while issuing a warning to all those who enjoyed idleness and refused to take a paying job to provide for their own support.

At the same meeting the authorities established a committee of experts in the field of education to study and resolve the principal problems in this sector: cancellation of contracts, recruitment, reclassification, accreditation, retirement, vacations, housing, promotions, competitive examinations. This is because since the increase in their salaries in 1980, following serious disturbances in May of that year, teachers have continued to complain that their claims are not seriously considered and that promotions depend on influence or pure chance (or pure luck).

Right to Own Homes

However, it would be incorrect to state that the Gabonese Government is taking one rapid step after another only in dealing with situations involving labor conflicts. An analysis of the national budget for 1982 shows that the accent is placed on economic and above all social affairs. Education, to speak of this sector, will benefit from the expenditure of about 13.160 billion CFA Francs, compared to 10.3 billion CFA Francs in 1981.

Housing (Ministry of Land, Registration, Preservation of Public Domain, Housing, Urbanism, and Surveys) will have 7.080 billion CFA Francs allocated to it, compared with 4.750 billion CFA Francs in 1981, and the cabinet meeting of 15 January 1982 took action more specifically on the possibility for Gabonese to own their own homes.

For an income ranging between 40,000 (now 50,000) and 80,000 CFA Francs each Gabonese can claim maximum state aid of 2.5 million CFA for construction of housing, which he undertakes himself, under very favorable conditions. In the case of income ranging between 80,000 and 150,000 CFA Francs, these people can acquire modest homes built by the National Real Estate Company under a rent-purchase arrangement prepared to meet their financial means. Finally, for those in the already comfortable income group of 150,000 to 600,000 CFA Francs per month, CREFOGA [Gabonese Real Estate Credit Company], which has 2.0 billion CFA Francs in resources, will grant loans at reasonable rates to facilitate the construction of housing for citizens of the country.

Public health, which is not the stepchild of the ministries, will have 4.894 billion CFA Francs allocated to it in 1982, compared to 3.450 billion CFA Francs in 1981. In this sector, and the figures prove it, Gabon is in first place among the countries of Central Africa in terms of hospital equipment, the number of doctors, and the number of hospital beds per person.

Certainly, these increased allocations for the "social" ministries have their reverse side of the coin. The operating budget will see rigorous austerity controls applied in the sector concerning the expenditures of high-ranking officials with the aim of reducing certain privileges and certain positions.

No rental lease can exceed 500,000 CFA Francs per month, and any prior contract going beyond this limit will be purely and simply cancelled. Utility charges such as telephone, water, and electricty, which the high-ranking personalities benefit from, will be cancelled as of 1 January 1982; that is, they will be charged to those who benefit from them. Finally, office expenses will be reviewed by the Ministry of Finance, with the purpose of reducing them.

Medical and Social Action

Finally, in Gabon there is a social security system which stands above this whole series of specific measures (some would say circumstantial measures). This proves that this action by the government relates to a long-term, in-depth effort, rather than ad hoc adaptations.

This institution, which was born 4 years before independence under the name of "Fund for Compensation and Family Allowances," has come a long way since then. On 25 November 1975 it came into existence in its present form, under the name of "National Fund for Social Security," at the same time that Law No 6 of 1975 created the Social Security Code.

The unique aspect of the Gabonese social security formula is the integration of a hospital infrastructure into its direct allowances, instead of a simple form of reimbursement. These establishments include the Owendo Pediatric Hospital, in the suburbs of Libreville; the Jeanne Ebori Foundation, in the city of Libreville; and the Port-Gentil Hospital Center.

Family allowances increase regularly: they are 3,000 CFA Francs per month per child. Prenatal allowances amount to 13,500 CFA Francs in two payments, not including the layettes, which are a premium on birth and amount to no less than 35,000 CFA Francs per child. The daily indemnities in case of pregnancy are 100 percent of total salary for a period of 14 weeks. Elsewhere, in accordance with the pro-birth [nataliste] policy of the government, family allowances have been extended to natural children, born out of wedlock.

The most discreet concession, since none of the media has spoken of it and no student has come forward to express his satisfaction, concerns the adjustment of the student scholarships in effect as of 1 January 1982. According to the figures provided by the new rector of the National University, Moise Oliveira, this scholarship has been raised to 60,000 CFA Francs per month for students holdling a baccalaureat certificate who are registered at a faculty of the university.

Students not holding a baccalaureat certificate and registered in associated schools will only receive 55,000 CFA Francs. The prices of meal tickets have been raised to 150 CFA Francs and 60 CFA Francs for breakfast. A student pays 10,000 CFA Francs per month if he has a roommate and 12,000 CFA Francs if he lives by himself. A married couple pays 12,000 CFA Francs for a month, but if the wife also has a scholarship, the rate is two times 10,000 CFA Francs or 20,000 CFA Francs.

The program of social measures adopted by the government of Leon Mebiame and the existing social security provisions are evidence of the desire of the Gabonese authorities to provide a minimum of well-being for the population. These necessary readjustments prove that, in spite of everything, there are striking inequalities in the distribution of national wealth.

It is only to be desired that this process will continue so that each Gabonese will be able to say to himself that, basically, prosperity benefits everyone and not only a handful of privileged people. In any case, this is the watchword of theleader of the country.

STRENGTHENING OF PDC'S AGAINST ATTACKS DEMANDED

AB281725 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 28 Apr 82

[Yaw Graham commentary]

[Text] It is taken for granted that counterrevolutionaries opposed to the aims of the Democratic 31 December Revolution will stop at nothing to abort the revolution. Those who are profiting from the decay and degeneration of our national lives will not fold their arms and see their social power destroyed. As the revolutionary process intensifies, it will be surprising if reaction and enemies of the revolution do not get more desperate and therefore more vicious.

The question which arises is: What must a revolution do to strengthen and defend itself against the uncompromising attacks of counterrevolution, particularly attacks on the most important democratic gain, that is the People's Defense Committees [PDC]? The Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] and the Interim National Coordinating Commmittee [INCC] have asserted time and again that the PDCS are conceived to develop into revolutionary organs of popular power. The PDCS therefore are the ultimate mass base of the revolution. Any attack on them must therefore be seen as a direct challenge to the revolution. Success in destroying the PDCS will ensure the victory of reaction and the counterrevolution. Given this fundamentally subversive character of any attempt to destroy the PDCS, the revolution must be firm, ruthless and decisive in its manner of confronting these counterrevolutionary challenges. The history of all revolutions shows that counterrevolution gets bold when it is not confronted and dealt with decisively. From brutalizing PCS members, reaction can easily move on to kidnapping people, as the Volta region story shows. The revolution must draw a line and defend itself or be destroyed. If those challenging the mass basis of the revolution are not dealt with, not only will they feel bolder but this will also cause a speed disillusionment among the masses.

Physical attacks of any kind on PCD members must be seen as political crimes deserving special punishment. The PNDC must consider as a matter of urgency, including a scale of punishment for categories of attacks on PDC members. Publicity must be generated around such cases to strengthen the young and as yet not fully confident PDCS.

Direct physical attacks are not the only way in which attempts are being made to obstruct the development of the PDCS. A more profound obstacle is posed by the continuing existence of substantial and powerful portions of the old neocolonial state with its laws, institutions and culture. Reports indicate two disturbing trends which show clearly that the old and neocolonial state cannot be utilized to advance the revolution. PDC members have been called before magistrates and charged under the old laws for trying to protect the national interest: villagers trying to enforce the curfew in areas where there are no police so as to prevent theft, trying to organize a way of (?policing) the new rent control laws and many others.

Despite massive and popular support for the important political character of the PDCS in the face of legality, the judiciary will be true to its culture and ideology, thereby undermining the revolution. There can be no way round establishing a clear legal framework for the PDCS and repealing the old laws which obstruct them. The other disturbing trend is the role of some soldiers and policemen in the harassment of PDC members. This is a clear indication that the old culture of the military and police in which soldiers and policemen are used to repress citizens with whom they have more in common than those who instigate them into action is still very much alive in pockets of the military and police. Education will do a lot to bring these soldiers and policemen round to a proper appreciation of the PDCS and the revolution.

The People's Defense Committees as the instruments of popular power to be wielded in the community and the work places to smash the power structure and relations of the old and neocolonial society will be the object of rabid counterrevolutionary attention. The revolution must ruthlessly confront these serious threats on pain of destruction. The PNDC and the INCC must act speedily, decisively and ruthlessly to help the PDCS to strengthen and protect themselves against this open challenge in the counterrevolution.

CUBAN REVOLUTION, PEOPLE HIGHLY PRAISED

AB211732 Accra Domestic Service in English 1410 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Station commentary on the program "Let the People Know": "The Cuban Revolution and the Example It Holds for Other Progressive Countries"]

[Excerpts] From October 1960, credible information began to appear in the Latin American and U.S. press about preparations for a planned invasion of Cuba.

The people of Cuba have, since the 1st of January 1959, kept a close guard over their revolution day and night. Their committees for the defense of the revolution, which are similar bodies to the People's Defense Committees we are trying to develop in Ghana, are true capable watchdogs of their revolution. About 80 percent of all Cubans of the age of 14 and above belong to defense committees which are organized on a block to block basis in both living communities and work places. The members are given military training to enable them to be a part of the people's militia. Such is the level of organization of the Cubans to defend their homeland that close to 1 million armed people could be mobilized within 24 hours in the event of any armed invasion of the island. What has the revolution brought to Cubans since January 1959 so that they are so ready to fight and die for their homeland? Let us consider a few facts and figures recorded:

1--Illiteracy has been almost completely wiped out of Cuba. The literacy campaign conducted on writing skills [words indistinct] to over 700,000 persons within a year.

2--Education, which is now completely free at all levels, has been greatly expanded. In 1958, there were just 811,345 Cubans in school. Today, there are over 3 and 1/2 million. In addition, there have been reforms to make education relevant to national needs. For instance, there is a combination of work and study to ensure the cultivation of citizens who are productive and practical. All high school students work for 4 months in the year in the country. Besides, all university graduates do a 2-year service in the countryside.

3--In the health sector, Cuba has one doctor for every 600 persons. This compares with one doctor for 17,000 persons in the least developed countries. Medical services are completely free. Such diseases like malaria, diphtheria and poliomyelitis have been eradicated while others like tetanus and tuberculosis have been considerably reduced. Mortality rates for mothers and children have come down. So efficient is the Cuban medical system that it is held as an example by the World Health Organization for developing countries.

4--Cuba has carried out the most complete land reform in the whole of Latin America. The land has been given to the tillers of the soil and this measure has paid off by considerable increase in sugar, tobacco and other agricultural produce.

Perhaps, the most significant achievement is that the Cubans themselves control their national life and destiny. Their economic resources are not used for the benefit of other people. The standards of living are very high. Social problems like alcoholism, vagrancy, prostitution, gambling and racial discrimination have been reduced to the barest minimum.

In national politics, Cubans have given democracy a new and radical content with broad participation by all the people at all levels. It is one of the few countries in the whole world where people call their president by his first name and engage in dialogue with him in public. Of course, Cuba is not yet a paradise. The country still have some serious social problems. But the progress being made to solve these problems gives an indication of increasingly improving social conditions.

The achievements of the Cuban revolution were not easy to attain. The people ran into difficulties stemming out of the magnitude of problems, the enemy they confronted as well as their overenthusiasm which led to the setting of extremely high targets some of the time. Then, there are the problems created by the United States which worsen from year to year. The economic blocade of Cuba continues to this day. Added to this blocade, Cuba is compelled to import vital needs from Europe and Asia which are over 10,000 miles away instead of the United States which is only 90 miles away. Next, there are attacks, threats and propaganda war being waged against Cuba by the United States. Over the 2-year period from 1980-81, the CIA launched a silent biological warfare on Cuba. Not less than four diseases affecting crops, livestock and human being were introduced into Cuba. Just consider the damage caused: African swine fever led to the destruction of almost half a million pigs in one province alone. A cattle disease and a sugarcane eczema led to a reduction of sugarcane production by 1.5 million tons in the 1980-81 harvest. A third disease, the Dengue fever, hit some 300,000 people in Cuba and caused the death of about 156.

Last year--on 23 September to be precise--Richard Allen, President Reagan's national security adviser, and Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state, announced the decision to begin radio broadcasts against Cuba. The Americans call the station Radio Marti thus profaning the name of Jose Marti, the famous Cuban nationalist who saw his whole life duty as preventing the United States from overpowering what he called "our land of America." Marti once said of the United States and I quote: "I have lived in the monster and I know its entrails." unquote. This year, the Reagan administration has stepped up its campaign of lies and slander against Cuba and has threatened direct invasion. As many as eight military maneuvers in the Caribbean region have been planned for the U.S. Army, some of which have already started. The United States continues to occupy part of Cuban territory, Guantanamo Bay (?against the) wishes of the Cuban people. Indeed, as Fidel Castro said as far back as 1961, "There are some people with a mentality that does not permit them to sleep when they know that there is a revolution nearby."

What lessons can we learn from the Cuban experience as we commemorate the victory of the Bay of Pigs is the fact that a politically aware, determined and armed people cannot be defeated no matter how powerful the enemy. One of the most remarkable things about the Cuban revolution is its mobilizing ability--its ability to organize and unite the masses of the people in the face of a common enemy. Cuba, with a population of under 10 million, is perhaps one of the few developing countries where you can get hundreds of thousands of people in the street and, when necessary, in arms within a matter of hours to demonstrate support and unity for a good cause. The Cuban experience also makes it clear that a revolution is a difficult and risky business. It involves fundamental changes in society which will be opposed by existing strong and influential interests. By making a genuine revolution is the only way of ridding our country and people of poverty, disease, backwardness and foreign domination. And a genuine revolution cannot be made without the popular power and support of the masses.

JUNE 4 MOVEMENT URGES AMBASSADOR'S RECALL

London WEST AFRICA in English 26 Apr 82 p 1171

[Text]

The June 4 Movement has urged the Provisional National Defence Council to recall the acting Ambassador in Moscow, Mr. Van-Dyke, for what it described as "anti-revolutionary" activities. It said during the recent congress of Soviet Trade Unions, the Ghana Embassy in Moscow organised a meeting with the Ghanaian delegation at the conference. At this meeting, Mr. Van-Dyke was alleged to have used "all kinds of tactics in trying to convince the trade union delegation that the PNDC's decision to set up people's defence committees was in direct violation of the role of the Ghana TUC".

The June 4 statement said Mr. Van-Dyke used the above reason to urge the delegation that it must lead a faction of the TUC in opposing the formation of PDCs in Ghana. The statement added that reactionary officials in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and other state organisations had suffered a serious defeat as a result of the December 31 action, but that did not mean they had simply agreed to retreat and were forever abandoning their intentions to fight the revolution.

"We believe that the suffering people of Ghana have won power. The revolutionary process in the country now means that only Ghanaians who are prepared to devote their energy and give their life to defend the gains of the revolutionary process, for a just society are eligible for appointment as ambassadors and high commissioners," the statement said.

PAPER CAUTIONS OVERENTHUSIASTIC PDC'S--The PIONEER is not happy about the agitation of some PDC's [People's Defense Committees] to dismiss in bloc the top executives of management. The paper points out that every employee--be he in the top managerial grade or not--was employed under certain conditions of service which create legal relations between the employee and his employer. These demands for instant termination of appointments or suspension of the people amount to victimization, the very sin the junior staff, who now form the PDC's, have been fighting against since the revolution. The PIONEER therefore maintains that victimization in whatever form is unjustified. The paper says the PNDC [Provisional National Defense Council] itself has respect for legality; it is wrong for the PDC's to abuse legality. It cautions moderation and restraint on the part of the overenthusiastic PDC's who are agitating daily for the mass dismissal of top management staff in their organizations. The PIONEER says the PDC's can expose the bad nobs among top management staff but their action must stop at the exposure. From there the law must be allowed to take its course. INDIAN BITUMEN DONATION--The outgoing Indian High Commissioner to Ghana, Mr Nazareth, today paid a farewell call on the secretary for greater Accra, Mr Atukwei Okao. The envoy repeated that an Indian gift of 250 tons of bitumen for the Accra city council will arrive in the country. The bitumen will be carried by the same ship which will bring some of the newly ordered 200 Tata buses. [AB050628 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 4 May 82]

PRIVATE FIRMS WARNED--Private companies whose activities do not fall in line with the aims and objectives of the revolution could be confiscated to the state. A member of the PNDC, Sgt. Alolga Akata-Pore, gave this warning in Accra when he inaugurated the workers' defence committee of the Mechanical Lloyd Ltd. in Accra. He explained that the companies were established on Ghanaian soil and were using Ghanaian labourers, land and foreign exchange to work with. Their owners were just holding them in trust. Sgt. Akata-Pore appealed to the companies to invest their profits in other productive ventures which could benefit the people. He also appealed to the people to join in the crusade to restructure the society to ensure a better future for their children. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 26 Apr 82 p 1169]

FREEMASONS PLEDGE SUPPORT--The Reverend Kwabena Damuah, member of the PNDC, has urged lodges to educate the public on their activities so as to allay the fears and suspicions of non-members. The Rev. Damuah said he was impressed with the record of charitable services rendered to the community by freemasons, and gave the assurance that the PNDC would not interfere with the people's freedom of association. A delegation of heads of freemasonry in Ghana were calling on the Rev. Damuah at the Castle. It was led by Dr. E. A. Sackey, "district Grandmaster of the English Constitution". The delegation expressed concern about press allegations about the use of certain objects by the lodges. The delegations explained that the objects were symbols used to illustrate the "immortality" of man, reported the Ghanaian Times. The delegation also denied any truth in the allegation that members of the 33rd Degree of Masons were buried without their heads. It said there were no 33rd Degree Masons in Ghana. Freemasons in the delegation pledged their support for the PNDC administration and promised to get involved in the realisation of the aims of the revolution. BERENGER CORPORATION IN SEYCHELLES TO CLOSE DEAL

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 23 Feb 82 pp 1, 4

> [Text] After having refused frozen white fish from the Seychelles, the government authorizes the importation of fish from South Africa. A Mauritian technical mission will arrive Sunday in Seychelles to undertake discussions with the Seychelles Electricity Corporation, responsible for the installation of color television among our Seychelles neighbors. It will be a mission of the Mauritian company, Blytronics, which manufactures color television sets.

As we have already reported, Seychelles intends to place a large order for television sets (1,000) with a Mauritian firm sometime between now and the beginning of 1983. It is Intracorp, the company whose president is Mr Paul Berenger, that opened up the Seychelles market to Blytronics.

From another quarter, in a statement made to LE MAURICIEN, Mr Berenger finds "shocking" the fact that after having refused the sale and distribution of 13.7 tons of Seychelles frozen fish (captain and other white fish, but no "bourgeois," he notes), the Mauritian Government authorized the importation of 14.3 tons of frozen fish from South Africa. This fish, Mr Berenger went on to specify, with documents to back him up, arrived in Mauritius on the ship, "Nahoon," on 4 February.

"I intend to bring up the question with the Prime Minister," declared Mr Berenger, who reminded us that in refusing the request of Intracorp for the sale and distribution of Seychelles fish, the Ministry of Fishing had maintained that this fish was "bourgeois" (which wasn't correct), and then that the market was saturated and that it was necessary also to protect "the fishermen's interests." It is "clear," according to Mr Berenger, that the Mauritian Government doesn't want to encourage regional cooperation.

The First Voyage of the "5 Juin": Final Balance Sheet

The following tables demonstrating the profitability of interisland commerce for Mauritian industry and commerce were furnished us by Mr Berenger to support the argument according to which "the government is completely wrong to refuse to play the game of regional cooperation."

1ST TRIP "5 JUIN"

1. VALUE OF ORDERS NEGOTIATED THROUGH INTRACORP

Besides frozen fish, Mauritius imported 104.7 tons of salted fish and snook from South Africa on the "Nahoon" on 4 February. As for Intracorp, it intends to again solicit authorization to import Seychelles salted fish, "the quality of which is recognized by the Mauritians." Intracorp's request will involve 10 tons each trip (every 2 months), besides a new request for 20 tons of frozen fish (captain, carangid and so on) each trip.

As for the Intracorp proposition to the effect that the voyages of the "5 Juin," the Seychelles ship, be taken advantage of to solve the problems presented by the high costs of freight and the difficulty in finding ships to supply the population of Agalega, the Mauritian authorities "have turned a deaf ear," Mr Berenger told us.

The company directed by the secretary general of the Mauritian Militant Movement received a request it wasn't expecting: CASELA approached it to request of the Seychelles authorities authorization to import birds from Seychelles. The Seychelles Ministry of Agriculture responded that, in principal, the exportation of Seychelles birds is strictly forbidden within the framework of the strict policy of Seychelles aimed at protecting its fauna and flora, but that exception could be made for the exportation of a few pairs of birds to Mauritius, notably the Madagascar cardinal, the ground dove and the mynah.

The president of Intracorp is now in Reunion on a dual mission: 1) commercial exchanges (like those with Seychelles) and 2) political questions. Before his departure, Mr Berenger declared to us that Reunion gets massive imports from South Africa, while Mauritius could very well furnish it with products from its local industry.

As for political matters, Mr Berenger's discussions with Reunion authorities, notably Mr Wilfrid Bertile, the Socialist leader, Mr Paul Verges, secretary general of the Reunion Communist Party and the directors of the Reunion Independence Movement (MIR), dealt with the following questions:

--Commercial exchanges between the two islands.

--The EEC/ACP conference in Zimbabwe where resolutions were voted in favor of economic sanctions against South Africa.

--The question of the "scattered islands" of the Indian Ocean.

--The Indian Ocean games that an eventual MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/Malagasy Socialist Party] government would organize.

During his discussions in Reunion (see our further reports) Mr Berenger raised with his interlocutors the question of Reunion's status. He reminded us with regard to this that Seychelles presides over a subcommittee of the Liberation Committee of the OAU dealing with Reunion. He declared to us that the OAU "will pronounce itself in favor of the Reunion people's right to self-determination" because "it is the Reunion people and the people alone who must choose their path without outside interference."

PIM'S PLANS TO RUN FOR SEATS IN ELECTION OUTLINED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 23 Feb 82 pp 1,7

[Article: "PIM Will Contest All Seats in Districts With Moslem Majorities"]

[Text] The Mauritian Islamic Party (PIM) decided yesterday at its congress at the Ambassador Hotel in Port Louis to run in the coming legislative elections and to contest all seats in districts that have a Muslim majority, and only one or two seats in the other districts where Muslim candidates would have a chance of being elected. Thus, in the two districts Port Louis South-Port Louis Central (no 2) and Port Maritime-Port Louis East (No 3), the PIM will present three candidates in each of the two districts, especially Pamplemousses-Triolet (No 5), Moka-Quartier Militaire (No 8), Souillac-Riviere des Anguilles (No 13) and La Caverne-Phoenix (No 15). [sentence as published] The party will contest one or two seats.

According to Yousouf Mohamed, one of the leaders of the party, this political strategy will enable the Muslim community to obtain a guaranteed minimum of six seats, if the Muslims of districts 2 and 3 "vote with discipline." In his opinion, the Muslim community is entitled to two seats, considering that it constitutes 17 percent of the Mauritian population.

Invited by a participant at the congress to specify the attitude which the PIM will adopt with respect to the other political groupings after the elections, Mohamed declared that it was too soon to do so. After the election results are announced, the PIM will convoke its delegates to a general meeting to review the country's political situation and to choose, if need be, a partner for an alliance.

No decision, he says, will be made without first consulting the congress participants. A change of tone in the party speakers' language was noted during this congress, which took place before an audience of some 400 persons. In fact, the PIM speakers, especially A. Hyderkhan, Yousouf Mohamed, and Ismael Nawoor, did their utmost to explain to the audience that their political action is guided by Islamic principles. Within the PIM, they say, they work not only for the well-being of the Muslims but also for the country's other minorities, whose rights are being encroached upon by the group of persons in power. By promoting meritocracy, the PIM is fighting for greater social justice, not only for the Muslim community but for the entire Mauritian population.

Hyderkhan wished to make it clear that the PIM is a political group which respects the Constitution, the laws of the country, and the rights of other communities. "We want to live in peace, in harmony with the country's other ethnic groups. At no time have we ever preached hatred or violence. It is not in our interest to set members of our community against others. We are aware of the hard times that a number of Mauritian families experienced in 1968."

In this context, Hyderkhan declared that he guarantees to the other communities and all the country's political groups, as well as to the authorities, that the PIM will see to it that the understanding and harmony reigning between the different communities will not be disturbed. To the contrary, the PIM intends to step up its appeals to its sympathizers to preserve social peace in the country, not only up until election day but even after. It is important, he underscored, that Muslims not give credence to false rumors propagated by certain agents-provocateurs.

Hyderkhan then expressed his pride at belonging to a purely Muslim party which, according to him, will know how to fight for the interests of the Muslim community. There is no party, he says, which truly fights for Mauritianism in the true sense of the word. Mauritianism, according to him, exists only on paper.

For his part, Yousouf Mohamed asserted that Muslims should unite to realize this community's aspirations to the fullest. In this context, he appealed to the leaders of the Muslim Action Committee not to divide Muslim, particularly at a time when the PIM is struggling for unity. "It's not too late for the CAM to do its duty," he said.

Commenting on Monsignor Margeot's pastoral letter, Mohamed declared that, like any other Mauritian, he sees nothing to criticize in it. Nonetheless, he said, as a disciple of Islam he wishes to make it clear that he does not share Monsignor Margeot's opinion when the latter says that it is important to separate religion from politics. Islam, he says, demands that politics draw its inspiration from religion.

The speaker then condemned the government for having imposed restrictions on the activities of the People's Office of the Libyan Jamahiriya, and he invited the congress participants to pass a resolution calling for these prohibitions to be lifted, as they "constitute interference in the Muslim religion."

Another of Mohamed's arguments: Muslims must unite under the banner of the PIM, which today claims to be the symbol of their unity. In recent years, grave injustices have been committed with regard to Muslims, in that they have lost their leader and are living like orphans. In a way, they have also lost their identity.

Finally, taking up the theme of Muslim unity, Ismael Nawoor stressed the mobilization campaign that the PIM is conducting in order to rally the Muslims under one banner: that of the PIM. The PIM's struggle, he says, is one that aims to restore dignity to Muslims. The coming elections will be only one stage in this long struggle.

CAM OFFICIAL ON MOSLEM SUPPORT OF RAMGOOLAM

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 3 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Article: "Razack Peeroo: 'With or Without the Muslims, Ramgoolam Will Return to Power. We Might As Well Join Him'"]

[Excerpts] "The Muslim community has always backed losers and is always in the opposition," he says.

The CAM made an all-out attack yesterday in a severe sortie against the leaders of all political parties--particularly Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, the leader of the PT [Labor Party]; Sir Gaetan Duval, the leader of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party]; Harish Boodhoo, the leader of the PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party]; and Yousouf Mohamed, one of the principal leaders of the PIM [Mauritian Islamic Party] During a meeting yesterday afternoon in Cite Martial, Razack Peeroo, a CAM [Muslim Action Committee] minister, accused the leaders of the country "of having done nothing for the Muslims." During these past 5 years, he said, he was the only one to raise his voice to protect the dignity of the Muslim community in this country. This is why he will not be reelected in the coming elections in Caverne-Phoenix; the Hindus, he feels, are no longer inclined to give him their votes after the pro-Muslim positions he has taken. He also expects to leave this district and to choose Plaine Verte. But he still thinks that it is in the Muslims' interest to be associated with the power surrounding Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam.

Peero took the opportunity to formulate allegations against the PSM, which, according to him, "is a party of potential turncoats." Nothing says that the prospective PSM deputies will not support Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam if ever the latter finds himself in difficulty in Parliament, according to the speaker. With the support of some PSM deputies, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam could return to power, he alleges.

Peero claims to have precise information on the dates and places of PSM-PT meetings, and he challenged Mr Boodhoo to prove the opposite, if possible.

Giving a chronological account of the CAM struggle, Peeroo explained to his audience that his party has lost strength following the coalitions that Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam contracted in the past with Gaetan Duval, the leader of the PMSD. The coalition of 1969, imposed by France, was made at the expense of the Muslims, who had, however, supported the independence struggle, he says. Now, without the support of the Muslim community, the country would never have obtained independence. Nonetheless, the Muslims have been the first to suffer from it, he says.

Peero then attempted to convince the residents of Cite Martial that the PT will again return to power "with or without the Muslims' support." All the more reason to join it, he says. The MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement]-PSM alliance is doing badly. The Plaine Verte residents should thus be aware of these facts and should not make the same mistake as in 1976 by remaining in the opposition, he insisted. By regrouping under the banner of the CAM and by giving their support to the PT, the Muslims would be in a better position to assert their rights. Then it would no longer be possible for Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam to dare to humiliate him, he says, by telling him, as he too often has had the habit of doing, "You are a Muslim, okay. But Paul Berenger is a leader." Yes, Plaine Verte is giving CAM the necessary support, he says; Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam will no longer be able to use this kind of language toward him. To the contrary, he will find him "a lion."

Next attacking Yousouf Mohamed, Peeroo accused him "of having taking 23 years to realize that Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam is not worthy of the Muslims' esteem. This after having been a deputy, a minister, and an ambassador of the Ramgoolam government."

AMBASSADOR TO UN NOTES NATION'S ECONOMIC PROGRESS

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 11 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[Article: "'Niger Could Become the Leading Uranium Producer in Africa in 1990,' States UN Gavoy"]

[Text] "According to a quite recent estimate, Niger could be the leading African producer of uranium and the fourth [largest] producer in the world in 1990," Ide Oumarou, Nigerien ambassador to the United Nations, disclosed during a recent discussion before the UN French-Speaking Cultural Association.

Ide Oumarou recalled that Niger in 1978 ranked sixth among uranium producers, behind the United States, Canada, South Africa, Namibia, and France, and that it surpassed France in 1979 with production of 3,500 tons.

According to the London Uranium Institute, Niger will have a potential production of 8,000 to 11,000 tons in 1990. In addition, cassiterite (tin ore) constitutes the country's second-ranking mineral resource and, like uranium, contributes to its development.

The Nigerien diplomat also mentioned the lines along which the dynamics of development in our country are evolving today: "The search for self-sufficiency in food, water control, domestic and foreign disenclosure of the country, education and personnel training, the search for increasing improvement of the Nigerien people's situation."

Concerning education, he noted that the percentage of children attending school, which was 4 percent at the time of independence, is today about 20 percent, while the education budget, which was Fr 714 million in 1974, had risen to Fr 5.785 billion in 1979.

Among other notable advancements, Oumarou reported that the minimum wage has risen from CFA 5,200 in 1974 to close to CFA 20,000, "while the farmer, who had been relieved of the minimum income tax for close to 6 years, is seeing his income grow, thanks to the continued improvement in prices to the producer and better marketing of his products, and thanks especially to the development of the cooperatives."

In conclusion, he emphasized the "remarkable improvement" in the Nigerien trade balance, which recorded a surplus of close to Fr 3 billion in 1978--up from a Fr 253 million deficit in 1974--with a 19-percent increase in imports and a 48-percent increase in exports.

DIOUF GIVES INTERVIEW ON RETURN TO DAKAR

AB291045 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 28 Apr 82

[President Abdou Diouf's interview with the press on his return to Dakar on 28 April--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr President, you have just undertaken a tour which took you to Niger, the Sultanate of Oman and the United Arab Emirates. Could you tell us whether your respective discussions with President Seyni Kountche, Sultan Qabus al bu Sa'id and His Highness Shaykh Zayid ibn Sultan al Nuhayyan were fruitful and whether the cooperation between Dakar on one hand and Niamey, Muscat and Abu Dhabi on the other will experience new developments?

[Answer] I thank you very much, Miss (Cornel Dieng) for your question. It is true that I have just undertaken a long journey. I very seldom absent myself from Dakar for 10 days. This journey took me to Naimey, Oman and Abu Dhabi within the framework of our policy of strengthening our old friendships and of expanding the circle of our friendship with other countries. During this tour, I made two stopovers in Paris, the first of which enabled me to hold discussions with the French authorities and particularly with Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot and Guy Penne, President Francois Mitterrand's adviser for African and Malagsy affairs. The discussions, which took place in an excellent atmosphere, yielded good results and I hope that these were demonstrated to you during the meeting of the French-Senegalese joint commission recently held in Dakar.

In Niger as in Oman and Abu Dhabi, my discussions with my three counterparts--Presidents Seyni Kountche, Sultan Qabus al bu Sa'id and Shaykh Zayid ibn Sultan al Nuhayyan, the president of the United Arab Emirates--were very fruitful and achieved excellent results which are in conformity with the objectives we assigned ourselves: the deepening of our political cooperation with these three brotherly states and the intensification of cooperation in other fields and particularly in the economic and cultural fields. In Niger particularly, we signed a treaty of friendship and cooperation. The legal framework of our cooperation with Niger is already vast enough but this friendship and cooperation treaty to which President Seyni Kountche and I attach great importance enables us to demonstrate once again the determination of the two heads of state in conformity with the deep desire of our two peoples to make the cooperation between Niger and Senegal in exemplary one. The main thing for us now is to utilize this legal framework very appropriately in order to achieve the objectives I have just mentioned.

Concerning the Sultanate of Oman, we have excellent relations with it but unfortunately no legal framework exists to enable the development of cooperation between Senegal and that country. This was why Sultan Qabus and I decided that our two governments should negotiate and sign a cultural cooperation agreement and an economic cooperation agreement. The Senegalese party submitted some projects to the Omani party and very soon we hope to receive in Dakar the visit of the Omani foreign minister who will hold final discussions with his Senegalese counterpart. On this occasion, the two ministers will sign the two agreements which will constitute the legal framework for cooperation between our two countries.

Concerning Abu Dhabi, the legal framework already exists more or less. We have already signed a cultural agreement with Abu Dhabi. During this visit, we proposed a draft economic cooperation agreement as well as a draft protocol relating to the application of the cultural agreement. Here also, the two heads of state agreed on the principle of concluding this agreement and protocol. The Senegalese party submitted some projects to the authorities of the United Arab Emirates and discussions will be held to enable us to negotiate and conclude agreements as soon as possible.

Generally speaking, the journey to Niger enabled us to strengthen cooperation with a brotherly African country, especially within the framework of our West African region, and to discuss some current problems. As you know, the most distressing of all these problems is that of the survival of our continental organisation, the OAU. President Seyni Kountche and I examined this important problem in detail and decided to spare no effort to avoid the breakup of our continental organisations. REELECTION OF JAWARA EXPECTED--Tomorrow Gambians will go to the poll to elect their president and members of parliament for the next 5 years. But for the first time, the legislative and the presidential elections will be held separately in accordance with the recent amendment to the constitution adopted by the National Assembly. Two candidates are running for the presidency. They are outgoing President Dr Dawda Jawara, secretary general of the People's Progressive Party, and National Convention Party leader Sherif Mustapha Dibba who is now in detention for participating in the coup attempt of July 1981. However predictions give President Jawara a big margin of victory. As a matter of fact, it seems that he has succeeded in mobilizing his countrymen, still in shock from last July's bloody events, around the slogan "peace and stability." Everyone thinks that President Jawara will be reelected. Meanwhile his popularity has continued to increase throughout the country over the past 9 months. The massive support given him by his countrymen after the last helicopter crash which he survived is glaring evidence of this that Gambians seem to see their president in a new light. OAU'S KODJO CONFERS WITH DIOUF--Dakar, 5 May (AFP)--OAU Secretary-General Edem Kodjo conferred here Tuesday with one of his leading critics, Senegalese President Abduo Diouf. Conservative Senegal is among the states opposing as "politically untimely" Mr Kodjo's action last February in admitting the (Western) Saharan Arab Republic to an OAU ministerial meeting, which was effective recognition. The OAU has been split over the issue since then. Mr Kodjo was met at the airport here by Foreign Minister Moustapha Niasse and then went straight to his hotel. The local press has not mentioned his visit. [Text] [AB050730 Paris AFP in English 0725 GMT 5 May 82]

VIOLENCE IN ELECTION CAMPAIGN REPORTED

London WEST AFRICA in English 26 Apr 82 pp 1115, 1117

[Text] SIERRA LEONE's preparation for the General Elections now scheduled to be held May 1 has been characterised by unprecedented violence and scores of protests over the eligibility of some of the candidates. The whole episode, which has been described as a "hotch potch of confusion" by political analysts, makes nonsense of President Stevens' claimed raison d'être for the overthrow of the multi-party system in place of the One Party system of government.

In an address to Parliament after the One Party Referendum in June 1978, President Stevens said: "Today, after some two score years in politics, it is my considered view that the multi-party system with government and opposition, contributes an open invitation to anarchy and disunity . . . We have banned a system which institutionalised tribal or ethnic quinquennial warfare euphemistically known as elections . . . We have done away with an unnecessary system."

Far from putting an end to the "quinquennial warfare", the One Party system seems to have aggravated violence and anarchy, as experienced in several areas throughout the country during preparations for the first General Elections under the One Party system.

In Port Loko district, which is traditionally known for war since the days of Bai Bureh the legendary warrior of Kasse chiefdom, severe trouble broke out as the incumbent MP, Attorney General and Minister of Justice, Mr. A. B. Kamara's, supporters employed various tactics to prevent his opponents from filing in their nomination papers for the primaries. His house in Kasse was attacked by thugs, and his two nephews shot. One of them had to be hospitalised at the Intensive Care Unit of Connaught Hospital in Freetown, and the other at the Hill Station hospital. Reports from the constituency say that late in the night before the appointed day for nominations for the primaries, Mr. A. B. Kamara had the nominations concluded unbeknown to his opponents. Two of his "men" were nominated, and the two men, as planned, then cancelled their intention to contest the election on Nomination Day to return the Attorney General unopposed.

The same constituency (Port Loko North) witnessed the beating of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Abdulai Conteh. Dr. Conteh had secured his own seat unopposed in the primaries in Kambia West constituency and was travelling to Kasse to assist the Attorney General, his brother-in-law, in his campaign when he was attacked. He was reported to have been dragged out of his vehicle and given a good beating. Dr. Conteh's fellow Susu tribesmen, on hearing about the attack, rallied round him on his return to the Western area and over one thousand of them accompanied him to State House to lodge a complaint about the attack. The delegation urged President Stevens to take firm action to suppress violence in the forthcoming General Elections.

In the Bombali North constituency, two people are reported to have been shot dead during skirmishes between supporters of Works Minister, Mr. Edward Kargbo, and his opponents. (Mr. Kargbo's brother, Mr. Bockarie Kargbo, Director of Planning the Bank of Sierra Leone, died in a road accident while travelling to Bomabali to assist his brother in his campaign. The tyres of Mr. Kargbo's Range Rover in which he was travelling when the accident occurred are said to have been fired by a "witch gun".)

In the Bombali Central constituency, it was open warfare between supporters of Social Welfare Minister and lawyer, Mr. Thaimu Bangura, and his opponents Dr. A. B. Timbo and Edward Turay, both of them also lawyers. To prevent his opponents from filing their nomination papers for the primaries, Mr. Bangura's supporters are said to have damaged several bridges leading to the area for the nomination. The team of supervisors from the Central Committee had to change their venue from Bombali Central to Makeni Town and delay the primaries by one day to give a chance for all contenders to file in their papers. The result of the nomination for the primaries announced over the wires had excluded the names of the two lawyer opponents, who allegedly came fourth and fifth when the votes were counted. However, when the list of candidates for the General Elections were announced their names were included, while the two other candidates whose names had previously been announced had been dropped.

Bombali West constituency was also the scene of bitter fighting and thuggery. According to reports from the district, two people lost their lives.

Kambia South constituency which is being contested by Dr. Jengo Stevens, a son of the President, and Mr. A. B. Sankoh, the incumbent MP, also had its share of clashes.

In Pujehun West constituency, Dr. I. A. Bangura, who is opposing the Minister of Health, Mr. Francis Minah, found it extremely difficult to file his nomination papers for the primaries. There were several reports of clashes between supporters of the two candidates. The first announcement of the result of the primaries did not list the name of Dr. Bangura on the list of candidates but it was put in after the Central Committee had scrutinised the list.

In Freetown Central I constituency supporters of Mr. Alfred Akibo-Betts are alleged to have damaged the house of his opponent, Mr. W. Morgan. In Freetown East II, terror reigned when supporters of the incumbent MP, Alhaji Bun Mansaray, attacked the homes of rival candidates Abdul Iscandri and Manso Dumbuya. Mr. Dumbuya's car was damaged and an attempt was made to set Mr. Iscandri's house on fire. The police had to disperse angry crowds with tear gas and Alhaji Mansaray and his supporters taken to the CID where they were detained.

Clashes were reported in several other constituencies throughout the country. As a result of the violence, it was decided by senior party officials during a hurried meeting that all nominations for the elections should be held in Freetown. This unprecedented move was made to stave off further fighting. The date for the nominations was also shifted from April 14 to 15, to give enough time to Returning Officers and candidates to travel to Freetown.

Throughout Nomination Day heavily-armed police patrolled the streets of Freetown to maintain law and order. The Nomination Centres were also very heavily guarded. The day was generally peaceful, except for a few minor incidents, including the looting of a provision store owned by Balani & Sons at Krootown Road.

A broadcast by government expressed concern over the free-for-all violence, and called on citizens in possession of arms and ammunition without valid licences to surrender them "immediately" at the nearest police station. It said that it was illegal for people to keep arms and or ammunition, and warned that those found in possession of arms will face the full penalty of the law.

The Elections are expected to bring in much needed funds to government's coffers. For the primary elections, which were contested by about four hundred people, each candidate was required to pay Le 200 in addition to all membership dues and other financial party obligations backdated twelve months. Candidates for the General Elections are required to pay Le 500.

Party sources say that senior party officials are beginning to question the wisdom of holding primary elections, with all their attendant problems, and that the Constitution may have to be amended to remove the idea.

Whatever happens, it is now widely acknowledged that multi-party or One Party, the main characteristic of quinquennial elections in Sierra Leone is family warfare, bitterness, violence and chaos as has been the case in the General Elections of 1967, 1973, 1977 and 1982.

PRESIDENT SIAD CONGRATULATES ARMY

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 16 Apr 82 pp 1, 6

[Text]

MOGADISHU, Thursday — The General Secretary of the SRSP and President of the SDR, Jaalle Mohamed Siad Barre on Monday sent a congratulatory message to the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, Soldiers and their families on the occasion of the 22nd anniversary of the Somali National Army.

In his message, the President said that 12 April marks the Somali National Army's Day and has great significance in the modern history and social life of the Somali Nation.

There is no doubt, the Somali National Army has the necessary quality and quantity to fulfill its responsibility and as a result of this, the masses are in an atmosphere of peace and tranquility effectively contributing in nation-building» stressed the President.

Jaalle Siad underlined that the occasion of the 22nd anniversary coincides at a time when there are critical issues in the world in general and the Horn in particular, adding that, for this reason, all members of the Somali armed forces have to effectively increase their revolutionary zeal and dedication to perform their sacred duties.

On occasion the President wished members of National Army wherever they are, success for the heavy tasks ahead.

Likewise, the SDR Minister for Information and National Guidance Col. Mohamed Omar Jess sent a message of congratulations to the Somali National Army on the occasion of their 22nd anniversary.

Meanwhile, earlier in the night the First Vice President and Minister of Defence of the SDR, Lt. General Mohamed Ali Samatar congratulated the Somali Armed forces and their families on the occasion of the 22nd anniversary of the Somali Armed forces day.

In an address to members of the armed forces, Jaalle Samater pointed out the vanguard role played by the forces in the defence and the general development of the country. The First Vice President stated that the Armed forces had to overcome insurmountable problems by sheer courage and extra vigilance, adding that they won respect and commendation from both the leaders and the public for their sense of political consciousness and excellent training.

In speaking about the Horn of Africa problems, the Defence Minister declared that Russia was behind the tripartite conference held in South Yemen between Libya, Abyssinia and South Yemen which, he said, was a Russian strategy aimed at destabilizing the Horn of Africa, the Indian Ocean, and the Red Sea.

Jaalle Samater continued that the recent war, codenamed the Red Star Campaign which the Abyssinian forces and their allies unleashed against Eritrea is one of the resolutions reached by them in Aden, adding, however, that they only met with defeat and humiliation at the hands of the Eritreans.

The Defence Minister stated that this unholy alliance is one geared to invade the Somali Democratic Republic in accordance with the Russian strategy in the Horn of Africa in order to create instability in the region and to realize its strategic interests.

In concluding his speech, Jaalle Samater further stated that the Somali Armed forces, side by side with the public, the ever-vigilant in the defence and safeguarding of our nationhood, adding that it was certainly that provocation from any quarter was bound to meet with defeat.

The First Vice President and Defence Minister, accompained by the Commander of the Somali Police Forces, Major General Aden Abdi Du'ale and Commander of the Custodial Corps, Major General Ismail Ahmed Ismail earlier in the day laid bouquets at the Monuments of the Unknown Soldier, Hawo Tako, Dagahtur, and Sayid Mohamed Abdulle Hassan.

ARMY URGED TO LEARN GUERRILLA TACTICS

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 16 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Abdi Haji Mohamed]

[Text]

An army is an organized body of soldiers trained to defend a nation or attack its enemies. There are two types of armies. There is the professional or regular army and there is the conscript army. The Somali National Army, true and worthy son of the people, is a professional standing army that sees to the defence of the Fatherland, to the defence of the Revolution.

Seeing endangered the sovereignity and the very existence of the Somali nation; the Somali National Army, in collaboration with the other branches of the Armed Forces, staged a bloodless revolution and assumed power on October 21st, 1969. Somalia was on the verge of disintegration and would have gone down the precipice but for the timely intervention of the National Army. After carrying out all the measures announced to the Somali people in the First Charter of the Revolution, the National Army duly handed power over to a popularly elected Government.

The National Army was the only major faction of our society that was not affected by the rampant tribalism and corruption that reigned supreme during the first nine years following our independence. It was precisely due to this circumstance that the National Army was able to carry out the 21st October Revolution. Unity of action, singleness of purpose and impeccable moral purity won the day.

The Somali National Army effectively guarantees defence of our territorial integrity. Time and again, at Yeed, Borama and other points along the defacto border, Ethiopian Armed forays into our territory have met with decisive, utter and devastating repulsion by the Somali National Army. It is not without reason that the name of the National Army evokes terror and despair in the mind of the enemy. Let the enemy tremble.

It is not numbers or even weapons that determine victory. The man behind the weapon is what counts most. Does he believe in what he is fighting for? Is he fighting for a rightful cause? Those who fight for a just and worthy cause will defeat their enemy with his own weapons. All the wars of liberation testify to that fact. Take Afghanistan. A hegemonist superpower has failed to bring the freedom fighters there to their knees. Russia is anxious today for a face-saving arrangement to pull out of Afghanistan.

During droughts, floods or epidemics, the Somali people have come to depend on their Army for prompt and effective rescue operations. The Army is a tireless and willing servant of the people. Service in the National Army carries high prestige as well as heavy responsibility.

The excellent fighting quality of the Somali Warrior is recognized all over the world. But excellence does not spring out of nothingness. It must have some basis in the material world. The Somali Warrior's high fighting worth can be attributed to several factors. First among them is his Islamic faith which represents defence of the motherland as a sacred duty that is amply rewarded in the hereafter. Secondly, the Somali fighter is angry at the dismemberment of his country by the colonialists in the last century. He realizes that colonialism comes in the many colours but that its essence is the same.

He is convinced that the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. This, plus the rigours of nomadic life make of the Somali fighter a first-rate soldier stuff.

The Somali military man cannot but take into consideration that certain powers that once were considered supporters of just causes have discarded their masks and are openly conducting a barefaced imperialist gunboat policy of a crude kind.

On this happy occasion of the 22nd anniversary of the Somali National Army I wish to convey to them, together with my heartfelt congratulations, two suggestions for consideration. First, we need to unite our capacity for waging a protracted war from reliance on imported sophisticated technology. Because such technology is very expensive to buy. Because such technology requires heavy maintenance and operation expenses. Because spare parts for such technology is not always available. You might even be refused spare-parts just when you are in the middle of a major defensive war. Besides all that, tanks and airplanes consume tremendous quantities of fuel. And the energy problem is too well-known to require any further elaboration. For those reasons, it would be a welcome development to see more camel corps and cavalry regiments in our Army. Of course, tanks and airplanes are necessary, but we must not depend on them.

Cavalry had been used for the first attack on enemy lines ever since the days of Alexander the Great. But when new firearms, specially the machine gun, were introduced, the cavalry could no longer be used to lead attacks. But that does not mean that cavalry has to be discarded altogether. With the money necessary to buy, maintain and operate ten modern tanks, you can set up a whole cavalry regiment. Arm about ten percent (10%) of the regiment with bazookas, and they will repulse two whole tank battalions.

Secondly, I suggest that our army be given a thorough training in the theory and practice of guerrilla warfare. This should be incorporated in the training programme of the National Army. Just to make our defence doubly sure. Countries such as Yugoslavia have opted for guerrilla training of their armed forces. That is one of the reasons why potential aggressors have to think twice or thrice before trying their Afghanistan-type antics on Yogoslavia or the People's Republic of China. Because the aggressors know that beating the regular army in conventional war would not be enough. They would still have a country-wide guerrilla war at their hands. The implementation of such a programme will require time and effort. But the journey of ten thousand miles begins with the first-step. Weaning our army from too much dependence on sophisticated expensive foreign technology on the one hand and giving guerrilla training to our soldiers, on the other hand, will significantly increase our defensive capacity. And.... Forward March! to ever greater glory.

ISHA BAYDHABO'S RESOURCES UNDERUTILIZED

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 16 Apr 82 p 4

[Article by Ahmed Artan]

[Text] Isha Baydhabo, the administrative centre of the Bay region of Somalia has certain economic and cultural advantages which this town could rightly be proud of. The modern designation of the town is composed of the combination of the two terms of Isha + Baydhabo which are often spelt differently by Somalis and foreigners alike. In the old colonial maps of Somalia «Baidoa» is marked which is an obvious misspelling of the correct native name of the place, that is «Bay + dhu» = Baydhu. The modern form «Baydhabo» or Baydhaba is also incorrect. In this article we shall keep the form «Baydhu» for it is historically correct. To prove this point a bit of linguistic research is called for.

The local people distinguish two kinds of soil formation in that region, called «Bay» and Doy , the black and brown-coloured soil, respectively. The former area is suitable for farming and is generally the flat land along the rivers; whereas the latter is good for grazing livestock and is mostly moutainous, woodlands lying beyond the farmlands. The main distinguishing feature between the two ecological areas is the colour of the soil. The two sorts of soil formation often overlap into each other. Thus the term «Baydhu» signifies the «nearer Bay» beyond which there is to be found still another Bay area after crossing over a «doy» lands.

In the «May» dialect spoken in central Somalia (including the town of Baydhu) the ending ow (dhow) becomes u

(dhu) and the combination of the terms Bay + dhu = Baydhu is formed, which is, as we said earlier, the correct name of the town. Due to the adoption of the form «Baidoa» by the colonial administrations and the northern Somali usage of the form «Baydhabo», the correct topographical name (Baydhu) had been misspelt so much so that it almost lost its original form. Many Somali topographical names (viz. Burao = Burco, Garoe = Garoowe) had suffered the name fate, namely due to mispronounciation by foreigners, as well as to historico-cultural ignorance on the part of the Somalis themselves.

The first part of the compound name «Isha» literally means «eye», but it also has the abstract meaning of an «spring, a fountain». An underground spring gushes from the ground in the dry riverbed that runs from the north to south and cuts the town in two halves. The spring is the main source of water supply for Baydhu. From the rocky riverbed springs up the water, cool and pure as rain-water, and you drink it straight from the source with your cupped palms, bending down on your knees. You take your fill and realize how at times Mother Nature is bountiful so that life could be maintained on earth.

During the rainy seasons the Isha riverbed is filled up with floodwaters and it drains into the flat farmlands lying to the south of the town. But in the dry period before the rains come the Isha dwindles to a minimum flow and the Baydhuans may then experience an acute water shortage.

In the well-watered riverbed various tropical fruits, such as bananas, mangoes, pawpaws, lemons etc. grow abundantly. The climate is mild on this high plateau where Baydhu is situated, and it is a bit chilly here for those coming from the coastal areas like Mogadishu. Under such ideal climate most of these tropical fruits could be grown throughout the year.

It is interesting that grapes aslo grow here and thrife well. The grape plant is a creeper and entwines itself onto other plants with stronger stems for support. When raw the fruits are pale-green in colour but become purple or black when ripe.

Vinculture is a neglected art in Somalia as a whole and the Baydhuans do not commercially exploit their grape resources by producing wine from them. The fruits grow wild generally in the dry seasons and the small quantities harvested are consumed in its natural form as table fruits. Some dried grapes are also used as spice in rice dishes to give it aromatic flavour.

Same as in many other regions of the country considerable changes have taken place in the town of Baydhu itself during the last few years. New lands were reclaimed and developed on the outskirts of the old town, with the essential civic amenities, such as water supply, electricity, tarmac roads etc. The town is presently growing rapidly towards the «Maanyafuulka» area in the east and all along the Baydhu — Xamar highway new commercial and administrative premises are being raised.

The «Gerbi» swimming pool is situated in a short distance from the Isha spring and it is a tourist attraction of which the Baydhuans could rightly be proud of. The floodwaters running in the stream drop down abruptly over a rockwall of about 6 — metres high to a flat ground below. At the food of this granite rock a large reservoir of about 3 metres deep is formed. For a long period after the rain water is preserved in this natural reservoir which has an impervious rocky floor. Domestic animals are watered here in the dry season, housewives wash their laundry in the Gerbi which is a vital gift of Nature to Baydhuans. Another important use of the pool is that youngsters learning how to swim practise here most of the day. The more daring swimmers climb up the steep cliffs above the water and then jump headlong into the pool in the graceful style of an accomplished sportsman. No wonder Baydhu had produced a number of strong swimmers who often carried off the covated trophies at the inter-regional swimming competitions.

The Baydhuans were in the past reputed to have been hardworking citizens whose region often occupied in the forefront in the food production efforts of the nation. That high reputation of the region is being compromised by the many young people of both sexes whom the writer saw jewing «qad» day and night, sitting idle on the dusty footpaths, street corners and in the dark recesses of dwellings. Most of these youthful, able-bodied people are hopless qad-addicts, a liability to the nation. An old Baydhuan saying declares:

AF WAA KAN
MAY LIKI AAMEE'
(no use having a mouth when you can't feed yourself).

BRIEFS

TORRENTIAL RAINS HIT BERBERA--Mogadishu, Thursday--The recent torrential rains that hit Berbera and its surrounding areas have left seven people dead and also claimed eight thousand sheep and five hundered camels. Berbera's Party Secretary, Jaalle Ahmed Sheikh Abdullahi Said earlier this week that seven government offices, 15 dwelling houses owned by the local people and about 40 Km. tarmac road that links Hargeisa with Berbera were swept away by the flood. Speaking to SONNA, Jaalle Ahmed said that the storms and the severe floods swept three cars, thus disrupting the district's communication network. He said that both the regional and district officials visited the flood-striken areas in order to supervise rescue operations. [Text] [Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 16 Apr 82 p 2]

MAMMOTH RALLY FOR PALESTINIANS--Mogadishu, Thursday--A mammoth demonstration condemning the recent wanton Israeli action against the Al-Aqsa Mosque and the persecution of the Palestinian people was held at the Monument of the Unknown Soldier square in Mogadishu on Wednesday. The demonstrators, numbering hundred of thousands consisted of Social organizations, students, workers, and the general public of the Benadir Region. nhe Assistant Secretary-General of the SRSP and Third Vice President of the SDR, Jaaile Ismail Ali Abokor, who delivered a speech on the occasion, exhaustively related the history of the various stages the Islamic Religion had passed through and the constant struggle waged by Muslims all over the world for the Expansion and strengthening of Islam. Jaalle Abokor Stated that the SDR is ready to extend both moral and material support to their Palestinian brothers whose rights have been denied by Israel. "The Somali people who are hundred per cent Muslim wish to demonstrate here their profound shock at the Israel shooting at and killing of people in the Al-Aqsa mosque, and therefore condemn that wanton act," said Jaalle Abokor. LOOK AT WAGE-PRICE SPIRAL

Ouagadougou CARREFOUR AFRICAIN in French 15 Feb 82 p 5

[Article by Celestin Zongo]

[Text] Mr Edmond Ky, minister of finances, announced a wage increase for 1982 and since then, all workers have waited impatiently. When Col Saye Zerbo gave the nation his best wishes on 29 December 1981, he confirmed the good news. Each wage earner then certainly looked at his last pay slip and carefully calculated his raise: "Now I can indulge in a little extra; at the end of the month I can begin my project...."

But people became disillusioned very quickly. First, because experience has shown that wage increases arouse the hideous monster of speculation: restaurant owners, tailors, gas station attendants, landlords, small and big merchants sharpen their teeth to gouge the worker. The last wage increase dating from the time of the defunct republic, like the others, translated into an actual drop in the worker's buying power. The government at the time "decided to express its concern about buying power by a series of measures that represented a (so-called) profound, more extensive, more decisive action. We will not get bogged down in the maze of steps and indexes; we should remember that category A civil servants received a 6 percent increase, category B, an 8 percent; category C, a 12 percent; category D, 18 percent and the inter-occupational guaranteed minimum wage increased 25 percent. Despite these different increases, the workers deplored the decreased buying power compared with the subsequent raise.

Imaginary Wage Increase

The desire is to allow all workers to cope with the cost of living, considering their real, (essential) needs in each category. It seems that the proportional wage increase has not and does not completely solve the problem of inequities: instead, it makes them worse because the subordinate pays the same price for soap as the high-ranking civil servant. One person can earn 100 times more than another and this does not include the benefits one receives and the other does not.

For example, A cadres (A1 and A2 together) earn an average of 80,000 francs a month and both gain 7,200 francs more, a 10 percent increase while the interoccupational guaranteed minimum wage earner (15,600 francs) only receives an additional 4,000 francs. It is apparent at a glance that the wages of category A civil servants are increased by half of what the minimum wage earner makes a month. Even if it now appears that most workers get more than the minimum wage, the evolution of salaries does not always allow low income workers to keep up with spiraling inflation. The increase from 10 to 15 percent is admirable but unfortunately, in real life, the middle and low-ranking professionals will have difficulty weathering the storm and the overall picture is not encouraging. Who then is better equipped to cope with inflation? Who benefited from the wage increase? Many of us wage earners will still be frustrated because everything will cost a little more. This uneasiness is based on experience of the not-too-distant past which teaches that the price of goods will increase.

Meanwhile to bridge the gap between workers, a gap created purely by their respective buying powers, could we not consider another approach? In other words, convert the proportional increase formula into a lump-sum increase formula. To give an example, civil servants in category D earning 30,488 francs would receive an increase of 20,000 francs while those in category A earning 100,000 francs would get a 2,000 franc raise. Those who want, can go back to a proportional formula: the important thing is that we realize or better endorse the fact that low-ranking employees need large increases more than the professionals. Then we would be moving toward a true readjustment.

Real Price Increase

It is quite possible that the current formula will enable the small wage earner, with some limitations and sacrifices, to satisfy most of his needs. However, all the government's efforts to alleviate the workers' poverty may be threatened if, first, the government does not enact stringent measures against future, unjustified price increases and, second, if trade flourishes at the expense of the workers. In other words, business wipes out the efforts of the government to create a climate conducive to work through wage increases. Denied his benefit, the worker is tempted to demand still more, not from the merchant, but from the state which has rightly turned its attention elsewhere for the moment, believing the problem solved for the long term. This causes conflict between the "richer," starving wage earner and the generous but weakened state. This vicious circle is worse than pernicious and each Upper Voltan must have wondered how to get out of it. What everyone can hope for is that government will control prices and price increases on goods relative to wage increases. Moreover, merchants have not always waited for such raises to increase prices. Consumers very rapidly note anomalies signaling the coming increases: the amazing disappearance of some products like sugar, rice, millet, etc. Only the regulars get supplies. One person might say, "Another 50 francs, sir, it is now 200 francs" or "the rent on my house will be 20,000 francs as of the end of the month," although housing allowances have not increased at all. The reply to all this is: "Haven't you heard salaries are going up?" Another consequence is that non-salaried workers end up holding the bag and private sector employees also suffer the effects. This is a sorry situation.

The true solution and the most lethal weapon against unregulated price hikes and for enhanced buying power of the workers and the citizens would be a merciless struggle against all speculators from the merchant in the market place right up to the big merchandisers.

When the authorities begin a true campaign against speculation, all Upper Voltans will benefit by supporting the effort; then all can live from their work and the merchant from his legitimate profits. It will be unacceptable for business to be synonymous with legalized "illicit, speculation." We will not be able to complain continually among ourselves about the Prince Control Unit without registering a complaint against shopkeeper who exploits us. There is no defense unless there is a plaintiff. Wages should shrink at the top and increase at the bottom; if this effort is accompanied by vigorous price control, the resulting social climate would cause the citizen to have more confidence in himself and in the future.

PRESIDENTIAL TOUR OF COUNTRY

Ouagadougou CARREFOUR AFRICAIN in French 15 Feb 82 p 3

[Article by Luc-Adolphe Tiao: "A Breath of Fresh Air for People in Remote Areas"]

[Text] The presidential party engaged in a real rally of approximately 1,500 km in a week over roads and trails from Ouagadougou to Ouargaye, Arly, Senkanse and back to Ouagadougou, visiting over 50 villages and towns. On his fourth tour to the interior of the country, the head of state, Col Seye Zerbo visited the departments of the center, center-east and the east from 24 to 30 January 1982.

Accompanied by a number of military committee members, government officials and department heads, Colonel Zerbo wanted to observe once again what it is really like for people in the interior.

Have you ever scraped a dried-up river bed hoping for a drop of water? We saw this happen in a remote village somewhere between Yargartenga and Senkanse in the subregion of Bittou.

That day many women spent the whole day at the only water distribution point in the village.

Undeniably, the water shortage was the most crucial problem that came to the attention of the presidential party. Dried up rivers, streams and wells were what they saw almost everywhere.

At Ouargaye, the subprefect said that herdsmen had to travel more than 50 km to find water in Togo. The village of Ouada, a few km from Bittou, had almost no water although stock raising constitutes 97 percent of the population's activities.

The people clamored insistently for water, "the source of life."

The Specter of Diseases

Villages are susceptible to the slightest epidemic. There is almost no health infrastructure. At Toesse, a village 65 km from Ouagadougou, the dispensary is only 8 square meters.

Lacking ambulances, people in some areas transport their sick by cart to nearby dispensaries.

When the infrastructures exist, they are not always operational. The impressive hospital of Zabre is unfinished. The operating room and the X-ray department of the Tenkodogo hospital sit idle for lack of staff. The inhabitants of the border areas prefer to be treated in the hospitals of Togo, Benin or Ghana.

"There are 22 villages and only 1 school." This was on a banner waved by the school children of Sanga when the president arrived in the main town in this district.

The people have always asked the military committee about the shortage of schools, a widespread problem. Hundreds of thousands of children face failure because they do not live in towns and villages with schools. In some cases, the peasants have tried to solve the problem by building one-room schools but these efforts lead nowhere since the villagers are often left to their own resources.

Isolation: A Bottleneck

Besides these serious problems, most districts in the departments of the center-east and the east are isolated. All means of communication are inadequate. The presidential party spent almost 2 hours traveling from Sanga to Ouargaye (40 km).

In the rainy season, we were told, Ouargaye is completely cut off. It easily takes 7 hours to travel from Zabre to Manga (70 km).

People in Pama cross the Dapango into Togo to get to Senkanse.

The faulty telephone system prevents local administration officials from being in constant contact with the government departments.

Yet these regions have considerable economic potential. Farming is very profitable from Zabre to Garango. The villages of Niagho and Beguedo are known for their large onion and various truck garden crops. The area between Pama and Arly is criss-crossed with mountains and dramatic cliffs, places to attract tourists.

If nature seems unkind to these villages in some areas, the people had something to do with it. Brush fires devastated the entire area we covered from Nagbagre to Arly. Even the national forest and park of Arly were hit by the fire. This is a true ecological disaster for the entire country.

The head of Upper Volta is certainly concerned about all these problems. As in previous visits, Colonel Zerbo has opted for a realistic strategy. The people must be rallied to the 25 November movement but not at the price of demagogic promises. "We know your problems," he said. Given the current situation, Upper Volta, which must rely on international cooperation, does not have the resources to solve all these problems immediately, implied Colonel Zerbo.

Yet the head of state feels that together "we will overcome these problems." To achieve this, he lists several conditions.

End Old Quarrels

Upper Voltans must unite, forget past political quarrels and work assiduously. When necessary, he acts directly as a mediator. He thus let the inhabitants of the villages of Niagho and Beguedo know it was absurd to fight over the location of a district office. He added, "What unites you is more important than what divides you." Likewise, he encouraged the villages of Madjoari and Tambarga to resolve their old misunderstandings.

Next the CMRPN [Military Committee of Recovery for National Progress] president told the peasants that they had to rely primarily on their own initiative. "Take the initiative," he said, "and the state will assist you."

In each village, Colonel Zerbo reminded the people of the dangers of brush fires. He repeated everywhere that very harsh penalties would soon be imposed on the offenders.

Support Action Committee

Finally, the head of state urged everyone to join and support the action and development committees the CMRPN is setting up throughout the country since he realizes that the ambitious 1 May program can be carried out only with a solid base.

Whatever their woes, many people greeted the head of state and his party warmly and enthusiastically. Men, women and children applauded the president of the military committee in the burning midday heat or on chilly evenings.

Like the banner posted leaving Bittou which said, "Do not forget Bittou, long live the CMRPN," our compatriots in the interior affirmed their complete allegiance to the Upper Voltan head of state. This is a major objective of the president as he travels around the country.

LABOR UNION ACTIVITY REPORT

Ouagadougou CARREFOUR AFRICAIN in French 20 Jan 82 p 10

[Article by Sylvestre Some: "Trade Union Councils and Congresses: Hopes and Illusions about a 'Social Contract'"]

[Text] Although the present labor situation alone justified the extraordinary trade union council held by SYNAGRI [National Union of Agricultural Agents] on 2 January 1982, the trade union council of SUVESS [Sole Voltan Union of Teachers of Secondary and Higher Education] held on 28 and 29 December 1981 and the congress of SNEAHV [National Union of African Teachers of Upper Volta] from 27 to 31 December 1981, both statutory meetings, also had to confront recent changes in the trade union situation.

Congress of the Fighters

Since its theme was "School and Production," the 27th SNEAHV congress was not convened about the labor situation but the latter seriously influenced the course of the meeting. So much so that in his closing speech, the secretary general, Mr Hamidou Baba Ouedraogo (reelected) omitted or felt it unnecessary to review the main points of the theme. Perhaps this congress deliberately did not discuss it because the so-called "congress of the fighters," was particularly contentious. This partially explains why it opened a day late. In his speech, the secretary general explained that the postponement was needed to "squelch the harmful activity of some individuals who were trying to use the union for other ideological purposes." For some time, the SNEAHV has been pulled by strong centrifugal forces; as soon as the congress opened, pamphlets were circulated about its members and the Upper Voltan trade union movement (in reference to the letter supporting the CMRPN [Military Committee on Recovery for National Progress] dated 7 December 1981).

The congress overcame the deadlock, according to the secretary general "because vigilant members facilitated the renegades' suspension."

The 27th congress passed a resolution on the labor situation regarding the ordinance banning strikes; it recommended that the national headquarters urge authorities to abrogate this ordinance once and for all. "Most members at the congress urged caution" about possible coordination of activities with the other unions, continued the secretary general.

The USVESS trade union council, on the other hand, held on 28-29 December, was particularly critical in its analysis of the labor situation and the prospects for a "social contract." In his opening speech, Mr Ba Sambo Youssouf, the union's secretary general, painted a gloomy picture of living conditions and the labor outlook since the coup d'etat of 25 November 1980--the ban on meetings and suppression of the right to strike, dismantling of the CSV [Voltan Trade Union Confederation], warrant for the arrest of its secretary-general, fines or prison sentences for those striking in defiance of the ban, and threats to disband unions--in this situation, continued the secretary general, "our council will have to find ways to deal with the CMRPN's repressive measures against the trade unions...and kinds of struggle to obtain the demands made at the 10th congress."

In the conclusions of their proceedings, the council criticized "possible illusions about a 'social contract' when the two contracting parties are not equally free."

The council then urged that its members "continue the work of mobilization," "the search for the broadest possible unity with other trade unions" and proposed "a general work stoppage until all union rights are restored."

The SYNAGRI extraordinary council resulted in the same--or nearly the same--resolutions. There were three items on the agenda--the national trade union situation, status of the demands and the positions of two union officials. The council passed motions, resolutions and recommendations on defending union rights through call for mobilization to act on every order given by the unions which signed the solemn declaration of 17 November 1981.

They reiterate the labor demands which the 12th congress approved and demand that a disciplinary council meet to discuss the two members who were "arbitrarily fired."

BRIEFS

BOTHA-KUANDA BORDER TALKS WELCOMED--Lusaka, 30 Apr (AFP)--The Zambian press today welcomed talks taking place between President Kenneth Kuanda and South Africa Prime Minister Pieter Botha along the border between Botswana and South Africa. Commenting on the meeting, at which the two leaders are expected to discuss wide range of issues affecting the Southern African region, the government owned DAILY MAIL said there was nothing wrong or strange about the talks. "The two leaders will after all be discussing well known subjects to Africa and the international community--South Africa's refusal to grant independence to the peoples of Namibia and her oppression of the black people in South Africa itself," the MAIL said. The country's only other daily, the INDEPENDENT TIMES OF ZAMBIA, noted that the meeting could be the beginning of the process for peace "and humanity in the region." The TIMES said "It is a noble aim which should be supported at all levels by all reasonable people. It is in this vein that we commend the courage and sincere concern shown by South Africa in allowing the Kuanda-Botha meeting to take place." DISPUTE OVER SDAR ADMISSION THREATENS OAU

How To Save OAU

Dakar AFRICA in French Apr 82 pp 29-33

[Article by Paul Bernetel]

[Text] The article and interview that follow are a double happening for our readers.

First of all, there is the quality of the guest interviewed: President Gnassingbe Eyadema, chief of state of Togo, country of the current secretary general of the organization, Edem Kodjo, chairman of the ad hoc committee on Chad. For these reasons and many others, President Eyadema deserved to be present in this OAU series.

We must also emphasize the quality of the interviewer. Paul Bernetel is not a newcomer. From JEUNE AFRIQUE to DEMAIN L'AFRIQUE, he has covered and analyzed all major African events for over 15 years. After a 2-year pause following the disappearance of DEMAIN L'AFRIQUE, he returns to journalism by the main door, thereby putting an end to a legal marathon that ended in the defeat of his adversaries.

Few African capitals felt as deeply as Lome the "affair" of the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR) to the OAU at the 38th session of the Council of Ministers of that organization just held in Addis Ababa.

Few African leaders were more upset than President Gnassingbe Eyadema by the repercussions of the Addis Ababa tumult or the controversies and invectives that followed.

All observers were surprised by Togo's silence and discretion until publication of the open letter from General Eyadema to Kenyan President Arap-Moi, current president of the OAU. It is a concise two and one-half page document in which the Togolese chief of state, on behalf of the Political Bureau of the single party, the RPT [Rally of the Togolese People], and his government, asked the president to "freeze" the decision to admit the SDAR and, at the same time, to entrust to a committee responsible for the principle of self-determination the task of settling the matter of the admission of the SDAR. The reason behind such a move was obvious: avoiding a public confrontation and giving preference to diplomacy.

This approach to the problem ran up against another move, a request from Morocco which, backed by the relative success obtained at Addis-Ababa, asked the acting president of the OAU to call a special summit meeting to "judge" the action of the secretary general, a shrewd maneuver. In giving preference to the interpretation of the settlement by the secretary general over the heart of the problem: the principle of the right to self-determination of the Saharan people, Rabat was seeking to obtain a sanction vote that could not fail to be exploited politically by the POLISARIO's adversaries. On 27 March, President Arap-Moi marked his preference for the formula proposed by Togo. A committee of wise men is to meet in Lagos in April to debate the future of the Organization of African Unity. Nigeria's weight seems to have been decisive in the choice. Nigerian President Shagari had in fact personally told the Togolese chief of state of his agreement on the move proposed by Lome, the only one capable, in his opinion, of calming debate and saving the unity of the OAU.

It is true that the calling of a special summit meeting on the Sahara question is like the rock of Sisyphus. There has been talk of it since 1976 but in vain. It was in Mauritius that, for the first time, Morocco and Moktar Ould Daddah's Mauritania asked for the calling of a special summit meeting. A year later, in Libreville, President Omar Bongo was confirmed in his mission of calling the summit. Despite his efforts, he was to admit the impossiblity of reconciling two diametrically opposing views on the contents and purpose of the work of the summit meeting.

Dossier Reopened

For Morocco at the time, the question of the Sahara no longer existed, inasmuch as self-determination had been exercised once and for all the day of the "Green March" organized by the subjects of King Hassan II on Saharan territory on 6 November 1975. Since that time, things have changed. The position of self-determination and the representativeness of the POLISARIO have gained ground. The committee of wise men managed to bring views closer together on the right to self-determination of the Saharan people and Morocco was accepting the principle of a referendum organization by the OAU and the United Nations. For Rabat, had the dossier of the Western Sahara, closed in 1975, been suddenly reopened in 1980? Or rather, half opened, because the basic question remained: Should the SDAR be a participant in the preparation and drafting of the proposed referendum? In other words, was it considered as a party concerned by the settlement?

In their cautious wisdom, the African wise men responded in such a vague resolution that every antagonist found in it encouragement for its own designs. The pressure of international opinion and the diplomatic and military successes of the POLISARIO nevertheless gave it a slight moral advantage, an advantage confirmed by Rabat's acceptance of a precedure rejected 4 years earlier. This Moroccan concession was purely formal at the outset. Hassan II has never concealed the fact that for his country, the Sahara is a problem of domestic politics, the only area in which the sovereign and his opposition maintain political cohesion, so sorely tested by economic and social contradictions.

For 7 years, all Rabat's diplomatic efforts have been marked by this imperative. According to inter-African ratios of strength, the OAU is a "tom-tom conference" not deserving of the presence of Moroccan representatives, the privileged place of concertation of the Africans, and so on. Doors have opened and closed, the years have gone by and nothing has happened. At the same time -- and this is the objective sought in Rabat -- the SDAR has worn itself out diplomatically. Its early, spectacular successes were followed by a period of indifference. African opinion is all the less sensitive to it because in the field, war has broken out and the forces are achieving a balance. Moreover, the diplomatic position of one of the most solid backers of the POLISARIO, Libya, is being frittered away. The image of the unpredictable Colonel Qadhdhafi is tarnished. In the countries of the Sahel, in Gambia, Ghana, Chad and Chad's neighbors, Libyan activism is a source of concern. Their conduct is modified accordingly and a number of countries that had previously expressed sympathy for the cause of the POLISARIO are becoming more reticent, particularly as the Tripoli summit conference approaches, for its holding and prospects are more cause for worry than joy. In order to counter the negative effect of this state of affairs, Colonel Qadhdhafi steps up his gestures of appeasement. He renews diplomatic relations with Morocco, to the great surprise of the POLISARIO Front, and more recently, his troops have left Chad.

Qadhdhafi's difficulties are all the more harmful to the POLISARIO cause because the Libyan colonel's ties with the Soviet Union and being spectacularly strengthened. It supports and financially backs Ethiopia and his Soviet allies in an offensive against the Eritrean soldiers they supported scarcely 5 years ago. Those who saw in him a leading figure of African nationalism discover with some concern his "made-in-Moscow" internationalism. At any rate, whether real or supposed, the Tripoli-Moscow rapprochement provokes the entry in force of the American Administration of Ronald Reagan on the African political scene.

America's Allies

Morocco has once again become an essential element in the world political strategy arrangement set up by Washington to counter Soviet "expansionism." The United States' traditional allies in Africa, bucked up by Reagan's determination, join their forces to counter Qadhdhafi's moves everywhere. This was the case in Chad, where Egypt and Sudan, determined adversaries of Libya, were resolutely strengthening Hissein Habre at a very time when the Libyan troops were leaving the country. Also in Chad and surprising everyone, General Mobutu's Zairian troops were the first to land when Libyan planes had not yet even left the Ndjamena airport. At the same time -- an accident? -- Mobutu was in Washington and regained a role on the African political scene which the more than precarious situation in his own country does not justify. But Reagan also has an unconditional ally in East Africa: Kenya. Who has forgotten the role played by Kenya in the operation of the Ksraeli commandos at the Entebe airport, where Idi Amin's hostages were being held? Furthermore, Kenya is the home of the current president of the OAU, Daniel Arap-Moi.

In short, the wind has shifted. Things are no longer so simple; political splits have changed. The moderates, once silent and divided, are determined to correct their loss of following and prestige. It is within this context that the 38th session of the OAU Council of Ministers was held in Addis-Ababa. And it was the time chosen by Secretary General Edem Kodjo to make the move already described, interpreting -- as is his right -- a resolution of the Organization. Normally, this decision would at the very least have brought about the umpteenth slamming of the door by Morocco and of one or two of its most faithful African allies.

But as we have seen, times have changed. Some 20 countries slammed their doors, not all spontaneously, however. The American ambassador in Addis-Ababa needed 5 days to convince Mauritius to follow along. Nor was this the only case.

Tripoli Summit; Compromise?

But besides those that left, others remained and have since let it be known that they supported the former. In Nairobi, it is estimated that there are some 25 countries in this movement, representing nearly half of the Organization of African Unity. And all this over a conflict concerning admission of the POLISARIO to the work of the 38th session? Of course not! As we have seen, the motives are more complex. Leaving the Addis-Ababa meeting means, in the final analysis, planning not to go to Tripoli in August. In this precise case, the two-thirds quorum would not be achieved and Colonel Qadhdhafi would watch his dream of presiding over the destiny of the Organization for a year evaporate! That is the real explanation for the Addis-Ababa clash. And there one has the grave danger hanging over the very existence of the OAU. Can one in fact imagine its future if such a precedent were created? What would prevent progressive countries from adopting the same attitude in the future if the summit were held in a country not to their liking and if there were some risk of electing a president without their backing? Qadhdhafi and Libya definitely pose a problem, but are they alone in this case? Idi Amin in 1975 was no better off and yet, Kampala beat the record for participation of chiefs of state.

And so? One has to observe that Africa cannot escape, or can no longer escape, the international context. The East-West radicalization is about to stifle that which saved the OAU for 20 years: the spirit of tolerance and the determination to safeguard the existence of the organization.

How can such a risk be avoided? In medium-range terms, by strengthening the system for choosing the host countries of the OAU which, given the enormous size of the organization, would choose only those countries which have the material means of receiving the OAU. Like the United Nations, the OAU could permanently meet at its Addis-Ababa headquarters and presidents could be elected by secret voting based on their aptitude for saving the unity of the organization and not on the means of their respective countries.

In short-range terms and no matter what the cost, the countries must go to Tripoli. There are certainly many justified reasons for abstaining, but the consequences could not be clearer. Not going to Tripoli would definitely be the end of a certain OAU, that of the founding fathers of 1963, the OAU based on tolerance, a spirit of dialog, respect for others and the right to be different.

One could understand why certain chiefs of state would refuse to go personally to the Libyan capital, given the circumstances, the situation of their own countries with respect to Qadhdhafi's policy. But nothing would prevent them from being represented at a lower level, which would be an effective way of manifesting their disapproval. Each one must remember that, according to the Charter, all members have equal rights. As long as that Charter is not modified in a direction avoiding these wandering, costly summit meetings that benefit only the richest countries, it must be scrupulously respected.

Togolese Proposal

In the immediate present, it is the Togolese proposal presented by Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema that appears to be the most realistic solution to the problem posed by the admission of the SDAR. Moreover, this is no surprise. Togo occupies a special place on the African political scene.

Classified as a moderate, it was one of the first to recognize the SDAR in the name of the principles of the OAU. The availability manifested by its chief of state in a whole series of inter-African conflicts, the personal role he played in solving the Upper Volta-Mali war, the reconciliation of Sekou Toure with presidents Boigny and Senghor, chairmanship of the ad hoc committee on Chad and the establishment of ECOWAS 7 years ago, have all given him the position of a shrewd and convincing mediator among his African peers.

The election of Edem Kodjo in Khartoum in 1978 was first and foremost a plebiscite on Togo's African policy. Furthermore, it is remarkable that the last three secretaries general of the organization (two Cameroonians and one Togolese) were from countries whose diplomatic line of action in Africa demonstrates this respect for the principles of the OAU Charter and the spirit of tolerance and dialog so indispensable to protection of African unity.

Fifteen years after he came to power, Eyadema has scarcely changed. Passionate but discreet, he is endowed with solid common sense and a profound knowledge of Africa and its leaders. When he waves aside a personal question on the secretary general of the Organization, it is not a refusal to talk. Here also, he has things to say. Perhaps he personally regrets that his former minister of finance does not ask him for advice, but he says not a word because this is not the essential thing and Eyadema is not a talker. He is a man of action. What interests him is not the judgment of the past. He rejects the Manichean view that divides member nations into the good and the evil. He believes in the virtues of dialog, not a public dialog in which, speaking from the platform of the OAU, each party upbraids his peers and questions their opinions, but rather, a discreet dialog. It is a matter of climate, atmosphere, confidence, and also, of getting to know one another better in order to understand one another better.

In his presidential office where he begins his day at 4:30 in the morning, Gnassingbe Eyadema speaks of Africa just as he speaks of his village Lama-Kara, with warmth and not without humor. But also with concern. A man of duty, Eyadema does not dissimulate: Africa is in danger; he knows it and says so. His message is an appeal for common sense and reason.

Eyadema on Danger Facing Africa

Dakar AFRICA in French Apr 82 pp 32-33

[Interview with President Gnassingbe Eyadema by Paul Bernetel; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] The OAU is going through a particularly serious crisis. Some speak of a contradictory interpretation of the charter, others of a coup. The Organization is on the brink of a split. How can the worst be avoided?

[Answer] Given the point we have reached, it no longer serves any useful purpose to attribute responsibility. Let us leave that as food for reflection and try to find a solution to avoid collapse. What is clear now is the impasse we have reached. We must be careful! If there is no collective awareness, we risk the irreparable. Who in Africa could fail to be sensitive to such a risk? It was because of this very situation that I took it upon myself to send to acting President Arap-Moi a letter in which I emphasize Africa's need to transcend its divergencies to save what is essential: its unity and cohesion.

[Question] The decision made by the Office of Secretary General of the OAU at that 38th session to admit the SDAR as a full member is nevertheless the cause of this crisis. How can one not take this element into consideration in order to find a solution in keeping with the spirit of your appeal to the current president?

[Answer] You are right. That is why I gave our position on the matter to President Arap-Moi. Concerning the problem of the SDAR, each sovereign nation could quite calmly take a position in keeping with its own interpretation of the principles of the freedom and self-determination of peoples. As for Togo, it has already recognized the SDAR. It is a position of principle that cannot be debated.

[Question] Unfortunately, several nations have differently interpreted these principles, classifying the Saharan question as a Moroccan affair, thereby rejecting the admission of the SDAR and leaving the 38th session. Is that not what now threatens the integrity of the Organization?

[Answer] I proposed to the current president that we suspend the admission of the SDAR until the committee for implementation of the principle of self-determination files its report. We must avoid forums, public confrontations. We must have concertation, with a concern for bringing views closer together and save the Organization. Look what happened in Addis-Ababa and recently in Dakar. The deep malaise that threatens our Organization will find no solution in large meetings at which every camp is counted. We must take the passion out of the debate through a frank, effective and discreet dialog with the basic objective of saving the Organization. This could be done through the appointment, by the current president, of a limited committee whose essential task would be to try to bring the views of both sides closer together.

[Question] Does the move of the secretary general, who is coming to the end of his term, not pose some difficulties with respect to its future?

[Answer] That is a false problem! If the Organization no longer exists in the future, a secretary general will serve no purpose at all! We must therefore forget the controversial elements of this matter and look at the essential thing, the future and unity of the organization. Unfortunately, it often happens that the anecdotal side or the excessive personalization of issues conceal what is essential. We must avoid that trap.

[Question] What do you think of the special summit meeting proposed by Morocco?

[Answer] Under the current circumstances, the calling of a special summit meeting devoted to the Western Sahara seems premature since the positions of both sides are rigid. Since 1976 in Mauritius, the special summit meeting on the Sahara has been on the agenda. It has not been held. We must first of all freeze antagonisms by working in a limited framework and toward a rapprochement of views.

This is "corridor diplomacy" which we must undertake in order to make positions more flexible and round off sharp corners. Once this is done, the summit meeting could be held under more favorable conditions, for it would serve no purpose to call a special summit meeting to which each one would come with his position already firm.

[Question] Finally, are you optimistic, Mr President?

[Answer] In the light of the notorious events that have marked the growth of the OAU for almost 20 years, I have reason to believe, once more, in the ability of Africans to overcome the current crisis, because of the imperious duty of every individual to make the virtues of dialog and concertation prevail.

Faithful to the spirit of conciliation and cohesion which has always existed within the Organization, we must rapidly seek suitable means and the right framework making it possible for men of good will to combine their efforts in order to harmonize opinions and prevent the OAU from a regrettable collapse.

[Question] Mr President, the future of ECOWAS, the organization to whose birth you contributed so much, now seems severely compromised by the disturbances and instability noted in certain member countries. Are you pessimistic or optimistic about its future and in a more general way, do you now see a way to prevent ECOWAS from going through what the OAU has?

[Answer] While politics cultivates division among our ranks -- in this case, between the so-called "moderates" and the so-called "progressives" -- economic considerations remain a factor of unity and consensus because they come under no ideology. The problems of ECOWAS, a technical and economic organization, are different from those experienced by the OAU.

Within ECOWAS, there is unanimity on the essential questions and fundamental objectives. The current difficulties result from delays in payment of contributions. But you know, ECOWAS is only 7 years old and we have every reason to remain optimistic about its future.

ROMANIAN AGRICULTURAL ASSISTANCE TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Bucharest VEAC NOU in Romanian No 3, Mar 82 p 5

[Article: "Romanian Specialists in Africa," interview with Adrian Rogojeanu, deputy minister of agriculture and the food industry, by Emil Tilenschi]

[Excerpts] Question: In how many African countries are Romanian specialists currently working in the field of agriculture?

Answer: In about 20. Our agronomists, zootechnicians, water improvement specialists, mechanics and tractor operators can be found in Libya and in Angola, in Mauritania and Nigeria, in Mozambique and in Benin, in Somalia and in Burundi, etc.

Question: And in the Mediterranean, in the tropics and near the Equator, there are different conditions and different problems.

Answer: In general there is only one problem: helping to increase the agricultural and food-producing potential of the countries in which we are present. Our cooperation with these countries takes on multiple forms and, as a result, good results can be achieved, in fields of special interest, in the joint activity which we carry out. The projects include the creation of grain farms, the fallowing of virgin land earmarked for planting, the setting up of irrigation systems on large areas of land, the creation of animal husbandry complexes, the organization of mechanization centers or centers for the exploitation of ocean fishing zones.

Question: In concrete terms, what we call transfer of technology.

Answer: Of course! Our specialists bring to Africa technical designs and solutions, high-productivity hybrids; they provide tractors, machines and equipment for agricultural production and land improvements, as well as fishing ships.

Question: Could you tell us some of the results achieved:

Answer: Our cooperation with African countries, in the agricultural field, dates back to 1973-1974. At present there are four joint companies of an agricultural-zootechnical nature operating in Libya. One of the two companies in Tripoli is concerned with obraining seeds and planting materials and the other--which is called "Librom"--deals with arrangements for land improvements. Another joint company, with headquarters in Benghazi, deals with poultry raising. And finally, in the joint company for raising and fattening sheep in Misurata, some 300,000 sheep can be raised each year for meat.

There are joint companies with Romanian participation in other African countries. In the Congo, the "Socoton" joint company is concerned with the cultivation of large areas of grain and the raising of animals. The "Zairom" company in Zaire has a similar mission. In Mauritania, the "SIMAR" joint company engages in fishing activity, in the Atlantic Ocean with 12 trawlers and two refrigerator ships made in Romania. Negotiations are in progress for the creation of other joint companies with African countries, specializing in the field of fishing.

Question: And besides joint companies?

Answer: We have organized many forms of cooperation. One of the most important actions of this type is taking place in Mozambique where our specialists are contributing, with technical means and specialized assistance, to the implementation of a vast program of clearing and utilizing virgin terrains amounting to more than 400,000 hectares of land. In the first phase, up to 1985, some 100,000 hectares will be planted. In the provinces of Cabo Delgado and Niassai grain and animal husbandry farms are being organized, in cooperation with Romania.

In Benin, two agricultural farms are being fully utilized [with Romanian assistance]. In Burundi, Romanian tractors are participating in the reclaiming of 7,000 hectares of land. In Angola, in Lucala, a state enterprise specializing in grain crops was organized. Ultimately, it will have more than 15,000 hectares. In Somalia, technical documentation is being prepared for irrigation projects on 5,000 hectares of land. We are engaged in discussions in regard to cooperation projects in Guinea, Ghana, Nigeria and other countries. All these are useful to those people who are combining their efforts so that the land of the African continent will become even more fertile.

DISPUTE OVER SDAR THREATENS PAN-AFRICANISM

Dakar AFRICA in French Apr 82 p 33

[Article by Renee Pelletier: "The OAU: The End of Pan-Africanism"]

[Text] Are we truly moving toward the breakup of the Organization of African Unity (OAU)? The admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR) to the Council of Ministers, meeting for 4 days in Addis-Ababa beginning on 25 February, took the lid off a can of worms and exposed a split between "progressives" and "moderates" which some had in vain tried to conceal under the overworked alibi of unity, but which the inextricable problem of the Western Sahara had brought out into the open for good.

It is true that since 1963, many crises have plagued this club of 50 African sages, but without seriously threatening its foundations. However, the case is quite different today, with a conflict which it had been suspected for many months might bring the very future of the OAU into question.

The presence on the Council of the Saharans, whose flag can now be seen waving in front of the Africa Hall in the Ethiopian capital, has thus exploded the only dream of unity on which Gamal Abdel Nasser and especially Kwame Nkrumah based the idea of Pan-Africanism. A "unilateral" decision of Secretary General Edem Kodjo created a split between the backers of Morocco and the departure, to date, of 19 countries for the reason given by everyone that "the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic is not a sovereign and independent state."

Anomaly in the Charter

How did things reach that point? Beyond a definite political split, the Addis Ababa incident revealed an anomaly in the drafting of the OAU Charter which, in the euphoria of the 1963 years, had certainly not foreseen any dissent over the admission of a nation. In fact, according to the very statutes of the Pan-African organization, "any independent and sovereign state can at any time notify the administrative secretary of its intention of adhering to the charter." Article 28 therefore empowers the secretary general alone of declaring the admission of a new nation. But Article 4 of the same charter reserves for chiefs of state the responsibility of interpreting the charter and therefore, of recognizing the existence of a sovereign and independent nation.

While 26 nations -- the majority plus one -- did recognize the existence of the SDAR at the 17th summit conference of the Organization in July 1980 in Freetown, Morocco had a perfect right to request an interpretation of Article 4 at that time and to face the chiefs of state with their responsibility. However, unable to rule on such a burning issue, the majority then decided to resort to the unity position, freezing the admission of the SDAR, with the hope that reactivation of the Committee of Wise Men and then the institution of the committee for implementation of the decisions of the Nairobi summit conference in 1981 would make it possible to rehabilitate the rights of some while safeguarding the honor of others. Decisions recommending a ceasefire and the holding of a referendum would lead Morocco to harden its position and to refuse to enter into discussions with the POLISARIO directly, considering it to be a "band of mercenaries paid by Algiers." At its last meeting in Nairobi in February, the committee, which had developed an agenda, had to agree that the parties in conflict would not be named, thereby sparing Morocco de facto recognition of the POLISARIO Front.

Consequently, beyond the Saharan situation, the real problem resides in the smooth operation of the various organs of the institution and therefore, in a precise definition of their respective competencies, the work methods of the conferences and the authority that that should be attached to their decisions, avoiding giving each one a framework in which its own legitimacy might be exercised with the most flagrant incoherence.

Total Imbroglio

The fact is that Edem Kodjo, who indignantly rejects the idea that he could have been acting to assure his reelection in August, is right when he points out that by inviting the SDAR to Addis Ababa and giving it a seat, he respected the OAU Charter perfectly. He hints that the chiefs of state he consulted in the past refused to answer him, leaving responsibility for his decision up to him, and that his move was practically imposed on him by the 26 nations supporting recognition of the SDAR, which summoned him to conform to the Freetown recommendation.

That is where the imbroglio becomes total: The SDAR is and will remain a member of the OAU as long as the African chiefs of state do not decide that it does not correspond to the definition of a free and sovereign state. But giving the SDAR the status of member of the organization comes down to making the decisions of the chiefs of state purposeless. The impasse is total.

PROVINCIAL COMMITTEES MEETINGS STUDY PARTY-STATE RELATIONS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 27 Mar 82 p 1

[Article by L.L.]

[Excerpts] Party and state relations concerning ways in which the party might support and control the state apparatus and regulations of the departments of economic and social policy of the party's provincial committees are some of the final conclusions of the first national meeting of the departments of economic, social and planning development of the party's provincial committees which was held in Caxito, Bengo Province, from 23 to 25 March.

Those who attended the meeting also approved the plan of activity for this year on the overall level for the various organizations of the departments of economic, social and planning development (sections and subcommittees) and discussed and analyzed in detail the methodology of support and control of the various areas of national life under the supervision of the departments of economic, social and planning development—namely, for health, social affairs and housing, cooperation and statistics, domestic and foreign trade, labor and wages, finances, bank and prices and questions of economic and social development in the provinces.

Roberto de Almeida, secretary of the party Central Committee for Economic and Social Policy, who directed the sessions, spoke at the closing ceremony; after expressing pleasure at the way in which the meeting was conducted, he urged the participants to put everything discussed and analyzed into practice and added that the concept of national unity would be strengthened through participation of elements from various parts of the country.

Also participating in the meeting were: Norberto dos Santos, national director of DORGAN [Department of Organization of the Central Committee]; Aleixo Goncalves, director of the Department of Social Security of the party Central Committee; and coordinators and representatives of the provincial departments of economic, social and planning development. Also present at the closing ceremony were: the Bengo party coordinator and provincial commissioner, Lopes Maria, party Central Committee member, Lucrecia Alfredo, alternate member of the party Central Committee, other local party and government leaders and guests.

AGRICULTURAL DIFFICULTIES IN KWANZA-NORTE DISTRICT

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by M.C.]

[Excerpts] The municipality of Golungo Alto in Kwanza-Norte Province has about 58,000 inhabitants who live basically from agriculture.

This is traditionally a coffee-growing municipality, however, various fruits are also grown.

In recent years coffee production has been declining drastically, primarily because of the "sudden death" disease and a shortage of manual labor. Because of many shortages in the area of consumer goods purchasing, there is now a massive "flight" of coffee workers to other activities.

Here there are 40 coffee plantations controlled by ENCAFE [National Coffee Enterprise] still devoted to the production of corn, beans, sweet potatoes and cassava. These plantations presently employ 3,882 workers. Last year, the production of coffee beans amounted to 754,723 kg, partially limited by lack of rain in that part of the country.

In 1981, the corn crop dropped to 82 tons and the bean crop did not exceed 1.5 tons.

Cooperative Sector: 200 Tons of Coffee for the Market

On the other hand, the cooperative sector of agriculture is still going along successfully despite various difficulties.

The municipality now has 11 farmer associations and 1 agricultural-production cooperative. The associations, which are spread throughout the municipality, have a total of 1,255 members.

With the limited means at their disposal, the cooperatives engage particularly in coffee growing. About 200 tons of last year's coffee crop still remain to be marketed, and this is the responsibility of ENCAFE. However, ENCAFE has not yet taken care of the matter due to alleged shortages in transportation facilities.

Despite conditions imposed by circumstances, the productive results achieved by the associate sector can be considered encouraging. Proof of this is in the financial balences obtained, which amount to 900,000 kwanzas now deposited in the banks. The same can be said of the cooperative, with a present balance of 610,000 kwanzas.

Supplies Not Going Well

"This year we received fish only once," declared the commissioner of Golungo Alto in speaking of the status of supplies to that municipality. To overcome this irregularity, local authorities are going to renew their efforts to accredit private merchants to enable them to purchase fish from Kwanza-Sul Province to satisfy Golungo's needs.

In like manner, the distribution of meat to the people has not received proper attention. Meat arrives when it arrives and never in satisfactory quantities.

With regard to the sale of industrial-food products, the situation is changing very little, the same anomalies occurring here as in other municipalities of Kwanza-Norte.

MOROCCAN OFFICIAL DENIES SUPPORT TO 'PUPPETS'

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Apr 82 pp 1-2

[Text] ANGOP--Yesterday Moroccan Minister of Traditional Industry and Social Affairs Abbes el Fassi Fihri "categorically" denied that the Moroccan head of state had received in Rabat the principal head of the Angolan puppets in the service of South Africa and called the Portuguese press story on this "one of pure fantasy."

This alleged meeting has been the subject of glaring reports in various rightist newspapers in Lisbon and over Portuguese state television itself and was corroborated by statements made by the Angolan traitor to various organs of the international press.

Abbes Fihri, who spoke with ANGOP moments before his departure for Mozambique yesterday morning, was in Luanda, according to h's own statement, to deliver a "verbal message" from King Hassan II of Morocco to Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and of the People's Republic of Angola.

He said that the message "of friendship and brotherhood" was conveyed in the meeting he had with Minister of Foreign Relations Paulo Jorge and that it was aimed at "dialogue and harmony" and the "safeguarding of African unity."

Being more precise, Abbes Fihri said that the message concerned the "rift" in the OAU after the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR) which Morocco insists in presenting as "an integral part of its own national territory."

He asserted that, except for natural differences in the concept of economic and social development, it is "the duty of all African heads of state to find common positions to safeguard OAU unity" and that his visit and the message are in that spirit.

In concluding, and after recalling the support Morocco always gave the MPLA during the first war of liberation as well as other African liberation movements, Hassan II's envoy confirmed that his country is supporting and always will support Angola's territorial integrity and that it could not, therefore, be accused of giving refuse to the Angolan puppets who ask for it. "Morocco cannot help but support, and in a very definite manner, the territorial integrity of the RPA and stands on the side of the Angolan Government to defend it."

These statements by the Moroccan minister are doing sleight-of-hand tricks with the genuine and deliberate support Morocco has, in fact, been giving to the Angolan puppets and, in addition, it hopes to establish an artificial parallel between the existence of the SDAR, legitimate state born of the desire of the Saharan people for independence and the desired Balkanization of the southern part of the Angolan territory by the South African racists.

FINANCE MINISTRY COUNCIL NOTES SHORTCOMINGS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Apr 82 p 3

[Text] The difficult economic and financial situation which the country is experiencing, a lack of accountability in most companies and large budget deficits are some of the findings of the proceedings of the Third General Advisory Council of the Ministry of Finance, which took place in the Costa do Sol Hotel in Luanda from 29 to 31 March.

The council members also found weak organization in the companies and in some state agencies, and observed that the guidelines outlined in the First Extraordinary Party Congress for the financial sector for last year had resulted in positive work, although they were only partially implemented.

The participants unanimously approved a motion in support of the address given by Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos in the city of Lubango during the celebration of the 21st anniversary of the beginning of the armed struggle, in which the president stressed the need to establish strict criteria for the selection of personnel to administer and manage the state budget.

Finance Minister Ismael Martins, who chaired the proceedings and presided over the closing session, stressed the need to implement the decisions reached for various areas of activity, thus permitting the development of working guidelines for the current year of "Economic Organization and Popular Vigilance."

Referring to the country's economic and financial troubles, aggravated by the racist aggression, the leader urged all the participants to provide greater support and participate more fully in resolving the economic problems.

Sousa Santos and Augusto de Matos, vice ministers of finance, and Joao Abel and Jose Agostinho Neto, vice governors of the National Bank of Angola, attended the closing session. Taking part in the proceedings were cabinet directors, department chiefs, provincial delegates of the Finance Ministry and national and provincial directors of the National Bank of Angola.

COMMUNICATIONS, POWER PROBLEMS AFFECT MALANJE PROVINCE

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 27 Mar 82 p 11

[Text] Malanje—Col Ludy Kissassunda, member of the Political Bureau of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee and provincial commissioner of Malanje, is continuing his tour of several agricultural areas, enterprises and production units.

On Thursday the highest party and government official went to the Lau Agricultural Enterprise and the Nhangassol Agricultural School, to learn about its operation and the development of various farm crops, as well as the corn harvest campaign.

At the Ngangassol agricultural school, Colonel Kissassunga expressed some thoughts about the school's importance in the training of national cadres for the socio-economic development of the country.

The school in question has several fields planted in various crops and vegetables to feed the students, teachers and other residents.

Troublesome Lack of Communication

The general lack of communications services and the frequent power outages are a continuing concern of the provincial party and government officials, i nasmuch as these problems jeopardize the socioeconomic development, not only of the province, but of the country.

In fact, during the proceedings of the last General Advisory Council of the Provincial Commission, Colonel Kissassunga strongly emphasized the urgent need to solve these problems.

However, despite efforts by the provincial office of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, particularly by ENATEL [Angolan State Telecommunications Co?], the problem is still far from being solved.

According to David Adao Mateus, provincial director of ENATEL, the breakdown which occurred in the power line for the "microwave" system at Kambungo, located in Lucala Municipio, Kwanza-Norte Province, will be repaired soon.

At this time ENATEL technicians are making a survey of the turbines and other equipment, looking to their replacement so the system will operate properly.

Regarding the telephone line from Malanje to Luanda and other provinces, the ENATEL provincial director assured that the breakdown caused by the power outage in Kampunze, Cacuso Municipio, will be taken care of by next Monday, 29 March.

IMPORTANCE OF NATIONAL TERRITORIAL INTEGRITY STRESSED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial: "A Solid Bulwark"]

[Text] It has not been difficult for a people and a nation forged by the struggle and desire for independence to respond to the abrupt interruption of the order of the day, calling for popular participation with the particular words: "From Cabinda to Cunene, one sole..., one sole..."

"...A single people, a single nation," was an aspiration that was not realized in a single day, and it represents the desire to cement even further the indestructible and intense bonds created and established in the resistance to a common oppressor.

Although the country's geographic borders are to a large extent conventional—the result of an arbitrary partition of the African continent at the Berlin Conference at the end of the last century—the various peoples and ethnic groups which have long coexisted within those borders have put together a common history, and with the creation of the MPLA in 1956, they encountered the proper means to join together to demand independence and to build a new society, free from the exploitation of men by men.

In the celebration of the proclamation of independence, the late beloved Comrade President Agostinho Neto could thus clearly define the new political entity born of the long and victorious struggle: "From Cabinda to Cunene, a single people and a single nation," embodied in the People's Republic of Angola [RPA].

It is this indivisible entity—which was formed with the blood of thousands (millions) of human lives, by people who, in 5 centuries of colonialism, always asserted and kept alive the original flash of a unique personality, and which resistance to the occupying foreigners transformed qualitatively—it is this entity which the South Africans, the direct agents of the North American imperialists and their Western allies in this subregion, are now attempting to chanlenge and destroy with the most recent of their fantastic (and puppet-show) scenarios.

The Pretoria leaders seek nothing more or less than to "institutionalize" the momentary occupation of a vast expanse of Angolan territory—50,000 square milometers, Lt Col Ngongo reported a few days ago—creating a "provisional government" and presenting it on a silver platter to the Angolan puppets in their service.

This new and heinous maneuver against the People's Republic of Angola and its people is being indirectly supported by a massive (mis)information campaign conducted by the racists throughout the capitalist West, and such countries as Belgium, the FRG, Zaire and Isfael are collaborating in it. Other countries have already been asked to immediately recognize the "new government": England, France, the FRG [as published], Portugal, Morocco, Egypt and other African countries.

To arm this invented puppet "government," the racist South Africans are seeking to put an airport in Cunene Province into operation and to transfer large quantities of fuel and war material there.

In a more spectacular operation, the imperialist circles are proposing to revive political corpses and ghost organizations—which the Angolan people would have forgotten completely by now were it not for the number of crimes they committed—and to unite this whole scum of traitors and mercenaries under a single command.

The choice of April for this gross and criminal farce is clearly meant to reduce the impact of the first official visit by a Western statesman to the People's Republic of Angola. Moreover, and above all, the intent is to pressure SWAPO, the revolutionary vanguard of the Namibian people, to accept the unacceptable electoral proposals of the Western "five," to solve the problem of that racist-occupied territory.

It was not a week ago that the Angola people, from Cabinda to Cunene, celebrated the 1976 victory over the invading South African troops, which had advanced to barely 200 kilometers from the nation's capital. The current presence of the racists in the south of the country did not prevent the people from dancing and singing of their victory, aware that this presence, now as then, is only a question of time and of fighting revolutionary spirit.

United from Cabinda to Cunene, the Angolan people know that, once again, they will not stand alone against the racist aggression and incre singly shameless maneuvers. The possibility of requesting military support through the United Nations, which has been suggested various times, has grown no stronger to date simply because the glorious FAPLA [Armed Forces for the Popular Liberation of Angola] and other forces operating in the combat zones have been sufficient to contain the Pretorian attack and also because the RPA still wishes to avoid an internationalization of the conflict, which would aggravate the situation in this already troubled area of the subcontinent.

Meanwhile, any enemy maneuver seeking to institutionalize—even only in appearance—the parceling of the territory of the Angolan nation in the building will run up against the will of an entire people and the active solidarity of the international community that stands for peace, progress and the freedom of peoples. From Cabinda to Cunene, the People's Republic of Angola is and will continue to be, by choice, a single people and a single nation, a solid bulwark in defense of African and world revolution.

The Struggle Continues!

Victory Is Certain!

DIFFICULTIES WITH FOREIGN FISHING FLEET NOTED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Apr 82 p 3

[Report by Alves Antonio]

[Text] Mocamedes--The Fourth Regular Session of the Mocamedes Provincial People's Assembly took place from 25 to 27 March in this city, and was chaired by its president, Lt Col Rafael Sapilinha (Sambalanga), member of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee.

With a majority of members present, the assembly elected Deptuy Francisco Aragao dos Santos first secretary of that governing body and approved the minutes of the third session. The participants of the fourth session of the Mocamedes Assembly approved the reports from the provincial commission and the deputies on working committees.

Issues taken up during the meeting included an analysis of the status of community services, supplies to the people, home construction and housing, as well as the fishing sector and the communique of the Executive Commission of the provincial party committee.

In its report, the provincial commission noted that, although Mocamedes is the country's major fishing center, the sector has been cause for great concern, in view of the shortage of fish on the market, which has fostered a gradual increase in speculative activities around the fishing port of the province capital. Moreover, there are a number of problems in the sector, such as disagreements among directors, poor living conditions for the workers, wages in arrears, financial problems and even disagreements with the foreign fleet, among others.

The participants of the Fourth Session of the Provincial Assembly also noted a considerable decline in discipline at all levels and in seceral sectors of activity, as another factor impeding the economy.

BRIEFS

PORTUGUESE IMPORTS INCREASE--Joao Salgueiro, Portuguese minister of finance and planning, called the 600-percent increase in Portuguese exports to Angola from 1977 to 1981 "substantial progress." He made this statement during a press conference in Luanda at the close of the second work session of the Portuguese-Angolan joint intergovernmental commission. "These exports," he said, "consisted in the supply of consumer goods, medicines and other goods as well as in the rendering of long-range service in the construction area." As for the future of these accomplishments, the Portuguese minister referred to the problems analyzed by the commission and certain aspects which will lead to a more stable and lasting development in trade relations between the two countries. The meeting also reviewed certain aspects of the improvement of other Angolan economic sectors, with the strengthening of Portuguese-Angolan exports and imports. "We are convinced that the economic potential of the People's Republic of Angola and the tasks ahead of it, associated with Portugal's political will to cooperate in various important sectors of Angola, will assure that this progress will continue in future years," the Portuguese official emphasized. On the question of the supply of Angolan oil to Portugal, Minister Joao Salgueiro said that consideration has recently been given to the possibility of signing a medium-range agreement for part of the supply of Portugal's oil from Angola as a matter of bilateral interest. According to the official, this expresses the interests both countries have in strengthening their trade relations and will make enable Angola to supply Portugal with crude oil and possibly also fuel oil. Simultaneously with the supply of oil, Joao Salgueiro empahsized that there are other sectors in which commercial exchanges between the two countries will be expanded, principally in agriculture. HUILA HOUSING SHORTAGE--Lubango--"The housing porblem in Huila Province has reached a very high level of requirements and difficulties necessitating immediate action," according to a report on 1981 from a provincial delegation of the Secretariat of State for Housing. The report says that with the influx of people from Cunene due to the recent invasion by the racist army of South Africa, the housing problem has become worse; one proposed solution would be an organized increase in do-it-yourself building. According to that document, in 1981 there were 1,015 requests for housing but only 117 granted after a strict selection of priorities based on time and urgency. The difficulty in satisfying the many housing requests is allied to various factors, such as the influx of people from rural to urban centers, stimulated by the fact that this province is essentially agricultural and has great industrial potential involving a great number of skilled personnel. However, it must be pointed out that, according to the delegation of the Ministry of Construction, there was little productivity during the period from 1979 to 1981, only 118 residents being supplied to the Ministry of Housing. The document points out that 8,393 contracts are under the control of the provincial delegation of the Ministry of Housing, 315 being distributed to cooperants, 417 commercial establishments assigned to the Ministry of Home Trade, 600 establishments to small business people and 801 offices for various public organizations. INVASION DAMAGE--Bonn--The Angolan people are strongly determined to fight for their independence against the racist regime of South Africa, according to a statement made by Lieutenant Colonel Ngongo, in a press conference held in Bonn, FRG, in which he spoke of the situation prevailing in the country's south and the measures being taken by the Angolan Government in face of South African aggression. "Since October," he said, "South African troops have been occupying many areas in southern Angola after intensive bombing of villagws and cities forcing the people to move from those areas." After stating that the damage caused by those attacks is estimated at $1.5 million (35 million kwanzas), he stressed that the Western countries are providing considerable aid to the racist regime and that the FRG and South Africa are in close collaboration in the energy and nuclear domain. In concluding, Lieutenant Colonel Ngongo appealed to the democratic public opinion of the FRG to strengthen its solidarity with the just struggle of the Angolan people and intervene with the FRG Government to put an end to the aid it has been giving the South African racist regime. It should be noted that Lieutenant Colonel Ngongo is participating in the campaign organized by the International Commission of Investigation against the crimes of apartheid in southern Africa and that he was recently in Brussels where he reported on the plan of attack which Pretoria intends to carry out against the Port of Mocamedes. COOPERATION WITH YUGOSLAVIA--Belgrade--Creation of joint enterprises and establishment of other paths of cooperation at long range are practical means to strengthen trade relations between Angola and Yugoslavia. This conclusion was reached last Wednesday in this city by the Yugoslav Chamber of Commerce and Yugoslav representatives who operate in Angola. During a meeting here, the two parties noted that there are good possibilities for economic cooperation between Angola and Yugoslavia in prospecting and exploiting natural resources and in agriculture. They described as positive the pilot programs conducted in Angola by BEOGRAN and BRODOKOMERC and by the Zemun Corn Institute. Trade between the two countries has increased in recent years to about $50 million ($1.00 is equivalent to 30 kwanzas), an increase of about $34 million. COMMERCIAL, CULTURAL AGREEMENT DISCUSSED WITH CANADA

AB301754 Yaounde Domestic Service in English 1400 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Excerpts] The 3-day Cameroon-Canada Joint Commission meeting ended in Yaounde today with the signing of a joint communique touching several issues.

The joint session of the Canada-Cameroon mixed commission, which has been holding under the chairmanship of Mr Bello Bouba Maigari, the minister of economy and planning; and the Hon Serge Joyal, Canadian minister of state for foreign affairs [title as heard], ends this morning at the conference hall of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

During his stay in Cameroon, the Canadian minister also visited a number of projects being undertaken by Canadian firms including a training center for mechanics and operators which also includes the supply of road maintenance equipment, as well as locomotives made in Canada.

The chairman of the two delegations had discussions on general bilateral relations between Canada and Cameroon, and reviewed the results of cooperation on commercial and cultural exchanges since the intergovernmental meeting of January 1979. The chairmen also noted with satisfaction the increase in cooperation between the two countries which is taking place in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and friendship. Reference was made to their common willingness to identify to each country's benefit the objectives of development cooperation in the economic and cultural spheres in the context of the Cameroonian fifth 5-year plan and the interest and priorities of Canada so that further substantial progress in areas of common interest can be realized.

The Canadian side presented a review of the program of the Canadian International Development Agency [CIDA], the mechanisms and institutions to execute various projects, and programs and (?adminuation) of CIDA activities in sectors which correspond to the needs and planning of the Cameroonian Government.

For its part, the Cameroonian side presented the major directions and strategy of the Cameroonian fifth 5-year plan, and identified sectors and projects for which they wish to receive Canadian assistance.

Following these discussions, the two delegations agreed on the sectors of the intervention and the priority projects which will be subject to further study and planning so that these development cooperation programs can be brought to fruition.

In the discussion dealing with commercial exchanges, after having reviewed the results to the present, the two sides presented a review of their key interests and ways to facilitate these exchanges. In this regard, the delegations outlined the draft of a double-taxation agreement, a line of credits and the export development cooperation and the institutional field work of these exchanges.

The two sides underlined the importance they attach to the broadening of cultural cooperation and the exchange of these ideas, and both delegations also reviewed their cultural activities in recent years and discussed respective views on future prospects for cultural cooperation.

On completion of his visit to Cameroon, the Hon Serge Joyal took the opportunity to thank the minister of economy and planning, Mr Bello Bouba Maigari, as well as the government of the United Republic of Cameroon for the very warm hospitality which he and the members of his delegation received, and emphasized that the success of this first session of the mixed commission underlined the deep friendship and spirit of cooperation which mark relations between Canada and Cameroon.

RESULTS OF PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO SOUTHWEST OF COUNTRY

Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIDIEN DE L'ACI in French 10 Apr 82 pp 1-2

[Article by Georges Olouo]

[Text] The president of the Central Committee of the PCT [Congolese Labor Party] returned Thursday from an extended tour of the southwestern regions of the country. The results of this working visit are impressive. Nearly 5,000 kilometers were covered over a period of 20 days. Every day, the "man of the masses" spoke to the people and presided over a working meeting with officials from the areas visited. During the heaviest point in the schedule, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso spoke three times on the same day.

The president held 27 meetings, presided over 16 work sessions and made 27 stops of roughly 24 hours to the chief towns of districts and administrative control posts (PCA).

At each place visited or even en route from one stop to another, the head of the revolution paid numerous visits (some 60), going from medical centers to farms, visiting quarries, as was the case in Bouenza.

At the work meetings over which he presided and during visits to project sites, the president of the Central Committee of the PCT used the same language: that of the productive work that "will help us out of our current situation."

In Bouenza, Lekoumou and Niari, the conditions for overall development exist. The observation of the Congolese president was reassuring:

The party and its mass organizations are present and well organized in each place.

The rural masses can be mobilized behind the directives and slogans of the political leadership.

Potential is real and multifaceted. The land is fertile. The amount of electricity produced by the Moukoukoulou dam and the presence of two railroads in these regions constitute positive factors, assets for development. The president's satisfaction from his interregional visit assuredly stems from the potential of the southwestern regions of the country.

With respect to the rural masses, satisfaction was equally great.

In fact, since 5 February 1979, the people had been waiting to meet the president, the promoter of a movement that brought back democracy, peace of mind and tranquility to the people.

It was as a result of the 5 February Movement that the first 5-year development plan was worked out for the country, thereby opening the way to a planned economy. The rural masses hailed and applauded Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso in person, faithful heir to the immortal Marien Ngouabi. (ACI)

JOINT CONGOLESE-VIETNAMESE, CONGOLESE-KAMPUCHEAN COMMUNIQUES

Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIDIEN DE L'ACI in French 9 Apr 82 pp 4-6

[Text] Following a trip that took him to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam from 23 to 25 March 1982 and the People's Republic of Kampuchea from 1 to 3 April 1982, Comrade Pierre Nze, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the PCT [Congolese Labor Party] in charge of foreign relations, signed two framework cooperation agreements.

The two agreements -- one between the PCT and the Communist Party of Vietnam and the other between the PCT and the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea -- thus seal the bonds of friendship existing between the revolutionary people of the Congo and the peoples of Vietnam and Kampuchea.

These two official visits of friendship made by Comrade Pierre Nze resulted in two joint communiques.

In the first joint communique, the Congo and Vietnam reported on the situation prevailing in their respective countries and proceeded to exchange views on how to strengthen relations between the two countries and on international problems. They expressed total agreement on the problems taken up.

Vietnam warmly hails the great success registered since the Third Special Congress of the PCT in the construction of the nation, in safeguarding national security and in the thwarting of imperialist attempts at subversion, thereby making an active contribution to the struggle of the nations of Africa for peace, national independence and social progress.

Vietnam expressed its firm conviction that the Congolese people, under the leadership of the PCT, led by President Denis Sassou-Nguesso, will win new and even greater successes in the execution of the 5-year plan for 1982-1986, aimed at ensuring the progress and prosperity of the Congo and steadily increasing its prestige in Africa and the world.

For its part, the Congo warmly hails the great victories and prodigious feats which the Vietnamese people, under the leadership of the Communist Party of Vietnam, founded and trained by President Ho Chi Minh, has achieved in their national liberation struggle, reunification of the country, the building of socialism and defense of the homeland.

The Congo is firmly convinced that in the light of the resolutions of the Fifth Congress of the Communist Party of Vietnam, the Vietnamese people will obtain new victories in its glorious revolutionary cause, consisting of building and defending the socialist Vietnamese nation and foiling all attempts at aggression by imperialism and international reactionaries.

Both sides notes with satisfaction that over the past 3 years, under the leadership of the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea, the Kampuchean people, relying on their indomitable tradition of struggle and their spirit of hard work and creativeness, have obtained major successes in all fields. No reactionary force can oppose the rebirth of the Kampuchean people.

Both sides condemn the maneuvers and activities of imperialism and demand the expulsion from the so-called Democratic Kampuchea of the United Nations and restoration of the right of the People's Republic of Kampuchea to be represented in that international organization.

Both sides warmly greet the Lao people, under the leadership of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party.

Both sides are in agreement that the problem of peace and security in Southeast Asia must be settled by the countries in the region through negotiations on the principles of equality, the nonimposition of views and noninterference in internal affairs.

In this spirit, the Congolese people hail and greatly appreciate the persevering and dynamic foreign policy of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea, aimed at working so that Southeast Asia will become a region of peace, stability and cooperation.

Both sides reaffirm their solidarity with the struggle of the Namibian people for freedom and independence and demand the withdrawal of South African troops from that country.

Both sides support the struggle of the South African people, led by the ANC.

Both sides warmly hail the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR) as the 51st nation in the OAU.

With respect to Chad, both sides condemn the maneuvers of the imperialists aimed at sabotaging the unity and independence of Chad.

Considering the situation in the Middle East, both sides renew their firm condemnation of the Camp David Accords and once again assure the PLO of their support.

In Kampuchea, Comrade Pierre Nze held talks with high party and government officials, including: Comrade Sam Rin, secretary general of the Central Committee of the People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea and chairman of the Council of State; Comrade Chan Sy, member of the Political Bureau and chairman of the Council of Ministers; and Comrade Hun Sen, member of the Political Bureau, chairman of the foreign relations committee and minister of foreign affairs.

Comrades Pierre Nze and Hun Sen reported on the results of building and defending their respective countries, according to the joint communique published simultaneously in Brazzaville and Phnom Penh.

They expressed their convictions on the development and strengthening of relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries. The two ministers turned their attention to all international problems of common interest and noted the complexity of the current international situation, the joint communique says, which continues as follows:

"Comrade Pierre Nze reiterated his recognition of the People's Republic of Kampuchea as the sole legitimate, legal representative of the Kampuchean people and reaffirmed his total support for the People's Republic of Kampuchea in its fight to regain its right to legal representation in the United Nations, the Movement of Nonaligned Nations and other international organizations and bodies....

"The Congo," the communique continues, "firmly supports peace moves of the three Indochinese countries and vigorously condemns all maneuvers orchestrated by imperialism and international reactionaries."

Comrade Hun Sen is deeply convinced that the resolutions of the Third Special Congress of the Congolese Labor Party constitute a mobilizing force encouraging the Congolese people to move toward new and greater victories for its just revolutionary cause.

Comrade Hun Sen greatly appreciates the foreign policy of the People's Republic of the Congo, based on the fight against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, racism, the other reactionary forces and on the support of that country for national liberation movements.

Finally, turning to other international questions, the joint Congolese-Kampuc Kampuchean communique stipulates that both sides expressed their profound concern over the situation in the southernmost part of the African Continent because of the danger to peace and regional security stemming from the continuing illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist South African regime, its constant aggression against Front-Line countries and particularly against the People's Republic of Angola and the continuation of the criminal policy of apartheid.

Within this context, both statesmen reaffirm their unswerving support for the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic to the OAU, the struggle of the people of El Salvador and that of other peoples of Asia, Africa, Latin America and Palestine. (ACI)

FIRST SESSION OF MILITARY DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE OPENS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 9 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Article: "First 1982 Session of Military Development Committee Opens: the Army Also Means Development"]

[Text] Since yesterday morning [8 March] public attention has been turned toward Tsimbazaza where the work of the first ordinary session of 1982 of the Military Development Committee [CMD] will be going on until 19 March. This is because the whole country, in its march forward toward socialism, always needs to be "prodded," if only to turn the well-known slogan into reality, "the revolution does not go into reverse." This is also because the country, as it is said, is going through an important economic crisis, like all the countries of the world. The National People's Army in Madagascar has chosen among other things, to carry out development operations--and not on a small scale! It is logical and natural that, in the present state of affairs, a great deal will be expected from the CMD to contribute to this forward march of the revolution.

And moreover, as Col Edouard Rabeony, president of the CMD, emphasized so correctly yesterday [8 March], President Didier Ratsiraka in person has put his confidence in the Military Office for Agricultural Production [OMIPRA] and the CMD "to bring the country out of the crisis."

However, let us return to the "picture" of this meeting. Yesterday [8 March] Tsimbazaza Palace held everything in the Army that counts at the present time, at least in terms of the great majority of senior officers and other officers, led by Colonel Rakotoharison, chief of the General Staff, and Colonel Jean-Philippe, commanding the Zandarimariam-Pirenena area. The Supreme Council of the Revolution was fully represented, led by its eldest officer, CSR member Monja Jaona. The cabinet was also there, led by Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona, who, for the occasion, wore his uniform as a colonel in the ZP [People's Constabulary]. Also attending was L X M Andrianarahinjaka, president of the National People's Assembly.

Exemplary Conduct

In his capacity as representative of President Didier Ratsiraka, Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona, responding to the customary speech by Colonel Rabeony, transmitted to the CMD the gratitude of President Didier Ratsiraka to the People's Armed Forces and to the National Police for "the exemplary conduct which they displayed on the occasion of the recent floods and tropical storms. Not only for their speed in helping and aiding the victims of these events but also for the way in which they carried out operations aimed at feeding villages affected by the disasters." After this "special mention of the Army" all the people also received best wishes from the chief of state through the prime minister, for the spirit of national solidarity which they showed during this difficult experience.

Revelations

This speech by the prime minister included revelations on new measures being taken. One of them--and not the least important--takes note of a certain number of important points in terms of new measures in the food sector: a census by Fokontany and Fivondronana [administrative units] to determine the exact needs of each for essential commodities. As D.M. [a newspaper] stated yesterday [8 March], a "monograph" will be prepared on each Fokontany and Fivondronana. More attention will be paid to the delivery slips than in the past. Regarding the Mobile Brigade for Economic Intervention, the prime minister announced yesterday the end of the training of young apprentices ["S N"] who have been called on to "lend a hand" to the leaders. It is no less the case that above all it is the decentralized administrative elements which are responsible in the first place for price controls, etc. Elsewhere, to improve the circulation of capital throughout the country, a system of "Treasury Bonds" has been established in order to stimulate agricultural production. The military railway regiment is on hand to ensure the transportation of items of basic necessity throughout Madagascar.

Beside that, people are already talking about the forthcoming establishment on the "Light Engineering Brigade."

So much for the decisions taken recently in order to improve the present situation. However, the prime minister also took note yesterday morning of what has been achieved recently to improve the situation within the framework of the decentralized administrative units: 142 elected members are in prison for reasons which can only be surmised and which could be the subject of lengthy comments; 14 elected members have been dismissed from office, 20 have been suspended, and 128 are languishing in prison, waiting for a verdict from the courts. In spite of this, the chief of government warned public opinion: "The dismissal of elected representatives is in accordance with the law, but legality must be respected."

Ze-REN and ZEMA

He then gave a brief sketch of achievements recorded, particularly those concerning activities in which the CMD is directly or indirectly associated, of course, through the programs developed under it: the Ze-REN fertilizer factory in Toamasina and the ZEMA [expansion unknown] plant in Amboasary are well under construction "for the success of agricultural production." He recalled that production is not presently meeting consumption needs, a reason for which it is necessary to "produce, again to produce, and to continue to produce." The precept of "Boky Mena" on this subject is well known: "The great powers of the year 2000 will be the countries which will be capable of feeding their people first and exporting food to other countries in addition."

Still in the framework of the achievements of OMIPRA and the CMD together, the noticeable decline recorded at present in the number of cattle thefts will be even more noticeable with the expansion of "Mobile Quarters." Establishment of a system of "passports" for cattle movement was mentioned by Col Edouard Rabeony. Also mentioned were production per hectare, the use of proper seeds, as well as other advanced technical studies concerning, for example, certain areas in Bekily and Antanetibe.

The latest official figures on the recent tropical storms were released: 67 persons dead, 25 missing, more than 70,000 persons driven from their homes, nearly $250 million in damages, including harvests, lost property, etc.

The need for rapid economic reconstruction mentioned by the prime minister after these natural disasters was also the main point in the speech by Col Edouard Rabeony. This is a form of activity in which the Army quite naturally should make its contribution ("coming from the people, the soldier should work for the people"). The president of the CMD drew the attention of his listeners to the importance of the task remaining to be accomplished, especially after these natural disasters. He said, "Every person born in this country is responsible for the present economic reconstruction program." He spoke of the role of the OMIPRA, for the "technical support" of the farmers. He spoke of the role of the CMD in the repression of criminals [dahalo] and thieves in the countryside [ecumeurs de brousse].

UZBEK DELEGATION MEMBERS MEET WITH FRELIMO OFFICIAL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 9 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] Yesterday morning in Maputo, there was a party meeting between Mozambican and Soviet delegations, led, respectively, by Sergio Vieira, member of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee and minister of agriculture, and Yerezhek Aytmuratov, Central Committee secretary for agriculture of the Uzbek Communist Party. The Soviet leader was received yesterday afternoon by Marcelino dos Santos, member of the Political Bureau of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee.

Speaking at yesterday morning's meeting, Sergio Vieira gave a general picture of the Mozambican revolutionary process, with particular reference to the efforts undertaken by the FRELIMO Party, the government and the people to build socialism in our country.

The party and government leader explained the political situation in this part of our continent to the Soviet delegation, referring specifically to the maneuvers by the racist Pretoria regime to destabilize our nation's economy.

The agriculture minister stressed the great efforts by our workers to improve production and productivity in order to insure achievement of the goals outlined by the party and state.

Vieira also hailed the growing cooperation in various areas between the parties, governments and peoples of the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM] and the USSR.

In turn, Aytmuratov, who is also leader of the delegation from the "Chodlik" cultural group, of the Uzbek SSR, expressed thanks for the friendly warmth shown his delegation during its stay in Mozambique.

The Uzbek delegation, which will return home tomorrow, came to Mozambique within the framework of the Friendship and Solidarity Week celebrating the fifth anniversary of the RPM-USSR Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation.

Referring to his trip to Nampula, Aytmuratov said his delegation could attest to the efforts undertaken in agriculture for the growth of the Mozambican economy.

Regarding our country's cotton cultivation, one of the areas which enjoys Uzbek support, Aytmuratov said his country would expand its support in improving techniques for cultivating and harvesting cotton in Mozambique.

The Soviet delegation also included Oidin Abbassova, deputy minister of intermediate education of the Uzbek SSR, who also met yesterday with Fernando Ganhao, dean of the UEM [Eduardo Mondlane University], and with Salome Moiane, secretary general of the OMM [Organization of Mozambican Women].

Also attending yesterday's meeting, held in the headquarters of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee in Maputo, were Luis Bernardo Honwana and Joao Ferreira, secretaries of state for culture and for cotton, respectively, and Abner Sansao Motemba, secretary general of AMASP [Mozambican Association of Friendship and Solidarity Among Peoples].

DIFFICULTIES AFFECT DANISH-ASSISTED VOCATIONAL SCHOOL

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 2 Apr 82 p 16

[Text] A new complete electrical shop will soon be set up at the Gungunhana Industrial School in Lichinga, capital of Niassa Province. The new equipment is a donation from Denmark as part of its relations of cooperation with our country.

In terms of equipment for industrial education in Lichinga, this is the second acquisition, the first having been the auto machine shop, which was also donated by Denmark.

But the school is still being faced with the problem related to the operation of equipment from abroad, since local teachers have not yet adjusted to the way the equipment works.

Last year, for example, many students in industrial education graduated with no technical mastery of the subject matter because their teachers were ill prepared. And to make things worse, there were no facilities where the students could engage in practical work--for example, in enterprises in the metal engineering field.

Those facts were learned by reporters from the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE who recently visited Niassa Province, where they interviewed the director of the Gungunhana Industrial School.

Discussing the achievement level of the students, that official said that the student achievement rate last year was only 70 percent and that it is expected to rise to 85 percent this year.

According to the director, the drop in the achievement rate is due, first, to the problems related to famine, which at times has devastated the province, and, second, to the lack of instructors. On that latter point, it should be mentioned that the current school year started with only 31 instructors, with vacancies to be filled in the subjects of mathematics, physics, and drafting (general subjects) and in accounting, typing, economic planning, and locksmithing (technical subjects).

DETAILS PROVIDED ON USSR TRAINING ASSISTANCE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 2 Apr 82 pp 2, 11

[Article by Artur Ricardo]

[Excerpts] "Fraternal relations between the FRELIMO Party and the CPSU are growing stronger every year. Those ties, which are based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, are growing progressively stronger and multilateral." So said P. Shmelkov, the Soviet Union's charge d'affaires, during the press conference he held in our country's capital with the Mozambican media and a few representatives of the foreign press. The meeting was part of the commemorations marking the fifth anniversary of the signing of the Friendship and Cooperation Treaty between our country and the world's first socialist state.

One important topic discussed by the Soviet Union's charge d'affaires during the press conference was the training of national cadres, an area in which the USSR has been providing substantial support.

On that subject, he said that "the Nampula Industrial Pedagogical Institute and five other technical-vocational schools located in various parts of the country, with a capacity for between 400 and 500 students, bear witness to Soviet cooperation. That cooperation is not limited solely to building or equipping those establishments; it also involves the sending of instructors to teach in them. As one outstanding result, over 6,000 Mozambican technicians have already been trained in various fields under this program."

To train high-level national cadres, over 50 instructors from the Soviet Union are making their contribution at the Eduardo Mondlane University, where they have provided support in preparing monographs and manuals and are directing scientific research work. Those instructors are teaching over 130 subjects, and most of them work in the School of Education.

Also on the subject of training for Mozambican cadres, P. Shmelkov emphasized that "last year, 84 Mozambican citizens received diplomas earned in Soviet schools, since the treaty provides for sending groups to be trained in our country. In addition, 150 Mozambicans have received scholarships to study in the Soviet Union beginning this year."

SOVIET GEOLOGICAL COOPERATION IN NIASSA, TETE PROVINCES

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 24 Mar 82 p 16

[Article by Isaac Alfandega]

[Excerpts] Based on studies of the potentialities of the coal deposit located in the 100-square-kilometer Maniamba coal basin, the Soviet geologists who have been working alongside Mozambican workers in that northwestern part of Niassa Province since 1979 have concluded that the possible reserves of that ore can be estimated at about 200 million tons.

According to the Soviet geologists interviewed by reporters from the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE who recently visited Niassa Province, the quality of Maniamba coal is somewhat low in comparison with the coal mined in Tete because its content includes a wide range of ash.

That type of coal has very specific applications, however, since it can be used as fuel in electric power plants and utilized in brick production, the calcination of lime, gasification and burning in furnaces, various kinds of construction, and cement production.

It is already generally known, however, that the possibilities for extracting coal in Niassa are quite promising.

Brigade

The team of Soviet geologists that explored the Maniamba coal deposit is part of a delegation from the BIC (Complex Exploration Brigade) that is in our country under a contract signed with the Department of Mines and Geology on 24 March 1978.

Some of the geologists from that brigade recently went to Tete Province, where they will continue the work of exploring and prospecting the Moatize coal deposit.

Nepheline Syenites

Prospecting for nepheline syenites, which are a raw material used in the production of aluminum, will begin this coming April or May in the region where Mount Chissindo is located in Metangula. Geologists from the BIC who are now working in Niassa will once again be in charge of that difficult and complex task.

The preliminary exploration work was started in 1979, when the first group of Soviets arrived in Niassa from Zambezia after completing prospecting work in connection with bauxite and nepheline syenites in Milange.

The first sample of nepheline syenite, weighing 100 kilograms, was sent to the Aluminum and Magnesium Institute in the USSR in 1980. There it was classified as being a third-category raw material for the production of aluminum and approved for use without beneficiation.

As we said at the start, prospecting for that ore is scheduled to begin this coming April or May with the startup of field activities, and its completion is scheduled for December 1983. The deadline was initially set at December 1981, but at the request of the Mozambican Government, a new 2-year contract was signed.

It is as part of that project that five geologists, a geophysicist, a mechanic, a mineralogist, and a cartographer, as well as a translator--all of Soviet nationality--are currently in Niassa. In addition to exploring and prospecting for nepheline syenites, this group of specialists will conduct determination studies on rocks analogous to rare metals over an area of 700 square kilometers.

In both cases, the projects are being carried out with technical and material support from the Soviet Union through a line of credit granted to the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Leader of Geologists Interviewed

In statements made to the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, the head of the BIC team began by saying: "I want to say, first of all, that I am quite satisfied and happy with the working and living conditions provided for the team of Soviet technicians here in Niassa. I can say that it must [copy missing] a positively outstanding exception."

Mikhail (Miguel) Somokhalov is a geological engineer with 23 years of professional experience. Before coming to Mozambique, he was in Guinea, where he was also engaged in work in his professional field.

SOFALA RESIDENT REGISTRATION MEETS WITH POPULAR APPROVAL

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 1 Apr 82 pp 2, 11

[Text] A registration of each inhabitant's residence, organized by the appropriate structures of the Ministry of Interior, has been underway in Sofala Province for several months. It is aimed at maintaining order, security, and tranquillity and is being carried out under the supervision of the Ministry of Interior's Department of Civil Identification (DIC).

That police organization's basic task is to register and identify all national and foreign citizens residing in the People's Republic of Mozambique. It was established at the end of 1980 and operates in close liaison with the party, state, and mass organizations.

The process of registration, which at the moment is centered on the city of Beira in particular, was the subject of an interview by the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE with the head of the provincial department, Boaventura Bule, who mentioned right at the start that the work in question is actually in an experimental phase.

So much so, in fact, that the department itself has been set up only in Zambezia, Tete, Sofala, and Inhambane Provinces. Its extension to the other provinces is a long-term prospect.

Combat Antisocial Behavior

In statements to our newspaper, Boaventura Bule emphasized that the guiding spirit permeating its work is that of giving greater impetus to the practical mechanisms for combating and preventing lawless and criminal activity and other antisocial behavior that still exists, sometimes to an intense degree, in our urban centers.

The census consists of having each citizen appear at the police station nearest his place of residence with a document identifying him. He can also register with the political structures in his neighborhood, which have already been given instructions on how to proceed. In some cases, specialized teams visit firms and public organizations to carry out the work.

Boaventura Bule pointed out that in the city of Beira, in addition to being accepted generally, the population census has been receiving total support from ordinary citizens, who are appearing at the above-mentioned centers every day as a result of intensive mobilization and enlightenment work by the neighborhood structures in close liaison with the defense and security organizations.

At first, the small number of registrars hindered the correct progress of the work to some degree. But the situation is considered to be completely straightened out at present, despite other problems which Boaventura Bule went on to discuss.

In the city of Beira, it happens that citizens are duplicating their registration, and in some cases, registrars are even obscuring the strict instructions issued for carrying out this important task.

The head of the Provincial Department of Civil Identification then discussed a whole series of questions raised as to the benefits resulting from this type of population census and explained in detail a few of the procedures that the inhabitants must follow to carry out the instructions given them during registration by the registering authorities.

LUCHERINGO DAM WILL SUPPLY POWER TO LICHINGA

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 26 Mar 82 p 16

[Text] Next year the city of Lichinga, capital of Niassa Province, will begin receiving power generated by the Lucheringo hydroelectric dam, now under construction about 9 kilometers from that provincial capital. The undertaking, which is a model for the country, will result in a monthly savings of about 900 contos in foreign exchange. That is the amount now being spent by the Mozambique Electric Company to purchase gas oil, the fuel used to run the generator sets that currently supply the city with power.

The Lucheringo Dam project is being carried out as part of a work schedule that began last December under a contract between Mozambique and Norway.

Its first phase comprises construction of a dike, the opening of a 2,500-meter-long pressure pipeline, and construction of a 20-meter-high surge tank. This will be followed by the construction and setting up of a 33,000-volt power plant.

The small power plant will have a 710-kW turbine that will discharge 1,500 liters of water per second. It is scheduled to operate for 8 months of the year (covering the dry season). During the remaining months of the year, it will store up water while operating in parallel with the Lichinga thermal power plant, which for its part will insure a normal supply of electricity for the city.

Construction of all the project's structures is scheduled for completion in December of this year, but it will depend on supplies of construction materials, especially cement and rough lumber, which at the moment are in very short supply for the project. It is enough to note that 600 sacks of cement are consumed at the worksite daily, with 35,000 sacks still needed.

A shipment of 10,000 sacks of that construction material is expected to arrive in Lichinga very shortly, and a separate order is coming from Norway under the basic bilateral contract. Technicians and various items of equipment needed for setting up the hydroelectric power plant and the surge tank will also arrive in Mozambique shortly.

Lucheringo River Falls To Supply Hydroelectric Power

There had long been reports of the problem of power supplies for the city of Lichinga, Niassa's capital.

Until now, the lack of sufficient electric power for all their needs has been keenly felt by the inhabitants, not to mention the government offices, which are subject to daily power outages precisely because of the well-known principle of rationing, since the present power supply is provided by generator sets.

IMPORTANCE OF FEASIBILITY STUDIES IN STRATEGIC AREAS STRESSED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Apr 82 p 10

[Article by Celio Mouco]

> [Text] The economic feasibility studies and projects for increased harvests, being conducted in the Massingir Dam area in Gaza Province, have reached an advanced stage, according to Joao Reis, of the Office of Studies and Projects in the Secretariat of State for the Limpopo and Incomati Region.

Two studies are currently in progress in the area, one by the English firm MacDonald and Partners and the other by the Portuguese firm COBA. These new areas under study represent a significant percentage of the goals of SERLI [State Secretariat for the Program of Accelerated Development of the Limpopo-Incomati Region], in terms of teh PPI [Prospective Indicative Plan].

Referring to the study by the English firm, Reis said it is going forward normally; a preliminary report has been produced and discussed by the consultants MacDonald and Partners, and Kuwaiti Fund, which is financing the project, and the Secretariat of State for the Limpopo and Incomati Region.

The discussions, which took place this February, analyzed the first results according to the standards established by SERLI. It was agreed that the feasibility study should be delivered by the end of the year.

"In this same zone, the development of which is related to the Massingir Dam, we have another study in progress, which is being handled by the other firm, COBA, in another area, but involving Massingir," Reis added.

The work in progress is extremely important, primarily in terms of the need to ascertain the zone's potential and to plan for its development. This is only possible through feasibility studies on which to base executive projects such as construction of production units, in this case, agroindustrial complexes.

Reis added: "These studies are needed to learn everything about the land, to analyze the land to determine what crops should be planted and how the irrigation systems should be constructed.

"With these feasibility studies, we will obtain a base of information on which to establish the goals and the means to use. The studies will provide the information on which to base a determination of our economic capacity and the choice of partners to obtain financing.

"Since the country is unable to fund these projects itself, it must seek financing abroad, and no foreign country finances a project without a good study behind it," Reis said.

The member of the SERLI Office of Studies and Projects stressed that the study is required to design the basic project, which will furnish the data for the firm that will carry out the physical construction of the agro-industrial complex.

Regarding the importance of the work in the Massingir zone, in addition to use of the great potential offered by the Massingir Dam, on the Elefantes River, the special political characteristics of the region must be considered.

This is a zone which borders on South Africa, where there is a confrontation of two development models: socialism in Mozambique and capitalism in South Africa.

"It is also a zone which provides abundant manpower for South Africa. It is a strategic zone, calling for the creation of better living conditions for our people and new jobs to stabilize the population and gradually reduce the migratory flow," stressed SERLI's Joao Reis.

In the specific case of the Massingir zone, the study also takes in the already existing crops, livestock farming traditions, a general view of the area's population and the potential labor force it can guarantee.

QUESTIONS RAISED BY LOSS OF FISHING BOATS

Answers Needed

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Apr 82 p 1

[Commentary by Mario Ferro: "An Answer"]

[Text] The Indian Ocean has just witnessed (would that it had not) one of the saddest and most dramatic tragedies in the history of the young Mozambican navy, bringing pain and sorrow to dozens of families.

Justine, a tropical storm, blew up ruthlessly, with its raging winds and torrential rains, churning up the sea. Did Justine appear suddenly, like a stranger who boldly breaks into our house before we can make even the smallest gesture of defense?

No. I have before me a map showing the path of the tropical storm Justine, provided by our Meteorological Services.

I have before me the statements of survivors of the fishing vessel "Save," destroyed in the violent storm which took the lives of eight of their comrades.

The "Save" is not the only loss to be accounted for. Another fishing boat was sunk and three others are still listed as missing. The important data: 8 dead sailors; 66 aboard the missing ships, drifting who knows where; and 34 rescued after a stoic struggle against death, thanks to the aid of the coastal population and the sailors on an Indonesian ship.

Was it lack of prudence by men accustomed to the harsh sea life, sailing out of Quelimane to meet a life-threatening cyclone? Was it carelessness that led these brave men to remain on the high seas until their boats began to be tossed violently by the churning waves and the gale winds that reached 27 knots? Was it their negligence, or that of the individual who ordered them out to sea? Did they know about the approaching storm? Did they hear the weather bulletins for maritime navigation up to 60 miles off the coast of Mozambique, bulletins broadcast daily by Radio Mozambique, or were the onboard radios turned off or out of order?

These questions come immediately to my mind; many, many Mozambicans are surely asking the same questions. Other questions could certainly be asked--it's just that my knowledge in such matters is limited.

These questions demand answers; it must be established where the blame lies.

To say that Justine was responsible is nonsense, because men who go to sea do not play around--they do not flirt with death. An answer is important to the Mozambicans, who are always anxious to know the truth about what happened and is happening in the Indian Ocean.

Communique Issued

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Apr 82 p 1

> [Text] Yesterday evening the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Mozambique issued the following communique regarding the tragedy caused by the tropical depression "Justine":

Between 21 and 23 March 1982, the coastal areas of Nampula and Zambezia provinces were violently hit by the tropical depression Justine, with gale winds attacking the Primieras islands.

Causing poor visibility and towering waves, Justine attacked those islands where ships have traditionally sought shelter in storms, causing damage, capsizing some ships and causing the disappearance of others.

The trawlers "Tambiza" and "Save," both Mozambican, the merchant ship "Tong Hoeh," and Indonesian ship which was navigating the Mozambican channel, and the trawler "Monchegorsk" a licensed Soviet fishing ship, all ran aground.

The licensed Soviet fishing trawler MTK-103 was set adrift.

The trawlers "Lalane," "Salia" and "Monapo," Mozambican ships belonging to EMOPESCA [Mozambican State Fishing Enterprise] of Beira, have disappeared.

Initiating a search and rescue operation, the Council of Ministers determined to use all means and make every effort within the capacity of our country, as well as to ask for international cooperation.

The Mozambican Air Force, the TTA and TAM [Transport Company and Mozambican Air Operations Company], fishing enterprises and the Navy threw planes and fishing boats into the search and rescue operation, joined by a French plane especially equipped for this type of operation.

The search went on until 6 April 1982, covering an area bounded by the coast of the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Democratic Republic of Madagascar and by parallels 16.00 south and 22.00 south, or about 490,000 square miles, an area larger than Cabo Delgado, Niassa and Zambezia provinces.

--The Mozambican fishing boat "Vumba" and the Soviet trawlers "Monchegorsk" and "MTK-103" were rescued and tugged to port.

--The entire crew of the trawler "Tambiza," 12 of the 20 men on the trawler "Save" and part of the crew of the "Tong Hoeh" were rescued.

The remaining crew members remained aboard the "Tong Hoeh" to man the ship, with the assistance of a seagoing tugboat.

Despite efforts with all the human and material means available, the tireless work and the determination with which the search and rescue operation was conducted, it was impossible to locate any remains of the following ships or their crews:

--The remaining eight crew members of the trawler "Save";

--The trawlers "Lalane," "Salia" and "Monapo," with a total of 68 crew members.

The Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Mozambique laments the great loss of human lives. These were Mozambican workers who, under the harsh conditions of life at sea, conducted a determined struggle against underdevelopment on the production front.

The Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Mozambique expresses deepest sympathy to the relatives of the missing workers and guarantees assistance to the victims' families.

The Council of Ministers expresses:

--The greatest appreciation for the efforts by all international and national bodies;

--Recognition of all those who took part in the search and rescue operation.

The Council of Ministers determines to improve measures for prevention of accidents at sea and for search and rescue operations in case of accidents or disasters.

The Council of Ministers urges all workers in the fishing sector to transform this pain experienced by all our people into new efforts, into redoubled determination to meet production goals and to improve the living conditions of the Mozambican people, honoring the patriotic work and sacrifice of their colleagues, now tragically missing.

PORTUGUESE SPORTS ASSISTANCE--The contacts established between the Mozambican Soccer Federation [FMF] and its Portuguese counterpart during the visit to that European country by Manuel Jorge, the FMF's chairman, were very beneficial. The top Portuguese soccer organization is prepared to support the FMF in all of the latter's activities and has already announced its participation in the training of Mozambican soccer coaches in training courses to be held in Portugal. In statements to the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, Manuel Jorge said: "The Portuguese Soccer Federation is paying all the expenses in Portugal for a number of Mozambican coaches to be named by the FMF so that they can attend a 30-day coaching course in July." And he added: "There were also a number of talks concerning a possible visit to Mozambique by Portugal's national soccer team sometime in 1983. But whether that will actually happen depends on several factors that will be announced at the proper time." Referees were another subject discussed by Manuel Jorge during his trip to Portugal. The FMF chairman will contact the National Referee Commission to arrange for a visit to Mozambique by Raul Nazare, the Portuguese international referee, who will teach some courses here. EXPORTS TO GDR--Radio Mozambique announced yesterday that Mozambique's exports to the GDR this year will consist of cashew nuts, tea, citrus fruit, and copra valued at $8 million. Those exports are covered by the contract just signed at the recent Leipzig Fair by delegations from the ministries of foreign trade of the two countries. Radio Mozambique also announced that as far as Mozambique's imports are concerned, they are still being negotiated with the GDR and other countries contacted during the fair. BULGARIAN DONATION--In support of the preparations for the Fourth FRELIMO Party Congress, the People's Republic of Bulgaria made a donation to our country of $4.8 million (about 178 million meticals) in canned goods, medicines, health products and other articles. At the end of the proceedings of the Fourth Session of the Mozambican-Bulgarian Joint Commission, an accord was signed regarding the discussions and another accord on trade between the two countries during 1982. The first of the accords was signed by Marcelino dos Santos and Ognyan Doynov. The Bulgarian leader spoke of the growing cooperation between Mozambique and Bulgaria, noting that his delegation could attest to the economic growth taking place in our country. He stressed that this growth is the result of proper economic planning. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 30 Mar 82 p 1] 6362

PRIVATE BUSINESSMAN RAPPED—The names chosen for certain establishments, in certain lines of business, are sometimes the height of nonesense. We do not think such designations are meant to offend anyone; otherwise we would be in a bad way. This is in reference to the name of a shoemaker's shop located on a street parallel to Avenida Amilcar Cabral, between Avenida Afonso de Albuquerque and Avenida Eduardo Mondalane, in Maputo. The store is the "Poor Man Cobbler," and the owner's name is Nhankale. We asked Mr Nhankale about the choice of the name, and he answered us in a somewhat didactic manner: "Pity the man because he does not have material to work with." This situation points up two factors: first, the choice of a name without the faintest notion of its foolishness and certainly without an understanding of grammatical structures; second, a small shoe store, with little work and no guarantee at all of survival, set up in a garage, which undoubtedly could do better working in a collective scheme, as part of a cooperative, for instance. IRAQI DELEGATION VISITS WITH MEMBERS OF RURAL BODIES

[Article: "Iraq Exploring the Rural Nigerien World"]

[Excerpt] A three-member Iraqi delegation from the General Federation of Farmers' Mutual Aid associations, led by Husayn al-Sayid 'Ali al-Burqif, visited our country from 5 to 9 March 1982.

At the end of this stay, the members of the Iraqi delegation and the interim director of the UNCC [Niger Credit and Cooperation Union], Dan Tata Amadou, met yesterday morning at UNCC headquarters to exchange documents.

The spokesman for the Iraqi delegation took advantage of this opportunity to indicate to both sides the circumstances of the Iraqi delegates' stay in Niger.

Actually, throughout its stay in our country, this delegation concerned itself with problems in organizing the rural population. Thus, Husayn al-Sayid 'Ali al-Burqif, 'Abd-'Awn al-Danash, and Bassem Salih first met in Saga for a work session with the members of the Farm Cooperative as well as with the officials responsible for farmer self-management.

During this meeting, the organizational and operational system of cooperatives in Niger was explained to the Iraqi delegation. Also described were the Development Company structures which are being set up.

For their part, the Iraqi delegation explained the condition of their country's farmer organizations. The delegation asked a number of questions, requesting that the answers be given at another meeting because of the visit planned for the same afternoon.

At the end of this meeting, all participants went to the site of the Saga development, where the Iraqi delegation heard explanations of the method of farming the area, the cooperative's role, and the difficulties which the farmers are encountering.

The Iraqi delegates then talked with the UNCC director before meeting the general secretary of the Ministry of Rural Development and the director of political and social affairs of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation.

These two visits were made on the morning of Monday 8 March 1982. The general secretary of the Ministry of Rural Development explained to the delegation the details of Niger's rural development policy, and emphasized the paramount role that the cooperatives are being called upon to play in the future Development Company.

For his part, the director of political affairs of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation reviewed the many occasions on which Niger, through its most authoritative representatives, has shown its desire to cooperate with Iraq in all fields. Particularly as far as cooperation between our two countries' organizations of farmers is concerned, Abdourahamane Hama expressed satisfaction with the successful initiative taken by the General Federation of Farmers' Mutual Aid Associations in Iraq to send a delegation to Niger to meet their counterparts in our country. He was delighted with the contacts this delegation has just established with the UNCC because of the important role played by this organization in setting up the cooperatives, which constitute one of the pillars of the Development Company.

Another meeting of the Iraq delegation was held with the UNCC management. This meeting took place on the afternoon of 8 March in the UNCC conference room.

After a brief introduction by the interim director of the UNCC on the goal of the Iraq visit, which is to contact our country's organizations of farmers with a view to assisting them, the head of the delegation gave a long account of the situation prevailing in his country because of the conflict against Iran. He concluded his account by announcing his federation's desire to aid the Nigerien farmer organizations and their guardian organization, the UNCC. He renewed the invitation addressed to UNCC personnel to visit Iraq at a date convenient to them.

In reply, the interim director of the UNCC insisted on thanking the Iraqi delegation and assured it of the UNCC's desire to cooperate with the General Federation of Farmers' Mutual Aid Associations in Iraq. He expressed the desire for a return to peace in Iraq. Finally, he gave the Iraqi delegation assurances that all arrangements will be made to submit plans to it and to give UNCC personnel the benefit of the Iraqi experience by making visits to Iraq.

The two parties hailed the role played by presidents Seyni Kountche and Saddam Hussein in the interests of their two peoples and of peace in the world, within the framework of the Organization of Nonalined Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, in order to reduce the disparity that exists between Third World countries and the rich nations.

'NAN'SURVEYS REACTION TO NEW ECONOMIC MEASURES

Revive Ailing Economy

AB231836 Lagos NAN in English 1620 GMT 23 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 23 Apr (NAN)--The new measures announced early in the week by President Shehu Shagari to revive the nation's ailing economy have been generally accepted as necessary steps to halt the collapse of the economy, according to an opinion poll conducted in Lagos yesterday by the news agency of Nigeria.

But many of the people who were convinced of the need for the stern economic measures were only cautiously optimistic about their successful implementation.

They maintain that success would depend on the will power of government leaders, the dedication of officials to implement and enforce the measures and the cooperation of leaders in industry as well as the generality of all Nigerians.

Some however see some of the measures as robbing them of the means of their livelihood.

The director general of the Nigerian stock exchange, Mr Hayford Alile said that the economic measures announced by President Shehu Shagari were a step in the right direction.

Speaking to the news agency of Nigeria (NAN), Mr Alile said that the measures were necessary to steer the country's economy in the right direction.

He said that over the years, the economy developed into a mono-economy that was solely dependent on crude oil adding that with the oil glut, it became apparent that some harsh measures were necessary to keep the economy bouyant.

Asked about the effects of the measures on the commodity market and the stock exchange, Mr Alile said that the market had foreseen the measures that could be taken: And that it had "managed to discount over the last two or three weeks."

He however said that the measures would only work if there was full implementation by the appropriate authorities.

The executive director of the Lagos Chamber of Commerce Mr Akanbi Oke told NAN that the measures would call for a new orientation from indigenous manufacturers and producers. Mr Akanbi said that though demand on local manufacturers would be high, the local industry would meet the challenge provided the government ensured continuous water and electricity supply to industries.

On the effects of the new measures on employment, Mr Akanbi said that the importing and distributive sectors would suffer a recession which might lead to retrenchment and unemployment in the short run.

He however said that in the long run, such labour would be absorbed into the manufacturing sector.

Banking executives in Lagos said that while depositors would benefit from the increased bank rate, borrowers would have to pay more interest charges.

They said that the profitability of banks would not be affected because their margins would remain as it were before the new measures were announced.

They however said that general liquidity in the economy, would be further limited, and that initially, business would be slow to pick up whilst it adjusted to the new measure.

They also said that the long-term prospects would favour the manufacturing sector and the economy in general, and the banking sector in particular, provided the new measures were consistently enforced.

The chairman and managing director of the Ojomo Industries, Chief John Ojomo, said that the federal government should have banned completely the importation of passenger cars and electronic equipment.

He asked: "We assemble Peugeot and Volkswagen cars here, why allow the importation of other cars into the country?"

He said that everyone in the country, including the president, should use cars assembled in Nigeria, adding, "afterall, it was like that during the military era."

Chief Ojomo accused the federal and state governments of insensitivity to the plight of Nigerian entrepreneurs."

He said that the importation of frozen chicken should have been banned a long time ago since "many farmers in the country slaughter thousands of chickens every day."

A motor dealer, Mr Sunny Asemota, of Sunny Motors, said that he was expecting a total ban on panel vans "to save the beetle from imminent death."

He praised the federal government for the measures taken, "although the measures are not too conclusive."

He said that his company would not import big cars as soon as he disposed of those in stock, adding, "it will be unreasonable to import them with the 500 percent duty."

Mr Emeka Nwofor, the deputy public relations manager of the Ibru organisation accused the federal and state governments of bad planning" by placing a ban on private jetties.

Meanwhile, wholesalers and distributors did brisk business as housewives rushed to stockpile food items, including tomato puree, milk, and other foodstuffs that would attract higher prices with increases in import duty.

Investigations conducted by NAN correspondents in various markets in Lagos including Iddo, Tejuoso, Balogun, Oke-arin and Oyingbo showed that the prices for stockfish had increased by 20 to 50 percent. A stockfish that formally sold for 2 naira now costs 3 naira a carton of peak milk that sold for between 14 and 15 naira now sells for 19 while five tins of tomato puree that cost 1 naira is now 1.25 naira.

Some of the retailers interviewed as to the reaction of customers said that the new prices had not significantly attached demand for the goods [sentence as received].

Retailers of imported clothing said the new measures would force them out of business. They argued that they ran a service industry in so far as they "catered for the particular taste of Nigerians who love to be in trendy well tailored dresses."

New Excise Duties Announced

AB211946 Lagos NAN in English 1800 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 21 April (NAN)--New excise duties were today announced for locally produced cigarettes, electric fans, motor-cycles, bicycles, locks, cosmetics, perfumes, tissue paper and fabrics of all types.

Depending on their weight and cost per thousand, cigarettes not attract additional excise duties of between 15 percent and 45 percent.

The minister of finance, Mr Victor Masi, who gave this information today at a news conference in Lagos, said that cosmetics and perfumes would not attract a 10 percent additional excise duty and that the new tariff for towels and fabrics of all types was five percent.

An additional excise duty of five percent is also to be paid for electric fans, locks, tissues papers, motor-cycles, auto-cycles and bicycles, he said.

Mr Masi also announced the introduction of a compulsory advance deposits for all imports.

He said that henceforth, a compulsory advance deposit of 50 percent would be required for the importation of raw materials, capital goods, medicaments, and all kinds of food except rice.

A similar deposit of 25 percent is required for the importation of raw materials and spare parts, 200 percent for motor vehicles and trucks and 250 percent for passenger cars and other goods.

He added that prospective importers would be required to pay such deposits to their banks which would in turn deposit the amount with the Central Bank at no interest.

Mr Masi also made reference to the reduction of the basic travel allowance and the business travel allowance saying that if last year's rates had been allowed, about 558 million Naira would have been disbursed this year compared with 367.7 million naira in 1981.

He was optimistic that the new measures would result in the country saving 200 million naira in foreign exchange from the reduction in travel allowances.

Mr Masi said, in an answer to a question that Nigeria's present external reserve was below figures recommended as a standard by the International Monetary Fund for the settlement of quarterly import receipts.

Import Restrictions

AB211953 Lagos NAN in English 1745 GMT 21 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 21 April (NAN)--The minister of finance, Mr Victor Masi, today announced import restrictions on 29 items, new rates of duties for 49 others and gave details of items henceforth placed under absolute import prohibition and export licensing restrictions.

Among the items now placed under import restrictions are rice, sugar, cereal flours, vegetable oil (excluding bulk impomation) all passenger cars, motor types of width exceeding 102 milimetres, pick-up vans, assembled road and agricultural tractors, asbestos, cement and cement pipes.

Mr Masi, who was briefing newsmen on details of the austerity measures announced by the president in a nation-wide broadcast last night, listed the other items in this category as plastic pipes, nails, nuts and bolts, umbrella handles, cotton yarn and yarn of man-made fibre as well as real madras, otherwise known as George.

Others are manufactured articles of wood, pre-printed papers and forms, concentrated malt extracts, processed barite and betonite louvre blades, fishing nets and a range of ceramic products.

Mr Masi said that the federal government had banned the importation of gaming machines and frozen chicken and that wheat offals and dry brewers grain had been placed under export licensing restrictions.

The tariff changes announced by the minister included those for stockfish, which has risen from 30 percent to 50 percent, rice from 10 kobo per kilogramme to 15 kobo per kilogramme, bulk tea from 10 percent to 50 percent, cereal flour from 10 naira per tonne to 20 naira per tonne and sugar from 10 kobo per kilogramme to 20 kobo per kilogramme.

Import duty on sugar has risen from 10 kobo per kilogramme to 20 kobo per kilogramme, on tomato paste and puree from 50 kobo per kilogramme to 70 kobo per kilogramme, on car types from 55 kobo per kilogramme to 75 kobo per kilogramme and on electric fans from 75 percent to 150 percent.

The minister said that the duty payable on pick-up and delivery panel vans had been increased from 20 percent to 100 percent and that cars with engine capacity and value exceeding 2500CC and 15,000 naira had been removed from the prohibition list but that a 500 percent duty had been imposed.

He added that lorries, trucks, pick-up and delivery vans, road and agricultural tractors assembled with imported completely knocked down (CKD) parts in various parts of the country were subject to new tariffs. Those assembled in Lagos attract a duty of 20 percent, while those assembled in Ibadan attract a duty of 10 percent and those manufactured in Enugu, Ilorin and Umuahia attract an eight percent duty. Similar vehicles assembled in Kano, Gusau, Bauchi and Minna attract a five percent duty.

The new tariff on tractors designed solely for hauling trailers has been increased by 100 percent while duties payable on components for locally produced passengers cars range from 15 percent to 25 percent.

The minister also announced an increase import duties on a wide range of items for domestic and industrial use except for baby feeding bottles whose tariff was reduced to 50 percent from 75 percent and lotions and creams for baby care whose import duties dropped from 200 percent to 33 percent.

WEST SAID ATTEMPTING TO UNDERMINE OPEC MEMBERS

AB181125 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Atelade Atoyebi commentary]

[Text] In the past few days, a fair amount of information and explanation has emanated from official circles on the state of the nation's economy. The president's recent address to relevant national assembly committees is one that has put the matter in black and white. The long and short of what is being said is that Nigeria is at the moment experiencing declining revenue from crude oil sales. The prevailing circumstance is that the country now produces less crude oil than anticipate[d] [and] is bound to adversely affect the level of projected revenue and in turn the government's development programs.

From the benefit of hindsight, the present economic situation was predictable to some extent. This is because industrialized countries of the world, especially the Western nations, had for quite some time embarked on a number of measures aimed at reducing their oil consumption. [Sentence indistinct] And the truth is that some measure of success had been achieved in this direction. Another step is the one that lays emphasis on the discovery and exploitation of new sources of energy. Already, nuclear energy has been developed on a commercial scale in most of the industrialized nations. This is in spite of the local opposition of environmentalists who consider the venture an undue risk. Their argument is based on the possibility of breakdown or leak of radioactive material which could wipe out the surrounding population.

Remarkable successes had also been recorded in the area of development of solar energy. In addition, the use of coal is becoming more and more attractive to those nations that have a commercial reserve of it. And it was never a secret that the industiralized nations had been carrying on a systematic program of oil stockpiling. In a way, the whole program would appear as a normal economic safeguard for self-reliance in energy needs. However, it is now difficult for the Western oil companies and their governments to deny the charge that they had in fact been laying a kind of economic siege on oil producing nations, among whom Nigeria is a permanent member. These oil companies are now cashing in on their countries' carefully planned assault on the OPEC. They are blackmailing some members of the organization to reduce their oil price to the level the British North Sea oil is being offered for sale.

There have been convincing reports that the United States in particular is opposed to price manipulations. Somehow, the whole episode is going by the way of calculated economic open confrontation stimulated by the Western oil consumers. And in the wake of such apprehensive economic attack on OPEC, there are two mandatory responses on our own part. The first is for the OPEC itself to continue with the spirit of solidarity all the members showed during their last meeting. The current oil glut can only be reversed through the planned reduction in oil output. It is an antidote necessary to suppress the economic poison now being handed out by the Western industrialized nations to the oil producers. The other imperative responses is for our people to rally round the government to surmount the present strains and stresses in our economy. As the president once observed, the present situation does not call for undue panic; what is essential is for this nation to spend only on essentials, thereby reducing the level of payments for imports.

Also, the challenges of the present economic reality suggests that the country should continue to pursue with vigor those programs that will make us to be self-sufficient in food production and other essential consumer goods. Of course, the prevailing situation equally demands that we cut our dress according to the size of our cloth.

What all these boil down to is that this country has to continue to strive to be resilient in the face of the current conspiracy to undermine its economic progress.

COURTS POWER--Lagos, 29 April (NAN)--The federal court of appeal today ruled that the proceedings of the National Assembly could not be questioned in any court of law as long as the principles of separation of powers existed in the country's constitution. The courts ruling followed an appeal filed by the speaker of the House of Representatives, Chief Edwin Ume-ezeoke, against a Lagos high court ruling that it could entertain a suit on the proceedings of the house. Mr Justice Mamman Nasir, who presided, ruled that the courts had no powers to interfere with the internal proceedings of the legislatures. GONGOLA RETAINS TRADITIONAL COUNCILS--The Gongola State Legislature has passed the local government amendment bill creating 40 traditional councils. This followed deliberations on the bill sponsored by Mr Jonas Ranbi which had sought to abolish traditional and amirate councils. Mr Ranbi had suggested the abolition of the councils, for according to him, they are symbols of feudalism, and therefore incompatible with the country's democratic system. A member, Mr Gervan Ibrahim, however, opposed the provisions of the bill, pointing out that the councils had contributed to peace and progress. He said each local government should have one. Another member, Mr David Ntem, told newsmen that the house retained the councils because of last month's violence. With this, he stated, a dangerous precedent had been created because any pressure group whose interests were threatened by the bill in the assembly would resort to violence. Last month, demonstrators protesting against the abolition of the councils injured a legislator and damaged property at the house of assembly. NAIRA DEVALUATION POLICY REJECTED--Lagos, 18 April (NAN)--The vice president, Dr Alex Ekwueme, said in Lagos yesterday that any policy seeking to devalue the Naira in view of the current economic situation in the country would be counter-productive. Dr Ekwueme made the remark at a dinner he gave in honour of the visiting World Bank president, Mr Tom Clausen, stressing: "We have no immediate intention of devaluing the naira as has been suggested in some quarters." He explained that devaluing the naira would be difficult because the price of oil, our major export commodity, is determined internationally and would not be affected by devaluation. Dr Ekwueme said that the current economic problems was an attempt by the industrialised countries to destroy the OPEC as a viable price fixing entity. He, however, expressed optimism that the current economic problems, although serious, will have to be solved. Commenting on Nigeria's relationship with the World Bank, the vice president announced that Nigeria had since 1958 when the first loan was secured, contracted 48 loans amounting to about N 1.269 million. He explained that these loans had been concentrated on agriculture, rural development, roads, education, water supply, sanitation and urban development. The vice president urged that efforts should be made to preserve the invaluable concessionary lending terms which were continually being eroded. Replying, the World Bank president said that the bank was very proud to associate with Nigeria and Africa. He said that the bank needed support from all donor countries which should exercise some sacrifice in helping. [Text] [AB181350 Lagos NAN in English 1325 GMT 18 Apr 82]

OIL GLUT 'BLESSING IN DISGUISE'--Lagos, 18 Apr, (NAN)--The present oil glut in the world oil market is a blessing in disguise, President Shehu Shagari said in Lagos yesterday. He told the visiting president of the World Bank, Mr Tom Clausen, who paid him a courtesy call that the situation had brought home to Nigerians "the reality of our over-dependence on oil as our main foreign exchange earner." President Shagari said his government was determined to diversify the Nigerian economy into other sections especially agriculture and agro-allied industries. He thanked the World Bank for its assistance to Nigeria and expressed the hope that further assistance would be given. Earlier, Mr Clausen had told President Shagari that the bank would like to build on its relationship with Nigeria adding that in spite of the current short-term problem of oil glut, Nigeria's credibility would stand her in good stead. MONEY SUPPLY INCREASE--Lagos, 21 April (NAN)--Money supply for the month of November 1981 stood at 8,798.3 million naira, the latest Central Bank monthly report has shown. According to the report this represented an increase of 115.1 million naira or 1.3 percent over the figure for October 1981. On the corresponding month of November 1980, the report noted that money supply increased by 200.3 million naira or 2.3 percent. It said that the increase in credits to domestic economy and the decline in quasi-money were responsible for the increase in money supply for the period under review. On banking, the report stated that the aggregate credit outstanding to domestic economy increased from 14.160 million naira in October to 15.034.8 million naira in November 1981, representing an increase of 6.2 percent. It said that bank credit to the private sector rose from 9,252.1 million naira in October to 9,710.3 million naira in November, which was an increase of 4.9 percent. Bank credit to the government sector, the report also said, increased by 8.5 percent from 4,907.9 million naira in October to 5,324.5 million naira in the month under review. On foreign assets, the report said that it further declined to 3,047.3 million naira which was a decline of 3 percent over the October figure. It explained that the decrease was due to the decline in foreign assets of both the commercial banks and the Central Bank. [Text] [AB211503 Lagos NAN in English 1447 GMT 21 Apr 82]

SHIPS TO BE SUNK--Lagos, 22 April (NAN)--The federal government has directed the Nigerian Ports Authority (NPA) to ensure that no ship was allowed to discharge at any private jetty. The minister of transport, Dr Umaru Dikko, who announced this at a news conference in Lagos yesterday, warned that any ship caught attempting to discharge at any private jetty would be sunk. President Shagari had ordered the immediate closure of private jetties during his nationwide radio and television broadcast on the state of the economy because of the misuse to which some of them had been put. Dr Dikko said that some of the private jetties were set up in 1975 to ease port congestion, adding that they performed that job creditably. He however, expressed regret that now that the congestion had eased, more private jetties were being established, many of which he said were engaged in smuggling which was detrimental to the economic survival of the country. Dr Dikko said that a comprehensive list of all private jetties compiled by the NPA would be made available to the security agents for effective surveillance of the ports. He said that there were about 202 private jetties in the country with Lagos having 80, Calabar 20, Port Harcourt 46, Warri 25, Sapele 26 and Koko Port five. It is the hope of the federal government that all concerned will give maximum cooperation in the implementation of these directives, Dr Dikko said. OIL IN RIVER STATE DISCOVERED--The Gulf Oil Company in Nigeria has announced a new offshore oil discovery in the River State. It is located in the Niger Delta, east of the Bonny River estuary. A statement by the company said that initial production tests had been carried out on the variety and that appraisal wells will be later drilled to further evaluate the potential of the field. In the meantime, a new oil field near the mouth of the Bonney River has been opened for production by the company. Current production at the field has reached more than 17,000 barrels of oil per day. FUEL PRICE INCREASES--Lagos, 23 April (NAN)--The price of fuel shot up in Lagos on Wednesday from 15 kobo to 20 kobo per litre as dealers complied with economic measures announced by President Shehu Shagari on Tuesday. President Shagari in his state of the economy broadcast announced increases in fuel prices as part of efforts to revamp the country's economy. According to the president, the new price still represented a subsidy of more than 75 percent. A news agency of Nigeria (NAN) correspondent reported that dealers at filing stations had adjusted their pumps to read 20 kobo per litre. At the national petrol station, Apapa Road, an attendant told NAN that officials from the National Oil Company carried out the adjustments. He said that diesel oil now sells for 15 kobo per litre instead of 11 kobo. [Excerpt] [AB231720 Lagos NAN in English 1606 GMT 23 Apr 82]

NEW IMMIGRATION--A new immigration form is to be introduced to facilitate records of exits and entry of persons into Nigeria. The documents will be in two categories. One will be specifically for Nigerians while the other will cater for foreigners. This fact was made known in Lagos today by the minister of internal affairs, Alhaji Ali Baba, while briefing newsmen on the activities of his ministry. Alhaji Ali Baba explained that a separate form was being prepared for Nigerians because many of the questions on the present form were not meant to be answered by Nigerians. He expressed the hope that, when operational, the new form would reduce considerably the time it takes to move people through the ports. On the national identity cards, the minister announced that the project has been temporarily suspended because of the nation's present economic condition. Alhaji Ali Baba described as false a newspaper report that a contract of 100 million naira has been awarded for the execution of the project. He explained that 11 companies sent in quotations and the one approved was for 52.54 million naira. The contract, however, has not been signed and will not be signed for the moment. WITHDRAWAL FROM MEDICAL GROUP--Nigeria and other members of the African Medical Association have withdrawn from the World Medical Association. The association groups seven African countries; Nigeria, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Liberia, Togo and Tunisia. The secretary of the African region of the World Medical Association, Dr Okpe Olu Adekunde, announced the withdrawal at a news conference in Lagos today. He said until the Medical Association of South Africa renounced its support for apartheid health care delivery system, his association will remain out of the world body. Dr Adekunde stressed that while his association was fully committed to other noble ideas of the world medical body, it reserves the right to join any alternative world medical association whose aims and aspirations were identical to those in Africa. He called on Commonwealth Medical Associations to withdraw with immediate effect from the World Medical Association. Dr Adekunde further explained that institutionalized discriminatory health policies in racist South Africa which had the backing of the country's Medical Association did not qualify her for admission. DEALERS RAISE PRICE OF GASOLINE--Petrol dealers in Lagos have effected changes in the price of the commodity from 15 kobo to 20 kobo per litre as announced by the federal government. SENATE ASKS SUBMISSION OF PLAN--The senate yesterday passed a motion requesting the president to submit to the National Assembly for consideration and approval [of] a draft of the fourth national development plan. In his contribution to the motion, Senator Emeka Echeruo, who was a cosponsor, argued that the national development plan, by its nature, was a document prepared and approved by the government and that the process of preparation and approval constitutionally required the joint efforts of the executive and the legislature. In the meantime, the 1982 finance bill has withdrawn from the National Assembly. This is to enable the government to present a fresh and comprehensive one that will reflect the country's present economic situation. SUIT OVER ECONOMIC ACT--A Lagos-based legal practitioner, Dr (Olu Onagoruwa), has taken the president to court over the Economic Stabilization Temporary Provision Act of 1982. The attorney general of the federation, the senate president, the speaker of the House of Representatives and the National Assembly are all joined in the suit filed at an Ikeja high court by another Lagos lawyer, chief (Gamefa Oyeme). Dr (Onagoruwa) is seeking the court's declaration that the act is illegal, null and void and of no effect whatsoever because according to him it purports to delegate legislative functions to the president contrary to the provisions of the 1979 constitution. He is also praying the court to declare illegal, null and void and of no effect all orders made by the president under the act. He also wants an injunction restraining the president or his agencies from executing the act and another restraining them from carrying out all the orders issued or made by the president in pursuance of the act. GAMBIAN RESERVATIONS ABOUT SENEGAMBIAN CONFEDERATION CLAIMED

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 27, Apr 82 p 10

[Article by Mbokkaan: "What is Not Being Said"]

[Excerpt] The pact creating Senegambia went into effect on 1 February 1982. However, if the sight of Senegalese occupation troops is daily forced upon the awareness of the people in Gambia, in our country, on the contrary, Senegambia seemed to recede in importance as soon as the pact was signed and the round of "congratulatory messages" was ended.

What proportion of reality and what proportion of illusion is there, then, in this "Senegambia" of the neocolonial bourgeoisies?

Gambian Hesitation

To judge from the exaltation of the deputies and other officials in the two countries, one would believe that the process of establishing the confederation developed without a hitch.

The reality is in fact quite different.

Within the mixed commission responsible for working out the pact, the bargaining was ruthless and the Gambian reservations numerous. The Senegalese arrived at the commission meetings with a detailed proposal which resembled a complete plan for the absorption of Gambia much more than a confederation charter.

In fact, this proposal interlinked sectors ranging from finance to higher education and including communications, health, culture, the rural economy, etc. with the central issue of "defense and security" (Articles 2 and 3). It conferred excessive authority on the president of the confederation--i.e., the president of Senegal. For example, the president was given the right to appoint all confederal officials (Article 10, paragraph 2), to decree both a state of emergency and a state of alert (Article 22), without consulting the vice president.

Even for the sectors which are not within the jurisdiction of the confederation when the states undertake international commitments, Article 37, paragraph 4, stipulates that the president of the confederation must ratify or approve them! And so on and so forth.

Finally, the Senegalese delegation submitted a 53-article draft, but the commission only agreed on a text containing 24 articles. This itself is a first indication of the Gambian reservations.

A summary of the differences between the two texts reveals this still more clearly.

By way of example, Article 9, paragraph 2 of the Senegalese draft, which says that the president of the confederation "determines the policy of the confederation which the cabinet implements, under his direction" will be discarded and replaced in the final text by (Article 7) "in the realm of defense and security, the president establishes, in agreement with the vice president, the policy of the confederation." Moreover, it is important to note that in almost every place where the Senegalese proposal mentioned only the "president," the final text includes the expression "in agreement with the vice president."

And while the text approved by the commission was consistent with the Senegalese draft in saying that "the president of the confederation is responsible for the administration of the armed forces and the security forces," it makes haste to add that "a protocol will define the methods of implementing the preceding provision in accordance with the constituional norms in effect in each state." In other words, differences are postponed until the time the protocol of implementation is drafted. For the time being, the parties are content to strike a harmonious pose for observers.

Innumerable such examples could be cited. In the end, the only element on which there was unanimity was the integration of the law enforcement mechanisms. And for good reason! As to the rest, where vagueness prevails, we must await the varicus protocols of implementation.

The Gambian hesitation is explained by the political weakness of the Diawara regime and its limited room for maneuvering.

Unity of the Peoples

In fact, Daouda Diawara today is caught in between the pressure from the Senegalese regime, of which he is the vessel, on the one hand, and the ever greater hostility on the part of the Gambian people toward the annexation of their national territory, on the other.

What is more, within the Gamian neocolonial bourgeoisie itself, a number of strata are opposed to the confederation, which threatens their economic interests.

The Gambian and Senegalese peoples must inevitably oppose this "confederation" which was created without consulting them and against their interests, for it is designed to keep regimes which oppress them and surrender them to imperialist exploitation in power.

GOVERNMENT SAID TO BE UNDER IMPERIALIST DOMINATION

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 27, Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial by Amadou Top]

[Excerpts] We were not mistaken when we stated last year that the Senegalese people were in the process of witnessing a reorganization of the neocolonial apparatus, with the "accession" of Abdou Diouf to power.

There were many then who, caught up in the machinery of temporary measures (educational system, elimination of exit visas, legislation on opposition parties, appeals for national unity), allowed themselves to be caught in the trap of illusion, thinking that a new era was being born.

A year later, an assessment of the period provides valuable indications as to the true meaning of the slogan on which the president was installed by proxy: "Change Within Continuity."

There has indeed been change in terms of the continuing deepening of the economic and social crisis, which has finally reached every last corner of the neocolonial system.

There has indeed been continuity in the improvements constantly made to the methods and style of recruiting and mystifying the popular masses.

Put into practice, "change within continuity" has gradually changed the aspect of neocolonialism, but it has left the true mechanisms of imperialist domination intact.

The introduction of the law on control of illicit enrichment took over from discussion of the states general, and serves as a screen for the constant attacks against the laboring masses.

The manipulation of the electoral code (with the 1983 elections in view) and the monopolization of the government communications media by the "Socialist" Party, if they merit continued attention, are nonetheless secondary targets.

The spiraling of prices, the unprecedented unemployment rate, the total failure on social issues (housing, health, education, transportation)--this is the gathered consolidated essence of the current situation. Focusing on a given point in this whirlpool of problems is not easy. Is the revolutionary movement then not running the risk of being sidetracked toward democratic struggles, relegating social and economic demands to a secondary level? At those points, we mean to say, where the regime is on the defensive, where, collared by the IMF, it seeks a truce, those points where its maneuvering room is reduced to nothing and its slogans are ineffective.

The future of the democratic concessions the regime is making (by way of safety valves) is at risk in the boiling caldron of popular reaction to the encroachments of capital and the economic and social aggression of the forces of oppression and exploitation.

Let us then refocus the present political battle and find the proper articulation between the necessary democratic struggle and the required economic and social resistance, with strengthening the revolutionary struggle.

COMMUNIQUE OF AND-JEF-MRDN'S FIRST NATIONAL CADRES MEETING

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 27, Apr 82 p 6

[Report by the secretary general of the AND-JEF-MRDN]

[Excerpt] On Saturday and Sunday, 6 and 7 March 1982, the first National Party Cadres Conference to be held since the party was legalized took place at the AND-JEF-MRDN [Revolutionary Movement for a New Democracy] headquarters in Dakar. The purpose of this conference, in which delegates from all the regions and all the departments took part, was to make an assessment in depth of the preparations for the coming AND-JEF-MRDN congress on the political, organizational and financial levels.

On the political level, the conference heard the draft central report to the congress and discussed and amended the draft bylaws and draft party program.

On the organizational level, the conference deemed it necessary for all localities to speed up the implementation of the party organizational plan where this has not as yet been done. However, it expressed satisfaction with the establishment of sections and federations in a number of deparments.

On the equipment and financial levels, the president of the committee for preparations for the congress, Comrade Ousmane Senghor, gave a very detailed and very explicit explanation of the guidelines established for the policy of preparing for the congress.

He stressed the very special significance of this first legal congress of the AND-JEF-MRDN, and he urged all cadres to exert great effort so that the congress will be a total success from every point of view for the party and for all the revolutionaries and patriots of Senegal.

The conference then reviewed the party situation on the national level. It emerged that the AND-JEF-MRDN is steadily achieving breakthroughs in its establishment and links with the popular masses.

It was noted that very enriching experiences are developing in various sectors in connection with the organization of the working people, extending to and including the social sector--literacy, health, hygiene, etc.

In this connection the conference congratulated the cadre personnel of the peasant movement in the Diourbel region and and eastern Senegal.

In connection with the status of the workers movement, the conference made a point of stressing mastery of this sector again, despite undeniable achievements, with a view to the main task of the AND-JEF, which is to contribute to making the proletariat the vanguard political force of the Senegalese Revolution of the New Democracy.

The conference completed its work after two days of discussion, with a debate on voter registration and the electoral terms scheduled to end in 1983.

On the subject of voter registration, the cadre report revealed an equal mastery of this aspect by the administration. If the admistrative authorities represent no hindrance, basically, in some places, there is on the contrary a definite effort to limit voter registration in others.

Firm instructions were issued by the permanent bureau on the submission to it of detailed reports on violations of the legal provisions with regard to voter registration.

MOVEMENT FOR JUSTICE IN AFRICA OPPOSES CONFEDERATION

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 27, Apr 82 p 10

[Letter by Korro Salah, on behalf of the Movement for Justice in Africa]

[Text] In a letter it sent to us, the Movement for Justice in Africa (MOJA), a Gambian patriotic organization, asked us to publish the following proposal addressed to the Senegalese patriotic movement.

"MOJA-Gambia expresses its solidarity with the patriotic forces of Senegal which have acted positively in condemning the piracy involved in the annexation of Gambia by the Senegalese government in the service of imperialism.

"The statement by the seven parties dated 4 August 1981 and published by the Senegalese patriotic forces, supporting the struggle of the Gambian people against the aggression by the Senegalese government, bears living, militant and progressive witness to the powerful historic links which unite the Senegalese and Gambian peoples.

"The vast popular masses in Senegal and Gambia must now begin to work in militant and progressive fashion as never before in order to oppose exploitation, oppression and repression in the two countries in any form.

"At the same time, they must prepare for the advent of a day which will see the birth of a radiant example of unity based on democracy, within African unity of the progressive forces."

FRENCH COOPERATION MINISTER COMMENTS ON ARRIVAL

AB171105 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Excerpt] The french minister of cooperation and development arrived early this afternoon in Ouagadougou. Jean-Pierre Cot, who is paying a 4-day visit, was welcomed on arrival by Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Minister Felix Tientaraboum. Minister Tientaraboum was accompanied by Mathieu Bado, our country's ambassador to Paris, and his close collaborators. On the French side, a large delegation led by His Excellency Gaston Boyer, ambassador of France to our country, was also present there.

At the VIP lounge, Mr Cot answered questions from our colleagues Sylvestre Soume of Carrefour Africain and Soulemane Compaore of the Volta vision. Mr Cot first defines the purpose of his visit.

[Begin recording] [Cot] The framework of my visit is simply that of cooperation between Upper Volta and France. We have historic, close and important relations of cooperation, bonds of solidarity relations linking our two countries. It was quite normal, and I will even say I was glad that I have come to Upper Volta in return to the visit that Colonel Tientaraboum paid to France, since I had the pleasure of receiving him. I am glad to be here to discover Upper Volta. I will have the honor to be received by the president of the republic. We will therefore have the opportunity to hold discussions with the head of state, the minister of foreign affairs as well as our other colleagues on several issues. On the issue of cooperation, I am sure to observe a basic agreement between our two countries.

[Question] Since arrival of the socialists into power, we have observed a reorientation of the French cooperation policy. Could you highlight the main aspects of this policy for our benefit?

[Answer] The reorientation of French cooperation policy is geared toward increased solidarity with African countries, particularly with what is called the least developed countries, since this category was invented by the United Nations, and we feel particularly committed to them. Mr Tientaraboum reminded me that last Spetember when the conference on least developed countries was held in Paris, which I had the great honor of presiding over as the representative of the host country, we made the first steps on this issue. It was also the occasion for French President Francois Mitterrand to state at the opening session France's views on development aid: Increased aid to the category of countries described as least developed, because we expect by 1985 to reach the objective of 0.15 percent agree upon during the confernece of the least developed. This is a remarkable effort and a march forward toward development aid for the least developed countries. It is also a more general French act of solidarity which transcends development aid. It is solidarity with the least developed countries and generally with developing countries. It is political solidarity with Africa in its struggle against apartheid, for instance; economic solidarity within the framework of food self-sufficiency, and cultural and security solidarity. It is this set of objectives that French authorities have been pursuing for the past few months. These objectives fall in line with those of the Upper Voltan Government. I am happy to be able to confirm this basic agreement. Even if on certain points we should have some disagreements, but as good friends we should expect some of these things.

[Question] We know that next month, French President Francois Mitterrand will visit a certain number of African countries. Could you tell us, Mr Minister, what special significance you attach to this visit?

[Answer] Yes, Francois Mitterrand will come to sub-Saharan Africa after having already visited North Africa. In May he will go to Niger, Ivory Coast and Senegal. He had to make a choice; he would have liked, no doubt, to come to Ouagadougou. For his first visit, he will go to Niamey. That is just unfortunate, and I am sorry that he will not be able to stop over everywhere at the same time. But what is important is that by visiting a Sahelian country and a country classified among the least developed countries, he is expressing France's desire to show support and solidarity to the Sahel region. This desire is characterized by what I would call the priority which France accords in its aid to countries which have the greatest need; countries which have been greatly hit by drought--those with extensive territories and industrious people who are trying to cope with the drought. In this regard, I think the impact of Francois Mitterrand's visit transcends the borders of countries he will visit and shows the symbolic value of France's commitemnt to the Sahel.

I will take as example the case of Upper Volta. It is noteworthy that French public aid, after falling during the years 1975, 1978 and 1979, sharply rose in 1980 to reach 22 billion CFA francs in aid to Upper Volta, accounting for nearly 50 percent of the budget [words indistinct] which seems necessary to us in a period of economic difficulties. We expect to increase this aid within the coming years and the French president will confirm this during his visit to the Sahel.

[Question] Mr Minister, allow me to come back to Paris-Ouagadougou relations. Since the arrival of the socialists and communists to power in France, we have seen French emmisaries scouring neighboring countries without one of them setting foot here in Ouagadougou. Does this mean that there is some tension between Paris and Ouagadougou?

[Answer] (?That is not so) because we have had the opportunity of receiving important leaders in Paris. First, Colonel Tientaraboum and other Upper Voltan Government ministers and finally President Saye Zerbo who came to Paris and held long discussions with Francois Mitterrand. Also, Guy Penn, the special adviser to the president on African affairs, has had the opportunity of coming here, and it is my turn to come to Ouagadougou now to review the cooperation with the government and see for myself on the spot the realities. I do not think there is any tension but it takes time to go around and visit all our African friends. The Upper Voltans should therefore not feel snubbed or ill-treated.

BRIEFS

COURT FOR STATE FINANCE CASES--The weekly ministerial council meeting was held yesterday, Thursday, under the chairmanship of head of state Col Saye Zerbo. Here is a report by Ouattara (Monane): [Begin recording] On the agenda of the meeting were a draft ordinance and several reports. The meeting examined and adopted a draft ordinance on the setting up of a special court attached to the presidency of the military committee of redress for national progress. This special court will sit at least once a quarter. It will be competent to judge crimes and offenses against the internal and external security of the state, political offenses, crimes against common law [words indistinct], common law crimes and offenses which are entirely or partly motivated by political reasons, embezzlement of public funds, breach of confidence, corruption, swindling and forgery. The court will also be competent to judge generally all crimes and offenses committed by public servants and government agents while performing their duties if these cases constitute or are likely to constitute an attempt on public finances of the state, the territorial communities, the public establishments and generally all the organizations which are under the financial control of the state. The special court is composed of two first grade magistrates of the judiciary, three officers of the national army and six lawyers whose appointment will be made as stipulated by the ordinance. The court will be presided over by one of the two magistrates. [Excerpt] [AB250936 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 23 Apr 82]

COT SPEAKS TO NEWSMEN--At the end of a 4-day visit to Upper Volta, the French minister for cooperation was received in audience yesterday by the head of state, Col Saye Zerbo. Following the audience, Jean-Pierre Cot told newsmen that cooperation between France and Upper Volta is solid and that it is founded on sound and sure basis, adding that it is incontestably extensive. The French minister pointed out that his talks with the head of state were on bilateral cooperation, particularly in the agricultural sector. Asked about an eventual revision of cooperation agreements between France and Upper Volta--these agreements were signed in 1960--Jean-Pierre Cot stated that minister for foreign affairs and cooperation Col Felix Tientaraboum, with whom he discussed this issue, agreed to this revision. Finally, let us stress that the French minister for cooperation and development left Ouagadougou yesterday morning for Paris. ACTIVITIES AGAINST OPPOSITION GROUPS IN SWITZERLAND

Zurich DIE WELTWOCHE in German 7 Apr 82 p 19

[Article by N.T./T.M.: "Don't Wake Me Up"]

[Text] On 16 March 1982, it was reported in the official gazette of the Canton of Vaud that Gere Turu Kwamanga Walito, born on 19 February 1952 in Kinshasa, had been sentenced to 4 months in prison, banishment from Switzerland for 5 years and the payment of court costs in the amount of 600 francs on 2 March 1982 by the Criminal Court of Lausanne. The crime? Gere Turu had swindled a woman from Zaire out of 2,000 francs.

Gere Turu--one might imagine that he was an immigrant worker from Zaire who made a mistake. But Gere Turu is not just anybody. In Zairean exile circles in Switzerland, the husband of a niece of Dictator Mobutu is regarded as an informer, a spy and Mobutu's agent, and he was working in that capacity under the name of "Hippolyte," together with his inseparable friend "K," alias "Rocky," alias "David." consequently, Gere Turu also bragged that he was able to go in and out of Mobutu's villa in Sauvigny, in the Vaud, where the president's four daughters live.

The Probable Man in Charge of the Snooping

However, Gere Turu did not get his snooping assignments from the president's villa but from Zaire's permanent United Nations representation in Geneva. Colonel Longo Bekpwa Ndaga is the first chancellor of the embassy there, and he is probably in charge of the activities of Zaire's intelligence service in Switzerland.

Any 007-like conduct on Swiss soil is very strictly prohibited. Foreigners cannot shadow foreigners any more than they can spy out Swiss secrets, according to Articles 271 and 272 of the Swiss Penal Code. Colonel Longo of the Secret Service, indeed, vehemently denies any agent activity and claims that he never has even heard of a fellow-country-man of his named Gere Turu, let alone giving him assignments to carry out. And Colonel Longo gets angry when confronted with accusations to that effect and tells a journalist from the TRIBUNE LE MATIN: "Watch out. Don't wake me up when I'm sleeping."

On the other hand, various Zairean exiles are unanimous in confirming that Colonel Longo and Gere Turu, alias "Hippolyte," are very well acquainted with each other. In addition, there is the fact that the two Mobutu catchpoles assiduously engaged in telephone conversations with each other. One elderly lady in Lausanne, in particular, could tell a tale about that if she would cease taking refuge in silence out of fear of being done away with, for "Hippolyte" frequently stayed on the telephone in that lady's apartment for hours and not only talked with Longo but also called Mobutu's chateau in Brussels and the residence in Kinshasa. The telephone bill went as high as 1,800 francs one time and "Hippolyte" couldn't pay for a whole month, which angered the old lady and caused her to threaten to make the whole thing known publicly.

The trial of "Hippolyte," although not for intelligence service activities, and the telephone bill, which the Secret Service apparently was not in a good enough financial condition to be able to pay off immediately, must have roused Mobutu's agents to rebellion. That is probably the only way to explain the Telex message which, uncoded and with many typing errors, tick-ticked into the mission in Geneva from Zaire's embassy in Brussels: "Papa arriving Lausanne, Kalongo network, 'ecxvitrexxx' sidestep Nsele case: make contacts with the valley of Lausanne. Shadowing difficult. Go to Avenue de Cour, Lausanne. Deputy, central order section. Go to agent Hyg. Pay Madame Pina Ostelo's telephone bill, Lausanne. Trial of agent Hyg., Lausanne, exact information."

Amazing Clumsiness

The Telex message is part of the booty Zairean exiles who oppose the present regime obtained when they occupied their mission in Geneva on 19 February 1982 and ransacked it. In doing so, they came upon a black list, among other things, giving the names of "members of the opposition to be kept under observation" who, it is said, are now to be asked by the Swiss bar association whether they have been subjected to any unpleasantness by people representing the regime in Zaire. That piece of paper allegedly is still another bit of evidence indicating that Mobutu, who now has kept himself in power in Zaire in a gory manner for 17 years, is causing his henchmen to inquire into the political views of his fellow-countrymen in Switzerland. After all, about 500 Zaireans are living here, and last year 317 of them applied for asylum.

The clumsiness with which Zaire's secret agents went to work is amazing, for all incidents about which anything has been learned up to now indicate that Mobutu's professional spies are not exactly experts in covering up their tracks. After all, Zaire's intelligence service was built up by the Israelis some time ago.

Just for that reason, however, it is hard to understand why the Swiss authorities have followed these illegal machinations without doing anything about them, up to the present. The Swiss counterintelligence service should not have had any trouble catching onto the tricks of the dilettantish spies from Zaire. Furthermore, a number of Zairean exiles have already been concerned about their own safety for a considerable time. Three of them called Mobutu's machinations to the attention of the public prosecutor of the Canton of Vaud in writing on 5 October 1977. There has also been knowledge for a long time of cases where relatives in Zaire of members of the opposition who had escaped were mistreated and subjected to discrimination.

Not Confirmed or Denied

However, the Swiss Department of Justice and Policy remained aloof. Press Chief Ulrich Hubacher of that department will neither confirm nor deny that the Swiss Public Prosecutor's Office has now intervened in this matter, after all. He says, "I can only say that the Public Prosecutor's Office is following up all leads, including those provided by the press."

"Is Switzerland perhaps too heavily interested in Zaire from the economic point of view and does it not want to get on the wrong side of the dictator, Mobutu, so quickly?" the TRIBUNE LE MATIN in Lausanne asks, therefore, in view of the federal authorities' indifference. At any rate, the Federal Council will have to come to grips with the problem now in view of the fact that National Council member Jean Ziegler, of the Socialist Party, exposed "the activities of Mobutu's secret police in Switzerland" in a postulate on 11 March.

UNITA THREATENS ACTION DURING PORTUGUESE OFFICIAL'S VISIT

Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Apr 82 p 4

[Article by Jose Rebelo]

[Excerpts] Lisbon--The president of Portugal will be the first chief of state from a Western country to make an official visit to Angola. The trip, which will take place from 15 to 20 April, has a double objective: to erase the remaining aftereffects of the colonial war and help search for a solution to the conflict raging in the region.

A certain optimism reigns in the entourage of General Eanes concerning the evolution of the situation in southern Africa, particularly given the prospect of a settlement to the Namibian question. According to one of the advisers to the president, "by raising objections to the proposals submitted to it, particularly regarding measures to be adopted between the cessation of fighting and the election of a constituent assembly, South Africa is solely trying to gain time, in the hope of militarily weakening SWAPO and permitting the establishment in the region of political movements more favorable to it."

Emphasis is given in Lisbon to efforts made by Angolan President Eduardo Dos Santos in the direction of a rapprochement with several Western countries, particularly the United States.

Seven years after decolonization, Lisbon is becoming a required stop-off for all delegations from Portuguese-speaking African countries visiting Europe. Economically fragile, Portugal cannot be suspected of neocolonial intentions. This constitutes a considerable asset for the Portuguese president.

Furthermore, General Eanes maintains close ties with Chancellor Schmidt and Mitterrand and an agreement on mutual consultation on African problems has been concluded between Portugal and France.

The trip to Angola does involve certain risks. "Although the government will try to prove that it controls the entire country, the UNITA will endeavor to demonstrate the contrary," it is predicted at the presidential palace in Belem. Fernando Wilson, member of the UNITA Executive Council, describes the current situation as follows: "We already control the administration in Kwando-Cubango Province, situated in the southeastern region of the country. Our guerrilla actions extend north as far as the cities of Malange and Henrique-de-Carvalho, which enables us to paralyze long sections of the important railroad linking the port of Lobito to the mining centers of Zaire and Zambia. We wage propaganda campaigns in the regions of Mocamodes and even Luanda."

"That is an exaggerated picture," it is said in Portugal. However, the warning has already been given by the UNITA: "During the presidential visit, we shall not fail to make our presence known."

REPORTAGE ON DOMESTIC SITUATION, FOREIGN INVOLVEMENT

Paris LE MONDE in French 16, 17 Apr 82

[Article by J.-P. Langellier: "Angola Without Peace"]

[16 Apr 82 p 6]

[Excerpts] I. The Obsession With Security

Luanda--The contrast of the landscape in trompe-l'oeil, overlooked by the guns of the old Sao Miguel Fort, is striking: The "right side" of the decor is the splendid roadstead, with its white-capped waves, against a background of skyscrapers, a modern, spacious city. The "wrong side" is the musseques on the hillsides -- the poor districts with their homes of sheet metal and boards -- and their bichas, the long lines before the "people's stores." The right side is the lifeless buildings, the abandoned shops, the forgotten display windows. More than six years after independence, Luanda seems to "float" in its colonial garments, concrete finery that now seems too big. It is the austere, silent capital of a country that has been on a war footing since birth. "We are peace lovers," one government secretary remarks. Lovers somewhat abandoned, one would say.

The fact is that war remains the prime Angolan reality, accentuated by other national traits: the obsession with ensuring border security, the paralysis of the economy, the weight of foreign influence, the lassitude of a population absorbed by its daily difficulties. The war in the south against Pretoria's army and Jonas Savimbi's UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] and in the central region against UNITA alone, a war largely ignored abroad.

Pretoria has transformed the border strip -- several dozen kilometers wide -- into a no man's land off limits to Angolan soldiers and the SWAPO underground fighters. Thanks to its undeniable superiority: air hegemony, equipment better adapted to the terrain, more battle-seasoned and often more motivated soldiers, the South African Army exercises permanent control over this zone without maintaining heavy troop concentrations in it. In December, it pushed back Angolan units trying to regain certain lost positions with the support of a Cuban avant-garde group. The "bearded ones," who do not confront South Africans directly, had made an exception and had crossed the Mossamedes railroad line near which they are ordinarily stationed.

Under these conditions, the UNITA has freedom of movement across the border and access to its bases in Namibia. Credited with some 10,000 men, it circulates and fights in light columns. Pretoria gives it multifaceted aid: weapons, supplies, means of transportation, air cover, soldiers -- particularly black mercenaries forming a kind of foreign legion -- and military advisers. Without this support, the UNITA would rapidly die out, especially in the south, like a tree that has lost its roots. On the other hand, SWAPO reportedly has some 5,000 men, acting alone or accompanied by Angolan forces. Most are found between Mossamedes, Lubango and Menongue.

Paralysis

Namibia's independence, under the likely banner of SWAPO, will sooner or later reduce the UNITA to a mere irredentist ethnic group. In the meantime and while it does not constitute a real military danger -- since it holds neither the cities nor the main arteries -- the UNITA maintains the lack of security, upsets production, hinders development and threatens national unity. The high plateaus in the central region, its favorite field of action, form the richest and most densely populated region in the country. Its control is vital to the regime. By its raids, the UNITA forces authorities to gather the people together in protected villages, based on the old antiguerrilla strategy. Once they are relocated, the peasants cultivate much less. Harassment by the UNITA causes food shortages, even famine, and stirs up discontent. An estimated 500,000 persons have been relocated, including 60,000 Namibian refugees. One out of every five is constantly dependent on aid.

UNITA sabotage, remote-controlled with sophisticated detonators, paralyzes the Benguela railroad, which is operating at only one-tenth of its capacity and no longer fulfilling the regional economic role -- carrying shipments of Zambian and Zairian ore -- that justified its construction. Officially restored in November 1978, its international traffic is nil, as the minister of transport admits. This means losses of at least $30 million. Trains travel at a snail's pace by sections. It sometimes takes as long as 40 days to go from Zaire to the port of Lobito.

Overwhelming Financial Pressure

"A single nation from Cabinda to Cunene," proclaims an MPLA slogan. It is true that the party in power has always fought tribalism, but it still has a very poor base among the Ovimbundu, the main ethnic group in the country, with 35 to 40 percent of the population. By continuing guerrilla warfare and whipping up tribal feelings among a people from which it recruits its soldiers, the UNITA helps keep one ethnic group distrusted by the regime out of public life. No Ovimbundu belongs to the MPLA Political Bureau.

Such fighting is overwhelming the government in Luanda financially. Lacking statistics, it is estimated that nearly half of the national budget feeds the war machine. Another estimate: Angola's military debt since 1975 reportedly exceeds $1 billion. In this domain, the Soviet "big brother" is not a soft touch: Spare parts are to be paid for in cash or within 3 months following delivery.

The Angolan Army numbers some 45,000 men, with a maximum of 20,000 serving in the south. (Some soldiers have been at this front for years.) The scarcity of officers is the main weakness. According to experts, their quality often leaves something to be desired. The army also has supply -- life grows harder and harder -- and human problems. Morale is low and their enthusiasm flagging. For Angolans between the ages of 18 and 35, military service is compulsory (2 to 3 years) and difficult. Young recruits seek cushy jobs far from the front.

Absenteeism

By worsening the problems of survival, the war obviously demobilizes the civilian population. It strengthens traditional passiveness, which has multiple causes, partially inherited from the Portuguese period: illiteracy (95 percent illiteracy upon independence), backward ways of thinking, annoying revolutionary austerity and uncertainty about the future. Crowds standing before empty market stalls waiting for something to arrive, the scarcity of basic products, and the black market are the daily lot of the Luandan people.

The poorer people cannot wait in line and work at the same time and as a result, the average rate of absenteeism in enterprises approaches 40 percent. Nor do the low wages give workers any incentive. Plants do not work up to capacity, sometimes operating at only 30-percent. Absenteeism and the lack of discipline are old plagues that authorities have denounced and fought since independence. The year 1981 was christened as the "year of discipline and control," while the MPLA waged a campaign against the "lack of organization" in government offices and enterprises.

Angola, which once exported wheat, devotes nearly half of its imports to basic products, mainly food. Agricultural production is five times lower than before independence. The government is determined to correct the harmful effects of an agricultural strategy that gives preference to state farms, whose yield is mediocre, and neglects small farmers while improving the marketing of grain (corn and manioc). The capital suffers all the more from food shortages because it is in the heart of a semi-arid region little suited to food crops.

The inadequate means of transport causes further interruptions in supplies. Angola recently asked the EEC to allocate part of its aid for the purchase of a fleet of trucks to supply relocated persons. Coffee tonnages -- Angola was the fourth-ranking producer in the world -- are only one-tenth of what they were before independence. The farmers have plowed up their plants and replaced them with manioc because the government could not guarantee that their harvest would be collected. Coffee now represents only 7 percent of all exports in value, compared with 85 percent for oil.

The flares of Cabinda are by far the main national resource. And yet, in 1981, Angola was a victim of the drop in the price of crude and its own commercial inexperience. In the hope of an increase in prices, it waited too long to sell, thereby losing $600 million. Production reached a ceiling of under 7 million tons. This passing reversal resulted in a financial minicrisis, the first of its type in a country known for cautious management, whence the increased austerity of the 1982 budget. The government is reckoning -- and quite rightly, it would appear -- on a doubling of the oil tonnage within 3 or 4 years, on the condition, naturally, that the American Gulf Oil Company, which produces three-fourths of all Angolan crude, does not reduce its level of operations, as rumor has recently had it.

An old headache for authorities, the Luanda port is a kind of microcosm of Angolan economic difficulties (while those of Lobito and Mossamedes, in contrast, operate well). Some 40 ships are constantly anchored in the roadstead. The average wait of a freighter: 3 to 6 months, except in the case of priority military equipment. This congestion is ruinous for the government, which, it is said, has to pay insurance companies $6,000 a day per ship. It has structural causes (lack of equipment on the docks and of spare parts, failure to adapt facilities since the reversal, in 1975, of the exchange currents), but especially the lack of human resources (shortage of qualified personnel, strikes, theft, corruption). The government, which in this vital sector has taken the bull by the horns, hopes for rapid relief in the congestion.

The burden of the war and its negative effects on the economy can only incite Angola to explore every possible pathway to peace in order to finally tackle the task of reconstruction and development. But the quest will not be fruitful until the day when the powerful South African neighbor sheathes its sword of Damocles.

[17 Apr 82 p 7]

[Excerpts] II. Enfeoffment and Nationalism

Luanda--Since independence in November 1975, foul winds have blown over Luanda. If one is to believe rumors from the foreign ministries -- Western, obviously -- the breeze now comes from the West, a discreet but persistent breeze.

It is true that since 1978, Angola has followed an unexclusive diplomacy: "normalization" of relations with the capitalist world, broadening of the circle of friendships in Africa, which has gradually resulted in a certain consistency in the nonalignment it so forcefully proclaims. After all, the MPLA did not, following independence, truly "choose" the Soviet and Cuban friends that went to its aid when the guns were sounding at the gates of Luanda. In a sense, they were imposed on it by history, by ideological affinities and the errors of the West. The famous "opening to the West," a formula that annoyed Luanda, responded to the legitimate desire to break out of the initial diplomatic isolation, no about face or reversal in alliances, but a correction in an imbalance deemed to be both abnormal and harmful.

Until evidence to the contrary, this attitude has not changed. Angola's natural allies remain -- how could it be otherwise? -- its privileged interlocutors. Their means of exerting pressure, beginning with their military presence, remain considerable. Nevertheless, at the same time, nothing has contradicted the Angolan determination to reduce the excessively heavy influence of the Soviets, to extend or deepen the dialogue with the West, to define and occupy a free space in which Luanda's diplomacy would be expressed by granting priority to national interests.

Angola is now host to some 18,000 "internationalist Cuban fighting men" (compared with 25,000 in 1976-1977 and 21,000 in 1979-1980). This expeditionary corps includes roughly 15,000 soldiers, 2,000 noncommissioned officers and 1,000 officers. Cuban military men are no longer dying in Angola. A few pilot some of the 32 Migs of the Angolan Air Force. Most are stationed in the main cities: Luanda, Huambo, Benguela, Lubango. They play the role of a "strategic reserve" to be used in case of peril. For every Cuban soldier, Angola pays Havana in currency a monthly wage of about $100, which, considering the service rendered, represents a tolerable burden for the government. But Luanda reportedly recently refused to increase this pay. Civilian technical advisers now number only 4,000, instead of the 8,000 at their peak. They essentially work in three domains: education, health and construction.

Soviet "Ally"

And the UNITA? Washington has always emphasized to Luanda the need, sooner or later, for a reconciliation with the movement of Jonas Savimbi. At any rate, the UNITA and the MPLA discreetly maintain contact in Europe, mainly in Zurich and Paris. Logically enough, a future Cuban withdrawal should largely facilitate the Angolan meetings because Savimbi has made the fight against the military presence a major propaganda issue that has enabled him to restore his nationalist fortunes.

Another step forward for Angolan diplomacy: Luanda is successfully pursuing its policy of rapprochement with the "moderate" African capitals once hostile to the MPLA.

A final observation on Angola: the development of economic and commercial cooperation with the capitalist world, just confirmed by the visit of the Portuguese president, General Eanes, first Western chief of state to go to Angola. Three-fourths of all Angola's commercial trade is with the West. Western interests have preserved and even strengthened their positions in the two key sectors of the Angolan economy: oil and diamonds. Some ten Western companies are now extracting or prospecting for Angolan oil. The main supplier and fourth customer of Angola, France will largely double its exports to the country in 1982. Angola has all the more need for Western cadres and capital because its cooperation with the East is limited in quantity and quality. Outside of the military sector, technical assistance from the USSR remains modest. Moreover, Moscow seems scarcely anxious to vie with the West in this field.

Can the Kremlin control Angola's desires for emancipation and bring it back to the path of allegiance? Can it influence a team of leaders not known to be alike? Practically nothing is known about the ratio of forces within the Political Bureau or about its debate. However, in the opinion of observers, the unconditional pro-Soviets are clearly in the minority. Backed by its some 2,000 military advisers, can the USSR bring about political changes at the top or even a coup d'etat? Hardly. The army has the reputation of being anti-Soviet. It is said to be particularly unhappy about the poor quality of the equipment "made in the USSR."

These calculations give little consideration to Angolan nationalism, loathe to accept any enfeoffment. Seen from the outside, everything seems to indicate that the "pragmatists," led by Dos Santos, now have the wind at their back. Their room to maneuver is limited. The rapid independence of Namibia and the restoration of peace in southern Angola would be their best trump cards. The future of their policy will be determined in Pretoria as well as Moscow.

SAVIMBI CLAIMS UNITA ADVANCING, WITH NO SOUTH AFRICAN WEAPONS

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 9 Apr 82 p 27

[Text] Johannesburg, April 7--Angolan dissident Jonas Savimbi has been in touch with representatives of the five-nation Western contact group on plans for Namibian independence, the guerrilla leader said in an interview broadcast here.

Mr Savimbi, speaking to the South African Broadcasting Corporation in a UNITA camp on Monday, described his meetings with the contact group (United States, Britain, Canada, France and West Germany) as "positive."

The rebel leader, who heads the UNITA guerrilla movement against the Angolan regime, said the United Nations on the other hand had not contacted him to discuss its proposals to set up a demilitarised zone along Namibia's border with Southern Angola.

Mr Savimbi said that in future projects allowances would have to be made for UNITA, which, he said, had an army of 30,000 men who now controlled the whole of Angola's Cuando Cubango Province, Moshika Province, part of Malange Province and other zones of Southern Angola.

"We are prepared to have a negotiated settlement in Angola, but we are not going to beg because we are advancing," he said.

He admitted that the fighting in the country would have to end, and added: "There must be elections, which we will win if they are in 10 days or in 10 years."

The UNITA leader also strongly denied that he had ever said he wanted the South-West Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO) to win the struggle for Namibia.

UNITA and SWAPO forces have had serious clashes, and only last week the two sides fought a violent battle at Mulundo in Cuando Cubango Province, he said. UNITA had lost 20 men but had killed about 50 SWAPO guerrillas who were trying to steal supplies from a UNITA zone.

He estimated that SWAPO had about 5,000 men in South Angola, but said that he did not intend to send his 30,000 guerrillas into action against the Namibian nationalists, but only to defend his own people against them.

Mr Savimbi said his movement received no aid from South African forces, either in supplies or training, but that his men were free to cross the South African-controlled border into Namibia.

"Not a single piece of military hardware used by UNITA is of South African origin," he said. During their mission into Southern Angola, members of the SADC TV team met two Soviet pilots and a Spanish priest held by UNITA. (AFP)

REFUGEES CONTINUE TO FLOW IN BIE PROVINCE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 16 Apr 82 pp 1-2

[Article by Marie Joannidis]

[Text] Kuito, Central Angola, April 14--About 100 of them, aged between two and seven, joining hands, singing and swaying in time with the three child minders caring for them: they are some of Angola's war orphans.

They were gathered in by Angolan Government soldiers and brought to this provincial capital to be put in charge of the welfare authorities, victims of the fighting which continues here in Bie Province, where the UNITA (National Union for the Total Independence of Angola) rebels operate.

They are learning to live normally again, which we were told is easy for children. Only the older ones speak of the war--and sometimes take fright when they see a white person.

This, we were told, is out of memory of the South Africans who were alongside the UNITA forces in the earlier fighting in 1975 and 1976. Nearby is a second orphanage of 140 children, including several babies, one of them missing a leg.

Everything is very neat and tidy and even pleasant, helping create a normal atmosphere for these children of the Ovimdundu, the main ethnic group in Bie and neighbouring Huambo Province--and also the tribe of UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi.

The bandit chief

Savimbi is described here either as "chief of the bandits" or simply a "puppet" of the South Africans, who are regarded as responsible for the continuation of the civil war.

The head of the two orphanages, familiarly called "Gigi," knows all the children, some of whom have come from far away where malnutrition is severe and speak only the Unbundu language.

Here they learn Portuguese, Angola's official tongue. Some of them only arrived here five months ago, others, the babies, even more recently.

Travel Problem

There are at present three orphanages in Bie Province, the two at Kuito and another at Catabola, 50 kms (30 miles) north. The older children are later taken by the Education Ministry, which has charge of them until they are 16.

At present, the International Red Cross operates only in Kuito. Its staff, who do not move about by road for security reasons, are awaiting the go-ahead from the authorities to use a light aircraft as they do elsewhere in Angola.

The local Government official for social affairs, Neto Pinto, said the main problem was the war and defending the integrity of the territory.

Population of the province is estimated at 280,000, and last year the welfare authorities had to deal with 150,000 displaced people. At least 4,500 people are recorded as having arrived in the urban areas so far this year.

"This influx by the civilian population coincides with the counteroffensives of our armed forces," Mr Pinto added.

As soon as the displaced people arrive in Government areas, they are placed in the hands of the welfare authorities, with the help of the Angolan Red Cross, and given any immediate aid such as food, clothing or medical care.

The authorities thereafter provide them with means of production, allowing them either to return to their villages if that is possible or to establish themselves in new production areas.

Lack of staff

Angola lacks trained staff for nursery schools as it does for other sectors. The child-minders who look after the orphans are trained in six months. They are helped by medical aides and are supervised once a week by a doctor.

Humanitarian aid is coordinated centrally from Luanda, which responded in a major way after the South African invasion-attack into Angola last August and September.

The presence of the U.N. childrens' organisation (UNICEF) and World Food Programme, the World Council of Churches and Dutch and Swiss organisations in the country coincides with an educational "boom" following a literacy campaign. (A.F.P.)

LARA CALLS UNITA PRISONERS' RELEASE 'TRAVESTY'

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 11 Apr 82 p 1

> [Text] Uige--"This so-called 'prisoner release' operation is a masquerade, a political carnival of racist South Africa in which individuals who were never prisoners of the puppets are being exploited; they are Portuguese who, for different sentimental reasons, for different political reasons, lived for a long time with the puppets along the border of Namibia," Lucio Lara, organizational secretary, Central Committee, MPLA-Labor Party, said in this city.

Lucio Lara, who made these statements during an interview for the local media, said that these individuals now "as a combined operation with Portuguese reactionaries, especially with the right-wing party in Portugal, are trying to launch a campaign precisely in order 'to cover up' the operations which South Africa is conducting against our country.

"They above all want to give people the idea that all of the aggression which our country is suffering from South Africa is to a great extent a puppet operation," he added.

The Angolan leader said that "We Angolans know that everything that is going on today in our country's southern part--sabotage, attacks on our peace--is being planned and outlined in Washington and in Pretoria; everything is being carried out under the directions given through Pretoria." This is why--he added--the government of South Africa is making all necessary means available to the puppets, including aircraft, explosives, uniforms, and supplies.

"Through these strikes," he said, "through propaganda campaigns, such as the one which the puppets have just conducted, with the phony release of phony prisoners, they seek to conceal the direct aggression of United States imperialism through South Africa." The puppets, he emphasized, are nothing but the instruments, in this case, of United States imperialism through the South African racists.

Fighting the Crisis in the OAU

Concerning the crisis within the OAU, caused by the admission of the SDAR, the Angolan leader said that the lack of unity among the African countries does not in any way benefit Africa, and certainly not in the struggle of our peoples against the latent threat of imperialism.

We are now watching the situation in Addis Ababa. So far, 26 countries have recognized the SDAR. The SDAR was admitted to the OAU in accordance with the rules of the organization's charter. Another 19 countries did not want to go along with the idea, except Morocco, which does not want to do its duty as a member of the OAU, in giving self-determination and the right to independence to the Saharan people."

"But," he continued, "in a very calm manner, in an objective manner, as part of the principles governing the OAU Charter, we must all seek an immediate solution to this problem so that a question that is being settled in accordance with the organization's charter will not harm African unity, which is something we need very badly, especially in southern Africa which is at war. All of the countries of southern Africa are victims of aggression by South Africa; they are at war, a war which is imposed upon them."

Lucio Lara noted that the Angolans are the ones who suffer most from this war. Therefore, he said "We must not lose our heads; we must keep a cool head and we must try to find solutions to rally the African countries against the enemies of Africa."

Angola's Position on Malvinas Islands Issue

As for Angola's position on the problems of the Malvinas Islands, the organizational secretary of the Central Committee said that this "is a matter between imperialist countries, Western countries, and that is not a part of our concern."

"Our political direction," he emphasized "at this time contains many other matters of concern, preoccupations which go beyond this scrap between Argentina and Great Britain."

"These are the contradictions of the capitalist world; these are the contradictions of imperialism, normal contradictions," he said. Then he added: "We all know them. These are the laws of history and they must be taken as such, very attentively, although this must not distract our attention. Our problems are different and our concerns are different."

The secretary of the Central Committee, MPLA-Labor Party, had gone to this city to give the workers guidance in the First Inter-Provincial Seminar of the DORGAN [Provincial Department of Party Organization] of Uige, Zaire, and Cabinda, which has already concluded its work.

POULTRY STARVATION--Malanje--A large agricultural complex belonging to Damba penitentiary and nearly 2 million eucalyptus trees and various other crops and livestock were totally destroyed following torrential rains which struck Malanje Province last Friday. According to the report by Goncalves Antonio, director of the penitentiary, to ANGOP, the 15-minute storm caused enormous damage, as repairs to the complex alone are estimated at more than one million kwanzas. Moreover about 26 homes were destroyed. In addition to being known for rehabilitating convicts, this penitentiary had over 1,600 head of cattle, 1,114 chickens and 700 hogs. Goncalves Antonio added that the prison's main problems at the present time are a lack of supplies to pursue its farming activities and a shortage of feed. The feed shortage caused the death of about 4,000 pullets in recent months. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 31 Mar 82 p 4] 9805

PORTUGUESE MEDICAL COOPERATION--On 15 March, two Portuguese teams in the field of nutrition arrived in Praia. They were headed by Professor Dr Guilherme Jeorge Janz; this was part of the cooperation agreement between Cape Verde and Portugal. The team from the Hygiene and Tropical Medicine Institute of Lisbon, consisting of Professor Janz and Dr Luiz Cecilo Rocha, is in S. Vincente with a double mission: (1) Complete the survey on the nutrition situation regularly conducted in the country by that agency; (2) Study biochemistry and malnutrition through a survey. It will stay in S. Vincente for a month at the end of which time it will return to its country. Another team from the Institute of Tropical Scientific Research of Lisbon, made up of Dr Maria Emilia de Castro e Almeida and the biology technician Manual Delgado, will remain in Santiago where it will survey the population's food methods. This team is trying to conduct a survey among 200 families in the four councils of Santiago, an effort which will last 2 weeks. [Text] [Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 2 Apr 82 p 2] 5058

OFFICIAL VISITS EGYPT, DISCUSSES COOPERATION

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 14 Apr 82 p 8

[Excerpts] Information and Cultural Minister Comrade Filinto Barros on Saturday returned to the country after an official 6-day visit to Egypt in response to an invitation from his Egyptian counterpart, Safwat El Sherif, minister of state for information. On that occasion, the Guinean leader also conferred with Minister of State for Culture Mohamed Abdul Hamid Radwan. Both of these meetings were aimed at an in-depth development of bilateral cooperation on the level of these two state sectors.

The Egyptian leaders expressed their government's interest in granting financial and technical support as well as study scholarships to Guinea-Bissau in various areas involving the mass media (radio news, television) with facilities for the development of Guinean motion picture films in Egyptian laboratories. In the field of culture, prospects are opening up with the training of Guinean cultural county agents in Egypt's teaching establishments and the exchange of groups of artists.

To carry out these intentions, the Guinean government, through the Information and Culture Ministry, will shortly send the necessary proposals to Cairo. The Egyptian government in turn will send experts in the various areas to Guinea-Bissau for a prior study for the specific conditions for cooperation.

Foreign Policy

In touching on the long-standing commitments assumed by the PAIGC [African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde], in the course of meetings with Egyptian leaders, during its national arms liberation struggle against Portuguese colonialism which had the support of the Egyptian government and people, Comrade Filinto Barros, member, Central Committee, PAIGC, reaffirmed the country's policy of nonalignment and its unconditional support for the legitimate national liberation movements.

In this context, the Guinean leader made particular reference to the inalienable right of the Arab people of Palestine to the construction of their independent homeland in the context of the rights granted them by the United Nations, through their political vanguard organization, the PLO.

Under the same circumstances and according to the words of the information and culture minister, Guinea-Bissau grants the Egyptian people the right to decide as to its policy and to chart its own way of development. Guinea-Bissau's support for the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic and the just struggle of the POLISARIO Front [Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el Hamra and Rio de Oro]for National Liberation was also reaffirmed.

Returning to the country from his mission to Cairo, the information and culture minister felt that this visit was quite fruitful in the context of expanding cooperation between Guinea-Bissau and Egypt.

UN INTERAGENCY DELEGATION STUDIES BIJAGOS DEVELOPMENT

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 3 Apr 82 p 8

A UN interagency delegation surveyed a large part of the Bijagos Islands to determine the priority needs of the archipelago, so that our government will have the information needed to request financing from various sources for the economic and social development project planned for these islands. The delegation was made up of experts and specialists from UNDP, WHO, UNESCO, WFP and UNIDO. Headed by M. Harris, it left last Wednesday after having spent one week in the country.

The purpose of the mission was to draw conclusions on the basis of the information gathered in the field and to submit them to the Guinea-Bissau government for an exchange of views on them before preparing the final report.

The delegation visited various sectors in eight larger islands, including Bolama and Bubaque, and noted from the start that the Bijagos lacked the basic infrastructure needed for any development activities.

According to the document on the results of the visit, published by the Ministry of Economic Coordination and Planning, the islands have no administration, no infrastructure, and none of the equipment needed to implement projects that could be supported by financing agencies. The document goes on to say that this void is an obstacle to mobilizing and using resources. Therefore the first thing that needs to be done is to introduce the very basic infrastructure, with the necessary personnel and means of transportation and communication.

Priorities were set for the following sectors: transportation, trade, industry, fisheries, agriculture and livestock raising, health, education and social development. In its 1982 program, the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) earmarked $180,000 for the first phase of the islands' development project, an amount which will be increased later.

PAIGC CC ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON CENTRAL AMERICA

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 31 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] The Politburo of the Central Committee of the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau andCape Verde (PAIGC) met 26 March under the chairmanship of comrade Brigadier Commander Joao Bernardo Vieira, secretary-general of the Party and president of the Revolutionary Council. At this meeting, the Politburo dealt with various issues related to the domestic and international situation.

The communique issued by that party organ reported that "with regard to the international situation, concern was expressed over the emergence of some areas of tension that could endanger world peace." Referring to Central America, the Politburo pointed to the possible serious consequences of the situation created in that part of the world and reviewed with concern the complaint made by the Nicaraguan Government to the UN Security Council regarding threats of an armed imperialist intervention in that country.

"The PAIGC, faithful to its policy of nonalignment, vehemently condemns any attempt at intervention or aggression against another country, as it considers that any such action implies disrespect for the sovereign will of nations and represents an unacceptable violation of the principles of the United Nations Charter and of human rights," the communique stated.

It went on to say that "The PAIGC considers it essential that nations be guaranteed a climate of peace based on full respect for their sovereignty and self-determination and their right to make the economic and social changes they consider to be in their interest."

In conclusion, the communique of the Politburo of the PAIGC Central Committee reiterated its support for and solidarity with the Sandinist Front and the Nicaraguan people and with the heroic people of El Salvador in their just struggle against imperialism and for their own freedom and progress.

PORTUGUESE LINE OF CREDIT--Portugal opened a $20 million line of credit with Guinea-Bissau. Half of this amount will go to Portuguese exports of consumer goods to Guinea-Bissau and the other half will be used to finance capital goods and services. This is the first time the two countries have negotiated a financial arrangement--the existing agreements between Guinea-Bissau and Portugal have been confined to technical assistance and occupational training. The line of credit negotiated in Lisbon by Comrade Victor Freire Monteiro, minister and governor of the National Bank of Guinea-Bissau, will, in his view, have a positive impact on the food situation in the country and will increase foreign exchange earnings from Guinea-Bissau exports. The governor of the Bank of Portugal, Jacinto Nunes, said when the agreement was signed that the $10 million earmarked for financing capital goods will be interest-bearing. WFDY DELEGATION VISITS MAPUTO, PLANS FOR 10TH CONGRESS

[Excerpts] "We condemn any action to legitimize the occupation of Namibia by the colonial government of Pretoria, the subjugation of the South African people by the forces of apartheid, and the spread of conflicts in southern Africa, the Caribbean and the Middle East. We reiterate our support for liberation movements and for progressive and lawful governments and we stand behind the entire international community in its struggle for understanding and peace among nations," asserted Dennis Sibeko, head of the African Commission of the World Federation of Democratic Youth (WFDY) to the Mozambican press during his speech yesterday at a hotel in the capital.

Sibeko, who was accompanied by Frieder Bubl, editor in chief for this international youth organization headquartered in Budapest, Hungary, stressed that "the federation supports the United Nations efforts to obtain the independence of Namibia, which is still under the control of Pretoria's internationally condemned regime, although the "Contact Group" is trying to change the meaning of free elections, thereby adulterating the spirit of UN Resolution 435."

Sibeko reported to our news agency that "it is regrettable that current U.S. military maneuvers in the Caribbean, the so-called 'Readex-82,' are related to diplomatic activities Washington is conducting to jeopardize freedom and peace in Nicaragua and Cuba, while it brandishes the phantom of a 'communist threat.' These activities are part of its imperialist moves to maintain domination of areas it considers strategic for the 'defense of its geopolitical interests.'"

With regard to the 10th General Assembly of the WFDY scheduled to be held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, in June of this year, 220 representatives from youth organizations throughout the world are expected to attend to discuss ways of strengthening the anti-imperialist front and the international situation, focusing on southern Africa. Also included on the agenda is a visit by the delegations to sites of destruction left by Hitler's fascist armies during World War II and an invitation to victims of fascism and imperialism, as well as a large antinuclear demonstration.

The WFDY is already in contact with youth organizations in Madagascar and Tanzania with a view to planning the next general assembly.

DETAILS ON CULTURAL, ECONOMIC AGREEMENT WITH INDIA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by Antonio Souto, special envoy]

[Excerpts] President Samora Machel said yesterday in a press conference in New Delhi that India's science and Mozambique's economic potentials should be shaped into a weapon and an example for all poor countries that are now struggling against underdevelopment. The Mozambican head of state made this statement in speaking of the results of the conversations he had with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

While President Samora Machel was holding talks with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, final negotiations were going on between ministerial delegations of the two countries.

At the end of these negotiations, a Cultural Cooperation Agreement and an Economic Cooperation Protocol were signed.

The cultural agreement signed by Joaquim Chissano, minister of foreign affairs, and Sheia Kaul, the Indian minister of education, culture and social welfare, covers art, culture, education, science, technology, public health, public information, sports and journalism.

The document on economic cooperation signed by the Minister-Governor of the Bank of Mozambique, Prakash Ratilal, and the Indian Minister of Agriculture, Rao Birendra Singh, covers the broad categories of industry, agriculture, energy, public works and housing.

In view of the need felt by both parties to gain a better knowledge of the other country's potentialities and resources, it was decided that specialized technical delegations from the two countries would make a detailed study of each of these specific fields.

However, it was already possible to outline in detail the activities to be developed in agriculture, public works and housing. The protocol has two annexes for this purpose that set forth the specific activities to be carried out.

Cooperation Protocol and Cultural Agreement

The introduction to the agreement's protocol notes that "the two countries have similar interests in various areas." In the industrial sector, the two parties agreed to make a survey of the economic situation in Mozambique and to work to develop small industries, rural reconstruction, advisory services and integrated programs.

A technical team from India will be visiting Maputo soon to try to identify appropriate industries so that they can be established.

The possibilities mentioned are a bicycle factory, a sponge iron plant, a metalworking industry, small units for rural areas or an iron and steel processing plant.

A high-level delegation will be visiting Mozambique to identify the areas of cooperation in agriculture. An annex setting forth the agricultural sectors in which priorities must be decided was added to the protocolary document.

According to the agreement, the Mozambican parties requested medical personnel and agreed to make medicinal plants available to India for research and use by its pharmaceutical industry.

Mozambique also expressed an interest in having India help it develop its own pharmaceutical industry.

Regarding public works, the two parties agreed to draw up a program for the construction industry, water supply, road maintenance and city planning.

Both parties are interested in developing small projects in rural areas, in technical assistance for government enterprises and in setting up the infrastructure for the aluminum project.

In this sector as well, a technical mission will visit Mozambique sometime in the next 3 months to define and finalize projects to be implemented.

As for aluminum, according to the protocol previously signed for this sector, India will export aluminum to Mozambique, where it will be processed using the Cahora Bassa power plant. India will then import the aluminum processed in Mozambique.

To get the project underway, India will provide technical assistance and equipment and will undertake to work with the Mozambican Government to procure financing for the project.

In the field of transportation, both parties referred to results already achieved in the agreement, including technical assistance for railways and purchases of equipment.

With regard to telecommunications, the document noted that negotiations between government enterprises in the two countries are about to begin to provide for the hiring of technicians.

As for contracting Indian nationals to work in Mozambique, the agreement sets new salary scales, on the basis of inflation indices recorded since the 1980 cooperation agreement was enacted.

During official conversations, India stated its intention to buy cashew nuts and cement from Mozambique.

At the suggestion of Mozambique, India is planning to consider participating in projects to explore for coal and to rebuild the Beira-Moatize railroad line.

The cultural agreement described in 11 articles specifies the terms on which cooperation will develop in the fields of art, culture, education, research, sports, public health, and information.

The document indicates a need to exchange delegations of professors, research workers, sports teams and technicians between the countries.

The agreement also provides for fellowships for students and an exchange of technical and scientific publications.

Artists from both countries will hold concerts in India and Mozambique and will also help set up art exhibitions and film festivals.

The agreement establishes a joint committee to draw up specific programs under the agreement.

NRM REPORTEDLY CROSSES INTO ZIMBABWE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 9 Apr 82 p 20

[Text] Salisbury, April 7--Rebels of the anti-Government Mozambique Resistance Movement (MNR) are believed to have crossed into Zimbabwe and blown up two men with a hand grenade early this week, police said today in the Eastern Zimbabwean city of Umtali.

A police spokesman quoted by the news agency ZIANA said the device was detonated before dawn on Monday in a house in the Ngorima tribal area, 300 km (190 miles) south east of Salisbury. Ngorima is on the mountainous border with Mozambique opposite a region that has long been a hotbed of MNR activity.

The rebels were allegedly "looking for a deserter" from their ranks who was thought to be in the house they attacked, the police spokesman said. He said a youth was wounded in the blast that killed the two men, who have not been identified.

The MNR says its goal is to overthrow the Marxist regime of President Samora Machel in Maputo. Mozambique and Zimbabwe both assert the movement is backed by South Africa.

Zimbabwean and Mozambican authorities have held several meetings--most recently this week--to discuss coordination of their activities against the rebels, who reportedly cross into Eastern Zimbabwe in search of food and money.

The Zimbabwe Army has deployed troops to tighten up border control and weed out MRN operatives from the Mozambicans coming into Zimbabwe in flight from rebel actions.

Today, Mozambican Security Minister Jacinto Veloso left Salisbury for Maputo after another coordination session with Zimbabwean Security Minister Emmerson Manangagwa.

Lieut.-Gen. Veloso said the two men had discussed "mutual security problems" as a follow-up to the summit of the front-line states in Maputo one month ago, where the six black-ruled nations pledged to undertake joint action in the face of "military aggressions" by South Africa.

The Mozambican General confirmed that South Africa's use of "armed bandits"--as Maputo terms the MNR--was one of the reasons for the meeting with Mr Munangagwa.

Lieut-Gen. Veloso said his Government was confronting the rebels "and we are going to wipe them out."

The MNR has concentrated its sabotage and attacks in the central provinces of Manica and Sofala since its creation with Rhodesian military help during the guerrilla war in Zimbabwe. But recently an upsurge in insurgent activity has been reported farther south in Mozambique, in the Gaza and Inhambane Provinces. (AFP)

'CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE' CHARGED IN CENTRAL AMERICA EVENTS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Apr 82 p 5

[Text] All of a sudden a curtain of silence has been lowered over Central America and the Caribbean. News agencies in the capitalist countries, which normally produce prolific amounts of misinformation on relevant events in the area, have diverted their attention to another subject. Small drops of venom continue to drip out, it is true, but the bulk of the news reports are on the Malvinas.

A lack of information on southern Africa is also rather apparent. The volume of telexes has gone down, which could mean an even greater vacuum in written and oral information than before.

In the past, editors used to struggle against the poor quality of available material. The problem today is to find any shred of news. We might say that there is at present a tense silence, charged with expectation.

Seldom has it been so clear that information can be manipulated in a coordinated way. It is all too obvious that it is a weapon, part of the dangerous offensive arsenal used by imperialism. It has also become increasingly clear that there are no coincidences in the area of politics.

The "coincidence" in this case is that all the agencies are focusing on one event, while completely ignoring other extremely serious ones. They are speaking exclusively about a conflict between two allies of imperialism, with [the U.S.] acting as a mediator, to hide the fact that a crisis of major proportions is being created in Central America, the Caribbean and southern Africa by none other than Washington.

The Angolan government has again denounced the extraordinary build-up of South African regular troops and mercenaries pursuing their agressive activities against Angola, as far as Luanda. Revolutionary leaders in Central America have in turn presented more than enough proof of a current aggressive policy of intervention.

And how do we interpret all these maneuvers which are now entering a critical stage? Everything is transpiring as though a temporary misunderstanding between two pawns of imperialism were going to degenerate into a conflict of greater proportions than the one promoted by the news agencies. Not to give the deserved prominence, for instance, to the use by Great Britain of a port in racist South Africa, or to shipment by the U.S. of more troops to El Salvador is in fact tantamount to engaging in a conspiracy of silence. And the telexes do not tell us this.

SIGNIFICANCE OF BOTHA-KAUNDA MEETING EXAMINED

Caution Urged

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 6

[Article by Aida Parker: "Why Dr Kaunda May Seek Conciliation"]

[Text]

BOTH parties are playing their cards mighty close to their chest about today's Zambian-South African summit. And there are insistent warnings: "Don't get too excited." "Go slow." "Be cautious about interpreting this as a major step forward into dialogue or a renewed break into Africa on a broad level."

But if President Kenneth Kaunda is indeed arriving with an olive branch, it could prove a very important watershed: especially when taken into account with America's recently very much enhanced respect in Black Africa and the current rush of activity by Nato countries in Angola and Mozambique.

It is generally agreed that the main significance of this meeting lies with SWA: not surprisingly, because it is no secret that the so-called "frontline" states are becoming increasingly concerned, even alarmed, at the position of Swapo in general and Sam Nujoma in particular.

Not only have Swapo forces proved totally ineffective over many years, but Nujoma himself has proved extremely obstructive in attempts to reach a settlement. This is of immediate importance to Zambia, with the war washing ever more strongly over the borders into Barotseland.

Major factors

But what is (or, hopefully, could be) at stake is the ultimate stabilisation of Southern Africa. And here a number of major considerations could well be pushing "KK" towards a new spirit of conciliation.

Study a map of Southern Africa. To the east, Soviet influence is dominant in Tanzania, Mozambique and Zimbabwe. To the west, the USSR dominates Angola and is seeking to instal Swapo in SWA. In all its satellite areas, Moscow is expanding its influence by increasing its supplies of arms and through bigger embassies.

Between these two groupings you have Zambia, Botswana, Malawi and Zaire to the north. "KK" would positively not expose himself from the attacks to come over this renewed contact without some back-up from other Black States.

Significantly, he recently made contact for the first time in eight years with President Hastings Banda of Malawi, the only Black African State to have diplomatic relations with both Zambia and South Africa. It is also stated in Lusaka that he has been in touch with Zaire and Kenya.

A surprise

His surprise decision to seek a meeting with Prime Minister P W Botha obviously caught Zimbabwe's Robert Mugabe flatfoot. There, the Marxist leader has taken a very hostile stance, publicly repudiating Kaunda's move.

We can also conclude that Kaunda's move came as something of a surprise to his own Central Committee. Most certainly, it will widen his growing breach with Southern Africa's radical Black States.

Yet if "KK" wishes to regain the influential choice of a loose, covert alliance with South Africa against support of Gaddafi, there is no doubt which they would view as the lesser of the two evils.

Although long something of a paradox to political observers, KK has always steered clear of hardline Marxism. Deeply religious, highly emotional, a liberal-humanist, an admirer of Gandhi and an ardent advocate of non-violence, it has in recent months become more and more clear that he does not see eye-to-eye with his militant Marxist neighbours.

As far as Angola is concerned, he seemingly has scant sympathy for the MPLA and those in power in Luanda, while apparently favouring Unita's moderate socialism.

Another decisive factor is that Black Africa has now had eight years of experience with the USSR. The time for accounting has come. It is apparent to all that as Moscow's African satraps slide deeper and deeper into the Marxist pit, the only real gift the USSR has brought them is economic chaos and mass starvation.

Indeed, from this particular aspect, all South Africa has to do is buy time, sit by for five to ten years, and the radical states will starve themselves to death — commit nutritional suicide. Edem Kodjo, Secretary-General of the OAU, warned of this regional position he held in the Sixties and Seventies, then this is the time for him to move. For the past decade Tanzania's Julius Nyerere was regarded as the leader of the frontline pack, with Nigeria very active and, to a lesser degree, Sir Seretse Khama of Botswana.

Now Sir Seretse is dead. Nyerere's position has been heavily undercut by greater Western appreciation of how this arch-hypocrite has torpedoed his own people. With collapsing oil prices, Nigeria has turned back in on itself.

In any event, as far as the radicals are concerned, Nigeria has simply not come up to expectations. Although this is not widely known, it recently refused to sponsor an "African Liberation Army" to be used against South Africa.

Vacuum

All this has left a certain vacuum and "KK" is the most likely candidate to fill it. Also to be taken into account is the current huge split between moderates and radicals in the OAU. In the next month or so, Kenya's pro-Western Daniel Arap Moi will surrender the OAU presidency to Libya's pro-Soviet Colonel Gaddafi.

It can be taken as read that the moderates are now trying to consolidate their ranks: and if it is a three years ago.

"Africa is dying," he said. "If things continue as they are, only eight or nine countries of the present 50 will survive the next few years."

When South Africa signalled that it was prepared to extend its trade agreement with Zimbabwe, that was an important signal to Black Africa that the policy of detente and conciliation might be worth watching.

All this aside, there are also compelling domestic reasons why "KK" should seek to turn things around. Facing unprecedented economic problems, against a revolution of rising expectations, he today faces the most testing time of his 18 years in office. To 6-million Zambians, the basic political issue is the standard of living, which according to one economist has declined 55 percent since 1970.

There is no way the USSR will or can rescue them from this. Kaunda's only hope is to turn again to the West. His economic links with the RSA are already strong. We are not only a major food supplier to Zambia, but about half his copper exports now go through East London.

Landlocked and 98 percent dependent on copper exports for its foreign exchange earnings, Zambia here is totally at the mercy of its Marxist neighbours.

Before the MPLA takeover in Angola, Zambia shipped 360 000 tons (49,7 percent of its total) copper exports to Lobita via the Benguela line. Unita has kept that route almost permanently closed since 1975. "KK" accordingly has more interest than most in seeing Savimbi gain political power in Angola.

Nor has the famed Chinese-built Tazara line compensated for the loss of Benguela. Zambia faces many problems both with the line itself and with harbour handling facilities at Dar-es-Salaam. Overall, then, there would appear excellent reasons for "KK" to seek conciliation with the RSA.

MR PW BOTHA of South Africa meets President Kaunda of Zambia in Botswana today.

It would not be an earth-shattering occasion, if relations between these nearby States were normal. But they aren't.

Mr Botha is leader of the White South.

Dr Kaunda heads a country which is a member of the frontline States.

Mr Botha's Government is all-White — and to that extent the democracy his country practises is limited by colour.

Dr Kaunda runs a one-party Black State — and there is no democracy whatsoever in his country.

All that the two may share in common at this point in time is a desire to ease tensions in this sub-continent and to help each other to coexist peacefully.

They certainly cannot tell each other how to run the internal affairs of each other's country.

Dr Kaunda, from time to time, does try to lecture us on what we should do, but his advice is usually that we must abandon apartheid and accept majority rule.

At the meeting today, we do not think Mr Botha will be willing to be lectured on the subject, face to face.

Nor do we think that Dr Kaunda would be as naive as to try and raise the issue of South Africa's domestic policies as part of any solution he might have in mind for some of the sub-continent's ills, though he might touch on our policies in a general way.

Mr Botha, for his part, might enlighten Dr Kaunda on the reforms his government contemplates, but speculation that he will make a "spectacular gesture" like "sacrificing" the Immorality or Mixed Marriages Acts can be discounted.

For one thing, Mr Botha would not trade any laws in South Africa for anything Dr Kaunda could offer.

South Africa's domestic policies are not negotiable.

Besides, Mr Botha said recently that he wanted the churches to reach agreement among themselves on what should be done with these two controversial Acts — and he would certainly not get Dr Kaunda involved as well.

Inspired suggestions from Lusaka that Dr Kaunda should be invited to address the South African Parliament are also unlikely to be implemented, since we cannot see under what circumstances, and for what reason, such an invitation would be issued.

One of the main reasons for the talks, besides a discussion of what Dr Kaunda has described as the explosive situation in Southern Africa, is Zambia's need to export more copper to bolster its failing economy.

Dr Kaunda may want Pretoria to provide additional transport facilities for these exports.

He may also want South Africa to help in the marketing of the copper, since the price of the metal has slumped badly and South African know-how may be needed to push sales.

As a quid pro quo, Dr Kaunda may be asked to support South Africa's desire for an early election in South West Africa without Swapo, if Swapo continues to reject the West's constitutional proposals for a two-vote system for the territory.

Be that as it may, the very fact that the two leaders are meeting for an exchange of views on matters of mutual interest is a development of the utmost significance for Southern Africa.

Mr Vorster's Victoria Falls meeting with Dr Kaunda seven years ago did not achieve any settlement at the time of the Rhodesian dispute.

But since then Rhodesia has become the Marxist-led Black State of Zimbabwe the Angolan border war has escalated tensions between South Africa and some of its Black neighbours have heightened, and Cubans, East Germans and Russians are meddling in the sub-continent's affairs.

Peace, and peaceful coexistence, are as important to Dr Kaunda in relation to South Africa as they are important in South Africa's relations with Zambia.

We hope the meeting between the leaders of the two countries will be fruitful —and that we will see a breakthrough that will be of great importance for both countries and the peoples of Southern Africa generally.

We wish them success in their discussions.

BOTHA MEETS BUSINESSMEN--Cape Town--The trustees of the Southern African Forum, an organisation of businessmen which brings foreign visitors to South Africa and encourages contact among businessmen of different race groups met the Prime Minister, Mr P.W. Botha, on Wednesday. The chairman, Mr Raymond Ackerman, said the meeting had been at the request of the forum and was a continuation of the Carlton and Good Hope talks between the Government and the private sector. He told a cocktail party held for the forum's present overseas guests that the discussions had included topics such as private investment in Black housing. The forum had brought 43 overseas guests to South Africa this year sponsored by private enterprise and the State. "We want to show influential foreigners that there is some right in South Africa," said Mr Ackerman. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 5]

SISULU HOSPITALIZED--Cape Town--Former African National Congress leader Walter Sisulu was again treated in the Groote Schuur Hospital on Wednesday. After undergoing minor surgery last week, his wife, Mrs Alberrina Sisulu, said yesterday. Mrs. Sisulu had travelled from Johannesburg to visit her husband in Pollsmoor Prison, near the Cape Town Suburb of Tokai. Sisulu, the ANC's former secretary-general, was transferred to the mainland from the Robben Island maximum security prison recently with former ANC president Nelson Mandela, and two other ANC prisoners, Andrew Mlangeni and Ramond Mhlaba. All four men were sentenced to life imprisonment at the end of the marathon Rivonia trial in 1964. Mrs Sisulu said she had visited her husband on Wednesday and had learnt he had undergone surgery for a minor renal problem on April 22. He had been taken to hospital again on Wednesday. In an interview, Mrs Sisulu said Mandela and the other two men were in good health. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 2]

DETAINEE'S PROBE--Pretoria--The Commissioner of Police, General MCW Geldenhuys, has ordered an "extensive investigation" into allegations contained in a memorandum submitted to the ministers of Law and Order of Justice by the Detainees' Parents Support Committee at a meeting on Tuesday in Cape Town. A statement from the SAP directorate of public relations said yesterday: "In view of the seriousness of the allegations, those making them will be approached for statements and be afforded the opportunity to substantiate their claims." The police statement also criticised the Press, saying that "some newspapers thought it fit to publish the allegations contained in the memorandum without ensuring the truth, or otherwise of the facts" after the ministers had expressed doubts about the allegations and the committee had conceded that some of its conclusions could have been erroneous.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 9]

NATIONAL SERVICE AGREEMENT--Cape Town--Die Kerkbode, official organ of the NG Kerk, has stated its support for an alternative, non-military form of national service as proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, Dr F. van Zyl Slabbert. The article said: "In his statement, Dr Slabbert called for legislation to make provision for alternatire national service for those who on moral grounds will not perform military service of any nature. "Dr Slabbert also referred to the increasing gap between the State and certain churches on matters concerning military service. A deepening of this conflict would be highly undesirable," Die Kerkbode said.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 8]

JUPITER STRIKE ENDS--The 1 700 workers at Maggie Rand's Jupiter plant ended their three-day strike yesterday when they returned to work with no concessions being made by management--but the 2 000 workers at Scaw Metals, in Germiston, continued with their stayaway. The ultimatum presented to the strikers at Anglo American's Scaw Metals, that they had to return to their posts by 3 pm yesterday or face dismissal elicited no response. Late yesterday afternoon they had still not gone back to work and management were locked in discussions and could not be contacted. At Haggie Rand, the story had a happy ending yesterday when the strikers streamed back to work. Although the strikers had been formally dismissed, management said that it had delayed paying them off in the hope that they would return to work. While no concessions had been made to the workers, there is one change in the status quo, in that the Metal and Allied Workers' Union (Mawu), who helped in persuading the men to return to work, had gained a lot of credibility and workers were signing up in droves. This has been welcomed by management who believe it could become a means through which future grievances can be aired and resolved. "We believe that this is a positive step. We welcome them joining a union and will be happy to hold discussions with their union on terms yet to be negotiated," said Mr John Sully, an executive director. No disciplinary action was going to be taken after the strike. "Our policy is not one of victimisation. We are only too happy they have returned to work and there is a basis for future negotiations," he said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 30 Apr 82 p 3]

NYERERE SAYS CCM ELECTIONS SHOULD FOLLOW ESTABLISHED PROCEDURES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] CCM Chairman Mwalimu Nyerere yesterday said established procedures should be followed in the coming Party elections to avoid recurrence of mistakes made in the 1980 Parliamentary elections.

Speaking during a question-and-answer session with students at the Kivukoni Party Ideological College in Dar es Salaam, Mwalimu said although the Party had decided not to take any action against leaders who were involved in elections misconduct in 1980, it would be watchful this time.

Those who contravened established procedures would be deemed to have deliberately done so and would have disciplinary measures taken against them, he explained.

He cautioned leaders against throwing their weight behind a particular candidate during the elections, saying if they thought him or her suitable over the rival they should show it through their votes.

Mwalimu pointed out that leaders who openly canvassed for the support of a particular candidat arguing that he or she was representative of a 'stand' (msimamo) were in effect finding fault with the Party.

Leaders who thought a particular candidate was unsuitable should voice their assessment during Party sessions held expressly to nominate candidates to stand in the elections.

Any leader who did not want the Party or government to have unsuitable leaders should utilise the nominating sessions to convincingly show the unsuitability of any of the aspirants, Mwalimu said.

The Party Chairman cautioned those seeking positions through the forthcoming elections to refrain from soliciting the help of leaders.

The students had asked Mwalimu to explain the root of the 1980 elections misconduct as evidenced in petitions with the country's courts. They had also wanted him to explain what action the Party would take against leaders proven to have been behind misconduct during the elections.

The Chairman said the Party was aware of the 1980 elections breach of procedures and codes but had decided against taking any action at this particular time because the leaders involved were many and the country was in the threshold of the Party elections which start in May this year.

"But we shall watch this during these elections", he said.

MINISTER APPOINTS GROUP TO PROBE CHARGES CONCERNING SIDO

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] The Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba, has appointed a three-member committee to probe allegations in connection with allocation of units at the Tanga Small Industries Development Organisation (SIDO) estate.

Ndugu Mramba said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the immediate task of the team which starts work on Monday, would be to look into allegations of favouritism and corruption at the estate.

The committee, chaired by the retired ambassador to Sweden, Ndugu Edward Mhina includes Ndugu Kijakazi Kyelula (National MP) and the Director of Planning in the Tanzania Investment Bank (TIB), Ndugu A.W. Mosille.

The Minister said the team would then trace the claims advanced by a Tanga Resident, one Abdallah Mwendapole, to arrive at a conclusion. He did not say when the committee would accomplish its task.

"They should take as long as necessary so that they come up with a thorough and concrete report," he explained.

The ministry, which maintains that it has received no complaints on the Tanga estate, had promised a statement on the matter early last month, but Ndugu Mramba said later they needed more time to study it.

The decision to form a probe team indicates that the claims could have some ground, but the Minister would not confirm this yesterday. This was his response to the claims and press reports, he said, adding that the idea was to establish the truth.

Ndugu Mramba said that apart from the press reports, the committee had no strong basis on which to take off. Mwendapole had not been traced and "it appears the press reports would be the starting point," he pointed out.

He appealed to the public to co-operate with the committee, which he said would conduct interviews with various people in the Dar es Salaam, Coast, Tanga, Kilimanjaro and Arusha regions.

The Minister also challenged Mwendapole to come out and talk to the committee in person or otherwise. "It would be a problem if he doesn't come out to give the details," he said.

Mwendapole alleges that a senior official in SIDO's Industrial Estates Division interferes with the allocation of units and that he corruptly reallocates projects awarded by regional committees.

Some of the projects, he further claims, have been converted into the ownership of SIDO officials, who run them through relatives or close friends.

The Tanga resident specifically mentions three units — for pencils, shoe-laces and grey sheeting — as having been converted by SIDO officials and a Director-General of a reputable parastatal organisation in Dar es Salaam.

Mwendapole maintains that the units are actually owned by the SIDO officials and that the grey sheetings project, registered under a Dar es Salaam address, belongs to a Director-General and a SIDO official.

SIDO has officially denied any knowledge of such irregularities as alleged by Mwendapole who has claimed that they are not confined to the Tanga estate. The organisation's Director-General, Ndugu Epaineto Toroka has said all units were allocated by relevant regional committees.

FIRST NEWSPRINT CONSIGNMENT DELAYED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] ARRIVAL of the first consignment of newsprint which was expected to arrive in Dar es Salaam yesterday, has been delayed by about a week.

The General Manager of Printpak (Tanzania) Limited, Ndugu Eberhard Kusaga, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the ship mv Krupskaya — carrying the newsprint is now expected at the Dar es Salaam Port around April 22 or 23.

Printpak, the printers of the Daily News and Sunday News, has been facing acute newsprint shortages on account of foreign exchange problems.

However, he was hopeful that his firm would be allocated with import licence for newsprint soon to avoid stoppage of the Government newspapers publication.

Printpak has virtually run out of newsprint and has had to rely on borrowings from the National Printing Company (Kiuta) which is covered by the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) import support accord.

SIDA said in a statement last month that arrangements were underway to cover the government newspapers under similar terms in which payment is made in local currency.

JUWATA COUNCIL TO CONVENE NATIONAL CONGRESS ON INCOME, PRICES

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 18 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] THE General Council of the Tanzania Workers' Organisation (JUWATA), which ended its three-day annual meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday, resolved to call an emergency meeting of JUWATA's National Congress to discuss the national policy on productivity, income and prices, Shihata reported.

The decision was unanimously reached at the end of the council meeting held at the Institute of Adult Education, Lumumba Street.

The National Congress will also discuss changes to be made in JUWATA's organisation following the amendments to the Party Constitution in January this year.

The council meeting, attended by 250 delegates, agreed that the National Congress, which will bring together some 600 delegates, should be held in a month's time.

The Party's policy on productivity, income and prices was announced in Zanzibar by CCM Chairman Mwalimu Nyerere, on May Day, 1980.

As a result of it, the minimum wage for urban and rural workers was increased.

According to JUWATA Deputy Secretary General Elias Mashasi, the Party policy on productivity, income and prices — 'already endorsed by JUWATA, would be thoroughly discussed by delegates of the National Congress.

The General Council, chaired by JUWATA's national Chairman Abubakar Mwilima, was closed by the Minister of State in the Vice-President's Office, Ndugu Aboud Talib Aboud.

Ndugu Aboud said JUWATA should re-dedicate itself to its commitment as a workers' organisation.

The Council meeting was also attended by the CCM National Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago.

THA MASTER WORKERS COUNCIL BEGINS THREE-DAY MEETING

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text] THE Master Workers Council of the Tanzania Harbours Authority (THA) began a three-day meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday, whose major agenda will be productivity in cargo handling, which fell by 23 per cent last year.

At the meeting, being held at the Institute of Finance Management (IFM), management and workers are expected to discuss the problem intensively and come up with possible solutions.

Earlier reports said the THA in the last six months of 1981 from July to December, handled 1,476,203 tonnes of imported cargo instead of the projected 1,910,450 tonnes.

In the same period, THA handled 545,610 tonnes of export cargo, instead of the projected 702,457 tonnes, the reports said.

The reports indicate that the THA failed tc reach its set targets because of the deteriorating world economic situation which caused a backfall in foreign currency reserves for most of the countries utilising the port facilities, leading to reduced imports and exports.

The increased utilisation of the containerisation method of cargo packaging by most shippers has created problems for the THA which does not have the facilities to cater for the new method.

In reviewing the development projects the Master Workers Council is also expected to study on-going development projects including the expansion of the Dar es Salaam Port entrance, the construction of berths 12 and 13 at the port, the construction of a Zambian cargo transit shed and the construction of a new oil jetty.

Other projects to be looked into include the construction of a lighter quay at Dar es Salaam port, the rehabilitation and expansion of Tanga port and the expansion of the quay at Kilwa port to cater for Songo Songo traffic.

Opening the session the Deputy Minister for Communications and Transport, Ndugu Guntram Itatiro asked the Workers Council to make full use of the democratic and representative facilities bestowed upon it to raise the productivity of THA.

Earlier the Executive Chairman of THA, Ndugu Peter Macha, also attending the meeting lamented the lack of any real corporate plan to guide THA in its activities since it began functioning four years ago.

ELEVEN DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS SELECT PLOTS IN DODOMA

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] ELEVEN diplomatic missions have so far selected 129 plots for embassies and residential houses at Dodoma, the new capital.

According to an official of the Capital Development Authority (CDA) the missions are those of Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden, the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG), Switzerland, Zambia, Zimbabwe and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

He also said that last week a Zambian delegation visited Dodoma to confirm a selection of seven plots at Medeli area for officers and housing.

Medeli is the diplomatic enclave on the Dodoma-Dar es Salaam road near the central business park of the capital master plan, he added.

On building activities at Dodoma the official said 608 houses of various sizes are being constructed at Mlimwa West, Hazina, Mlimani, Airport, Makole and Uhindini residential areas.

They are being constructed by public institutions, firms and individuals and they are valued between 80,000/- and 400,000/-. Construction is at advanced stages and most of them will be completed this year.

He also said 14 institutional blocks under construction are nearing completion.

The block belong to the National Bank of Commerce (NBC) zonal offices, the Community Development Trust Fund (CDTF), the College of Business Education (CBE) Dodoma wing, the Vocational Training Centre and the Tanzania Housing Bank (THB).

Others are the Capital Development Authority (CDA) extension wing, the National Provident Fund (NPF) regional office, 'Mji Mlezi House' to house the Speaker's Office, TANESCO regional office, CCM headquarters extention wing, the Christian Council of Tanzania (CCT) block of offices and an Audit Supervision Fund and extension of the Dodoma Hotel.

MINISTRY SECRETARY SAYS FUEL SITUATION NO CAUSE FOR ALARM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Apr 82 p 3

[Excerpt] THE government has ordered 30,000 tonnes of refined petroleum products, some of which will go to meet emergency fuel needs of the country. Some 5,000 tonnes are expected to arrive in Dar es Salaam next week.

Briefing reporters on the fuel situation, following an apparent shortage of premium petrol in the city for the last two days, the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Water and Energy, Ndugu Athumani Janguo said that this was due to closure of the TIPER refinery for routine maintenance.

He said the closure had this time taken longer than the normal three months, creating the need for emergency order of fuel. The remaining normal order was because TIPER cannot refine anough fuel for the country.

Ndugu Janguo did not specify how much of the 30,000 tonnes would go to meet emergency needs, nor did he say how much it cost the government to import the petroleum products.

However, he stated that the importation was being handled by the British Petroleum and Caltex companies.

Commenting on the shortage, Ndugu Janguo said only super and kerosene had been scarce at some petrol stations in Dar es Salaam. Both diesel and regular were available at all stations in the city. He added that most of the public transport vehicles utilise regular petrol and diesel.

The Principal Secretary said that there was no cause for alarm, for the situation would be under control by next week.

REQUEST FOR NORWEGIAN EXPATRIATES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] TANZANIA appreciates the work done by Norwegian expatriates and has asked for additional Norwegians to work in the country in other sectors.

This was said in Dar es Salaam by the Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal, when the Director-General of External Finance in the Norwegian Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Herman Pedersen, called on him, Shihata reported.

Ndugu Jamal said Tanzania was satisfied with the Norwegian expatriates whom he described as law-abiding, hard working and outstandingly co-operative.

During their discussions the two leaders reviewed a number of global economic issues affecting developing countries.

Pedersen is leading a six-man delegation to the annual consultations meeting between Tanzania and Norway which start in Dar es Salaam this morning.

A Treasury official told Shihata that the two sides would discuss the implementation of the 1982/83 projects worth 470 million/-, an increase of 55 million/- over last year's.

MPLA DELEGATION INVITED BY CCM ARRIVES FOR VISIT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Excerpt] SOUTH Africa can no longer occupy the whole of southern Angola because the Angolan People's Army (FAPLA) is continually beating back the invaders, a member of the MPLA Central Committee, Ndugu Alfonso Van Dunem, said in Dar es Salaam last night.

Talking to newsmen at the airport soon after arrival from Luanda, Ndugu Van Dunem said the Angolan army was now fully and better equipped to counter South African aggression.

"Each day, the FAPLA becomes better equipped and the people better mobilised, and the time will come when they will not permit even a single violation of Angolan sovereignty and territorial integrity", he said.

He said Angola counted on the mobilisation of brotherly and peace-loving countries behind its struggle against racist aggression.

He said the Angolans were convinced that if in 1975, shortly before independence, they kicked out South African troops in the north and south of the country, they would regain all the land now occupied by Pretoria.

"South Africa claims that its troops are in Angola pursuing SWAPO guerrillas, but that is a lie because the SWAPO militants are fighting in bases right inside Namibia", he said.

The truth, he added, was that the racists were out to destroy Angola's economy, and therefore the lives of its people.

Ndugu Van Dunem said many people had been driven out of their homes in southern Kunene Province, adding that the situation was particularly more difficult for children, the aged and students.

"South Africa insists that its troops have left the country; but this is not true. They are still occupying the southern part of Angola", he said.

He pledged that the MPLA would do everything possible to secure the return of the people of Kunene of their land.

Ndugu Van Dunem who is leading a three-man delegation to a ten-day visit at the invitation of Chama Cha Mapinduzi said he had also brought a special message for Mwalimu Nyerere from Angolan President Jose dos Santos.

The delegation is here to strengthen the relationship between the two parties and study ways in which they could collaborate in their strategies.

There were various Party officials from the Central Committee, the Party Headquarters and the Party Dar es Salaam regional office to receive the delegation.

Also present at the airport was the Angolan Ambassador to Tanzania, Ndugu Eusebio Sebastiao Junior.

This afternoon, the delegation leaves for Zanzibar for talks with the Deputy CCM Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Salmin Amour.

The delegation is expected to return to Dar es Salaam on Thursday morning and hold talks with the Principal of the Kivukoni Ideological College, Ndugu Bismarck Mwansasu.

THA INCREASES PRODUCTIVITY AT DAR ES SALAAM PORT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Apr 82 p 3

[Excerpt] THE Tanzania Harbours Authority (THA) has raised productivity at the Dar es Salaam port by 17 gang production tonnes per ship since the Authority's inception four years ago, THA Executive Chairman Ndugu Peter Macha said yesterday.

Ndugu Macha said that cargo handling at Dar es Salaam port now stood at 65 gang production tonnes compared to 48 gang production tonnes achieved in 1978.

He explained that the Authority had managed to attain this through efforts of the workers and the management and through improvement in supervision and work organisation.

"Despite the difficulties experienced by the lack of equipment and spare parts, the Authority has witnessed yearly productivity increases", he stressed.

Clarifying on cargo handling at the ports over the past year, Ndugu Macha said that there was a 23 per cent shortfall between the projected tonnage of imports and exports and the actual tonnage handled over the year.

PLAN TO SUPPLY LOME WITH CHARCOAL, FIREWOOD DESCRIBED

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 12 Mar 82 pp 5-6

[Article by O. Nadjombe, water and forests engineer]

[Text] The forestry situation in the southern part of Togo is characterized by the exhaustion of arborescent plant stands over an ever increasing radius around the city of Lome, and more generally, over the coastal zone as a whole.

This is the reason for the urgent need for a reafforestation project to supply the city with firewood and charcoal. The Forest Development and Industrial Reafforestation (AFRI) project with headquarters at the prefecture of Zio in Eto falls within this context.

This project, as well as that pertaining to the expansion of the National Publication Establishment of Togo (EDITOGO) has received the support of the Guarantee and Cooperation Fund of the OCAM, endorsing loans granted by the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation. The Seventh Admistrative Council Meeting of the Guarantee and Cooperation Fund was held last Wednesday and Thursday in Lome.

On these pages, we offer our readers an article by O. Nadjombe, water and forest engineer, on the plans to supply Lome with charcoal and firewood within the framework of the AFRI project, which he heads.

In this article, Mr Nadjombe provides an overview of the forestry situation in Togo, demonstrates the importance and the urgency of a reafforestation project, and describes the AFRI project.

The Togolese republic extends, from north to south, from the latitude 6 degrees north (with a maritime coast of about a hundred kilometers) and 11 degrees north, without much relief other than a central ridge which runs through the country from the southwest to the northeast, with altitudes never exceeding a thousand meters.

Under such conditions, one might expect a situation very favorable to forest vegetation of the evergreen variety in the southern half of the country, with a gradual reduction toward the drier formations beginning with the middle latitude (8° 30').

In fact, this logic is borne out in the northern half of the country, where the conditions seem rather similar to those found, for example, in the northern part of the Ivory Coast or the southern part of Upper Volta, where forestry problems are posed in the same terms.

In the southern half of the country, on the contrary, special regional weather conditions (less than 900 millimeters of rainfall per year on the (coast) are such that the environment is not as favorable to dense forest as one might presume a priori, despite rather considerable atmospheric humidity and a relatively mild dry season.

The high population density found in certain sectors of the southern and northern parts of Togo has long subjected its forests and savanna formations to serious onslaughts from itinerant farmers and the current practice of burning brush. The deterioration and disappearance of the forest cover is a phenomenon the existence, and in particular the consequences of which are extremely keenly felt at present, in terms of the poor farm weather years and the serious difficulties encountered in meeting the national demand for lumber and above all firewood and charcoal in the large population centers.

The regions most seriously affected are the north and the coastal band of the country, in which a certain aridity in the dry season, aggravated in a number of sectors by the relatively few permanent water sources and the violence of seasonal brush fires, are typical.

In these two regions, the question arises as to where the inhabitants of the rural zones can go in the near future to find firewood both for their own needs and to supply the urban centers.

The search for a policy to be pursued in this sector has been one of the concerns of the "New Advance" government, which has since 1968, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) and Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), in drafting a development plan for the forests as a whole. A forestry policy program was drafted with the short-term goal of guaranteeing the large population centers and the heavily deforested regions with firewood and lumber.

Importance and Urgency of the Reafforestation Project

The forestry situation in the southern part of Togo is characterized by exhaustion of the arborescent plant stands over an increasing radius around Lome, and more generally, over the coastal zone as a whole.

Where the satisfaction of its needs for wood products is concerned, Lome, the capital, is not currently experiencing a shortage in terms of supplies of firewood and charcoal. The market is in the hands of middlemen who provide the link between the producers and the consumers. However, a number of indices reflect a trend toward a greater scarcity of products and an increasing distance from the sources of production. Consumers complain of a substantial decline in the quality of charcoal, a certain result of the gradual disappearance of the varieties best suited to processing into charcoal. But the most important criterion is the increase in fuel prices: during a study made in 1974, the price of a 40 kilogram sack of charcoal was 600 CFA francs in Lome. In 1981 a price of 2,000 CFA francs for the same size sack was routine. In other words, in a period of 7 years, there has been an annual price increase rate of 33 percent.

Some believe that economic progress and rising income should lead to an increasing role for domestic energy sources better adapted to the urban environment (gas, oil, electricity), at the expense of the traditional sources (wood and charcoal).

It does not appear that this theory should be pursued, because these "modern" types of energy, even if they develop slowly, do not seem destined at all to replace charcoal, at least in the relatively near future, for financial reasons and also because charcoal remains the traditional fuel preferred by the Togolese in Lome. On the contrary, the spectacular increase in population with limited income seems to have increased the quantities of charcoal consumed substantially.

These considerations taken as a whole, pertaining to the demand for charcoal in Lome, the way in which this demand is met and the evolution seen over the past decade lead to the conclusion that this city, and with it the entire coastal region, are threatened in the very short run with a serious and lasting shortage of a basic product used by all population strata, the dwindling supplies of which would therefore pose a very serious economic and social problem.

Thus it is important to seek solutions to the problem before it reaches too acute a stage, for timber growth, rapid though it is for certain species, does not provide any prospect of an economically acceptable supply in less than a decade. Nor does it appear either that solutions based on other energy sources would be technically or economically acceptable before a number of years have passed. Thus we are led to seek a solution in reafforestation capable of providing charcoal of acceptable quality, apart from other products. This is the goal sought by the industrial reafforestation project, which is the subject of a financing agreement between the Republic of France and the Republic of Togo and a long-term loan of 700 million CFA francs granted to the Togolese Republic by the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation with the endorsement of the OCAM Guarantee Fund.

Description of the Project

The project calls for the planting of forest species characterized by rapid growth, in order to supply firewood and timber to the city of Lome, over an area of 4,000 hectares over a period of 8 years by the National Agency for the Development and Exploitation of Forest Resources (ODEF).

The project is being developed on state property, in the classified Eto forest, on an area totaling 10,920 hectares located 40-45 kilometers to the north of Lome, and several kilometers to the northwest of Tsevie.

Like all the classified forests, the Eto forest does not lie on the best farmland, but on soil with rather mediocre agronomic characteristics.

The varieties used will be the types of eucalyptus introduced into Togo during the UNDP-FAO project, which demonstrated their adaptability to the ecological conditions in the maritime region.

Plantings will be done at intervals of four meters by three meters, i.e., 833 trees per hectare. This selected spacing will make it possible to mechanize the work of maintenance and to obtain regular stands with a productivity equal to at least 25 cubic meters of wood per hectare per year.

In order to be able to establish the financing needs for the project more accurately as a function of its actual development, it was agreed to provide an initial and exact definition of the financing need for a 4-year period. As a result, in the course of the period between 1982 and 1985, planting will be done over 1,600 hectares pursuant to the following schedule:

1982--150 hectares April-May
1983--350 hectares April-May
1984--350 hectares April-May
1985--550 hectares April-May

The cost of this first phase of work, including the provisions for unforseen physical factors and increased costs and wages, is estimated at 1,083,000,000 CFA francs. On the basis of the income obtained from the sales of charcoal to be produced from the wood obtained in clearing operations, the net financing need comes to 1,013,000,000 CFA francs.

This high productivity reafforestation project the launching of which is underway is only partial in nature, in terms of the quantity of products to be supplied, and also temporary, because it represents only one link in a whole chain of general measures to be implemented to safeguard and rebuild the natural environment. It will serve mainly as a pilot project and as an example for other reafforestation projects of the same type.

AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM FOR 1982 OUTLINED

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 12 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] The development of agriculture retains priority among the nation's concerns.

In this year of the Fourth Economic and Social Development Plan, the main goals for agriculture remain self-sufficiency in food and increased production of export products, with a view to guaranteeing our economic independence.

These goals are to be reflected in:

A substantial increase in the production of grain (corn, sorghum, millet, rice), tubers (casava, yams, potatoes), leguminous crops (peanuts, beans), fruit and other vegetable crops; and

An increase in industrial product output (coffee, cacao, palm oil, soybeans).

Since our country remains an importer of meat, special emphasis should be placed on the development of livestock breeding in all its forms in order to reduce the deficit in this sector.

The results of the recent national seminar on the marketing of farm products have given new impetus to the activities of the Farm Products Marketing Office (TOGOGRAIN) and should lead to the creation of the national solidarity fund which is endorsed by everyone in the nation.

Thus what is needed is to maintain this upsurge of patriotism to allow our people to be protected from difficulties during the interim periods.

A. General Themes

The goal is to lead the peasant into rational farming, free of the main hindrance--manual labor, and the various causes of his low yields and production, and thus his standard of living.

The increase in production, particularly for food crops, presumes first of all an increase in yields per hectare. Agriculture involves a number of factors, and if only one is neglected, it becomes a limiting factor and production remains low.

We must become aware of the fact that our soil constitutes our capital, but that it is fragile.

Extensive agriculture, brush fires and erosion lead to its irreparable deterioration. The practice of good agriculture also means combatting this deterioration in order to prevent our country from becoming a desert in the long run.

Thus it is neceesary:

1. To Promote Cultivation With Draft Animals.

This makes it possible:

To intensify agriculture by increasing the surfaces exploited by the peasant.

To alleviate the difficulty of the peasant's labor (plowing, transportation, etc.).

To improve yields, thanks to the ease of implementing better cultivation techniques, safeguarding the fertility of the soil and increasing the efficiency of chemical fertilizers.

To deal with the problem of desert tracks and the scattered location of farm plots.

Finally, this will make it possible for the peasant to develop his livestock breeding activities and to obtain a more ready supply of meat and milk.

Through the introduction and development of cultivation using draft animals, the state is effecting a saving in foreign exchange for the import of oil products and tractors.

2. To Develop Local Water Projects.

Togolese agriculture is increasingly vulnerable to the vagaries of the weather (irregularity and the poor distribution of rainfall). Thus there is justification for the development of local water projects with a view to individual or collective irrigation of farm operations. The zones amply provided with surface water can make use of it by undertaking small development projects to provide permanent or supplementary irrigation. Those not so endowed are not necessarily without resources, because the water at greater depths is also a source of good quality water to a greater or lesser extent for this type of operation. By means of wells and draft animals, it is possible to irrigate considerable areas.

3. To Develop Livestock Breeding on Each Farm.

a) Small animals: poultry, rabbits, sheep and goats; and

b) Cattle, with a view to developing cultivation using draft animals.

4. To Provide Proper Preparation of Fields.

This should be done by mechanical means when possible, and using draft animals, which method should be developed increasingly.

The practice of burning off ground need not be excluded, but it should not result in brush fires.

5. To plant promptly.

This should be done using good seed, previously treated, with respect for the proper proportions, in other words close spacing adapted for each separate crop.

6. To Utilize Organic Manure and Fertilizers.

The land is a reservoir of nutritive elements for plants but its reserves are exhausted by successive crops. Land lacking in nitrogen, phosphorus or potassium does not provide good yields. The soil reserves must be renewed by adding fertilizer and organic manure to it. The state will maintain its 50 percent subsidy to assist agriculture.

Supplies of fertilizers must be obtained before the beginning of the agricultural season, and at the time the financial resources of the farm operation permit, in other words at the end of the marketing period.

7. To Guarantee Timely Crop Care.

This involves frequent weeding.

The most progressive peasants must be initiated in the use of weed killers.

8. To Harvest Properly.

This must be done at the proper time. Drying and conservation methods must be improved, to avoid the loss of part of the harvest. Farmers should wait to sell their harvests at the official markets.

(In 1980, the government took steps to prohibit the sale of crops not yet harvested.)

Surplus production should be sold to TOGOGRAIN, a body established by the state to regularize the marketing of grain and to provide a measure of security during periods of shortage.

9. The Peasants Should be Organized.

A number of groups exist and should be active, serving as a permanent training system based on visits to the fields of leading farmers.

Well organized groups will make access to production means and credit easier. The farmers who are members of such groups find that their results are improved and they themselves are asking for more assistance from the farm advisory services.

10. Access to Farm Credit Facilitates Production Development.

Repayment of loans must not be forgotten when they fall due.

Honoring commitments also means retaining the trust of the credit body, which will then grant new loans for the next season.

11. Development of Fruit Cultivation.

The same instructions should be implemented here.

12. General Farm Census.

This will cover the whole of our national territory. All peasants should cooperate closely, supplying the information asked of them. This operation will enable the government to assess the situation before undertaking further broad measures to benefit the peasants.

13. Combatting Brush Fires.

Our soils must be protected by a campaign against brush fires, which destroy their active elements and lead to their deterioration and conversion to desert land and erosion.

B. Regional Themes

1. Maritime Region

The maritime region should be the breadbasket for the capital.

Special measures include:

The professional organization of groups with a view to better marketing of products; and Undertaking cultivation using draft animals in suitable zones.

Measures pertaining to food crops include:

Increasing the yield per hectare;

Introduction of crop rotation; and

Recovery of the bottom-land for the cultivation of rice and traditional truck garden crops.

Other measures include:

Undertaking the renewal of coconut cultivation, using selected hybrid coconut varieties;

Introduction of small animal raising; and

The replanting of trees along roads and fields and in villages.

2. East Plateau Region

For food crops, the measures are the same as for the maritime region.

The professional organization should be production cooperatives, and not pseudocooperatives concerning themselves with marketing.

Producers' groups should be promoted.

Cultivation with draft animals should be intensified.

Animal care should be provided during the farm season.

Cotton production should be increased by improving yields, which involves:

Respecting planting dates;

Using fertilizers; and

Regularly carrying out the procedures necessary to protect the crops.

Yam cultivation should be developed.

The areas for the planting of peanuts should be increased in order to guarantee a supply for the oil plants.

3. West Plateau Region

For food crops, see General Themes.

Potato production groups should be encouraged.

For cotton, see the instructions for the East Region.

Wooded zones should be protected, and cultivation on steep slopes prohibited.

The following measures are suggested for the coffee and cacao sectors:

The SRCC [National Society for the Renewal and Development of Togolese Cocoa and Coffee Resources] should be guaranteed administrative support for the maintenance of old and new plantations, which should not be neglected, in order to raise the level of our exports.

The program for replanting cacao plantations in Litime should be accelerated, taking the necessary steps to implement the decree making the clearing and replanting of old plantations compulsory.

The use of fertilizers on coffee plantations should be increased, with two applications of 20-10-10 at 300 to 500 kg per hectare being undertaken each year. The quality of the harvest should be improved by:

More frequent picking, when the crop is fully mature; and Proper fermentation of the cacao, which should be stirred on the 2nd, 4th and 6th days, and by using the fermentation vats sold by the SRCC.

Screens and sheets made of plastic material or concrete areas should be used for drying and the harvest should be protected from humidity at night or in the event of rain.

The contract form of sharecropping should be used on the cacao plantations.

New plantations should be developed on good soil and careful and intensive cultivation involving five to six cleanups per year should be undertaken. Intensive practices = high yields = profitability = ease in repaying UCP loans.

The plantation groups in a given village should be organized in a precooperative union to facilitate access to production means (fertilizer, farm credit) and to gather harvests prior to marketing.

Participation in the campaign against Capsidae should be guaranteed on the cacao plantations, by assisting the SRCC teams and cleaning up the plantings prior to treatment.

In connection with palm oil, the maintenance of village plantings should be insured; and

The extension of village plantings in favorable zones should be planned such as to guarantee a better supply for the Agou oil plant.

IV. Central Region

Food crops, cotton, cultivation using draft animals, and yams; same instructions as for the plateau region.

New crops (potatoes, soybeans) should be encouraged.

V. La Kara Region

Food crops and cultivation using draft animals, same instructions.

Campaign against brush fires.

Encouragement of reafforestation, and avoidance of cutting young plants.

Maintenance of the existing small development projects.

Encouragement of potato cultivation.

Purchase and repayment for fertilizers.

VI. Savanna Region

In the food crop sector, cultivation using draft animals and the raising of cotton should be intensified. Same instructions.

A campaign should be waged against brush fires.

The harvest of hand-gathered products--shea tree seeds, nere and kapok--should be encouraged.

KAUNDA ASKS AFRICA, 'PROGRESSIVE WORLD' TO HELP ANGOLA

[Excerpt] PRESIDENT Kaunda yesterday appealed to all African nations and the progressive world to help Angola to defend itself against armed attacks by racist South Africa.

Angola was bearing the brunt of the liberation war in southern Africa because of its role as a Frontline state and, therefore, urgently needed help, he said.

Dr Kaunda made the appeal at State House when Mr Alfonso Van-Dunem Mbinda, member of the Central Committee of the MPLA Workers Party, called on him.

Zambia, he said, was aware that Angolans had endured a lot of suffering and sacrificed for Africa as a whole.

"The rest of Africa and the progressive world should assist Angola," the President said.

He described Mr Mbinda's visit as an epoch making one as it marked an important stage in the two countries' efforts to solidify their ties at party level.

Referring to the accord of co-operation signed by UNIP and MPLA, the President said this was a "symbolic" act which showed the desire to consolidate relations at grassroot level.

He welcomed the accord and stressed that the co-operation between the two nations should be a "peoples relationship" and not only one that encouraged top level contact.

The President called for regular exchange visits at lower levels, adding that a party was an important tool for development, hence the need to meet and exchange ideas.

He assured the Angolan delegation that he would always be ready and willing to co-operate with the Angolan government and the MPLA in development efforts of mutual benefit to both nations.

It was for this reason that the two nations should intensify their development efforts for the benefit of their respective peoples, he said.

UNIP SECRETARY ADDRESSES INTENSIVE GOVERNORS' WORKSHOP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] PARTY Secretary-General Mulemba has told off showy district governors and ordered them to change their leadership style.

The role of a district leader should not be ceremonial because if this were the case, "we shall be defeating the objectives of the Party."

The Party chief said this at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe when he addressed a two-week intensive governors' workshop.

The knowledge of district leaders must be functional, they must know off hand the membership of their district committees, the number of sections, branches and wards in their areas.

District leaders must also know off hand the location of all Party organs in their respective districts, what they were doing and what programmes they had drawn up.

"You must know the state of progress in each organ, the obstacles you are likely to face, the possible solutions in the politics of your ward, branch, or section, the economic, social, cultural, science and technology, defence and security fields of your districts."

This knowledge would enable them to take decisions and allow relevant organs of UNIP to perform their duties adequately while the people received ample and effective guidance from governors.

He stressed the need to make each organ and committee at all levels of the Party operational — thus implementing the spirit and letter of the Constitution.

Mr Mulemba said he had raised the points because of apparent laxity in paying attention to the dictates of the Party Constitution and setting the "wheels" of the Party in motion.

"In the main, our past performance has shown some signs of slackening in our operations. You still find, for example the local leadership being confused as to whether the membership of the Party is voluntary or not, whether this membership is renewable each year or whether it is permanent."

Mr Mulemba quoted Article Nine of the Constitution which stipulated that anybody wishing to join the Party must be supported by two of its members to the appropriate Party officials of the section where he shall be enrolled.

Regulation

"Yet, in the majority of cases, very few of us try to observe this regulation. The reason for this is primarily because we do not place emphasis on the section. We do not understand the tactical importance of section activities and organisation.

"Instead of strengthening the sections we tend to ignore them and hope to organise the Party at higher levels of the district. District organisation must result from the cumulative effect of section, branch and ward organisation.

"The people must look to the local leader for sanctuary and incisive or effective guidance. He must go to the people as man of the people. He must not wait for them to come to him, for he is there for the people and not the people for him. He must not wait for the crisis to develop. He must influence events in favour of popular wishes."

Mr Mulemba called for the reviewing and strengthening of the Youth and Women's leagues with a view to giving them effective leadership which was development-oriented.

Events

He urged sound administration at district level. He said with constant knowledge of events in the district, leaders must apply themselves to the situation.

"We should not work in isolation but bring the heads of the district leadership together. Consultation must involve all the people because we must get as many ideas as we can from the people we serve."

A district leader must be responsive to the people's basic needs and be seen to take decisions promptly with minimum paper work.

KAUNDA DESCRIBES JAPAN AS ONE OF NATION'S MOST IMPORTANT ALLIES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 p 5

[Text] PRESIDENT Kaunda warned yesterday that unless other developed countries followed the path of Japan in helping Third World countries a world-wide conflagration was imminent.

He said this at a State House luncheon he threw in honour of Japanese medical expert Professor Keiro Suraga who is behind the establishment of a neonatal and paediatric surgical centre at the University Teaching Hospital (UTH) whose foundation stone Dr Kaunda laid on Tuesday.

The President told the diners who included Japanese ambassador to Zambia Mr Eiji Seki that unless "we raise many more Japans from the developed countries" the world should expect an explosion.

Zambia was happy with her growing bilateral ties with Japan.

Although relations between the two countries were not warm in the past, it did not mean Zambia was not interested in Japan but that she had not yet understood the Japanese people.

Japan was one of the most important ally of Zambia.

Dr Kaunda said the Zambian society which was a humanistic one greatly appreciated the way Prof Suraga used his gifts by sharing them with others.

He hoped professionals from both countries would in future intensify cooperation among themselves.

Prof Suraga thanked the President for the remarks about him and looked forward to establishing more technical cooperations in future.

SOKO SAYS PARTY MEMBERSHIP RECORDS IN A SHAMBLES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] PARTY membership records are in a shambles, Freedom House administrative secretary and Member of the Central Committee, Mr Axon Soko, said yesterday.

"It is annoying for a Party such as ours not to be able to know its membership at a glance — to know the people that spearheaded the freedom fight — and indeed our dead heroes," he said.

In a lecture to the district governors workshop at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe, Mr Soko said Party administration was causing concern. In many cases, information on UNIP was not readily available.

"Records, in many areas of the Party are just not available. We do not have an information bank."

It was important that membership records are properly kept. "I at times wonder why some of us talk of declined membership when Party membership is for life in accordance with Article Eight of UNIP Constitution."

Explaining this article, Mr Soko said once a person was admitted into the Party, "he becomes a member for life whether he pays his 50n annual subscription or not — hence the need for taking pains to admit only the right and most reliable persons."

The payment of annual subscriptions and what used to be termed as renewal of cards or membership were now not conditions for membership. But, membership returns might include figures of those who had not paid their subscriptions at all times, and reflect those who held valid Party cards.

In accordance with Article 11 a person could only forfeit his Party membership in the event of death, expulsion or resignation.

"You, comrades, have in your offices Party voters rolls compiled in 1980. Has it ever occurred to you that those records are actually membership records? If so, have you checked on them to see if they have paid their subscriptions? Supervision is important."

On the lack of discipline in the maintenance of Party funds, Mr Soko reminded the governors they were responsible for this important aspect of UNIP administration and organisation.

"This is the area that is of great concern. Cards so far issued to many districts have not been accounted for although they have been sold as could be seen during the 1980 UNIP voters registration.

"What steps have been taken by you as supervising officers?" Mr Soko asked the governors. In some cases, we the leaders paid by the Party are culprits in this

CROWN CORK'S FOREIGN EXCHANGE SHORTAGE MAY CLOSE VARIOUS PLANTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] ZAMBIA Breweries and other bottling and food canning industries may close down within weeks if Crown Cork Zambia does not obtain foreign exchange to import tin plates quickly.

Thousands of workers could be declared redundant and the Government may lose revenue from Zambia Breweries (K5 million a month) if the situation is not rectified.

This prediction was made in Ndola yesterday by Crown Cork general manager designate Mr John Wiles, when commenting on the shortage of bottling tops Zambia Bottlers and Copperbelt Bottling Company are facing.

"The raw materials we have can only last for a few days and companies like Zambia Breweries and Zambia Bottlers will be adversely affected and might result in laying off workers. We have been told by the Bank of Zambia that there is no foreign exchange to enable us import tin plates," Mr Wiles said.

The halt in production of bottle tops and food cans would cause a chain reaction in the manufacturing industry.

Companies like Lyons Brooke Bond which had contracts with the defence force to supply tinned beef and other foods would not be able to continue to sell these products.

But Mr Wiles said all hope was not lost because the company was scrounging for at least 200,000 South African rand which would enable it to buy tin plates from South Africa.

He said this was the only way the company could avert a complete disruption of production.

"If we obtain this money we can bring in supplies within seven days because this is the nearest source. If we get the foreign exchange we have applied for the next consignment will arrive in July or August. So we are keeping our fingers crossed."

The company already owed its parent company in the United States more than K2 million and therefore did not expect any help. Its nearest sister company in Lubumbashi, Zaire, was facing similar problems.

The Crown Cork chief said despite these problems the company was still going ahead with its expansion programme involving K500,000 which included the extension of the Ndola factory and installation of new equipment to enable it start another line of products.

Manufacture

When the expansion programme was completed the company would manufacture cobalt drums at 100,000 a year for the mining industry and eventual export to Zaire.

Mr Wiles said his company had plans to manufacture oil cans for the oil companies which were importing these items from abroad. In this way the oil companies would save a substantial sum of foreign exchange which could be utilised for other purposes.

The company sympathised with the Party and its Government on the shortage of foreign exchange and conceded that other companies were facing similar problems.

But he felt that certain sectors of the economy such as the manufacturing industries should come second to institutions like hospitals which must be continuously supplied with drugs and medicines.

ZULU SAYS FREE HEALTH, EDUCATION SERVICES TO CONTINUE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 p 3

[Excerpt] THE policy of free health and education services to people will continue despite calls for the reintroduction of fee-paying social services, Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu said yesterday.

He described people calling for the reintroduction of fee-paying services as "capitalistic inclined" individuals in society.

Equality of opportunities to citizens was the mainstay of the country's political line.

"For participatory democracy like ours, the dissenting voice can only be taken as a minority opinion which is not representative of the aspirations of the people."

Mr Zulu was speaking in Kabwe when he opened the K65,000 Mahatma Gandhi memorial clinic built by the Kabwe Hindu Samaj.

The policy of the Party on social services was to provide health and educational services free of charge to all citizens, irrespective of the social and economic status of an individual.

Mr Zulu noted that the Party's political education on the need for people to use the services generously provided was bearing fruit.

"Gone are the days when people used to fear to go to hospitals and clinics.

The construction of the clinic was in line with the primary health care concept of making available basic but essential health service to the population by active participation of the communities.

UNZA GREAT EAST ROAD CAMPUS CLOSED INDEFINITELY

Students, Lecturers Arrested

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 pp 1, 5

[Excerpt] THE University of Zambia Great East Road campus was yesterday closed indefinitely and students were ordered to leave at gun-point.

Several students were picked up by police for allegedly having been ring leaders of an eight-day class boycott which led to the closure and others for trying to address their colleagues after the shut down decision was announced.

Police force public relations officer Mr Christopher Mhango could neither confirm nor deny the arrest of some students, saying although he was at the campus for about an hour, a comprehensive report on "the operation" was expected later.

Police officers searched the homes of expatriate lecturers at Hansworth Park and Marshlands Village in the early hours of yesterday.

An undisclosed number of lecturers were picked up for questioning and some were released later in the day.

According to lecturers and staff development fellows at the university village, police conducted their search in the homes of lecturers at 03.00 hours.

It was not clear by yesterday evening how many had been picked up but it was reliably learnt they included some Irish and Dutch lecturers who had been held at the central police for questioning.

Dutch lecturer Professor L. Nanta was picked up but a spokesman at The Netherlands embassy said the lecturer was later released.

The closure of the Great East Road campus was the last action the administration took after the students defied many appeals to end the class boycott in protest against the expulsion and suspension of their colleagues.

No official notification of the closure was communicated to the students apart from a Press statement from the university Vice-Chancellor Dr Jacob Mwanza which was announced on Radio Zambia early yesterday morning.

Students were awakened to a rude shock when armed military personnel went round dormitories giving orders through megaphones for "students to pack up and assemble at the graduation square on a double."

As the students packed their belongings, the campus was encircled by heavily armed soldiers, paramilitary, special branch and police officers.

Senior army officers slinging AK 47 rifles guarded the main university entrance from the Great East Road, while juniors took firing positions along Goma lakes.

Troop carriers were stationed at the showgrounds ready to go into action.

While some of the military personnel supervised the packing of students before bundling them on to the waiting UBZ buses to ferry them to stations in the city centre, those encircling the campus turned away all visitors who wanted to enter the campus.

Members of the Press were ordered to clear away. The newsmen had earlier been allowed entry by Lusaka police chief Mr Geoffrey Mukuma who was among senior police officers at the campus.

The students were each paid K20 travelling allowance.

In the statement announcing the closure, Dr Mwanza said the students had failed to yield to the administration's sustained pleas for reconciliation.

"All efforts aimed at dialogue have been rejected by the students and even the preparedness of the administration to grant concessions in relation to the fate of the expelled and suspended students have been brushed aside.

In view of this, Dr Mwanza said, he was left with no option but to close the Great East Road campus.

The closure of the Lusaka campus which would remain effective until further notice did not affect the Ridgeway and Ndola campuses of the university.

Dr Mwanza said President Kaunda, the Chancellor, had made an earnest appeal to the students to go home at once and stay there for at least three weeks.

The students' class boycott began on April 12 when they were expected to resume studies after their two-week vacation.

Their stand was in solidarity with four of their colleagues who were expelled and 15 others who were suspended.

The disciplinary action was taken against alleged indiscipline after the distribution of a circular by the student body condemning the establishment of the institute of human relations headed by Professor Lord Hatch.

The university administration said the students executive had clearly abused their freedom by their behaviour and arrogance against the public, property and legally constituted authority.

"The union executive has demonstrated this by issuing circulars framed in unrestrained language and by other acts of indiscipline, clearly contemptuous of university authority."

The students defied appeals to resume lectures from Minister of Education and Culture Mr Frederick Hapunda, Dr Mwanza and Kasuka Mwauluka.

The students threw out concessions made by Dr Mwanza on Monday, in which the expulsions were squashed and replaced by suspensions, while suspensions were to be reduced.

Situation on Ndola Campus

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] THE University of Zambia Ndola campus administration has decided to withdraw all catering services to boycotting students at the campus immediately until they resume classes.

A circular signed by the registrar Mr Christopher Muyangana says as a first and necessary step, all catering services to the students have been suspended.

"This decision will remain in effect until the students have returned to classes and have thereby earned the privilege of being maintained at public expense."

The registrar has reminded the students that the purpose and legitimate reason for their presence at the university was to learn.

"Without that purpose and without that reason a student has no right whatsoever to remain in the university."

The decision by the students union to boycott classes meant they had withdrawn the privilege of remaining in the university accorded to them by parents, guardians and the ordinary taxpayer.

"The action further means that the university has no good reason to maintain a student at public expenses.

"The university administration takes this opportunity to appeal to all students to return to classes at once. Boycott of classes is neither in the interest of those engaged in the boycott nor in that of the expelled or suspended students in whose name the present action is being taken," Mr Muyangana's circular says.

Continued boycott of classes would only lead to more serious consequences for the students.

The circular has been copied to the Vice-chancellor Dr Jacob Mwanza, his deputy, the principal of the Ndola campus Professor Mubanga Kashoki, the Lusaka campus principal, the university secretary, all deans and others.

But the students yesterday termed the decision by the university as the worst kind of blackmail.

A students union spokesman said the circular would be sent to all international and national human rights organisations as evidence of the university's breach of human rights.

"This is the worst kind of blackmail and a fundamental breach of human rights. The administration are using the food weapon to force us to submit, but we are going to resign ourselves to our fate until our demands are met."

If the authorities thought the food weapon would weaken the students' resolve, they were wrong because starving the students would worsen the situation.

FAMINE RELIEF AWAITING SUBMISSION OF DISTRICT COUNCILS' REPORTS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 21 Apr 82 p 5

[Text] THE Southern Province permanent secretary Mr Edward Himunyanga has said his office will map out a strategy to tackle famine relief operations as soon as district councils submit reports on their requirements.

Mr Himunyanga said in Livingstone yesterday that some councils had already submitted their preliminary reports and more information was being awaited.

He said that it was too early to disclose what action the provincial authorities would take to alleviate famine because nobody was sure of the total crop harvest this season.

He refused to disclose which areas were badly affected, saying his office did not want to discuss sensitive issues in the Press.

However, provincial political secretary, Mr Joseph Simuyandi said recently that Livingstone, Kalomo, Gwembe and Namwala districts would face serious food shortages because of the prolonged drought.

Mr Simuyandi appealed to district executive secretaries to submit their food requirements to Livingstone promptly to enable provincial leaders to plan the relief strategy.

Last week, Livingstone district council appealed to the Party and its government to declare the area a disaster zone because of a looming water and food crisis among the farming community.

ZCTU CHAIRMAN PROPOSES SINGLE SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] ZAMBIA Congress of Trade Unions has suggested the formation of a single social security scheme to be administered by the tripartite board of trustees consisting of ZCTU, Federation of Employers and Government representatives.

Making the proposals to the social security scheme commission of inquiry in Kitwe yesterday, ZCTU chairman-general Mr Frederick Chiluba said the scheme, once established, should be centralised to ease the processing of claims.

He suggested that existing schemes such as the ZNPF, the Workmen's Compensation, the superanuation fund, the civil service local conditions pension, the ZIMCO scheme and others should be merged into a national social security scheme

The new scheme should cover suspension, loss or reduction of income, old age, death, invalidity, sickness, maternity, workmen's compensation and premature retirement.

The scheme should cover the maintenance of children, housing and employment.

Under the scheme, all employees retired because of old age must be entitled to a life pension provided that their contributions were not less than five years.

The ZCTU suggested that retirement age should be 60 for men and 50 for women with a provision for workers, to opt for early retirement after 45 years.

Mr Chiluba suggested that a tax-free amount equal to six months pay should be paid to a worker on retirement to facilitate rehabilitation.

"All employees who retire after having made contributions into the scheme but fail to qualify for a life pension should receive all their contributions including the employers contributions with interest," he said.

In the event of a member of the scheme dying before retirement age, his beneficiary should get the death gratuity in addition to a life pension.

"In case of the wife being the beneficiary, benefits should be paid as long as she remains unmarried."

On medical care, Mr Chiluba suggested that all contributing members should have the right to choose where they should get their treatment.

"The present medical care is assumed to be free. But the social security scheme entails personal payment by way of such contribution. This is a direct purchase of services which we consider necessary."

He proposed that in the event of a worker being taken ill and hospitalised, he should be paid in full for a month after which such an employee should be taken care of by the scheme.

"A life pension should be paid to any member who is retired on health grounds, regardless of the period such person has been a member of the scheme."

The ZCTU proposed the introduction of unemployment benefits under the new scheme aimed at giving some relief to workers who are forced out of work or lose their jobs.

"To qualify for unemployment benefits, a worker should have been in employment and making regular contributions for at least five years."

On maternity benefits, Mr Chiluba suggested that the Government should introduce necessary legislation to ensure that the benefits conformed with the International Labour Organisation convention.

The ZCTU feels this is necessary because Zambia has ratified the ILO convention number 103 concerning maternity benefits.

NEW SYSTEM OF TAX PAYMENTS INTRODUCED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Apr 82 p 2

[Excerpt] WITH effect from the 1982/3 tax year a completely new system of tax payments has been introduced which will often result in tax being paid on income before it is received or even earned.

Transitional provisions covering payments for the tax year 1981/82 are included and are designed to give a small measure of relief in a period of acute cash flow problems.

● Transitional provisions for 1981/2 payments:

Under the previous rules provisional income tax was paid in arrears in two instalments on August 14 and December 14 subsequent to the end of the tax year. For the tax year 1981/2 there will now be four instalments in arrears on August 14 1982, December 14 1982, April 14 1983 and August 14 1983.

● Payments from 1982/3 onwards:

With effect from the tax year 1982/3 which started on April 1 1982 all businesses will have to submit to the Department of Taxes by June 30 an estimates of their profits as adjusted for tax purposes for the period forming the basis for the tax year ending the following March 31.

The tax, as estimated, must then be paid in four equal instalments on June 30, September 30, December 30 and March 30.

Adjustment

If, at any time during the tax year a business believes its estimate of tax due is "substantially incorrect because of changed circumstances" it must submit a further return setting out the revised figures.

A cumulative adjustment to the previous tax payments must be made when paying the next instalment.

The Commissioner of Taxes has discretion to extend the time for payment of provisional income tax beyond these dates.

The existing provisions of five per cent penalty a month or part of a month, for late payment of income tax are retained despite the fact that no business can give an exact estimate of its tax payment by the day before the end of its accounting period.

But if the final estimate of provisional income tax payable falls short of the tax ultimately assessed, after the submission of the annual tax return and accounts, by more than one third an additional penalty of ten per cent of the shortfall is to be levied.

Tax payments 1981/2 onwards:-

As a result of the change in tax payment the following payments must be made over the next 18 months.

			1st quarter for
June 30 1982	"	" "	1982/3
August 14 1982	"	" "	1981/2
Sept. 30 1982	2nd	" "	1982/3
Dec. 14 1982	"	" "	1981/2
Dec. 30 1982	3rd	" "	1982/3
March 30 1983	4th	" "	1982/3
April 14 1983	3rd	" "	1981/2
June 30 1983	1st	" "	1983/4
Aug. 14 1983	4th	" "	1981/2
Sept. 30 1983	2nd	" "	1983/4

It is likely that this schedule will lead to administrative difficulties and tax payers must take care to ensure that the correct returns are made at the appropriate time.

It should be noted that in 18 months the tax for two-and-a-half years must be paid and this will lead to serious cash difficulties in many businesses.

ZAMBIA RAILWAYS LIFTS BAN ON TRAIN TRAFFIC TO ZAIRE

Chewe's Announcement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA Railways has lifted its six-day ban on all train movements to Zaire with immediate effect, the railways assistant general manager for operations, Mr Bernard Chewe announced yesterday.

The ban was imposed on April 15 after a stoning incident by a mob of Zairean villagers on a Zambia Railways goods train near Sakania.

The stones damaged a locomotive engine loaned from the National Railways of Zimbabwe.

Asked whether vandalism had now stopped, Mr Chewe did not want to give details other than that Zambia railways management was always in touch with the Zaireans on telephone.

About 10,000 tonnes of Zairean cargo had been marooned at Ndola railway station after the suspension.

The goods included foodstuffs from South Africa.

The Zairean government has not yet replied to the Zambian Government's demand for the release of Zambians detained in Zaire.

Charge d'affaires at Zairean embassy, Mr Nkumbi Kasongo Kitenge confirmed this yesterday when he commented on unconfirmed reports that his country had asked to be paid compensation for soldiers said to have been killed in skirmishes with Zambian security forces at Sakania, reports ZANA.

Unconfirmed reports said Zaire had asked for K2,000 compensation before it could release Zambians being held in Lubumbashi and Kipushi.

Zambians Compensation Delay

[Excerpt] Meanwhile, The Zairean government will not be able to respond to Zambia's demand for the immediate release of its citizens being detained in Zaire until after the meeting of the regional Joint Permanent Commission to be held at the monthend.

Commenting on reports that Zaire was now demanding K2,000 compensation, Charge d'Affaires at the Zairean embassy Mr Nkumbi Kasongo Kitenge said his country had not yet replied to the Zambian government.--Zana/Mail Reporter

COHERENCE SAID TO BE LACKING IN FRANCE'S AFRICAN POLICY

Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Apr 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti: "France and Africa: Principles Versus Realities"]

> [Text] France's African policy, even though it seeks to be different from its 7-year predecessor in respect to principles, runs up against the same realities. France has recently experienced this in two crises, in Chad and in Central Africa.
> These two cases, among many others it is true, will be main topics of Mr Mitterrand's conversations during official visits in the second half of May to three countries where French policy does not face the same problems as in Ndjamena and Bangui: Niger, the Ivory Coast, and Senegal.

In the last 10 months, French-African relations have provided an example of the ingenuity that is necessary to reconcile not always glorious realities with principles whose generosity is hardly disputed. In these conditions, the fact that the wind of change has not blown very strongly on "our" Africa is not very surprising, nor is it surprising that some embarrassment or disappointment is being felt in Paris. Also, the French leaders sometimes give the impression of not knowing what they want. As for the leaders of French-speaking Africa--whom the French Socialists before coming to power had sometimes labeled "neo-colonialists"--they are far from reassured.

The Socialists have found Black Africa to be a terrain which does not suit them and for which 20 years in opposition had certainly not prepared them: local powers who are often authoritarian, and sometimes lacking much respect for human rights, tied to France by a complex of trade and cultural relations; at the official level, a kind of cooperation--or aid--closely related to French interests, both private and public; and finally, here and there, a little world of police agents, secret pullers of strings, and racketeers drawn by the real possibilities for quick profits.

This obvious interdependence between France and French-speaking Black Africa was at the outset of Mr Mitterrand's term much more "interwoven" than one would have believed. A third of our imported raw materials come from Africa.

A number of African heads of state have enough influence in Paris that people listen to them. Their knowledge of the French political scene is sufficiently thorough that when the need arises they know how to use us, just as we use them. Because toward the end of his term Giscard d'Estaing had neglected his African partners, he had the bitter experience of seeing his African "electorate" slide toward Mr Chirac.

With the election of Mr Mitterrand, the heads of African states were granted their wish to preserve their direct access to the president of the republic, thanks to the continuance at the Elysee of a counsellor for African and Malagasy affairs, in this case Guy Penna. It was also at their request that "cooperation" remained a ministry, even if the present minister Jean-Pierre Cot intends to direct his efforts to development issues and refuses to be the "minister for Africa."

Though announcing that existing agreements would be honored, the French Socialists came to power with the hope of introducing a little strictness into French-African relations: to base aid on "self-centered development" in order to put an end to the "recolonization" of the dark continent, as Mr Cot put it; to take care to warn regimes judged to be too brutal; and, above all, to avoid any familiarity with those heads of state with a tendency to personalize state-to-state relations. And finally, to dismantle certain semiclandestine networks, and in particular dissolve the "praetorian guards" which Paris had placed at the disposal of certain African capitals.

After nearly a year of Socialist administration, the balance sheet is rather disconcerting. President Mobutu of Zaire, the "bete noir" of the Socialist Party--which did not treat him kindly in its electoral program--was "rehabilitated" in November at the French-African summit conference in Paris, from which he emerged a big winner. Did he not send, at France's request and at U.S. expense, a battalion to Chad as part of the inter-African peace force? Though Libreville is no longer the capital of the mercenaries, ready to foment disorder in the neighbor country as happened in the past, the clever and vigilant President Bongo has thus far not visibly yielded to the pressures on him to moderate his single-party regime. During the past few months, he has reportedly shown a tendency instead to harden his attitude in regard to opposition members who have support in Paris.

Some Inconsistency

In Chad, although the OAU announced at the beginning of February that it favored negotiation among Chadians, Paris resumed, after only a week's interruption, its arms deliveries to one of the protagonists of the conflict, Goukouni Oueddei. It is understandable that in November, after the Libyan withdrawal, France was disappointed that Hissein Habre, not France's favorite, proved to be the best armed to fill the vacuum thus created. However, it is harder to understand, 5 months later, an obstinacy not only in blocking Habre's way but also in encouraging Goukouni Oueddei to reject a compromise, particularly when the "southerners" are more and more openly showing that they are tired of this war among northerners, in which they do not feel directly concerned. Now that the main objective--the Libyan military withdrawal--has long been achieved and does not seem to be in doubt, is it the objective of Paris, for reasons of pride, to cause the OAU to give up its proposal for negotiation among Chadians? We dare to believe, however, that it is still in the French interest to have peace restored as soon as possible.

In Central Africa, Socialist France maintains 1,200 soldiers--the former "barracudas"--after having had difficulty convincing the local head of state, General Kolingba, that France was not involved in Ange Patasse's abortive coup attempt at the end of March. We can understand the uneasiness of the French Socialists over the Central African military regime which has been in power since September 1981, even if the latter has shown a little more backbone than its civilian predecessor, former President Dacko. However, for France to listen to--and this did happen--a former foreign minister of Bokassa who had been in France for 5 months may have appeared even more ill advised in that the man exhibited, more than any ideology, a strong appetite for power.

Mr Ralite's Letter

The most recent example of misunderstanding between Paris and an African capital--in this case Yaounde--was the letter from Mr Ralite published Wednesday 31 March by LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS calling for the extradition, for humanitarian reasons, of Cameroon detainees. President Ahidjo--who has never been tender with his opponents--was even more angry because numerous Cameroonian exiles, like many other African opposition members in refuge in France, have access to the Socialist Party or the Communist Party.

Is there today in the leadership of the parties in power in Paris a will not to censure but to keep their distance from certain African regimes whose methods are deplored? This temptation is evident. The concerned ministers seem to regularly receive recommendations to this effect from militants. Each has his own view of Africa and how to deal with it.

Not without reason, the Socialist Party believed that the Eritrean resistance deserved a salutation. The fact that the party gave one publicly inevitably provoked anger in Addis Ababa and greatly embarrassed the French Government. Whether or not this was done in coordination with the Quai d'Orsay does not alleviate the naivete of the gesture: One cannot hope to strengthen relations with the Ethiopian revolution--as Mr Cheysson obviously wishes to do--while at the same time publicly condemning repression of the Eritrean resistance. Even if the right hand does not know what the left is doing--or the Socialist Party did not feel that it had to clear the matter with Matignon, the African leaders perceive it only as double-dealing and react accordingly.

Whatever the intentions, these initiatives are far from giving French diplomacy a coherent image. The fact that France has an "African vocation," just as French-speaking Africa has a "French vocation," can only emphasize the gap between the principles proclaimed by the Socialists and the realities which they face today.

The French Government has clearly not been able to overcome this contradiction, and recently, instead of reassuring, it has ended up by irritating a lot of people in Africa without apparently gaining any moral or practical benefit.

PRESIDENT INJECTS HOPE FOR ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 27 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by Monty Letshwiti]

[Text]

THE PRESIDENT Dr Q.K.J. Masire has expressed optimism that Botswana will start recovering from the current economic recession when the prices of diamonds begin improving on the London-based Central Selling Orgainsation (CSO).

Speaking at Orapa's closed mine township at a cocktail party organised for him by the Orapa and Letlhakane mine management on Friday night at the end of his tour of Boteti constituency, Dr Masire expressed hope that the trade recovery of the country's chief export earner, diamonds should begin in the near future. Botswana will then be ready to resume it's normal sales on the market.

Dr Masire returned to Gaborone on Saturday. When he spoke on private sector employment, the President reiterated that the employers should adhere consistantly with government's localisation programme. He warned that the programme should be seen to be effective and progressive so that it meets intended pace and purpose of the country's industrial and economic development.

Before his return to Gaborone at the end of the tour of Boteti area, the President toured the open mine in the closed township of Orapa and Letlhakane Mine, at the invitation of the General Manager Mr Thomas Whitelock.

When extending his invitation to the President to tour the mine Mr Whitelock praised Dr Masire for his tour of Boteti constituency, saying that it was a clear indication that democracy and consultation with electorate still prevails in Botswana through the Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) administration.

Mr Whitelock asured the President that the mining company in Orapa would work hard to make a substantive contribution to the economy of the country when diamond sales recover in the world market.

The President was given a tour of Orapa mine, where he saw the various dapartments of the mine such as the diamond sorting section, Training section, the Fitting and Turning workshop and the Electrical and Surveying sectors.

In the fitting and turning workshops trainees produce basic tools to be used during emergency mechanical breakdowns. However the mine still imports spare-parts from outside.

In the diamond sorting section, Mr Whitelock told the President and other dignitaries in the party, which included the Minister of Agriculture Mr Washington Meswele, as well as the Assistant Minister of Local Government and Lands Mr Lesedi Mothibamele, the D.C for Serowe Mr Marcus Rowland and local authorities, that Letlhakane diamonds were better than those of Orapa in quality.

In a quick interview at the end of the mine tour by the President, Mr Whitelock told BOPA that 92 per cent of the mine posts were localised and there were only 210 expatriates in the senior posts including outside mine employment.

Crisis Came Suddenly

[Article by Mishingo Mpaphadzi and Moty Letshwiti]

THE PRESIDENT Dr Q.K.J. Masire has said that Botswana's present economic crisis could not have been anticipated by the Government just like a human being could not anticipate his illness.

Speaking at Orapa on Thursday during his tour of Boteti constituency Dr. Masire refuted allegations that the present economic recession in Botswana had been brought about by the Government's carelessness.

The President told more than 250 people who attended the meeting on a chilly night, that the economic situation was bad because of external factors beyond the government's control.

The President explained fully that the country's revenue earnings from diamonds and copper/nickel matte were entirely dependant on external market situation over which government has no control, adding that the diamond market was weak because of high interest rates in industrialised countries.

On the Selebi Phikwe mine, the President said that the government was currently discussing with involved companies to re-schedule debts because of low prices of copper/nickel matte on the world market.

Dr Masire said that government had to assist in the provision of funds for Selebi Phikwe's operational costs to prevent the mine from closing down. He pointed out that closure of the complex could be a serious catastrophy to the nation because the people currently working directly or indirectly in the mine would be jobless.

The President again talked about imported inflation and explained that it was brought about by the fact that the country does not manufacture goods.

Dr Masire also spoke on government efforts and he reminded the nation that a Presidential Commission on economic opportunities was appointed last year and was expected to report to him next month.

Among the terms of reference, the commission was charged with examining the means of improving participation by locals in the national economic development. It was also charged with looking into ways and means of increasing job opportunities. In the question of localisation Dr Masire warned that because of lack of local skills, the country would have to recruit expatriates to run mines. However the President stressed that these expatriates were expected to train locals so that posts occupied by expatriates can be localised at the right time. The president in turn advised expatriates to work hard and to behave consistantly with the country's non-racial and democratic principles.

Dr Masire also mentioned in passing the new Financial Assistance Policy of P5 million set aside for potential borrowers.

In conclusion, the President encouraged Orapa residents to assist government in the prevention of diamond smuggling. He argued that diamond smagglers were enemies of the people because they sabotage the national economy.

BDP-BNF 'WAR OF WORDS' ERUPTS

BNF Attacked

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 22 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by Jerry Masete]

[Text]

FOUR CABINET MINISTERS, Mr Daniel Kwelagobe of the Public Service and Information; Mrs Kebatshabile Disele of Home Affairs; Mr Lesedi Mothibamele, Acting Minister of Local Government and Lands, and the Assistant Minister of Agriculture, Mr Utlwang Matlhabaphiri on Sunday addressed a political rally at Jwaneng on a number of different subjects, varying from labour laws, our economic position and the alleged use of force in case the BNF loses elections.

In a scathing and uncompromising attack on the BNF, the Assistant Minister of Agriculture, Mr Utlwang Matlhabaphiri who produced documents to support his statements, told the meeting that the Secretary General of the BNF, Mr Mareledi Giddie has recently said in Serowe that Botswana was not yet independent unless she was revolutionised as the case is with some African States.

The BDP Government was doing everything possible to ensure that the welfare of all Batswana develop and progressively and accordingly and if Batswana expressed their dissatisfaction of the Government, it was their right to out-vote the BDP Government in a general election, but not at all by any revolutionary means as the BNF wished, he declared.

It was abundantly clear, alleged Mr Matlhabaphiri, that the BNF Government would not allow the existence of a multi-party state, but would declare a one-party state, the moment it was voted to power.

The document states that fundamental freedom of human rights will be enjoyed by those who support the BNF. It was also disclosed that certain institutions in Kanye and Serowe are run under the leadership of BNF members and were not operating and functioning satisfactorily. He said Government was well aware of that.

Mr Matlhabaphiri also said that the BNF youth league wrote a letter at the University of Botswana and Swaziland working on what he described as their "Acting Programme."

Extracts of the letter were publicly read "(a) we will disrupt all Campus activities and bring about a situation of confusion there by desicrediting Professor Turner's administration, "(b) to deplore to coup the students' Representative Council and impose on its place a committee which will turn the University into a BNF string-held."

According to BNF pamphlet number one, Mr Matlhabaphiri continued, the BNF is not for Socialism. Here Mr Matlhabaphiri was pointing out the contradictions which exist in BNF documents and their own pronouncements.

Another speaker on similar line was the Minister of Public Service and Information, Mr Daniel Kwelagobe, who told the gathering that he was convinced that the BNF was committed to taking over the Government by force although this has always been denied by them on several occasions. Several paragraphs from BNF Pamphlet Number One and some other documents were quoted to support this view. This he added, was made known to Ngamiland residents by a BNF team which was addressing meetings in Gaborone. They said if they failed to win the elections, then they would use force.

In Gaborone, this was said in the presence of some Information officers who were covering the meeting but who chose to ignore this rather serious statement.

Mr Kwelagobe also outlined measures the Government was taking in view of both our economic problems and the drought. He said the Government had put aside P5 million Pula which Botswana could be offered to encourage development of local industries to save the country's foreign exchange earnings. Importation of goods, he added, reduced our foreign exchange earning and it was high time local industries were developed.

Any Motswana who embarks on a manufacturing industry, could be given up to ten thousand Pula freely, but strongly warned against fronting.

Anything that would save Botswana foreign exchange earnings and create job opportunities was welcome and encouraged in the country.

Mr Kwelagobe who once again denied the existence of a Labour Party told the gathering that there was no split in the BDP.

On the other hand, the Minister of Home Affairs, Mrs Kebatshabile Disele, who was answering a question, explained that the Socio-Democratic Party was not lawfully in existence. But rather the founders have had probation period, applicable to new workers, Mrs Disele said that the new entrants were being observed and studied by the employer before their confirmation on permanent basis or rejection. But she warned that the period should not be continued indefinately.

To qualify for gratuity, Mrs Disele said the employee should have remained under one employment for at least five years but also warned that premature departure from that employment would render the employee in forfeiture of his gratuity.

The Minister warned against "rolling stones" saying such people would never enjoy their benefits as expected.

Mrs Disele disclosed that any employee working more than 48 hours a week should be paid over-time accordingly. She also explained about women going on maternity leave and said they were being paid 25% of their wages during the period of maternity leave.

Turning to contractors operation far away from home, the Minister said they should be paid their monthly wages without false excuses and employers should ensure that accommodation, food and medical facilities were provided in such places. If there was an out-break of disease, it was the employers's duty she added, to ensure that the victim receive medical treatment and the employees should be transported back home after they end their contract. Property belonging to any contractor could be sold to defray arrears accrued in salary, she added.

Mrs Disele who also spoke of the Workman's Compensation Act, warned against workers who did not use their protective materials because they would lose their benefits if they were incapacitated during the discharge of their duties. She urged members of the Trade Union to educate newly-employed people about labour laws.

The Acting Minister of Local Government and Lands, Mr Lesedi Mothibamèle, who spoke on Botswana's economic position, said Botswana had in the past depended on cattle farming only and called upon people to make ventures in other economic avenues.

He pointed out that the budget speech delivered in February reflected the world financial position and Botswana was no exception in following suit.

On diamonds which he said were sold by the Central Selling Organisation, Mr Mothibamele said the buyers wanted to purchase them at take-away prices and it was preferred to stock-pile them rather than sell them cheaply.

He said BNF allegations that Government members stole money were unfounded. Government was doing everything to explore for more mineral wealth, he added. BOPA

Giddie Strikes Back

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 26 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

RECENT public condemnation of Botswana National Front (BNF) policy by Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) officials, is to pave the way for the imposition of a one-party state in Botswana, BNF officials have claimed.

In a telephone call to BOPA, BNF's Secretary General Mr Mareledi Giddie said: "The ultimate intention of the BDP government is to make one party state since the death of President Khama. The reasons being that contradictions within BDP representatives have developed to an unprecedented stage."

Mr Giddie who was reacting to recent BDP statement, further alleged that contradictions between the ruling class, the civil service, the army, the police and the intellectuals becoming the acute as revealed by recent statements made by two most unpopular young ministers."

In a recent political meeting, BDP officials denounced BNF policies and stated that the opposition party intended to use force to come to power if they lost the 1984 elections.

Cabinet Ministers; Mr Daniel Kwelagobe of the Public Servie and Information; Mr G.U.S. Matlhabaphiri, Assistant Minister of Agriculture; Mr Lesedi Mothibamele, Acting Minister of Local Government and Lands and Mrs Kebatshabile Disele, Home Affairs Minister, joined hands in condemning BNF's policies recently.

Responding to the accusations, Mr Giddie said: "BNF has no intention to engage in an armed struggle or to overthrow the government if we lost the 1984 elections. Our intention is to come to power through the ballot box."

He was quick to add: "If we lose the elections we will continue as we have continued. But we are convinced that we will win. If BDP does not cheat and if we are involved in all the preparations for the elections, then we will win."

Mr Giddie added: "All we are worried about is that BDP will declare a one party state. That is what we are worried about."

In response to a question related to the one party state claim Mr Giddie said: "If they do... if... they declare a one party state, then we will go back to the people who will decide. The people would fight for their rights. I don't know by what means."

Mr Giddie challenged BDP Ministers to "produce evidence of the recent statements" that the opposition party wanted to overthrow the government.

In the recent political meetings, Mr Kwelagobe had stated that he was convinced that the BNF intended to overthrow the government whereas Mr Matlhabaphiri had read from BNF's pamphlet No. 1, expressing that there would be no freedom of speech and no free press under a BNF government.

Mr Giddie claimed that Pamphlet No. 1 had been misinterpreted.

In the lengthy telephone message, Mr Giddie claimed that there was no democracy in Botswana.

"The BNF has always revealed to the people of Botswana that there is no democracy in Botswana because democracy is a class word, and if it exists it is only for the ruling class."

He denounced Government policies, stating that the problems which demanded immediate attention were drought, unemployment and Standard Seven drop-outs. "In a word, economic reorganisation of our country from a sorry mess."

"What the BNF is saying is that unpopular policies like ALDEP, TGLP, and massive salary increases for politicians are irrelevant to the present economic crisis. Let it be known that when we address ourselves to poverty on behalf of the masses of Botswana, it is not the same thing as advocating for bloodshed."

Mr Giddie said the BDP government must address itself to these problems and not the BNF "as if the BNF is drought or unemployment." "Failure to resolve these will only lead to BDP spokesmen making wild statements in attempts to divert the people's attention from the real problems as evidenced by the two most unpopular young ministers in the BDP government."

"However, the pretext of such statements is not far fetched. The ultimate intention of the BDP is to make a one party state since the death of President Khama."

Mr Giddie also said Botswana's problems were also due to "the contradictions between governments and international monopoly capital as revealed by Botswana stockpiling diamonds while diamonds of South Africa and other countries are still selling."

"These contradictions are qualitatively different and must be resolved by qualitatively different methods."

"But BDP sees BNF as the source of these contradictions. What BNF is saying is that the objective material conditions is a sore to every Motswana except the ruling class. It is most unfair that the Minister of Public Service and Information should attack innocent people like civil servants who cannot reply. He is actually supposed to protect them, especially that he is the head of the civil service." Mr Giddie did not expound on this.

He also alleged that some time back the BDP government withdrew 17 passports of BNF members under the pretext that the BNF party wanted to overthrow the goverment, "but they failed to prove that we were going to overthrow the government."

Kwelagobe Rejoinder

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 29 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by Alaudin Osman]

[Text]

BOTSWANA's political war of words was escalated by another attack on the opposition Botswana National Front (BNF) by the Botswana Democratic Party's Secretary General Mr D.K. Kwelagobe, this week.

Mr Kwelagobe, who is also Minister of Public Service and Information, was speaking in an interview, in which he hit back at a BNF reply to an earlier attack by the ruling Botswana Democratic Party (BDP).

He accused the BNF of "being dishonest and contradictory" in replying to challenges from the BDP to the BNF to clarify its stand on issues of national interest.

The latest round of attack marks what some observers of the political scene are saying is the start of the undeclared campaign running up to General Elections. Botswana's next General Elections are set for 1984.

The major issues that Mr Kwelagobe referred to in his latest broadside are:

BNF claims that the BDP was setting the scene for the imposition of a one-party state in Botswana;

BDP claims that the BNF has advocated the use of force to take over government in Botswana;

BNF opposition to the Arable Land Development Programme (ALDEP) and the Tribal Grazing Land Policy (TGLP);

BNF claims of contradictions in the relationships between officials of the ruling party, civil servants, police and army and BNF claims that the contradictions were being revealed by "two most unpopular Ministers."

Mr Kwelagobe said he dismissed "with contempt" claims by the BNF's Secretary General, Mr Mareledi Giddie, that the BDP was paving the way for a one-party state in Botswana. "We (BDP) are instrumental in the introduction of democratic institutions in this country. We are a shining example of this democracy internally and externally." Therefore BNF claims to the contrary were "utter nonsense and Mr Giddie was "talking rubbish."

Mr Kwelagobe reiterated instead that "the BNF believes in violence, even where violence is not necessary" in its attempts to gain political power in Botswana.

He referred to a public rally that was recently addressed by Mr Giddie in Gaborone. At that rally, after persistent questioning from the MP for Kweneng East Mr David Magang, said Mr Kwelagobe, the BNF Secretary General admitted that his party would resort to the use of force if it lost the 1984 General Elections.

"There were people who were present at that meeting who heard this." But, he said, BOPA reporters who were covering the meeting surprisingly failed to report that statement

Mr Kwelagobe added: "The BNF team currently touring the Ngamiland area has been saying the same thing. Mr Giddie cannot dispute these facts if he is an honest, popular Secretary General of the BNF."

He then went on to list a number of incidences in which he said BNF cadres had been involved in acts of violence. These included the Selebi-Phikwe strike in 1970; the University disturbances in 1974; the Madiba Secondary School violence in 1978 as well as the incident in which the Government seized the passports of some BNF youth who were going abroad "to undergo military training."

When asked to elaborate on this, Mr Kwelagobe explained: "Some parents appealed to Government to stop their children from going because they had information indicating the type of training their children were going for. This was announced by the Office of President at the time."

Mr Kwelagobe's attention was however drawn to a recently published interview in which Mr Giddie denied the accusations of violence. "BNF has no intention to engage in an armed struggle or to overthrow the Government if we lost the 1984 elections. Our intention is to come to power through the ballot box," he had said.

To this, Mr Kwelagobe retorted: "It is surprising because in his introduction to Pamphlet No.1, Mr Giddie had this to say in the last sentence of paragraph seven: '.... the writer urges the Batswana patriots not to worship the vote, not to regard the vote as a magic wand which solves all problems'.

"And again in paragraph ten of the same introduction, he says: 'The writer points out that the struggle in Botswana will not necessarily be solved by the vote because most of the problems are extra-territorial'."

Mr Kwelagobe maintained that the BNF Secretary General was being dishonest on this issue. He produced numerous other BNF documents and quoted extensively from the BNF's Basic Document of 1965, Pamphlet No.1 which said among other things: ".....it is childish and naive to stick to non-violence when and where the imperialists, the colonialists and their local henchmen use violence against the people."

Mr Kwelagobe went on: "They have also produced a document which they call 'Demonstrations' and which they use in guiding their cadres in demonstrations."

He again quoted a portion which stated '....if it is a protest demonstration e.g. protest against the government of the day, in such a case, it is really not necessary for the demonstrators to obtain a permission. The committee could just tell the press or inform the government of the intention to demonstrate. In this type of demonstrations, a clash with the police is usually inevitable.'

Presenting his argument further, Mr Kwelagobe noted that the BNF had lost every election since 1969. "They kept saying they would win in 1974, then 1979 and now ;they say they will in 1984. Yet from public pronouncements, they say they know of no example in Africa where there has ever been a change of government through elections. They went further to claim that they would never win the elections here because the BDP always cheated."

Mr Kwelagobe then challenged the BNF to say how it was going to win the 1984 Elections. "How would they get in if not by use of force, as supported by these various documents of theirs?" The BNF, said Mr Kwelagobe, has been virtually denouncing voting in meetings in otherr parts of the country.

He also rejected Mr Giddie's claims that the BNF's Pamphlet No.1 had been misinterpreted. Mr Kwelagobe had said the Pamphlet had clearly spelt out that the BNF would trample fundamental human rights in its determination to hold on to power. He quoted from the document again:

'....freedom of assembly in our national democratic state, will not mean nor include freedom for the enemies of the people to assemble in order to make plots. It will mean freedom for the people to assembly, to consult together in the interests of the national democratic front.

Likewise, added Mr Kwelagobe, the BNF Pamphlet also spelt out that there would be no freedom of the press since it stated '.... the press shall be in the hands of the united front because otherwise it would mean freedom of the monopolies or their intermediaries to influence public opinion against the interests of the national front.'

In all this, argued Mr Kwelagobe, the BNF "clearly indicates that this is only in its own self-interest but not in the interests of the state."

On the issue of ALDEP and TGLP, Mr Kwelagobe commented: "If these policies are unpopular, one would have expected the BNF not to have participated in them. But the record clearly shows that some big ranking members of the BNF are participating in the TGLP." He again quoted from the BNF manifesto which stated among other things that people would be encouraged to fence off plots and land and those who could not afford to, would be financially assisted through financial institutions.

"What are these chaps really opposing?" he asked. "Because that's exactly what TGLP is saying."

What emerges, he went on, was that not only was the BNF dishonest but that it was full of contradictions in interpreting in its own policies.

Mr Kwelagobe challenged Mr Giddie to come up with proof of contradictions between the BDP, police, army and civil servants. "These so-called contradictions between the BDP, police army and civil servants exist in Mr Giddie's imagination only.

"Those contradictions that we know of, " he added" "are within the BNF itself." Again, he quoted from a document entitled 'the History of the BNF.' This document states: 'In the course of the life of the BNF, three tendencies developed. (1) They developed a tribal group which favoured Bathoen II. (2) There was a tribal wing that favoured Makalaka as a group. (3) There was a pro East group. There were always serious struggles between these groups.

The pro Bathoen II group seemed to be and or pin its hopes in support from South Africa. Pressure from South Africa precipitated a meeting which took place in Lobatse. The proposals from the Bathoen group were as follows: (1) To change the name of the party from BNF to Botswana National Party. (2) To accept financial support from South Africa. (3) Dissociate the Party from socialist influences. The two groups had a vitual confrontation.'

Mr Kwelagobe added: "Therefore when Mr Giddie talks about out so-called contradictions, he must examine his own house first. The in-fighting in within the BNF and supported by their documents that they have various cliques and factions, fighting each other."

Hammering his point further on the issue of contradictions Mr Kwelagobe referred to a section in the Pamphlet No 1 which described Chiefs as the tool of the colonialists and missionaries for the oppression of the people

"Yet in the Botswana National Front Manifesto," he said, "it states that the BNF government 'shall encourage chiefs to receive their precolonial allegiance to their own people and not necessarily to the government of the day.'

He quoted further from the Manifesto '.... the BNF government shall not permit the existence of the House of Chiefs because the House of Chiefs is just a useless instrument to make the chiefs believe that they have political power when in fact they have not.'

Mr Kwelagobe went on to question even "the very sincerity of the BNF's pronouncement on its adherence to the socialist ideology." He said at a recent symposium at the Gaborone campus of the UBS, Mr Giddie advocated that socialism "was the only answer to solving our economic problems." This, said Mr Kwelagobe, was very different to what was in the Basic Document of the BNF. He quoted from the relevant section: '....From the nature of the problems caused by our struggle, from the tasks we have reviewed, it is obvious that ours is certainly not a socialist movement. Ours is a national democratic struggle. ....We shall submit that ours is a national democratic struggle and definitely not a struggle for socialism.'

He commented: "One wonders what it is that they are really struggling for."

Mr Kwelagobe was then asked to comment on the issue of the two 'unpopular Ministers.'

He replied: "I am assuming that he was referring to me being one of these Ministers because I was one of the two who attacked the BNF. But all I can point out to you is this: in the 1974 Elections, I got over one thousand people who voted for me. The 'popular' Secretary General of BNF Mr Giddie could not even raise nine persons to support his nomination paper - and that after five years of intensive campaigning prior to the 1974 Elections in a constituency of well over thirty-thousand people."

In Botswana, continued Mr Kwelagobe, there was no Gallup Poll with which to measure a politicians's popularity. So he did not know what yardstick the BNF Secretary General used.

"What I do know though," he explained "is that this 'popular' Secretary General of BNF, in the 1979 Elections could only raise three hundred and twenty-three voters in the same constituency, while the so-called unpopular Secretary General of the BDP raised five thousand four hundred and thirty-six voters in his constituency. That is how popular the Secretary General of the BNF is."

The Botswana National Front has two Members in the 39 Member House of Parliament. The Botswana Democratic Pary has 33 Members. One seat is held by the Botswana Peoples Party (BPP).

Other Members are the President Dr Q.K.J. Masire, the Speaker Mr Jimmy Haskins and the Attorney General, Mr Moleleki Mokama. BOPA

RISING YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT POSES EXPLOSIVE PROBLEM

Frightening Rate

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 21 Apr 82 p 2

[Article by Larona Sedimo]

[Text]

THE PROBLEM of youth unemployment is a world-wide phenomena and in Botswana jobless youth are increasing at an explosive rate, said the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Local Government and Lands Mr Peter Molosi. He was speaking at the General Meeting of the Botswana Youth Council at Tshiamo Primary School in Gaborone.

Mr Molosi said the reason behind this was basically because of the system of education which does not prepare pupils for self-employment; lack of enough secondary schools to absorb the primary school leavers; lack of job opportunities in Government and the private sector, and so on.

He said however, that Government was aware and did not ignore the plight of the youth generation, hence the setting of the Youth Council. He added that the economy did not allow our government to provide all what it desires for helping the youth, it gives out the little that it can. It should not be looked down upon but should instead be utilised to the best advantage of the youth, he advised.

Earlier, the Permanent Secretary had reminded the youth about the formation of the their Council, saying that it was launched by the late President Sir Seretse Khama in 1971 during the first National rally.

The Permanent Secretary was head of the Council constitutionally to advice government on all matters concerning youth.

He also reminded the audience that the country's economy was based on four National Principles: Democracy, Unity, Development and Self-reliance. He pointed out that it was on the latter principle that the participants had been called upon to examine conditions affecting youth in their respective areas, so that they could come up with suggestions to solve such problems.

He noted that the world was manifested with chaos and unrest caused by discontented youth and that Botswana was not an exception if hard work was not entered into to contain the trend before it became explosive.

Mr Molosi added that the concern for youth unemployment problems was based on the realisation on the fact that economic growth and welfare were positively-related. He however, added that if the welfare was measured in terms of increased income, increased levels of livings, amenities for all, then it was not being achieved in so far as the majority of the youth was concerned, due to the decreased access to economic opportunities.

He went on to say that youth unemployment and lack of production skills was critical owing to the fact that the youth in economic terms, constitute a greater portion of the potential labour force, and that it was that portion of the nation which the youth had voluntarily set to serve themselves.

"While the four development planning objectives are rapid economic growth, social justice, substantial and economic independence, Government has adopted two themes of employment to give the sharper defination to our development effort," he pointed out. He reminded the participants that it was upon their shoulders to assist the initiating and establishing projects which would benefit "our young ones."

He disclosed that the Ministry of Local Government was trying hard with its meager resources to do something for the youth. "For sometime funds had been provided to cater for the youths organisations, recreation and out of the school youths," he explained.

Mr Molosi however said that the funds could be fruitfully used if the youth could decide efforts as people at local level.

He urged the youth, especially those who fail to get training for employment, to be engaged in projects which would in turn generate income to enable them to fend themselves.

Mr Molosi also told his audience that Botswana as a member of the Commonwealth Youth Programme, was eligible for aid through the Commonwealth Youth Project Fund.

Stability Endangered

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 30 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text]

ACCORDING TO Mr Peter Molosi, Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Local Government and Lands, the number of young people looking for jobs is increasing at a rate which he called "explosive."

The word is apt. The situation is explosive not only in terms of sheer numbers but also in relation to its danger to the stability of this country.

According to a report written for the Institute of Development Management, "...reportedly half of the 1978 junior certificate graduates... failed to find jobs within a year of leaving school... this problem will snowball in the 1980s."

While the number of jobs available to Batswana is increasing, the work force is increasing much more rapidly. Not only that, but expectations are also increasing - and this is specially true among youth, who tend to be impatient, idealistic, and who have struggled to get educational qualifications because they have been told that these will enable them to get jobs.

Mr Molosi, in his speech given at the General Meeting of the Botswana Youth Council at Tshiamo Primary School in Gaborone, went on to remind his listeners that Botswana's economy was based on the four principles of democracy, unity, development and self-reliance.

It appears that the problem of unemployment youth needs drastic action to control the explosion. The youth and the government must work together, despite the differences of viewpoint which often arise between young people and mature ones.

The youth must concentrate on the last-mentioned of the four principles: Self-reliance. No government can provide everything for everybody without some effort on the part of the recipients. The young people, the jobless, must exercise imagination and initiative, they must create it.

While the youth must make an effort, the government must help by providing the right environment for such initiative. Surely it is better to allow backyard tailors, shoe repairers, car washers etc. than to have these people resort to theft. Licenses and permits should be easy and quick to obtain, and controls should not be so rigid as to suppress self-reliance.

Only this combined approach - self-reliance plus government support - can stop the explosion before it does too much damange. Only if we stop the explosion can we enjoy the other three principles, democrary, unity and development.

PROPOSED POWER PLANT PROJECT TO AID INDUSTRIALIZATION

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 23 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text]

SELF sufficiency in power is the key to industrialisation. It is fortunate that this simple truth has not gone unotinced by our policy-makers. That much was evident last week in Parliament when the Minister of Finance and Development Planning, Mr Peter Mmusi, skillfully manoeuvred a bill through the House, authorising government to go ahead with the proposed P235 million central power station at Morupule.

The Morupule Power Station, which should be ready by mid-1986, will provide Orapa, Francistown, Selebi Phikwe, Gaborone, Lobatse and Jwaneng with high voltage power supply. Consenquently the alarming rate at which the cost of electricity tends to rise in the country will be reduced. At present Botswana uses very uneconomic methods to generate power, which tend to frustrate government's attempts at rapid industrialisation.

The proposed central power station however will not only facilitate rural and industrial development but will also create jobs for locals. Another plus for the power station is that it will utilise an abundant local resource - the Morupule coal which is estimated to last for about 25 years.

It is also worth noting that the first phase of the project is already underway. The construction period will provide about 1 500 temporary jobs and after commissioning, the project will provide 400 permanent jobs. Ultimately most of the technical and managerial positions will be held by Batswana in accordance with Government Localisation Policy.

The electrification of rural areas will no doubt benefit generously from the central power station. Already 12 villages have electric power supply. The high voltage power that will be produced at economic costs from Morupule should in the long run enable the average Motswana in the rural areas to afford electricity.

Such a development will obviously change the lifestyles of our rural communities hopefully for the better. Easy access to electricity often has the added bonus of better communication technology, better central heating system and better cooking methods.

Another fact that should not be overlooked is that about P156 million for the Morupule Central Station will come from foreign investors. The sheer size of the amount vividly illustrates the deep rooted trust that foreign investors have in Botswana even at a time when we are experiencing serious economic problems and a severe drought. We can assure them that their money will certainly be put to good use.

CHIEPE SAYS MINERAL RIGHTS NO LONGER FOR BRITISH SA COMPANY

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 20 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

MINERAL rights in Lobatse Town Council and farms are no more reserved in favour of the British South Africa Company, infact, all mineral rights in Botswana are vested in the State in terms of section 3 of the Mines and Minerals Act (Cap 66:01).

This was the reply in Parliament from the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr M.P.K. Nwako on behalf of the Minister of Mineral Resources and Water Affairs Dr G.K.T. Chiepe to a Parliamentary question asked by the MP for Kanye South, Mr B.S. Gaseitsiwe. The MP wanted to know whether it was a condition that all minerals, precious stones, oil or other natural products found below the surface of the the land in Lobatse Town Council and farms is reseved in favour of the British South Africa Company and if any changes have been made to the contrary since Independence, whether any previous Certificates of Registered Titles have been changed accordingly.

Mr Nwako further told Parliament that the following trend of events have happened which culminated in the mineral rights being vested in the State. Mineral rights in Lobatse block were transferred from British South Africa Company to Tuli Exploration Company (Pty) Ltd., by a Notarial Deed of Cession of Mineral Rights No. 17/70 of the December, 1970.

Subsequently, Tuli Exploration Company and De Beers Consolidated Mines, Limited (the latter had been given exclusive licence to work on diamondiferous grounds in 1892 and 1932 respectively) transferred the said mineral rights to the Government by a Notarial Deed of Abandonment of Mineral Rights No. 6/73 of 29th June 1973.

The Minister said since there are private landowners in Lobatse block, Tuli Exploration Company executed an Act of Indenmity of the 27th June 1973 indemnifying the Government against any subsequent claims by owners of property in the Lobatse block.

"The title deeds of land owners in the Lobatse block are kept at the Deeds Registry of the Attorney Generals' Chambers and I have been informed that they are subject to Notarial Deed of Abandonment of Mineral Rights in favour of the Government whether an endorsement has been on them or not not," Mr Nwako told Parliament.

He said the above procedure was also followed in regard to the Francistown and Gaborone as well.

MATLHAKO GIVEN VILLAGE STATUS--A new settlement 'Matlhako' in the Tswapong South, has been recognised and accepted as a new village in the Central District. Declaring Matlhako as a village under the Tribal Act, the Bangwato Tribal Authority, Mr Mokgacha Mokgadi said that there were historical records dating as back as 1940s which indicated that the people had long settled there. More than 400 residents attended the meeting which was also addressed by delegates from the Central District Council. Among other senior local authorities was the Serowe District Commissioner Mr Marcus Rowland. The officials told the meeting that the village would be considered with others during the distribution of the district development projects but explained that the village would first have to be included in the District Development Plan like all other villages. The Matlhako residents were asked to be patient with the District Council while arrangement were still being made to bring services to them. [Text] [Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 26 Apr 82 p 3]

EFFECT OF NEW COUNCIL OF STATE EXAMINED

AB091250 Paris AFP in English 1123 GMT 9 May 82

[By Bernard Degioanni]

[Excerpt] Ndjamena, 9 May (AFP)--A major shake-up on Chad's political apparatus announced here last night has failed to dispel doubts that the country's internal crisis can be settled.

Observers pointed out today that the controlling 15-member Council of State which is created under the new measures will contain the same heads of rival factions whose failure to agree is at the root of Chad's troubles.

The new set-up of a Council of State and a subordinate government takes away from the faction leaders--who were ministers in the former transitional Government of National Unity (GUNT)--responsibility for day-to-day administration, but leaves them in control of general policy in all fields, including military.

The Council of State will be chaired by Vice President Abdel Kader Kamougue, head of the southern [word indistinct] Chadian Armed Forces (FAT), and its tasks are "conception, reflection, consultation and guidance", in the words of the official communique.

Its role is to "aid and assist the head of state (President Goukouni Oueddei) and the government in the internal policy of the state, the organization of the army and the administration", and notably to state "ways and means of achieving, maintaining and consolidating peace."

But official sources admitted that the lengthy negotiations between Colonel Kamougue and President Goukouni which resulted in the shake-up had not formulated a policy on dealing with the rebellion by former Defense Minister Hissene Habre's FAN, which occupies most of eastern Chad. "The matter was not even raised," the sources said.

President Goukouni has ruled out any negotiations with Mr Habre, while Colonel Kamougue and Ahmat Acyl, the GUNT foreign minister, are in favor of talks.

WEEKLY WRAP-UP OF NON-ENGLISH PRESS

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 2 May 82 p 3

[Article by Dereje Balcha in column "Views, Comments, Opinions"]

[Text]

An article in this week's issue of Serto Ader organ of the Central Committee of COPWE, highlighted the significance of May Day celebrations observed throughout the world yesterday for the 93rd time. The paper outlined the characteristic features that add to the significance of the event from the stand point of the struggle being waged by the working class to do away with oppression and exploitation in all forms and thereby establish a just social order.

In this connection, Serto Ader pointed out the ceaseless class struggle being waged by workers against bourgeois exploiters and the victories achieved in all aspects. The organ of the Central Committee of COPWE further highlighted the political and economic rights being enjoyed by workers in the socialist countries where the struggle of the working class has culminated in the realization of socialism.

As regards the spirit in which May Day is celebrated in various countries, the paper revealed that workers mark the day with added determination to maximize productivity on the one hand and safeguarding the gains of socialism from the plots of imperialism and other forces of reaction on the other. At this juncture, the COPWE CC organ made note of the impediments workers in the capitalist camp face in their efforts to realize the realization of justice.

Renewed Pledge

Serto Ader pointed out that since its very appearance on the world political scene, the working class has encountered numerous challenges aimed at impeding the fulfilment of its objectives. However, the paper added, since the working class had the guidance of tested and seasoned revolutionaries such as Karl Marx, Frederick Engles, V.I. Lenin and others, it has been possible to build socialism over one-third of the world today.

The struggle of the working class in the capitalist world and in developing countries today noted Serto Ader, is to further strengthen their unity of purpose and liberate themselves from bourgeois exploitation. in that respect, May Day is the appropriate forum that creates conducive conditions to realize this lofty objective, the COPWE CC organ concluded.

The Oromo language weekly, Barisa also commented editorially on the same subject. The paper noted the part played by the Ethiopian working class in the bitter class struggle waged over the past eight years, and said that this year, the working people of Ethiopia celebrate May Day with a renewed pledge and unflinching determination to realize the ultimate objectives ot the Revolution.

Barisa reminded that it is the eighth time Ethiopian workers are celebrating May Day and added that this year's celebration is historic in that it is being marked in the wake of the launching of the Multi-facted Revolutionary Red Star Campaign in Eritrea region, the campaign against corruption, wastefulness and individual enrichment in all their forms, and the restructuring and reorganization of Ethiopian workers and peasants.

The Oromo weekly went on to note that the strength of a revolution and supremacy of the working people is guaranteed only under the political leadersrip of the vanguard party of the working people. Barisa stressed the role the broad masses play in efforts being exerted in this direction under the guidance of COPWE. The weekly further noted that this is further strengthened by way of laying the economy on a firm socialist basis and creating a strong defence force.

Unity of Purpose

It stated that the struggle of the working people of Ethiopia has proved itself part and parcel of the international working class movement. The paper noted the readiness of Ethiopian workers to intensify the struggle for genuine peace, and said they observe May Day in the spirit of pledging their unity of purpose with the working people of the world and with unflinching determination to realize the objectives of COPWE.

Topical as it was, the Arabic language weekly Al-Alem, also focussed editorially on May Day celebrations. The paper outlined the various stages of social development and the subsequent emergence of capitalism in which the exploitation of man by man reached its highest stage. The weekly noted the struggle waged by the Ethiopian working class since its inception. Al-Alem further pointed out the part palyed by Ethiopian workers at the upsurge of the popular revolution in February, 1974, and in the course of its development since then.

A news report carried by the Amharic daily, Addis Zemen, revealed that a workshop is being conducted for vocational education teachers drawn from primary schools in the western and southern zones of the capital. According to the report, the workshop, lasting for sixteen days, covers areas in handicraft and Home economics and that the workshop would enable the teachers to put into practice the principle of "Education for Production, For Scientific Research and For Political Consciousness", by way of fully utilizing their creative abilities.

Another news report carried by the Amharic weekly, Yezareitu Ethiopia revealed that the Food and Agricultural Research Council has planned to offer prizes to individuals, groups or institutions that undertake worthwhile research activities with the view to helping improve the country's food and agricultural production.

This, the report noted, has an important role to play in the economic growth of the nation, improving the living standard of the people and in encouraging further academic development.

According to the report, the Council functions under the National Science and Technology Commission with the primary objective of coordinating extensive research activities in the agricultural sector.

GROWTH REGISTERED IN EXPORT TRADE

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 4

[Text] Ethiopia's export trade in 1980 has shown a 217-percent growth compared with that of 1972, it was revealed in the monthly bulletin published by the Ministry of Foreign Trade.

The publication reported that in 1972 Ethiopia earned 318 million Birr from exports, whereas in 1980 she was able to make 1,009 million Birr from this same sector, thus showing a marked growth in exports. The positive result is attributed to the ongoing national economic reconstruction and development campaign. The bulletin said the exports for 1980 have shown a 42 percent increase over that of 1979. The commodities exported to socialist countries have maintained an upward trend since 1978 which again demonstrates that Ethiopia's overseas trade has taken a healthy course in the post-revolution period.

According to the bulletin, most of the export business is now under government control unlike in the past in which the state had no meaningful role at all. The bulletin gave comparitive figures on the allocation of foreign exchange earnings before and after the Revolution. It said in 1973 only 149 million Birr was utilized for development purposes, while in 1980 around 440 million Birr has been invested for development undertakings. The bulletin stressed that the foreign exchange earnings used for capital investment has gone up by 195 percent.

As further indicated by the ministry's publication, in pre-revolution days a great portion of the country's foreign exchange earnings was spent on imports of consumer goods. It said that in 1972 Ethiopia imported goods valued at 467 million Birr and the value of imports in 1980 amounted to 1.4 billion Birr, showing a 200 percent rise in the course of nine years. Comparing the figures for 1972 and 1981, the value of the imports totalled 467 million and 1.4 billion Birr respectively.

The publication said that Ethiopia makes the bulk of its foreign exchange earnings from the export of coffee, hides and skins, oil seeds and pulses, which account for 80 percent of the total earnings. The remaining 20 percent is made from the export of horticultural products, meat and meat products, cattle, molasses, cotton and petroleum products. On the basis of figures released by the Ministry of Foreign Trade, Ethiopia earned around 493 million Birr or 59.5 percent of its total earnings from coffee, 94.6 million Birr or 11.4 percent from hides and skins, 74.4 million Birr from oil seeds and pulses, 66 million Birr from petroleum products, 26.6 million Birr from Chat and 10.8 million Birr from meat and meat products.

The bulletin emphasized the role played by foreign trade serving as the basis of the country's foreign exchange earnings. The bulletin said that Ethiopia has to increase its agricultural output both in quantity and quality so as to bolster the export sector. It said by increasing the volume of our exports the nation could be able to get adequate foreign exchange earnings which are very essential for speeding up the ongoing development process in the country. The bulletin stressed that the amount of coffee and other commodities meant for export should be increased and by diversifying exports the country could stand a better chance in the export market.

The bulletin said efforts should be made to boost the output of state farms and peasants producers' cooperatives, adding that the transport system plays an important role in facilitating the export and import business. The bulletin further stressed that the Ministry of Foreign Trade is taking all proper measures to promote this sector of the national economy.

MAINTENANCE OF WATER PIPE LINE UNDERWAY

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 29 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Text]

ASMARA (ENA) — The maintenance of water pumping generators and the renovation of the major supply lines is underway here to improve the city's piped water supply system.

According to Comrade Dr. Berhane Yeaynishet, Head of the Asmara Water Sewerage Department, the supply lines in the town are obsolete and that their revolution was necessary. Significant moves have been already made in this direction.

The maintenance of the water pumps is underway while a new dam is under construction to ensure dependable distribution, Comrade Dr. Berhane said.

Comrade Dr. Berhane noted that the Asmara Water Supply Department was unable to expand its services due to shortages of funds but that it has now started replacing old supply lines with finance capital acquired from the Overall City Council since the latter's establishment.

The town gets its water supply from the May Nefhi and Adi Nefas dams, the bigger of the two dams has a capacity of 26,000,000 cubic metres.

Meanwhile, contraband goods valued at 1,173,800 Birr were seized by finance police and custom inspectors between March 1981 and March 1982, according to Comrade Major Tafesse Haile-Mariam Head of the Regional Finance Police Department.

Goods estimated at 799,689 Birr were confiscated on the ruling of the court.

The items intercepted included various clothing, tape recorders, incense, children's clothes and night gawns and pyjamas. The goods were seized at various checkpoints in the vicinity of Asmara, Massawa, Keren, Adi Keyh and Mendefera towns, Comrade Major Tafesse disclosed.

In a related development, a certain Kidane Yohannes Tekle was nabbed at Asmara Airport while attempting to smuggle 8,550 U.S. dollars and 16,400 Birr from Jeddah. The case is pending investigation, according to Comrade Major Tafesse who also noted that a major effort is underway to curb illicit trade in the region.

RED SEA FLOUR MILL--Dekemahari (ENA)--The Red Sea General Flour Mill which was immobilized by the separatist elements for the past six years is now producing 100 quintals of flour and 15 quintals of biscuits and bread per day. The mill resumed operation last March following reconstruction in accordance with the Red Star Multi-faceted Revolutionary Campaign. 470,000 Birr has been invested in the effort, according to Comrade Habte Markos Mako, General Manager of the Ethiopian Food Corporation. Comrade Habte Markos pointed out that an additional seven million Birr is needed to restore the factory to its former working capacity. The Red Sea Mill resumed operation only with 22 workers working one shift. It was learnt that it will absorb 400 workers and produce 300 quintals of flour and 170 quintals of biscuits per day when in full capacity in the very near future. DISTRICT TRADE UNIONS--Addis Ababa (ENA)--The Central Executive Committee of the AETU/AEPA Elections disclosed here yesterday that district trade unions will be set up in the country from May 2 to 6. The Committee issued a statement in this connection giving details about the procedures in organizing district unions. It was stressed that the hard-won rights of the working people to organize themselves can be realized only when the people strictly apply the COPWE directives on the establishment of mass organizations. The Committee observed that electors should ensure that candidates meet the criteria set for prospective office-bearers. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 1]

DISEASE RESISTANT COFFEE--Jimma--The Gossa two unit of the southwestern coffee development corporation has produced 700,000 disease resistant coffee seedlings to be planted over 125 hectares this year, according to Comrade Tsegaye Bekele, Deputy Head of the Corporation. Comrade Tsegaye stated that the move to produce disease-resistant coffee was in line with the plan of the corporation to replace gradually old coffee trees with new disease-resistant varieties in view of the high cost incurred for the purchase of drugs to control coffee diseases. The Corporation planted a total of 176 hectares with disease resistant coffee seedlings in 1972 and 1973 according to the Deputy Head of the Corporation. OGUN GROUP FORMED TO COUNTER PROGRESSIVE PEOPLES ALLIANCE

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 1 May 82 p 5

[Text]

AN operation to counter the moves by the Progressive Peoples' Alliance (PPA) in Ogun State has been launched.

According to a leading member of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) in the state, Chief Bolaji Oseni, a committee had began work starting from the Ijebu Division of the state to present a catalogue of black records of the PPA leaders to the "down trodden" people of the state.

Speaking to the Daily Times at an exclusive interview in Lagos on Thursday, Chief Oseni, said the "counter-march" would be initially concentrated against the two architect of the movement — Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe and Chief Obafemi Awolowo.

He said that members of the new committee had visited Shagamu, Irolu, Ijebu-Remo, Akaka, Ilara and Omu to brief the people that the gang-up of the UPN, NPP, PRP and GNPP was not in the interest of the common people of the state..

He said that as long as the people continued to listen and obey whatever Chief Awolowo said they would continue to wallop in poverty.

Chief Oseni said they would continue to preach to the people that "enough is enough" and that it was time to think and "leave Chief Awolowo alone in the boat".

At Iperu, Chief Oseni said he told a large gathering that it was in the best interest of Ijebu people to join hands with the Federal Government so that the good things of life may be given to their sons and daughters.

Chief Oseni said the so-called alliance cannot work saying Dr. Azikiwe, would back out at the last minute.

RENEWAL OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL VIEWED

Papers Call for Normalization

AB201140 Lagos International Service in English 0930 GMT 20 Apr 82

[Press review]

[Excerpt] Two papers--the SATELLITE and the NIGERIAN TRIBUNE--comment on the need for Nigeria to normalize relations with Israel. The papers observe that the issue that led to severing relations by Nigeria and other OAU members with Israel had been amicably resolved.

In its own view, the SATELLITE believes that Nigeria and other African countries will be doing themselves a world of good by accepting the suggestion of the Israeli representative at the just concluded interparliamentary union meeting in Lagos by reopening diplomatic ties with Israel without further delay. The paper feels that opposing the normalization of relations with that country on grounds of her relationship with racist South Africa are only pretenders. After all, contends the apper, some countries like the United States, France and Britain, to mention a few, have links with the Pretoria regime and Nigeria still regards them as her best friends.

The TRIBUNE, on its part, opines that Nigeria will gain a lot from Israel in the field of agriculture and make her boost the green revolution program. The SATELLITE and TRIBUNE call on Nigeria, therefore, not to wait for the OAU before rescinding its decision to establish relations with Israel.

Nigerians at IPU Meeting Divided

AB181815 Lagos NAN in English 1430 GMT 18 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 18 Apr (NAN)--The Nigerian delegates at the inter-parliamentary council meeting were divided yesterday during voting on a resolution against Israel presented by a group of Arab states.

The Arab states had in a resolution urged other members of the council to put pressure on their respective governments to suspend military, economic and technological assistance to Israel, refrain from acquiring military equipment from it and to sever diplomatic links with the Israeli Government.

The resolution stated that this was in accordance with the UN General Assembly resolution against Israel.

When the chairman of the council, Dr Rafael Caldra, put the resolution to vote, Alhaji Idris Ibrahim, deputy speaker of the House of Representatives, voted for the resolution while Senator Wash Pam, deputy president of the Senate voted against it.

Alhaji Idris later told the NEWS AGENCY OF NIGERIA (NAN) that he voted in accordance with Nigeria's stand against Israel.

Senator Wash Pam, however, said that he voted against the resolution because he felt that some IPU member states should not be allowed to come together to destroy another member state.

"If you want peace in the Middle East, you should not sacrifice Israel for the Arab states," he stated.

Senator Wash Pam added that it was not the business of Nigerian delegates to call on other countries to sever diplomatic relations with Israel, "since Nigeria does not have such a relation with it".

Israel Asks Renewed Ties

AB160732 Lagos NAN in English 0723 GMT 16 Apr 82

[Text] Lagos, 15 Apr (NAN)--The leader of the Israeli delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) spring meeting in Lagos, Mr Moshe Shasal, today called for a renewal of diplomatic relations between Nigeria and Israel.

Mr Shasal who was speaking with newsmen said that Nigeria's reason for the breaking of diplomatic relations with Israel "no longer existed".

He recalled that in 1976, the OAU called on its members to sever diplomatic relations with Israel because "Israel and Egypt were at war."

"Israel and Egypt are now on very friendly terms, we have diplomatic relations with each other so the reason for the OAU stand no longer exists," the delegations leader said.

Mr Shasal said that if Nigeria reopened diplomatic relations with Israel other African countries would do the same because of Nigeria's special position in the continent.

He urged members of the National Assembly to visit Israel on "parliament to parliament basis".

APPROVAL GRANTED TO PERMIT NON-AFRICANS IN ADB

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 May 82 p 14

[Text]

LUSAKA. — Nigeria yesterday reversed its opposition to the admission of non-African states to the 50-nation African Development Bank, clearing the way for an influx of capital from major industrial nations.

The Nigerian Finance Minister, Mr Victor Masi, told the ADB's 18th annual meeting in Lusaka that his country had bowed to a call from poorer African members for equity participation by the developed world.

The change by Lagos ends a three-year controversy over non-regional membership during which Nigeria, Algeria and Libya, all oil producers, argued that participaption from outside the continent would dilute the ADB'S African character.

Algeria and Libya have yet to comment on Nigeria's move, which means there is now an 82 per cent majority in favour of a capital opening of the bank to non-regional countries.

Conference sources said 24 non-African countries, including the US, Japan and most Western industrialised nations had given notice of their intention to join the ADB.

The sources said their admission could increase the bank's capital rom 2,7 billion dollars in 1981 to six billion dollars this year.

Mr Masi told the meeting that Nigeria's change of heart had been influenced by a deteriorating quality of life among millions of people in other African member states.

The views of these 47 more-needy countries, the economic and political stability of which formed the centrepiece of Nigeria's foreign policy, could not be overlooked. Sapa-Reuter.

ECOWAS ALIENS NOW SAID TO TOTAL 1 MILLION

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 1 May 82 p 6

[Text] About one million aliens from member countries of ECOWAS are now residing illegally in Nigeria.

It has also been discovered that the aliens were aided and abetted by some unscrupulous Nigerians and foreigners.

The Minister of Internal Affairs, Alhaji Ali Baba, revealed this at a Press briefing in Lagos.

He further disclosed that in Lagos are alone, about 1,000 of such people were deported between January and March, 1982.

Alhaji Ali Baba pointed out that ECOWAS citizens found guilty of criminal offences or who were not in possession of necessary travel documents were either deported or repatriated.

He said that as part of efforts to contain the situation, an alien's registration exercise was being carried out by his Ministry to ensure that illegal immigrants were ejected from Nigeria.

The Minister had earlier revealed that in 1982 alone, 648,901 foreigners entered Nigeria through the recognised immigration control posts out of whom 456,391 were males and 182,510 females.

He stated that citizens of ECOWAS countries entered Nigeria in thousands daily in search of jobs, some with valid travel documents while many entered illegally through unrecognised routes where there were no immigration control posts.

He said that a Training School for Immigration Officers had been established in Kano to improve the standard of the officers in the performance of their duties.

He added that up to date about 180 Senior Immigration Officers had benefitted from advanced immigration courses in the United States of America.

Alhaji Baba emphasised that the training programmes were necessary because the duties of an Immigration Officer were very challenging and required skill, tact and discretion.

NIGERIANS REPORTEDLY HARASSED IN GHANA

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3377, 26 Apr 82 p 1169

[Text]

The Nigerian High Commissioner in Ghana, Chief Adedeji Adeyemi, is concerned over the fate of Nigerians in Ghana. Chief Adeyemi told seven Nigerian journalists who were in Accra at the invitation of the Ghanaian Government to assess the situation in the country, that many Nigerians came to his office daily to report that they were either arrested, harassed or molested by Ghanaians. he said that an average of 150 Nigerians and Ghanaians came to the Commission daily asking for emergency travelling certificates to leave Ghana.

The High Commissioner said he would soon embark on a country-wide tour to find out what is happening to Nigerians living in various parts of Ghana. He said that more than 3,000 Nigerians had left Ghana since the beginning of the country's present military government. Chief Adeyemi said that the Nigerian High Commission had refused to accept the body of a Nigerian who was allegedly shot at an Ashiama military checkpoint, until a post-mortem examination was carried out. A number of Nigerians told the News Agency of Nigeria that some people who claimed to be Ghanaian soldiers had beaten them up, ransacked their homes and taken away their money.

In another interview, Flt-Lt. Rawlings assured Nigerians living in Ghana that they were safe to go about their legitimate business without fear of molestation. He told Nigerian journalists that he was shocked at the allegations of attacks on Nigerian residents in Ghana and immediately directed his aides to investigate the allegations and bring those involved to book. One of his aides who was present at the interview, Mr. P. A. V. Obeng, said he was only aware of the case of the 20 Nigerians who were arrested in Tema during an anti-black market operation.

Flt-Lt. Rawlings said he was going to get details of the circumstances under which a Nigerian was shot dead, and added that if the man was actually killed the soldiers did not shoot him because he was Nigerian. He, however, did not rule out the possibility that some people might be taking the law into their own hands to tarnish the image of the government. "Our enemies have means of infiltrating the system to cause chaos and confusion among the people."

Flt-Lt. Rawlings said that the Nigerian High Commission in Accra had yet to inform him about the plight of Nigerians in Ghana, and warned that any Ghanaians caught molesting people would be dealt with severely.

BILL TO ABOLISH EMIRATE, TRADITIONAL COUNCILS BRINGS VIOLENCE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 7 Apr 82 p 1

[Article by A.B. Tapidi]

[Text]

FORTY persons have been arraigned by the police before a Yola magistrate's court in Gongola State following a violent demonstration in the state House of Assembly last Wednesday.

Thousands of people from the Adamawa Emirate Council had staged a demonstration against a bill tabled before the Assembly which had sought to abolish the existing emirate and traditional councils in the state.

All the arrested persons are to remain in prison custody until April 14, this year when the case would be mentioned in court. No plea has been entered into by the arrested persons.

The prosecution had earlier prayed the court not to order pleading in the matter, to enable the police complete their investigation.

The arrested persons were suspected to have participated in the violent demonstration.

The defence counsel, Alhaji Murtala Aminu, said yesterday that he would appeal to the high court againt the ruling of the magistrate's court not to grant bail to the accused persons.

Meanwhile, a unit of the anti-riot policemen is now keeping vigil at the premises of the state House of Assembly, the house of the speaker and the deputy speaker as well as the legislators' quarters at the Bekaji Housing Estate.

When contacted, the state's police commissioner, Alhaji Adamu Abubakar Gombe, indicated that more people might be arrested in connection with the case following some disclosure by the arrested persons during police interrogation.

The police commissioner appealed to the people of the state to be calm and 'give peace a chance.'

NATIONAL CENSUS PERSONNEL TO TOUR OYO STATE

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 30 Apr 82 p 7

[Article by Biodun Awani]

[Text] The National Population Commission is to embark on statewide fertility survey in Oyo State lasting for a period of three months in selected towns and villages.

The survey known as the "Nigeria Fertility Survey," is part of an international population research programme whose objective is to assess the current state of human fertility in the state.

Announcing this in Ibadan while briefing members of the Press on the proportions made so far the commission was the state resident commissioner of the national population commission, Chief S.O. Omitade.

Chief Omitade disclosed that the exercise which is also being conducted in some 62 countries would afford the commission the opportunity to determine the "internationally comparable and scientifically design surveys of fertility behaviour."

He stated that according to the Director of the Commission, Mr F.J. Falodun the survey was not being conducted in response to concerted international research efforts alone, but also in realisation of the primary role of fertility in the dynamics of the Nigerian population.

Fertility

He reiterated that the commission had to tow the line of others because in many developing countries fertility currently constitutes the most important demographic phenomenon which determine the size, growth rate and components of population.

Also, he further noted that with the survey the commission would be able to design the beginning of a series of efforts made by the newly established commi sion in its bid to collect reliable demographic data for the country as a whole.

APPEAL FOR MORE NEWSPRINT PUBLISHED

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 1 May 82 p 2

[Editorial in the column "Comment": "Do Not Ban Newsprint"]

[Text] As part of the measures to revamp the ailing nation's economy, the President Alhaji Shehu Shagari recently ordered the banning of some imported goods into the country while stricter import restrictions were imposed on some other items.

In the face of the banning fever which has engulfed the entire nation, media chief executives have appealed to the Federal Government not to place newsprint on the list of banned or restricted items for importation. They made the appeal recently in Calabar when they called on the Cross River State Governor Dr Clement Isong.

This clarion call could be seen as a pre-emptive gesture to forestall the ban on newsprint coming into the country. The chief executives contended that a mere rumour of such import restrictions was enough to make some newspapers to fold up, leading to loss of job of thousands of employees and hardship for their families and dependants.

If anything, newsprint is one of the items which we consume extensively but which the country does not produce. It is on record that apart from the projected newsprint factory at Itu Cross River State yet to go into production and a few others in the western states, Nigeria does not have any other newsprint manufacturing industries which means that our numerous newspaper industries are largely dependent on imported newsprints. And here lies the justification of the media chief executives apprehension.

Newsprint could be likened to perform to newspaper industries the functions which motor parts perform to car assembling plants in the country. Besides, the role of newspapers in the development and growth of any nation is in invaluable. Newspapers as part of the media of mass communication gap existing between the government and its citizens. Their functions are even more apparent now that Nigeria has adopted a new system of government--the presidential system.

The return to civilian administration has prominently given an unprecedented boost to newspaper industries. Almost each of the 19 States of the federation now has a government-owned newspaper which is established side by side with privately owned papers. Governments use their papers for explaining their programmes and successes to the electorate.

Therefore it is obvious that untold hardship will be brought upon newspaper houses if a ban or even any type of restriction is imposed on the importation of newsprint into this country. There is no doubt that if a ban is imposed on the item, many newspapers including some financed by the government will unavoidably fold up. Furthermore, the few that could bear the hardship will be constrained to increase the price of a copy of newspaper to meet up the concomittant increase in cost of production. The ultimate consequence will be a reduction in newspaper readership which in turn means circumscribed dissemination of information and news.

It is, however, in the light of the above analysis that the federal government should drop the idea of banning importation of newsprint if it had ever conceived such idea. Such a ban should only be thought of when we are sure that the newsprint industries in the country have gone into production enough to meet our local demands. But as it stands now more than 90 percent of Nigeria's newsprint used in our newspaper industries is imported so any ban on newsprint would be disastrous for the industries.

The federal and state governments should also start thinking seriously of establishing more newsprint industries in the country. World market survey has already indicated a continual increase in the price of importation of a tonne of newsprint. But meanwhile we join the media chief executives in appealing to the federal government not to ban the importation of newsprint.

ECONOMIC SITUATION BLAMED ON FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 1 May 82 p 3

[Article by John Nwosu]

[Text] A law maker from Anambra State, Mr Linus Okonkwo has said that lack of sound economic programme, inflated and overloaded contracts and indiscriminate issuing of licences were responsible to the nation's economic disaster.

Mr Okonkwo, who is the chairman of Education Committee of Anambra State House of Assembly believed that it was not enough to blame it all on the so-called oil glut and international conspiracy.

Mr Okonkwo made these observations in a statement released in Enugu yesterday on the nation's economic situation.

He said that if it were in a more advanced country the Federal Government should resign for her economic mess.

The law maker called on the entire people of this country to read the handwriting on the wall by rejecting the National Party of Nigeria for woefully plunging the country into an unprecedented economic chaos.

He recalled how the NPP had, during the campaign period, appealed to the entire people to reject the NPN at the polls because of its poor economic programme and how the NPP had soon after the breakup of NPN-NPP accord warned the NPN controlled federal government against shameless flouting of the Nigerian constitution and extravagant spending of the nation's funds in destabilizing state governments.

He pointed out that when Chief Obafemi Awolowo and other well meaning Nigerians alerted the nation that our economy was ailing, Federal authorities dismissed the warning and gave the impression that all was well with Nigeria.

Mr Okonkwo noted that now that the truth had come out, it was incumbent on the NPN controlled federal government to tell the people of this country what had happened to the nation's economy.

He therefore appealed to the entire people of this country to support the Progressive Peoples Alliance in its effort to return this country to sound economic footing.

ECONOMIC SITUATION BLAMED ON LOW PRODUCTIVITY

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 30 Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial in the column "Front Page Comment": "The Economy and Workers"]

[Text]

THE current down-turn in the national economy has been blamed mostly on the oil glut, the world-wide economic recession, smuggling and the uncontrolled appetite of Nigerians for foreign goods. One vital factor that seems to have attracted little attention is the lackadaisical attitude of most Nigerians to work and their unproductivity.

The level of economic progress made by any nation, just as that of the individual, depends largely on the hard work and dedication of her people. Unfortunately, most workers in this country are not at all interested in productivity. They are essentially pre-occupied with the easiest way of making money. One obnoxious notion that has gained considerable acceptance in Nigeria today is the craze to-get-rich quick and not necessarily through hard work. People are more interested in what they can get from the nation and not what they can give to the nation.

This probably explains the amazingly low productivity of most Nigerians which is manifested by the fact that there are many people who make money in this country without doing any work. Nor do such individuals contribute anything to the national cause in any form or shape. This attitude of grab and grab has accelerated the culpable pace of loitering, absenteeism, truancy and other attributes of idleness among Nigerian workers.

Low productivity has militated against mass production of manufactured goods and raw materials for exports, which could have enhanced the country's foreign exchange position. Worse, is the saddening fact that Nigerian workers who refuse to produce anything substantial, travel round the world capitals to buy up anything imaginable, thereby depleting the nation's hard earned foreign exchange.

Now that the national economy is in bad shape, Nigerian workers should radically change their lousy attitude to work. This is the opportunity for us to embrace the national objective of self sufficiency. We have a lot to learn from the Japanese whose devotion to duty has turned their once backward country into super-industrialised state even when Japan as a nation is not endowed with natural resources like oil and so on.

This country has the human and material resources to transform it into a developed country, if the workers can only become dedicated to their duties, and if we can develop the spirit of national consciousness.

The current economic situation demands that all workers should make some sacrifice. The only way to do this, is for them to substantially improve their productivity and de-emphasise self in all national considerations.

OPPOSITION OF UPN TO ECONOMIC MEASURES NOTED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 1 May 82 p 40

[Text]

THE UPN does not believe in the measures introduced by the Federal Government to salvage the nation's economy.

Mr. Gomwalk, made his party's stand known while speaking to the DAILY TIMES.

He accused the Minister of Commerce of being reckless with the issuing of import licences for cars and other goods, saying "this contributed largely to our economic problems."

The UPN scribe maintained that with the measures introduced to save the economy goods would now cost more.

He also remarked that the increase in fuel prices would result in increase in transportation fares.

Asked if it was not improper for Chief Awolowo to have travelled abroad to announce that the country was broke, sometime last year, Mr. Gomwalk said, it was the UPN students abroad who asked Chief Awolowo during his holiday abroad some questions on the nation's economy and he had to say something.

He denied that Chief Awolowo addressed the students with a prepared speech on the economy.

On Chief Awolowo's letter to the President on the economy, Mr. Gomwalk admitted that it was unfortunate that the letter was leaked to some newspapers before it was meant to reach the President.

He said the important thing, however, was that the UPN warned the government earlier on the economy.

Mr. Gomwalk said that the passing of the Enabling Bill, was wrong but said that the UPN respected the position of the UPN members in the National Assembly in voting in favour of the Bill, to avoid accusation of an attempt to obstruct the President from solving the economic crisis.

He said that Nigeria should pull out of OPEC to be in a better position to determine her oil prices without any interference.

REACTION NOTED TO AGE REQUIREMENT FOR STUDENTS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 30 Apr 82 p 7

[Text]

IS age synonimous with wisdom?. It is saddening and outrageous that the government now want age to be an added criterion for admission into higher institution.

It is pertinent to note that barely after the Federal Government's white paper on the Belgore Tribunal of prosecution, members of the Federal House of Representatives allegedly went on rampage, breaking the country's mace. And is it not the same House of Representative that members have had course to engage in gun drawing? We are bound to ask if age is synonimous with wisdom.

These are the words of the University of Students Union at a press conference in Ibadan. The students who were reacting to recommendation of the Belgore Tribunal that certain age limit may be introduced to the admission policy of students to the University noted that by this recommendation, the Federal Government is questioning the basis of Scholarship and intellectual development in this country adding that it borders on the point of democracy in our educational system.

They described the recommendation as a most illiterate and uncivilized submission adding that it was another form of quota system based on age which according to the students, is a superstitious and a deliberate attempt to place a barrier on quest for knowlege and scientific development.

"We are thus calling on all democratic bodies including the Press to save this country from this looming calamity" they lamented.

AUSTERITY MEASURES REPORTED HITTING STEEL INDUSTRY

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 1 May 82 p 5

[Text] Steel Minister Malam Mamman Ali Makele on Thursday in Lagos announced that the austerity measures recently announced by the Federal Government had also hit the steel sector.

He told the consultative meeting of the board chairmen and general managers of steel companies that there would be no supplementary appropriation for them this current financial year.

Malam Makele said that more funds would not be released to the steel companies "until you have prepared detailed 1982 budgets based on your allocation for the year as approved in the Appropriation Act."

The minister therefore warned the steel chief executives to exercise utmost prudence in the disbursement of funds.

The chief executives were putting heads together in Lagos on how to harmonise policies and exchange ideas on the management of the steel companies.

Malam Makele hinted that future release of funds would be made subject to a proper accounting of previous releases.

He said decision would soon be taken on scheduling and phasing over the execution of new projects.

But nonetheless, steel was still the priority of the present administration by ensuring that all projects were executed, Malam Makele said.

Malam Makele said that N900 million was spent on steel imports last year while a rise of over N2 billion was envisaged in 1990.

The minister announced that prices of locally produced steel will soon be fixed.

He said that the success of steel project depended much on the co-operation of all the employees of the steel parastatals.

He charged the steel chief executives to further demonstrate unrelentless efforts towards achieving the targets set for the steel complex by the Federal Government.

NEW PROTOCOL WITH YUGOSLAVIA--Nigeria and Yugoslavia have signed a new protocol for closer co-operation following the successful completion of the fifth session of their joint commission which ended in Lagos on March 26. Under the accord, the two countries will co-operate in joint venture enterprises for the manufacture of agricultural equipment and tractors, electrical components and parts, meat production and processing, dairy and poultry production. They will also engage in the development of fresh water fish-farming and training of Nigerians in modern fish-farming techniques. The protocol also provides for the training of personnel, supply of equipment and materials and provision of Yugoslav experts and lecturers for the Nigerian universities in the fields of technology, agriculture, engineering and the sciences. Besides, there will be organisation of fairs, seminars and exhibitions with a view to promoting and diversifying trade between the two countries. Mr Don Okpara, acting general manager of Tin Can Island port, a few kilometres outside Lagos, has reported that the port now has more and improved facilities which include 10 berths each 25m long, self-sufficient in water and electricity supply. Mr Okpara gave this report while conducting the Yugoslav President, Sergej Kraigher, on a tour of the port during the latter's recent visit to Nigeria.

UNIVERSITY EXPANSION PLANS DESCRIBED

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 23 Apr 82 p 2

[Text]

S A universities: looking ahead to 2000

Extracts from a report by Neville Jullian which appeared in the March 3 edition of Growth

In 1976, a huge "physical" explosion was under way at South Africa's White universities. Projects costing millions of rands were completed between 1970 and 1975 and universities in 1976 were either engaged on projects or had planned schemes for the future to a total value of more than R140 million.

Between 1964 and 1973 there was a much increased birth-rate of Whites, but after 1973 there was a sharp decrease. The older universities have to take this situation into account in future planning.

Ranged against this anticipated trend is the fact that Natal and Cape Town universities have recorded big increases in the number of Black students — Natal's numbers (not including medical school students) rose from 524 in 1980 to 612 in 1981; and Cape Town University says the percentage increase has risen by 2.5 compared with 1979 figures (Black students there make up 11.9% of the total student population compared with 5.15 in 1971).

Another fact is that financing universities from public funds is unlikely to increase in the immediate future and universities will continue to battle against the rate of inflation.

For instance, the University of the Witwatersrand will need R25 million over the next five years if it is to continue expanding and producing the vital educational function for the future growth and stability of South Africa.

Natal University will need R60 million in endowment funds over the next few years when State subsidies become a thing of the past. Professor Pieter de Villiers Booysen, vice principal, has appealed to large national and regional businesses to support a trust fund set up to eliminate an expected deficit of R1 million a year.

Plans are under way for a R25 million building expansion programme for the Durban, Pietermaritzburg and Medical School campuses.

The University of the Orange Free State has a number of major projects between 1980 and 1987. A number of the costly items are new library, R8 8[illegible] 000, Little Theatre (drama department) with seating for 300, R2 6[illegible] 000, Faculty of Education, offices, laboratories and lecture rooms, R3 360 000, new facilities for the Department of Microbiology, R2 810 000, extension of medical building for physiotherapy, occupational therapy, orthopaedic department and ophthamology etc. R3 000 000.

Rhodes University is going ahead with two new building projects at a cost of nearly R3 million to improve the teaching and research facilities for several departments.

Stellenbosch is investigating ways and means for better utilisation of existing facilities, and has the proposed satellite campus planned for Durbanville under review. The university says a substantial increase will have to be met in the demand for university study from 1983 to 1993 with a sharp decrease thereafter.

The university has awarded a contract for the building of a R9,2-million underground library.

The Stellenbosch enrolment has now reached 12 000.

The University of Natal with nearly 9 000 students and 551 teaching posts has launched a major fund-raising drive for R10 million over the next five years.

This university gets 80 per cent of its running costs from the Government with fees making up 15 per cent of the shortfall. The remaining five per cent has to be found in the community outside the university.

The University of South Africa (Unisa) has planned a huge expansion programme to accommodate 140 000 students by the year 2010, and development of the campus at Muckleneuk Ridge has been divided into 10 phases. Phases one and two have been completed.

The Unisa annual growth-rate averages 10 per cent, and its long-term expansion programme is based on an estimated annual growth-rate of 2 500 students. One out of every three students in South Africa studies through Unisa.

Meanwhile, the University of the Western Cape at Bellville, with a growth-rate of 17 per cent annually is the most rapidly growing university in the Republic. Students of all races number 4 000. The university has a five-year plan that will cost R50 million and will, in time, cater for 10 000 students.

FRESH-WATER PRAWNS RAISED IN LOWVELD

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 May 82 p 7

[Article by Chris Steyn]

[Text]

THE first harvest of freshwater prawns in the heart of the Lowveld marks a major breakthrough in South African fish production.

The project was launched in September last year on an Eastern Transvaal farm, Lisbon, which is being held in trust for the national state, Gazankulu.

According to the senior agricultural development officer for the Corporation of Economic Development, Mr Jan Snyman, thecitrus farm was chosen because of its infrastructure.

In future Black agricultural staff will be trained at Lisbon and seconded to other units of fish production in Gazankulu to establish export operations to earn foreign currency for the national state.

There are eight prawn ponds on the farm and one storage pond, each containing 200 000 prawns. The pond which was harvested this week, contained 40 000 prawns.

Mr. Snyman said that fresh water prawn breeding was much more difficult than other fish species.

It is hoped that fresh water prawn breeding in South Africa will soon be self-sufficient.

One thousand eight hundred tons of marine prawns were initially imported for this project. A production of at least two tons per hectare is expected, which would mean a self-sufficient system could be achieved in the near future.

Prawn lavae have an average weight of 6,01 and are about one cm long. When the prawns are refrigerated they weigh about 20g — but a potential weight of 50g can be reached.

The corporation came close to 45 g this season, which lasted seven months. It was intended to push the weight of South African bred prawns up to 35 or 40 g, as it would put the prawns in a more lucrative sale category.

Although Mr Snyman didn't want to reveal the total costs involved in the project, he said the construction of the dams cost R2,80 per square metre. At this stage only 1,8 hectare has been developed.

And how do they taste? Not different from restaurant prawns — but better and younger. The tails are more sturdy, and although they are smaller than restaurant prawns, the flesh extends right through the body into the head, where the female stores her eggs. (The eggs are edible).

Another advantage of fresh water prawns is that they don't have to be dissected before preparation. The water in which they are bred is not contaminated with sewerage as is sea water.

Mr Snyman said the price of these prawns, which will initially be marketed at the Kruger National Park and of the Reef, will fluctuate with market demand, and will not necessarily be more expensive.

TAIWAN INTERESTED IN GAZANKULU PRAWN PROJECT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 May 82 p 17

[Text]

THE Republic of China may soon have important investments in freshwater prawn developments in the national state, Gazankulu, according to the senior agricultural development officer for the Corporation for Economic Development, Mr Jan Snyman.

Mr Snyman disclosed to The Citizen that after lengthy negotiations, the Republic of China applied to lease 20 ha of ground in Gazankulu in order to invest and participate in South African fresh water prawn production.

Members of the Press this week witnessed the first fresh water prawn harvest on the farm Lisbon, near Hazyview, Eastern Transvaal where the initial research of the launching project was successfully completed.

Mr Snyman proudly described the project as a "double breakthrough" in South African fish production.

According to Mr Snyman, the South African Government had consented to Chinese investment in the project.

The Gazankulu Government meets today to discuss the matter and it is expected that Chinese participation will start in September next year.

The director of the Tungkang Marine Laboratory in Pintung, Taiwan, Dr I Chinrias and his wife, visited South Africa in February to study the project.

The professor who has been a visiting senior fellow at the Law School of Yale University and a visiting professor at the Georgetown Law Centre in the US, observed that every healthy, democratic society should strive to strike an appropriate balance between vital short term interests dealing with political, security and socio-economic realities and long term priorities such as values and principles, basic human rights and the Rule of Law, among others. SALIM VIEWS S. AFRICAN ISSUES--Arusha: Tanzania has called on the international community to double its efforts in solving problems which have threatened the international peace and stability. The call was made in Arusha today by the foreign minister, Ndugu Salim Ahmad Salim, in his opening address to a 2-day meeting of African editors and publishers. Ndugu Salim said that the world community should take a bold approach in tackling the arms race as well as the Southern African and Middle East problems which are a threat to peace and stability in the world. The minister explained that the mass media could play a crucial role in publicizing the potential catastrophe which could be unleashed from those major issues. Ndugu Salim said time was running out for seeking a negotiated settlement of Namibia and warned that armed struggle would intensify as South Africa continued to play for time. He added that the continued existence of apartheid in South Africa was the major source of conflict and instability in Africa in particular, and the world in general. The minister said as long as apartheid persisted it was not possible to have peace in Southern Africa. He called for the necessary measures to be taken to force South Africa to abandon apartheid. IMF 'CUTS BACK SHARPLY' ON AVAILABILITY OF LOANS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 6 May 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE INTERNATIONAL Monetary Fund (IMF) has cut back sharply on the availability of loans to 15 countries including Zambia, according to a report in the latest issue of Newsweek International magazine.

The report says the 15 countries either cannot or will not meet the conditions imposed on lending by the fund.

The action is said to have blocked an estimated K4 billion in balance of payments stand-by credits, accounting for nearly 25 per cent of total anticipated IMF lending this year.

That also marks the highest proportion of loan cut-offs in IMF history, Newsweek adds.

Some of the nations mentioned in the reported move are Romania, Zaire, Morocco, Bangladesh, Zambia, Grenada, Costa Rica and Tanzania.

In Lusaka however, Minister of Finance, Mr Kebby Musokotwane said Zambia was still studying and continuing discussions with the IMF concerning the country's facility.

The minister said the country had no knowledge of any cutback and as far as it was concerned, it was still studying the "very tough" conditions set by the fund.

Mr Musokotwane said as President Kaunda told the nation recently, the IMF was demanding very tough conditions which the Cabinet and the Central Committee were discussing.

Dr Kaunda said in an interview on his 58th birthday that there was need to study the measures to see if they were the right prescriptions for the country.

"If we are convinced that the IMF measures are the right prescription to our problems, then I will be the first to tell the nation so," he said.

KAUNDA PRAISES NIGERIA, TOGO AT STATE HOUSE

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 6 May 82 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT KAUNDA yesterday said Zambia had a soft spot for Nigeria because of her contribution to the economic development and peace in Africa.

He said Nigeria played a major role in the events that led to the independence of Zimbabwe and has continued to render similar assistance to the struggling masses of Namibia and South Africa.

The President was speaking at State House when Nigerian minister of finance Mr Victor Masi paid a courtesy call on him. He also paid tribute to Nigeria for her support of current African Development Bank president Mr Willa Mung'omba.

He said in this, Nigeria had shown its confidence in Zambia and the country would show its appreciation by not letting down its supporters. Dr Kaunda commended Nigeria's continued active role for the cause of Africa, pointing out that this was evident in the sacrifices made by President Shehu Shagari, the government and the people.

He said Nigeria was regarded as a Frontline state even though it was not in the vicinity of the southern African conflict because of its ideological stand and active role and recalled that it was because of Nigeria's positive decision at the Lusaka Commonwealth Summit in 1979 that led to a speedy processing of the Zimbabwean independence by Britain.

The Nigerian minister told the President his country watched with delight and cherished Zambia's role in the struggle for freedom in Africa. He had brought personal greetings from President Shagari who held Dr Kaunda and the people of Zambia in high esteem.

Nigeria was aware of Zambia's contribution to the establishment of the ADB and was proud that its support of a Zambian as president was not misplaced. Mr Mung'omba, the Nigerian minister said, had proved very able of the task before him.

Speaking to Togolese minister of finance who is also current chairman of the ADB group Mr Tete Benissan, the President said Zambia was proud of Togo's good chairmanship of the financial institution.

"It is this type of work that gives us hope for the future of Africa. Without hard work and love for each other we cannot succeed."

The Togolese minister said his country was looking forward to future co-operation and future successes of the ADB under the leadership of Zambian finance minister Kebby Musokotwane and Mr Mung'omba.

As host minister Mr Musokotwane also takes over the chairmanship of the ADB group.

KAUNDA MAKES OPENING ADDRESS TO ADB, ADF ANNUAL MEETING IN LUSAKA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 1

[Text]

THE African Development Bank must strengthen its resources and capital bases to satisfy demands of member countries, President Kaunda has urged.

Accelerated and self-reliant development on the African continent would largely depend on the capacity and responsiveness of the ADB or leading regional lending institutions.

Dr Kaunda said this when he opened the 1982 annual meetings of the ADB and the African Development Fund (ADF) at Mulungushi Hall in Lusaka yesterday.

The ADB had a great challenge to:

- Generate and mobilise financial resources to satisfy its normal lending programmes to member states;
- Meet sub-regional and regional cooperation schemes, and;
- Be able to satisfy a portion of the shortfall resulting from reductions in multilateral development assistance.

"Undoubtedly, this will require of the bank's governors, executive directors and management to demonstrate a heightened sense of imagination, innovation and realism," Dr Kaunda said.

Zambia was willing to open the bank's capital resources to non-African countries and on the international capital market.

"In this respect, I wish to recall the adoption by the ADB group in 1979 of a resolution to open the bank's membership to non-regional states and to enlarge the bank's capital base."

He expressed the hope that the delegates would seriously consider the question of non-African countries joining the bank.

Dr Kaunda noted that access to major capital markets had become increasingly difficult so, everything possible should be done by the bank to ensure availability of medium and long-term financing.

Developing countries were bearing the brunt of the world economic crisis. Their balance of payments were weak because of escalating prices of imports.

The result of such a development included high unemployment, under utilisation of industrial capacity, sluggish or negative growth rates and budgetary deficits.

Industrialised nations were equally affected by these adverse conditions. But the prosperous states had become protectionists and had tight budgets.

African countries had become victims of "progressive" reductions in official development assistance. That situation was at variance with the target of 0.7 per cent of Gross National Product (GNP) set by the United Nations.

Dr Kaunda appealed to industrialised countries to desist from calculated efforts that would undermine the international lending agencies.

The creation of the Southern African Coordination Conference, (SADCC), the Caracas action programme adopted last May by the Group of 77 and the Economic Community of West African States, among others, were moves in the right direction, he said.

"I earnestly believe that this process towards greater economic cooperation or integration has acquired a more concrete dimension and is now imbued with a sense of purpose."

ADB-DBZ LOAN AGREEMENT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 1

[Text]

Meanwhile, the Development Bank of Zambia (DBZ) and the ADB signed a K10 million loan agreement for the financing of the third line of credit.

The agreement was signed between ADB president Mr Willa Mung'omba and (DBZ) managing director Mr Lubamba Nyambe in Lusaka.

And in-coming chairman of the ABD, Mr Kebby Musokotwane, urged member countries to serve the people of Africa wholeheartedly.

He hailed his predecessor, Togolese Finance Minister, Mr Tevi Benissani for his contribution to the bank during his term in office.

MINISTER SEEKS INCREASED UK AID FOR AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 May 82 p 5

[Text]

AGRICULTURE and Water Development Minister of State Mr Justin Mukando has called on the British government to increase and diversify its help to Zambia's agricultural industry.

He made the call when he received seven flasks of bull semen worth K60,000 from British high commissioner in Zambia Mr John Johnson in Lusaka yesterday.

Mr Mukando appreciated the British help in various sectors of agriculture, including the overhauling of the maintenance system of transport in rural extension services and said Britain should help even more.

Under the K400 million operation food production programme, Zambia had identified livestock breeding as an important sector of agriculture and the donation of semen would go a long way in increasing milk herds in the country.

"We will do our best to cooperate with you in all areas of bilateral agreements."

Enough

Mr Johnson said the semen, given by the British Milk Marketing Board under British Overseas Development Administration was enough to ensure availability stocks for the Zambia National Artificial Insemination Service for two years.

The semen is from some of Britain's top thoroughbred Friesian and Holstein bulls noted for their high milk yields.

The presentation was part of a continuing technical assistance programme which started in 1977 when Zambia examined possibilities of using artificial insemination to increase production of its dairy herds.

Mr Johnson said nine out of ten commercial dairy farmers in Zambia were using artificial insemination to increase and improve their herds. Britain would continue giving technical help.

"I hope we can, together, identify other areas in the agricultural field in which British technical assistance could be similarly useful to Zambia," he added.

SHAPI CALLS FOR INCREASED ZAMBIA-ZAIRE TRADE TO EASE BORDER TENSION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 May 82 p 7

[Text]

A MEMBER of the Central Committee has said intensified trade between Zambia and Zaire would be the ultimate solution to the easing of border tension between the two neighbours.

Speaking in an interview in Ndola yesterday, Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi said efforts should not be spared by all parties in working towards a permanent solution.

He said the recently ended Zambia-Zaire trade fair in Lubumbashi was a step in the right direction which should act as a precedent to all trade contacts.

Legalised trade between Zambia and Zaire, was the only best prescription to eradicating the problem of smuggling and related vices.

He said that once this goal had been achieved, border tensions would be eliminated.

The recent Zambia-Zaire regional joint permanent commission meeting in Lubumbashi recommended various ways towards stabilising and strengthening good neighbourliness.

Mr Shapi said the commission urged that the two governments should endeavour to achieve mutual cooperation through increased trade links.

More trade contacts between businessmen should be encouraged and all agreements, some of them dating as far back as 1965 should be followed up in earnest.

IMPORTER OF FOREIGN MAGAZINES MAY CLOSE TWO BRANCHES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 2

[Text]

KINGSTONS may close down two of its branches soon because of lack of foreign exchange, the company's general manager, Mr Emmanuel Chalabesa announced yesterday.

In a telex message to the Times of Zambia Kabwe office, Mr Chalabesa said for the same reason, his company would stop importing popular foreign magazines like Newsweek, Times Magazine, Africa and Africa Now magazines with effect from this monthend.

'Our letter of credit will expire at the end of May," he said. This would have an adverse effect in the distribution programme of the overseas publishers.

Once the supply was stopped, it would be difficult to import the magazines at short notice. "There is a lag of time between the opening of a letter of credit and the resumption of supplies," he said.

An appeal for foreign exchange allocation was made to the Bank of Zambia. A reply is still expected. Kingstons is Zambia's largest dealer in books, magazines and stationery.

"If a reasonable amount of foreign exchange is not immediately available, the company may be forced to closedown one or two branches," he warned.

Mr Chalabesa said his company was finding it difficult to deliver the two national dailies — the Times of Zambia and Zambia Daily Mail, on time—to Lusaka and the Copperbelt "due to the bad shape in which its delivery vans are."

"The Party and its Government have been made aware of this problem. The company is awaiting the outcome of its application for a motor vehicles import licence in order to buy new vehicles.

Last month, Mr Chalabesa said it was for this reason that his company had stopped bringing Drum to Zambia.

UNCLEARED ZAMBIAN GOODS IN DAR ES SALAAM WILL NOT BE AUCTIONED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 2

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA and other neighbouring countries that import their goods through Dar es Salaam port will not have their uncleared goods auctioned by the port authority.

Trade counsellor at the Tanzanian high commission in Lusaka, Mr Marco Kassaja could not give reasons for the timely reprieve to the importers nor could he discuss Zambia's complaints that Tanzania was squeezing her by high port charges for uncleared cargo at the port.

But Mr Kassaja said it was normal practice for any port in the world to penalise importers by auctioning their goods if they failed to clear them in time.

The penalties which Zambia and other neighbouring states had survived included auctioning and surcharges of uncleared goods.

"The Tanzanian Harbour Authority do not auction Zambia's goods which have stayed at the port long because Zambia is a sister country. We give our neighbours preferential treatment," he said.

He did not say how long some Zambian goods had remained at the port without being collected but informed sources regretted that some of it had not been cleared since February last year.

The Tanzanian importers were not exempted from the penalty adding: "If our own importers delay to clear their goods, we auction them."

Apart from the exempting neighbouring countries from the auction it was part of Tanzania's commitment to give neighbouring importers long grace periods in which to clear their cargo after which they were reminded of the problems involved.

Tanzania harbour had threatened to go slow in handling Zambian cargo but the Tanzanian official said there would never be any pile up of Zambian cargo at the port because of "an improvement in services there."

Mr Kassaja said on April 6, there was a total of 11,000 tonnes of Zambian imports at the port. Out of this number, only 4,000 had been documented. The rest had not yet been attended to.

UNZA TO START COURSES IN SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 4 May 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

THE UNIVERSITY of Zambia Centre for Continuing Education on the Copperbelt is to start a series of courses in scientific socialism as from next month.

The centre's resident tutor, Mr Dickson Mwansa said in Kitwe yesterday that the courses will be a comparative study of Humanism and scientific socialism and would try to provide an understanding of what is involved in the two ideologies.

Mr Mwansa said the centre decided to teach scientific socialism because of the interest it has aroused among people following the recently announced decision by the Paty and its Government to have scientific socialism taught in schools.

Target groups for the courses would include church leaders, some of whom have vehemently opposed the teaching of scientific socialism as a subject in schools, he said.

ZAMBIA, ROMANIA RENEW THEIR BARTER AGREEMENT

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 5 May 82 p 7

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA and Romania have renewed their barter agreement for the export and import of goods between them amounting to K9 million.

Minister of National Commission for Development Planning, Dr Henry Meebelo said in Lusaka yesterday that this follows the signing of the agreement in Romania recently. Under the agreement various items and goods will be imported from there while Romania will also buy from Zambia.

The agreement was signed by Minister of State for Commerce and Industry, Mr Leonard Subulwa during the Zambian delegation's visit to Romania led by Dr Meebelo.

Dr Meebelo explained however that the goods 'will start arriving in the country after the current agreement signed last year expires.

He could not say what these items are but said that they consisted of a variety of goods. Dr Meebelo also signed a general agreement while in Romania which embraced technical, economic and cultural co-operation between the two countries.

Dr Meebelo was speaking on arrival at the Lusaka International Airport after a three-week official trip to Romania, Yugoslavia and Libya.

He led a 20-man delegation which included Mr Subulwa, who was also deputy delegation leader and was joined by Minister of Power, Transport and Communications, Mr Rajah Kunda in Tripoli, Libya, later.

ICA HAILS TRANSFER OF SOME NAMBOARD ACTIVITIES TO COOPERATIVES

ICA Regional Director's Statement

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 5 May 82 p 3

[Excerpt]

THE government's move to hand over the operations of some of Namboard's undertakings to the co-operative movement has been hailed by the International Co-operative Alliance [ICA]..

And the ICA office for East, Central and Southern Africa has decided that Zambia should become a model which its eight members should understudy.

ICA regional director, Mr Ellie Anangisye said yesterday that his office had decided to hold its regional council meeting this year in Zambia because the co-operative movement in the country was in ascendancy.

Mr Anangisye, told a Press conference at the Zambia Co-operative Federation (ZCF) offices that the government's decision to transfer the functions of Namboard to the co-operatives was a strong vote of confidence for the co-operative movement in the country.

He said the international movement was happy with the move because other members could learn from this experience, which could later be possibly followed by their respective governments.

He said he was sure Zambia was on the right path and the ICA knew that the co-operative movement was backed by the President in its undertakings.

Party's Decision Correct

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

Zambia attaches great importance to the role that can, and should, be played by cooperatives in the nation's economic development. That role should be enhanced in all ways.

Hence the correctness of the decision of the Party and its Government to replace Namboard operations in the provinces by cooperative unions.

As observed by the regional director of the International Cooperative Alliance for East, Central and Southern Africa Mr Ellie Enangishye, that decision is an "expression of great confidence" in the cooperative movement.

He coupled his observation with the assurance that the nation would "not be disappointed" with the work being done by the cooperatives. Well and good, but it should not be a hollow pledge.

The managements of Zambia's cooperative unions need to be well above board and be manned by high calibre personnel not prone to manipulating the ignorance of their members to their benefit.

And yet there is the shocking revelation that all is not well in one of Zambia's biggest and showpiece marketing cooperative unions — the Eastern Cooperative Union Limited (ECU).

It is unbelievable but shamefully true that since 1980 the general manager and the financial controller of the ECU have been receiving TAX-FREE salaries and allowances totalling over K80,000 and K60,000 respectively.

This is far more than what our top politicians get. Furthermore the salaries of our top leaders are taxed.

According to irrefutable evidence now in our possession, the ECU's general manager's gross emoluments a year are K80,358. Those of the financial controller are K60,088 a year.

A breakdown shows that the general manager gets a basic tax free salary of K15,000. Added to this are a K1,920 housing allowance, a K1,500 car allowance (although he has an official car), and an entertainment allowance of K1,440.

Because his salary is tax free the ECU pays out the tax for him totalling K41,380 a year. Added to all this is an annual gratuity of K7,438 for which tax is borne by the union to the tune of K11,680 a year.

The corresponding figures for the ECU financial controller are K13,750 basic annual tax free salary; K1,200 car allowances; K720 entertainment allowance, K900 children's allowance, K31,510 tax borne by the ECU; two-year gratuity K10,554 for which the ECU paid K13,462 in taxes.

What is actually vexing is that these tax free salaries and allowances were not authorised by the full ECU board of directors. Neither were they initially discussed by the union's executive committee meeting on October 26, 1979.

"Worse still the matter was not discussed at any subsequent board meetings held between October 26, 1979 and February 23, 1982," a pertinent document reveals.

Where is the nation heading to if such things are allowed?

MUNDIA ANNOUNCES IMPORTATION OF FOUR MILLION BAGS OF MAIZE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 May 82 p 5

[Excerpt] Zambia is to spend K70 million to import four million bags of maize to offset this year's shortfall, Prime Minister Mundia announced in Mazabuka yesterday.

The Government had already taken measures to import two million bags from Zimbabwe at a cost of K35 million and the remaining half would come from any other country by October.

Mr Mundia warned the nation to brace for tougher times ahead because of the poor agricultural yield caused by drought.

The drought, which hit the Southern African region, will not only be felt by human beings, but by animals as well.

Mr Mundia directed the Ministry of Lands and Natural Resources and district councils to formulate by-laws to protect natural resources from indiscriminate destruction.

Experience had shown that erosion and the drying up of rivers took place only where indiscriminate destruction of nature was rampant.

Mr Mundia assured the nation the Party and its Government would overcome any problems if given maximum support by the people.

The salvation of Zambia lay in the strength of the Party because it was the only supreme institution with powers to consolidate unity and organise the people at all levels.

Although some people criticised the Party's slogans and non-change of leadership, Zambia had enjoyed stability for the past 17 years.

KABWE RURAL VILLAGERS APPEAL TO COOPERATIVE TO SEND RELIEF MAIZE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 May 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

VILLAGERS in Kabwe Rural have appealed to the Central Province Cooperative and Marketing Union to send relief maize supplies to their depots to avert a famine now threatening them because of this year's drought.

At a meeting held in the Chikobo ward, villagers from all sections and branches applealed to the cooperative union, which has taken over from Namboard in the province, to speed up the training of personnel to man the depots to start serving the people.

"Villagers in our area, especially my ward have no food because of the drought. The situation is so serious that urgent action is needed," ward chairman Mr Aggrey Masulani said in Kabwe yesterday.

Commenting on the appeal, provincial Member of the Central Committee Mr Samuel Mbilishi said he was not aware of what Mr Masulani was talking about.

"The ward chairman has not approached me over the matter. When he does, I shall tell him what I know".

Mr Masulani said villagers had complained about the decision by the Agricultural Finance Company to confine its operations to Kabwe instead of decentralising them.

Applications

In the past, farmers received application forms for loans from Chibombo and Kapiri Mposhi, but the system had now changed and as a result few farmers would manage to travel to Kabwe to collect the forms.

"The result will be that there will be a low production of food in the district," he said and appealed to the Party and its Government to persuade the company to rescind its decision.

There was no comment from AFC in Kabwe.

NCU MANAGER EXPLAINS FAILURE TO RESUME RICE PROCESSING

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 6 May 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Northern Co-operative Union (NCU) has not resumed rice processing due to the delay by Ministry of Commerce and Industry to fix an acceptable economic price for the commodity.

Acting NCU general manager, Mr Longa Sichalwe said yesterday the prolonged price wrangle had forced the Kasama rice mill to remain idle for several months now.

Mr Sichalwe said the union had found it uneconomical to buy paddy rice at a higher price and yet people expected the union to sell the same commodity at controlled price.

"This would result in the union operating at a loss," the acting general manager observed.

Mr Sichalwe who could not state what his union demanded to be an economic price said the matter was already with Commerce and Industry officials.

Commenting on the rice mill at Kasama commissioned by President Kaunda last year, Mr Sichalwe said the mill was designed to process enough rice to meet national requirements and avoid importation of the commodity.

Turning to production of rice by farmers in the province, Mr Sichalwe said the 16,000 bags of rice produced per year were not enough as the mill required to handle 100,000 bags to make it operate at full capacity.

SUGAR COMPANY'S MANAGER SAYS SUGAR SHORTAGE TO END SOON

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 5 May 82 p 7

[Excerpt] The current sugar shortage in the country will soon come to an end and the Nakambala Sugar Estate Company has increased its production, the company's managing director, Mr David Walder said in Mazabuka yesterday.

Mr Walder, who was briefing Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia on the operations of the company said the current shortage was as a result of the shortfall in production last year which has since been increased and rationing will be a thing of the past.

The managing director said, "I am certain the current shortage will soon disappear and there will be plenty of sugar in the shops again."

Mr Walder told the Prime Minister that the company will speed up its production so that sugar can be available throughout the country.

He appealed to the Party and its Government to help his company in the supply of fertilizer for their sugar cane. He said the current supply of fertilizer was not enough.

ZAIRE GOVERNMENT PAYS DEBT TO ZAMBIA RAILWAYS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 May 82 p 4

[Excerpt] The Zaire Government has paid off more than K3 million owed to Zambia Railways since last year, Zambia Railways general manager Mr Basil Monze said yesterday.

But, Mr Monze, who praised Zaire for paying up, made it clear the money was not owed to his company as such but was an accumulation to the Zaire National Railways through a wagon inter-change between the two countries.

He would leave for Zaire this weekend to make permanent payment arrangements between the two neighbouring states.

On the credit facilities his company withdrew from parastatal companies and Government departments for failing to pay about K2 million in various services, Mr Monze declined to comment. He only said Zimco and the Government were looking into the matter. He could not name the defaulters either.

He confirmed that three passenger trains were running without lights in the coaches for the past 18 months because of problems in getting foreign exchange and lack of spare parts.

He explained that the coaches were bought from Japan sometime back while the generators were bought from a company called Stone-Platt in Britain.

TIMING, SIGNIFICANCE OF KAUNDA-BOTHA MEETING RAPPED

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 8

[Editorial: "Anything Gained?"]

[Text]

THE content, the timing and the authorship of President Kaunda's plan to meet with the South African Prime Minister, Mr Botha are all tempting targets for ridicule.

There is probably no conspiracy about the attitude of the South African apartheid supporting Press towards Dr Kaunda. But it remains true that an African leader can expect sympathetic treatment only when he embraces and accepts South Africa's occupation of Namibia and its oppressive system.

Anwar Sadat of Egypt made history when he flew to Israel to negotiate for the return of his country's occupied land by Zionist Israel but in the process lost his credibility in both the Arab and progressive worlds.

But when President Kaunda drove through South African territory to meet the South African Prime Minister, history was not made for it was NOT the first time he was meeting South African leaders.

For President Kaunda to say that his 1975 meeting with Botha's predecessor, John Vorster, helped to hasten the end of oppression in this country and the attainment of true independence is unfortunate. No Zimbabwean can deny Zambia's contributions toward the independence of this country. But had it not been for the sacrifice on the battlefield and the unflinching support of the Zimbabwean people toward the Patriotic Front forces that meeting and other numerous meetings with Ian Smith could not have produced the kind of independence we now enjoy.

Dr Kaunda's fellow black leaders in Southern Africa have remained silent or have, like Ndugu President Nyerere of Tanzania cast doubt on the usefulness of meeting South Africans at such a level. Our Prime Minister, Comrade Mugabe, has spelt out his position: Zimbabwe would not be involved in these talks.

During our struggle, one constant criticism levelled at the Zambian leadership was that it tended to negotiate if not to assume the leadership role of liberation movements. There were times when liberation movements were in the dark as to what had transpired between the Zambian government and Ian Smith. ZANU (PF) for instance at one stage only learnt through foreign Press reports that Smith had held talks with Dr Kaunda and Joshua Nkomo!

Here, the danger is that while Zambia is keen on accelerating the independence of Namibia, it may have contravened the Lusaka Manifesto, and that the immediate gain of such talks is giving Botha some credibility.

The South African government of course will welcome any sign that will indicate division among frontline states and that should be avoided. The announcement that Dr Kaunda wanted to meet the South African regime was made soon after the Maputo Frontline Summit. The subsequent comments by Ndugu President Nyerere should leave the regime in no doubt that the talks were between it and the Zambian government and not on behalf of the frontline states.

Was there anything achieved apart from the 1 000 beers South Africans are saying Zambian officials consumed?

DUTCH GIVE $2 MILLION FOR RURAL REBUILDING

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 4

[Text] The Dutch government and donor agencies in Holland have given more than $2 million towards the reconstruction of schools in Zimbabwe.

This came to light during a tour of schools in the Zambezi Valley last week by officials representing the donors.

The officials who toured Machaya, Utete, Kapembere and Kahungwe primary schools in Mzarabani area in Zimbabwe to assess and carry out a survey on the reconstruction of primary schools in communal areas.

They are Mr G.M. Jenkinson, the managing director of a Dutch consulting engineering company, based in Nairobi and Mr J.A. van Oven, a constructional engineer.

Both men are touring the country in consultation with the Government, provincial authorities and district councils to see the contribution by the community towards the development of schools.

Addressing parents at Machaya school during their tour, Mr Van Oven said: "I am here to evaluate the reconstruction of primary schools and file a report to the Netherlands and donor agencies. Donor agencies are interested in the effort and spirit of workmanship each community puts into its project."

He said donors alone had given $2 million while the Dutch government contributed $200 000 towards the projects.

The two officials were accompanied during their tour by senior staff from the Mashonaland Central Provincial Authority district administration and the Mzarabani district council.--ZIS

ZIMBABWE, ANGOLA BOOST TRADE LINKS

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 3

[Text]

ZIMBABWE and Angola have stepped up trade relations under the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in a bid to lessen Zimbabwe's dependence on South Africa, a Government spokesman said yesterday.

The spokesman was speaking in an interview while part of an export order of 112 tonnes of Zimbabwean agricultural equipment worth US$222 000 left Harare's airport for Angola.

The Secretary for Industry and Energy Development, Dr Mufaro Hove, said at the airport that the export deal would help lessen Zimbabwe's dependence on South Africa and promote trade relations with African countries.

His ministry was examining possibilities of exporting other industrial products because Zimbabwe was a highly industrialised country within the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Dr Hove congratulated Tinto Industries Limited for securing the export order and urged other industrialists to explore new markets in countries like Angola.

"Angola is important for co-operation within SADCC because of its rich oil resources," he said.

The export deal, he said, was a breakthrough for new markets because Angola had no contact or historical link with this country before.

Meanwhile Angola had a responsibility to cater for the energy needs, especially petrol needs, of SADCC states. It had already tackled this effectively, Dr Hove said.

"Zimbabwe intends promoting trade relations with Angola in most sectors and with other independent African states."

Yesterday's airlift followed successful contacts between Tinto Industries and the Angolan Embassy in Harare and a subsequent visit to Luanda by the company's sales director, Mr David Forbes.

The export order which emerged secured the sale of 112 tonnes of plough and harrow discs and other agricultural implements to Affaias Agricolas, an Angolan firm with a factory in Luanda.

The equipment was being lifted by the Angolan airways in four loads, three by Boeing 707s and one by Hercules aircraft.

The second load of 32 tonnes left Harare by Boeing yesterday.

Commenting on the deal, Mr Forbes said: "We hope this is the beginning of an on-going business arrangement with Affaias Agricolas. This arrangement meets with our Government's wish to increase trade between our two countries."

The Angolan Ambassador to Zimbabwe, Mr Andre Miranda, said the export deal was only the beginning and that an increase in trade between the two countries could be expected.

He added this would be in line with the need for continued co-operation among SADCC countries.

He said the Angolan Secretary of State for International Co-operation was expected to visit Zimbabwe in June to discuss areas of mutual co-operation with the Government and members of the private sector.

And an Angolan government official who accompanied yesterday's crew to Harare and back, Mr Humbento Jorge de Sousa e Silva, hoped the future role of trade between his country and Zimbabwe would increase.

"This equipment is very important for Angola which is an agricultural country.

"It will also be necessary to continue co-operation in this field because everyone in our country wishes to produce more from the soil.

"But it is difficult at this stage to say how Angola can reciprocate this export order of agricultural equipment from your country.

"However, our governments have good contact and communicate regularly. This process can lead to a reciprocal trade between our countries," said Mr De Sousa e Silva.

CUBA A MODEL, SAYS MINISTER SHAMUYARIRA

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 4

[Text]

ZIMBABWEANS are encouraged by Cuba's tremendous success against foreign aggression, the Minister of Information, Posts and Telecommunications, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, said last night.

Speaking at the opening of a 10-day Cuban poster exhibition in Harare, Dr Shamuyarira said Zimbabwe has a neighbour to the south who sought to destroy its sovereign independence.

"But your success will encourage us to repudiate threats and to start to work towards the uplifting of the standards of living of our people."

The exhibition, which begins with posters marking the proclamation of the socialist state of Cuba in April 1962, highlights some of the most outstanding achievements during the past 23 years of the revolution in the fields of health, education, culture and industrialisation.

"In that respect, what these posters say is of great importance and significance to Zimbabweans. It is a great lesson," the minister said.

The exhibition presented the views of life, efforts, hopes and achievements of the Cuban people in their determination to build a socialist order thereby improving the quality of the lives of all their people.

The posters, he added, showed how Cuba, always at the forefront in the fight against imperialist aggression, sought to establish international solidarity and co-operation with the Third World.

The friendship and solidarity that existed between Zimbabwe and Cuba dated back to the time of the liberation struggle. This continued to grow from strength to strength.

The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe had attended the last Non-Aligned Movement's conference in Havana and soon after that President Fidel Castro of Cuba, visited camps in Maputo and Lusaka he said.

Following the discussions held during President Castro's visit to the two frontline states, Cuba had contributed substantial assistance to ZANU (PF) during the liberation war.

Through this process, Dr Shamuyarira said, Cuba had inspired the leadership in this country to take up arms and fight the British colonialism.

"Today is a great moment for us in Zimbabwe when we are able to invite the people of Cuba to come and live among us and inform us of their revolution."

COMMENTARY ON CUBAN EFFORTS TO ATTRACT INVESTMENT

Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 30 Apr 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Welcome Back Cuba!"]

[Text]

THE article which appears on The Gazette's front page this week outlining the efforts of the Cuban Government to attract foreign investment should give our own Government much food for thought.

Cuba, one of the most militant "Marxist-Leninist" states in the Third World, has finally, after nearly 25 years of revolution, seen the light and realised that there is nothing like a little bit of capitalism to give an ailing economy a boost. For all its bluster and militancy, Cuba has long been the sick man of Latin America, needing large amounts of Soviet aid to keep its economy afloat.

The Cuban investment incentives would make many a local businessman, all too familiar with our own investment deadlock, green with envy. The Cubans will allow foreign capitalists a 49% stake in joint ventures with state companies and FULL repatriation of after-tax profits and dividends. The Cuban Government says it will not interfere in pricing and production, and will even allow foreign companies to hire and fire workers and choose their own managers. In some ventures, Cuba will even allow foreign investors to take a majority shareholding. There is even talk, heaven forbid, of creating an industrial free trade zone!

Many of Zimbabwe's leaders have long professed admiration for the "Cuban experiment". Several ranking Government officials have visited Havana, always returning waxing lyrical about "Cuba's successes".

But now, the Cuban themselves have finally realised that there is nothing like a little profit incentive to meet development plans. Marxism-Leninism is great on paper, but it does not put food on shelves.

The Gazette hopes the Cubans are successful in their search for foreign investment.

As a small country with a serious foreign exchange problem and chronic shortages of vital plant and equipment and essential commodities, Zimbabwe well understands what the Cubans have been through. We can only hope that it won't take 25 years for our leaders to see the light.

COURT TOLD OF ZIPRA-ZANLA FIGHTS IN GUTU DISTRICT

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 3

[Text]

FIGHTING between former members of ZIPRA and ZANLA forces integrated in the national army frequently broke out in the Gutu district, a regional magistrates' court in Nyanda heard last week.

Soldiers were often hurt and for this reason peacekeeping patrols at the Mupandawana business centre were heavily armed.

Often shots were fired into the air by soldiers on patrol to disperse crowds, said Sergeant-Major Silvester Nhliziyo (40) in defence to a charge of culpable homicide.

On August 27 last year, while leading a patrol at the business centre, Nhliziyo fired a shot from a 9 mm pistol which killed off-duty soldier Mr Paradzayi Nyonge (22).

Nhliziyo was convicted by regional magistrate Mr Chris Greenland of culpable homicide and fined $200 (or three months).

Nhliziyo, who spent 12 years in prison after entering Zimbabwe in 1967 with a group of guerillas, was a member of the integrated 43 Infantry Battalion.

Prosecutor Mr Phillip Haxen accepted that fighting frequently occured between that battalion and the predominantly ex-ZANLA 44 Infantry Battalion also stationed in the area.

On August 27, Nhliziyo arrest d a member of 44 Battalion at Mupandawana business centre for being incorrectly dressed.

In retaliation against the arrest, members of the arrested man's unit began shouting in protest and in an attempt to disperse them, Nhliziyo fired a shot from his pistol which hit and killed Mr Nyonge.

The court accepted that the sergeant-major intended to fire over the heads of the rioting soldiers but pointed out that his action had been reckless.

Mr Greenland said the army could be held partly responsible by sending Nhliziyo on patrol armed with a weapon he had never ' een trained to use.

Mr Michael O'Meara defended Nhliziyo.

PANDEMONIUM ERUPTS AS FOUR WHITES FOUND GUILTY

BULAWAYO. — Pandemonium erupted in the Bulawayo High Court yesterday after four White Zimbabweans were found guilty on capital charges of plotting terrorism and sabotage.

Two accused, former South African soldiers, Allen Cauvin and Stephen Bertrand, tried to escape from the dock by charging a dozen police and prison guards with fists flaing.

But they were overpowered, manacled in leg irons and marched off to the court cells as white-faced Mr Justice Anthony Gubbay withdrew to his chambers.

Two girls in the upstairs public gallery of the wood-panelled courtroom were arrested and driven off to Bulawayo central police station after shouting abuse at police when the judge announced his verdict.

A lawyer advising Cauvin, mr Erol Walhuter, was also detained when he intervened in the arrest of the girls — in their early 20's and friendsof the two accused who tried to escape.

The prosecutor, Mr Chris Jordaan, told reporters he would seek the release of the arrested trio.

Cauvin (21), Bertrand (24), dentist Frank Bertrand (58), and municipal gardener Victor Radmore (53) denied plotting and armed secession of Matabeleland with the help of a Matabele princess and spirit medium Violet Khumalo, between July and November last year.

The Rumpus in the courtroom prevented Mr Justice Gudday from announcing his verdict on a second charge of possessing "arms of war". It also carries the death penalty.

Cauvin and Bertrand jnr, shouted charges that the trial was rigged and that they had been framed, as they traded punches with court guards.

They were alleged to have gone to Zimbabwe on motorcycles to lead the rebellion for Bertrand snr after leaving the South African army.

Bertrand snr, said to be the ringleader of the plot, testified at the two-month trial that he sought the peaceful independence of Matabeleland — tribal stronghold of Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union. Mr Nkomo was fired from the two-year-old coalition Government on February 17 for allegedly plotting against Prime Minister Robert Mugabe.

Mr Mugabe has said Mr Nkomo will be charged if sufficient evidence can be brought against him. — Sapa-AP.

HELP CREATE SOCIALISM, PM TELLS CHURCH

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday called on the Church to join the Government in creating a socialist state.

Addressing heads of denominations from all over the country, he said the Church should find no objection to socialist philosophy because Christian teaching could not be reconciled to the "avaricious" nature of capitalism.

"Join us, therefore, in our socialism and humanitarianism and you are perfectly free to bring God and all He stands for with you," the Prime Minister said.

He said his party had always believed that the direction of its actions and programmes must be determined by its ideological orientation and accordingly ZANU (PF) believed in socialism based on Marxist - Leninist principles.

"We are proud that this is our philosophy because its morality is collective and therefore selfless. It is a philosophy which demands that we always think of the whole of us.

"The whole people first — that is, the total interest of the people before we consider the individual and his individual interests."

Socialism was a recognition of the coincidence of interests, an equation of man and a common social denominator. The Government would not allow individuals to own the country's natural resources.

"No, we shall not accept that, even though we might for now tolerate this selfish and exploitative individualism as we design the modalities of our socialist system," the Prime Minister said.

Minerals and other resources were the common or collective property of the people of Zimbabwe. They had to be shared and enjoyed by all the people.

Mr Mugabe said that as the country poised itself for the Three-Year Transitional National Development Plan, there was more need for partnership between the State and the Church. The concern of the Government should be the concern of the Church.

"In short we should be at one and accept that the State's struggle for transformation is also the Church's struggle," the Prime Minister said.

Now that the armed struggle had been won, it was the victory for ZANU (PF), ZAPU, the Church and the people as a whole. The next struggle should be against ignorance, hunger, poverty and disease.

ZANU (PF) and the Government were grateful to the Church for the role it had played in striving for the creation of a democratic society.

The good work they had performed in the humanitarian field during the bitter years of the liberation struggle had helped to sell Christian principles more effectively to numerous families and homes in Zimbabwe than a thousand sermons on humanitarianism and charity would have done.

The task now before the Church and the Government was turning independence and democratic order into an instrument for transforming the lives of the people qualitatively.

Government development programmes offered the churches abundant room for participation in their accomplishment, Mr Mugabe said each denomination would be expected to plan how it would participate in the development of the society over the next three years.

Although many churches had made valuable contributions to the improvement of educational and health facilities in the country, there was need for expansion and growth and development. "We need more and better schools and hospitals."

There was need for increased participation by the churches in promoting better agriculture and social lives among rural people. There was also need for greater morality and complete elimination of racism, tribalism and regionalism.

The Government would expect the churches to do their spiritual and material best in the areas.

During the Government's transformation programmes and socialist revolution, the working class and the peasantry would be the backbone of the developing socialist society.

The Prime Minister hoped that socialist intellectuals, professionals and the student body would provide the intellectual and ideological lead to them.

EMPLOYERS TOLD TO STUDY SOCIALISM

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 1

[Text]

MANY employers in Zimbabwe did not seem to understand the Government's policy of socialism, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said yesterday.

Addressing the Engineering Employers' Association in Harare at their annual meeting, the minister told the organisation that many employers had not bothered to acquaint themselves with the political ideology of the Government.

"What is often overlooked is the fact that Zimbabwe is evolving its own blend of socialism whose major objective is to benefit all sectors of the Zimbabwean population."

He said that once the Government had spelt out its socialistic policy some employers had "closed shop" and headed for South Africa.

"They made no attempt at all to study the ideology and identify their place in it. I can assure you that in the not too distant future they will again close shop and head for the sea when a majority government takes over in South Africa and espouses its own blend of socio-economic and political organisation."

He urged employers to eradicate racism in industry, and said there was a distinction between a lack of worker discipline and "rebellion".

"More often than not, what some employers perceive as indiscipline among their workforce is actually fully - fledged rebellion, whereby workers have decided not to tolerate the employers' provocative orders and practices any further."

He urged employers to discard the temptation of always presuming that there was something wrong with the workers.

He said in cases of dispute it was often advisable for the employer to seek an independent opinion.

The minister congratulated those employers who "had done all in their power to adhere to employment regulations, and had implemented progressive personnel and labour relations recommendations from the ministry".

The president of the association, Mr Peter Swart, asked that employers be consulted in time to study draft proposals leading to labour legislation.

Mr Swart said his association represented employers who provided work for 15 000 people representing earnings of $40 million a year.

Mr Swart said there was an increase in the lack of discipline among workers affecting productivity and standards, and asked that the dismissal regulations be repealed.

Speaking earlier at a trade union seminar at Silveira House in Harare, jointly sponsored by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions and the Commercial Workers Union, Mr Kangai said that the need for workers' education was very urgent.

Mr Kangai appealed to private organisations and trade unions involved in workers' education seminars to make a distinction between the training of trade unions and workers' committee officials, in subjects such as grievance handling and collective bargaining techniques.

"I am not so sure that the workers' committee representative who is illiterate can be a very useful participant in a seminar on grievance handling that is conducted in English language."

Zimbabwe should avoid the error that many developing countries made of concentrating trade union education on the semi-literate, to the exclusion of illiterate workers.

The obligation of trade union leaders in the field of workers' education was two-pronged, calling for simultaneous thrusts on both the literate and the illiterate.

MVUMA MERGER DELAY 'CAUSING HARDSHIP FOR BLACK PEOPLE'

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 7

[Text]

THE delay in the merging of the former Mvuma area committee and the Mvuma area board is causing hardship for the black population there, the board's chairman, Mr Philip Maramba, said here this week.

In an interview with Ziana Mr Maramba said: "The board which is made up of Africans has to carry people's grievances and needs to the Mvuma area committee which in turn puts them forward to the Charter-Chilimanzi rural council in Chivhu.

"The area committee is made up of whites only and they do not put our grievances and needs effectively at the rural council or delay in doing so."

He added that only he, the chairman of the board, is allowed to attend the area committee's meeting but he had "no vote or voice".

"The Government promised us a long time ago that the board and committee would merge so that Africans could have more say at the rural council meetings but this has not yet been done," Mr Maramba said.

He blamed the Mvuma area committee for the difficulties now being experienced by some of Mushayavudzi suburb's residents in Mvuma.

"The Government had granted money for the building of housing which would be rented at $35 but when the houses were finished the rent was raised to $66," said Mr Maramba.

"This was caused by the area committee who employed a contractor who did not finish the job in time, so making the rents higher."

A meeting had been held this week between the area board and an official from the rural council about this matter, he added.

The area committee had explained that $46 of the $66 rent was going to the Government.

"This would not have happened if the contractor had built the houses in time and I know of other areas where the same houses are being rented for $18," Mr Maramba said.

He also disclosed that the Mvuma area board had applied for money to build 300 houses to replace the pole and dagga houses in Mushayavudzi suburb.—Ziana.

KANGAI REITERATES NEED FOR LABOR UNITY

Squabbles Hit

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 1

[Text]

UNIONS egistered under previous regimes will lose some or all of their interests if they do not unite, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said yesterday.

Mr Kangai was speaking at the opening of the congress of the Commercial Workers' Union of Zimbabwe held in Harare yesterday.

He said that the elimination of multi-unionism would ensure the granting of interests to those unions that demonstrated to the Government they represented the majority of the people.

Unions which were still divided would not be registered and trade unionists should stop getting involved in "naked power struggles and mud-slinging" to the detriment of the Zimbabwe working masses.

"To those unions which have already united, I would like to urge union leaders and executives to work closely together to formulate new, common strategies and policies in the interest of our workers and the country as a whole," the minister said.

He called on the unions to avoid the embarrassing situation of having two spokesmen, saying they should delegate the responsibility of issuing statements for or on behalf of the union to one particular official.

"The damage that divergent statements will cause to your organisation is, to say the least, incalculable. Not only will the members you represent lose all confidence in the leadership, but also the Government and the public will perceive your organisation to be chaotic and unco-ordinated."

The minister said that he would like to see employers' organisations following the example of trade unions by uniting on a national level rather than on a city or regional basis.

"My ministry will view employer's organisations that refuse to merge with the same contempt that it views trade unions in the same category."

Mr Kangai said the new Labour Act that was about to be promulgated would have no room for multiple unions and employer's organisations within the same industry. It was imperative, therefore, that efforts towards national unity in labour matters be intensified so that no one would be caught on the wrong side of the fence.

He recommended that labour leaders keep themselves informed of Government policy as they were representatives of the Zimbabwean working class.

"We expect the trade union leaders to keep in touch with Government so as to be better able to inform constituents about the direction in which we are all moving."

He said workers in Zimbabwe would always have a pivotal role to play because it was through their participation that the Government and the public could be represented in all enterprises.

For workers to be effective and to participate meaningfully in company decisions, they had to improve their education.

"Government aims will be doomed to failure for as long as the labour education level of the majority of workers remains as it is."

The country needed foreign capital for industrial expansion, but this money was not attractive because foreign investors wanted to expatriate their profits.

He said that trade unions should educate their members on the desirability of raising local capital and forming productive co-operative ventures.

"The concept of capital accumulation and formation of co-operatives should be injected into the syllabuses pursued at workers' education seminars."

Mr Kangai urged all unions to begin to orientate their members on the ideological concepts of the Government as this would assist them in understanding Government policies.

Workers in Limelight

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Unions' Needs"]

[Text]

GOVERNMENT ministers keep stressing the value and importance of the country's workers. Employers are often urged to increase the conditions and status of their workers and to involve them more in management and decision-making.

The workers are in the limelight and have just celebrated their special day. It is therefore unfortunate that they themselves are not as organised and responsible as they should be.

There are cases of two unions representing or claiming to represent one industry; there are leadership squabbles; there are conflicting public statements; and there is a reluctance of some workers to join unions.

The messages urging unity and strength, delivered at the May Day rallies, must be taken seriously, and all must work to put their house in order. But there is more to it than formal organisation.

There is the need for better informed workers and trade union officials — better informed in union procedures, in Government policies, and in the art of negotiation with employers.

There have been some worthwhile moves in this respect, with international union leaders visiting Zimbabwe, with offers of training from France, for example, and with courses such as that run for PTC workers last month.

But much more will be needed. The ZCTU, once it has appointed a secretary-general, should give priority to assessing what training is required, who could give it, and how it could be financed. Seminars or courses at the university during vacations might be desirable and should be possible to arrange.

WORKERS UNITY IS VITAL, SAYS MSIPA

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 3

[Text]

BULAWAYO

WORKERS were on Saturday urged by the Minister of Water Resources and Development, Mr Cephas Msipa, to unite under the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions.

"You have nothing to lose but your chains if you unite," the minister told the 170 workers who had gathered at Bulawayo's White City Stadium in honour of Workers' Day.

He said some people were reluctant or refused to join industrially based unions.

"We must ask these workers on whose side they are," he said.

"Are they on the side of the toiling masses or on the side of the exploiters?"

Mr Msipa said those people who refused to join unions were setbacks in the Government's desire to improve workers' conditions.

Workers who took irresponsible strike action which affected production were an undesirable element in the new Zimbabwe, he said.

Further setbacks to the Government's policy of improving workers' conditions were employers who avoided paying the minimum wage and victimised members of workers' committees.

South African agents and dissidents were also setbacks to Government policy as they wanted to destabilise the situation in Zimbabwe and sabotage the economy.

"They must never be allowed to succeed. As workers you must be on the lookout and be able to identify who your friends are and who your enemies are," he said.

Speaking about the role of the worker in the year of national transformation Mr Msipa said workers needed to "democratise" worker organisation; join workers' organisations; increase worker productivity; and maintain discipline.

There should also be meaningful communication between workers and management and workers and the Government, using established channels. Workers should regard their places of work as their permanent sources of livelihood and participate in management.

"If you analyse each of these activities you will realise that each of them enhances the position of the worker," he said.

No development was possible without the worker and every aspect of work added to the country's development.

"Remember that the wealth of the country is a combination of factors of production and these are the workers," he said.

UK HELP FOR NEW STUDENTS' GROUPING REPORTED

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 4

[Text] A senior official of the British National Union of Students is to visit Zimbabwe soon to assist the newly formed National Students' Union of Zimbabwe.

The Secretary-General of NASUZI, Mr Lloyd Gwatidzo said in an interview in Harare last week that the official grom the NUS would arrive here before his organisation's annual delegates' conference in October.

The visiting official will tour various institutions, assist in training office-bearers and also outline the functions of a student body.

"His presence," Mr Gwatidzo said, "will give our union an international perspective."

The first task of the new students' body will be to organise provincial executives in rural areas.

Urging all students throughout the country to form students' executives as soon as possible, Mr Gwatidzo added that the students in Victoria province had already embarked on this exercise.

The Ministry of Education and Culture, in a letter addressed to the organisation this month acknowledges the formation of the new students' union.

Mr Gwatidzo said the main aim of NASUZI would be to provide a common banner for all students in Zimbabwe after the country's acceptance into the international fold.

The union would also promote a Zimbabwean cultural identity, assist in see seeking solutions to students' problems and arouse the consciousness of the students to educational, economic, political and social issues.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PRICE CONTROLS WELCOMED

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE Government yesterday gazetted new regulations controlling prices of basic, essential and popular consumer goods in the country.

The new legislation — the Control of Goods (Price Control) Order 1982 — which comes into force today, replaces the price freeze which was first introduced on December 17 last year, which expired at midnight last night.

In Harare yesterday the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Richard Hove, said the purpose of the price freeze had been to allow the Government time to overhaul the whole price control system and establish what changes were necessary to bring price control into line with other related policies of the Government in the new economic order in Zimbabwe.

The Minister said that when the decision to introduce the price freeze was made, the Government also decided to establish a prices board as a permanent institution to advise Government on all economic issues relevant to price control policies.

The board's first task had been to recommend price control systems for the future and had submitted very comprehensive and constructive reports.

The minister said that Government had given very careful and detailed consideration to the board's reports and had made decisions on the new price control ground rules.

These ground rules had been embodied in the new price control legislation and the new Control of Goods Order 1982. Under the new order, prices of basic, essential and popular consumer goods would be closely controlled.

Goods covered by the specific price control orders were bread, milk, sugar, beef, maize meal, vegetable oils and fats, kapenta fish, chemical fertilisers, cement, petroleum fuels, passenger cars, light commercial vehicles and motorcycles.

A spokesman for the ministry said no one could change the existing prices of the items.

"These are what we call sensitive items, popularly consumed by the people. The Government takes a keen interest in them and fixes the prices for economic reasons."

He said prices of some goods could not be increased at the factory or wholesale level without his prior approval.

These are clear beer, spirits, mineral waters, cigarettes and processed tobacco products, agricultural seeds (maize, barley, soya beans, sorghum, wheat, groundnuts and sunflower), matches, newspapers, iron and steel, tyres and tubes, stockfeeds, including poultry feeds, pork and pork products, dressed poultry, paper and paper packaging, plastic bags supplied to manufacturing and processing concerns, metal containers, drums and tubes, glass containers.

There were also goods for which the importers' or local producers' method of arriving at selling prices, had to be approved by the Ministry of Trade and Commerce.

These are: motor vehicle parts for repair or replacement purposes, tractors, agricultural implements and specialised agricultural equipment and their parts, agricultural chemicals, including veterinary products, lubricating oils, jute grain bags, blasting explosives and accessories, educational and technical text books, typewriters and ribbons, cash registers, calculators, duplicating and photocopying machines and drugs as defined in the Drugs and Allied Substances Control Act.

Other essential and popular consumer goods, Mr Hove added, were also subject to maximum mark-ups at the wholesale and retail level.

These are khaki shirts and shorts, socks and stockings, blouses, pullovers, blazers and jackets, dresses, skirts, napkins, piece goods and glassware, whose maximum wholesale mark-ups and retail are now 30 (30) percent and 50 percent respectively.

Feeding bottles and teats, now have a maximum wholesale mark-up of 30 percent and a maximum retail mark-up of 40 percent. The minimum wholesale mark-up for yarns is set at 25 percent, while the maximum retail mark-up is 40 percent.

Blankets, canvas footwear, light bulbs, torches, batteries and holloware have a maximum wholesale mark-up and a maximum retail mark-up of 25 percent and 40 percent respectively.

The maximum wholesale mark-ups and maximum retail mark-ups for stoves, refrigerators, sewing machines, knitting machines, heaters, radios, televisions, stationery and bicycles are 20 percent and 35 percent respectively.

Tea, poultry, salt, infant foods, rice, milk powder, flour, soap and soap powders, candles, petroleum and toilet paper have a 10 percent maximum wholesale mark-up and a 15 percent maximum retail mark-up. The maximum wholesale mark-up for wrist-watches is now 50 percent, while their maximum retail mark-up is 65 percent.

CONCERN

Goods for export, sold by public auction, second-hand goods, eggs in the shell, fresh flowers, fruits, vegetables, food and drink, other than traditional beer sold for consumption on the premises, would not be subject to the price control order, the minister said.

"The rise in the cost of living has been a matter of great concern to the Government because between June 1980 and December 1981 the consumer index for lower income families increased by 17.6 percent, while for higher income families the increase was 23.3 percent."

He said more officials had been appointed in the ministry to monitor prices.

They had the power to impose on-the-spot deposit fines on traders found contravening the new price control order. And if the deposit fines were not paid in time the defaulting traders would be brought before a court.

● The cost of living for higher income families in urban areas rose by 1.6 percent in February, largely because of a 23.6 percent rise in domestic workers' wages.

Figures released by the Central Statistical Office this week show small rises in the cost of food, clothing, household stores and vehicle expenses.

CZI and ACCOZ Welcome New Move

THE CZI and ACCOZ welcomed the new regulation last night saying that the Prices Board would introduce a pricing system consistent with the new order.

The president of ACCOZ, Mr Abner Botsh, said the regulation appeared to provide "a fairly reasonable framework within which the commercial sector can operate".

But he expected that problems would arise over the restricted mark-ups of some of the goods specified.

ESSENTIAL

"It is essential now to maintain a close degree of liaison with Government so that, where problems do arise, they can be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

"I am encouraged by the minister's statement that reviews will be undertaken through the Prices Board, on which the private sector is represented."

A statement from the CZI said the new price system would assist industry in achieving the Government's goal and provide the framework for much needed expansion.

It found the newly established Prices Board an important innovation, and had been able to work harmoniously with it in attempting to evolve a pricing system consistent with the new order.

During the price freeze there had been notable increases in a number of production costs and manufacturers had increasingly seen a serious erosion of funds for reinvestment.

MEANING OF NEW PLACE-NAMES EXPLAINED

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 May 82 p 4

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Chronicle has briefly researched the origins and meanings of some of Zimbabwe's place names to answer inquiries made by the public since the Government announced changes of names of some of our cities, towns and administrative centres.

Some people have asked about the significance and historical background of some of the new names as well as the discarded ones.

The name Tjolotjo (now Tsholotsho) came from Lilima (Kalanga dialect) words — Nsholo Wezhowu — meaning head of an elephant. Its origin is not Bushman as some historians ave wrongly concluded.

Nsholo Wezhowu was the name of a pan found in the vicinity of present-day Tsholotsho. The name was corrupted by Ndeoele at the time of the arrival of Mzilikazi in the locality. The new name is not an improvement in terms of meaning, but a modernisation of orthography.

Hwange, the new name for Wankie, is the name of the paramount ruler of the N'ambyas, a Rozwi tribe that is believed to have moved from around the Victoria province to the Hwange-Dete regions at the time Zwangendaba passed through and ravaged parts of Mambo's kingdom.

According to a prominent Bulawayo lawyer, Mr Washington Sansole, who has studied the history of the N'ambya tribe, the ruler of the tribe was originally known as Sawanga. The name was corrupted down through the ages when the N'ambyas migrated up and down the region and ended up as Hwange. Ndebeles corrupted it further to Zanke, and white prospectors took it a step further to Wankie.

Dett (now Dete) comes from a N'ambya word Detema — meaning "swamps". There is still a place in the Hwange game reserve known as Detema.

Esigodini, the new name for Essexvale, is derived from that of an educational institution in the locality. Some people contend that the original name of the place was Esikhoveni, which comes from that of a hill, Isikhova, at the place. They say the education centre is a recent creation from which the area should not get its name. They would rather it was called Umzingwane after the river by whose name the district was once called.

Gwai comes from a Kalanga-N'ambya word which means sheep. It is believed that the Ndebeles changed it to Gwayi which means tobacco. Colonialists spelt it without a 'Y'.

Gwanda is said to be the name of a type of stubborn and dangerous weed found around the town. But there is no certainty as to whether it gave its name to the town or vice versa. Vendas call the weed "Kwanda".

Another theory has it that Gwanda was the way a certain white prospector, Mr Andy Nicholson, pronounced Jawunda, the name of a hill near the town.

It is now obscure what Beberengwa (formerly Belingwe) stands for. But a theory has been thrown about that the word is a Lamba (a tribe that has been living in the region for centuries) word. Some local historians speculate that it probably means "emerald" or is a name of one of the precious stones abundant in the area.

Filabusi is a corruption of Mfilabuso, the Kalanga word meaning "one who dies for his face". There is a legend surrounding the origin of the name, but it has been distorted and diluted through the passage of time. It is about a man who was killed for a piece of art he had made.

Mbalabala is the new name for Balla Balla. The name did not originate from "Bhalabhala" which is the Ndebele word for kudu. It is the name of a massive granite rock not far away from the little barracks village. The meaning is obscure, but some locals speculate that it probably means that which shines or glitters or reflects sunshine.

Shangani came from "Shangana", a Kalanga word for small reeds. Some people have given the meaning as "meeting place", referring to the confluence of the Shangani River and the Hwayi (Gwai) River.

A river confluence is "Shangano" and not "Shangana" in Lilima.

Shabani, now Zvishavane, is believed to have been named after a local chief called Shabhoni who defied the colonial administration in the early 1890s, and was arrested, tried and summarily shot in 1894.

Plumtree got its name from a tree under which early white settlers used to outspan their wagon spans. When the centre was found in 1897, locals referred to it as "Titji Tjakengenge" — station of the village of Getjenge — Getjenge was a prominent [illegible], whose village was in the station's neighbourhood.

The people of Bulalima-Mangwe district (the area in which Plumtree is situated) refer to it simply as "Titji", which means station.

Managwe, south of Plumtree, is another place whose name came from that of a tree.

Syringa, Marula, Figtree and Umganini (lying between Plumtree and Bulawayo) are some of our stations whose names were got from those trees. From Figtree, the early white hunters and prospectors used to send messages to Lobengula in Bulawayo asking for permission to ply their trade in his area.

Bulawayo comes from "Kobulawayo", which means the place of the one who is being killed, so-called because, before Lobengula took over his late father's throne in 1870, there were battles between his supporters and those opposing him.

His warriors won at a battle fought at a place where he later built his village which he called "Kobulawayo". It does not mean "the place of slaughter" as some historians have claimed.

Gweru is the name of a river near the Midlands town.

Kwekwe is a word meaning slides of rocks, the type of which is said to be found only at some spots along the river. A local historian, Mr Dima Bhebe of Bulawayo's Pelandaba suburb, says that people used to travel from far and near to collect the stones from the river.

As in the case of Gwanda, it is unclear whether the river got its name from the rock or the rock from the river. Deeper etymological research would be necessary to answer that aspect. Suffice it to say that the town has the same name as the river which has the same name as a type of rock found on its banks.

Makwiro is a corruption of the Shona word "Makwira", meaning "you have climbed". Legend has it that when, centuries ago, the predecessor of the modern chief Zvimba arrived in the area from across the Zambezi River he developed a sore foot.

The group had to climb a hill to see the lie of the land, and it was very difficult for Zvimba because of his sore foot. But after a hard struggle, the old man reached the hilltop where upon some people asked in excitement: "Makwira here?" (Shona meaning: "Have you climbed or ascended?"). The hill became known thereafter as "Makwira" but the name was corrupted to "Makwiro".

Colleen Bawn was so-called by an Australian prospector, Mr S. Daly, after an Irish song. Fort Rixon got its name from that of the farm's former owner, while Nuanetsi, now Mwenezi, was a corruption of the name of a river, Mwanezi, whose tributary is Mwanezane (little Mwanezi).

Matopos comes from "Matombo", a Kalanga word meaning mountains. Kariba came from "Kariva", or "Kariva" (the pronunciation depended on whether the speaker was Korekore-Gova or Sangwe-Tonga). It is not clear what the word actually meant, but it is most probable that it meant a dangerous or treacherous gorge into which wild animals were driven by hunters, hence a trap.

HARD CURRENCY EXPORT PLANS RELY ON SURPLUS

Harare FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 30 Apr 82 p 4

[Text]

THE Commercial Farmers Bureau has appealed to the Zambian Government to increase the producer price of maize to encourage overplanting to ensure a surplus in the production of maize during seasons of inadequate rainfall.

"Productive Farming" magazine says overplanting of the crop will help offset defecits during bad growing seasons which have been experienced frequently during recent years.

"If we can achieve more than three months surplus over our yearly needs we can export to Zaire and Angola both of which are able to pay in hard currency," the Farmers publication says.

STRESSES

The editorial stresses that farming was a gamble and the Government should be aware of this and continue to set realistic prices that encouraged maximum planting.

It says the Government should come back this season with another incentive price in order for those farmers who have taken a loss this year to respond with even a greater acreage next year.

Once the farmers are in a surplus the Government can adjust production as it chooses by greater or smaller increases.

"But until we get a combination of a good price and a good rainy season the Government's room for manoeuvre is rather limited," the magazine points out.

The commercial sector produces between 40% and 45% of the marketed maize in the country and in a bad season, such as the present one, the commercial farmers' share of the crop will rise as high as 55% to 65%.

This fact highlights the value of the commercial sector's contribution to evening out what would otherwise be a wildly fluctuating production curve of feast or famine.

Meanwhile Zambia's Virginia tobacco output is expected to drop from 2.1 million kilos to 2 million kilos this season because of poor weather conditions.

Chairman of the Virginia Tobacco Association of Zambia, Mr Peter Green said the drop was minimal because the crop was drought resistant.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEES LOANS TO KEEP MANGULA OPEN

Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 30 Apr 82 p 1

[Text]

INTENSE pressure for an immediate 20% devaluation of the Zimbabwe dollar has come from ailing MTD (Mangula) Ltd, which has hit a critical all time low.

Without devaluation or an unlikely increase in copper prices, the mine which supports much of Mhangura town, north of Chinhoyi, faces complete collapse at the end of this year.

Already the copper mining company has been hit by massive losses of over $1 million in just six months and the firm borrowed up to its limits in March.

Now, in a last ditch bid to keep the company afloat during 1982 storms, they have borrowed $6 million, backed by an agreement in principle that the Government will guarantee the loans. These loans are repayable by December 31 1983.

DEVALUATION

Company secretary Mr Stuart Mitchell blamed the worst copper prices in 30 years, escalating costs from interest rates and inflation, plus a drastic loss of skilled workers.

He told The Gazette: "We are hoping for a devaluation and if we got 20% we can break even this year." Only a few weeks ago the Bindura Nickel Corporation Ltd called for a 25% devaluation after predicting losses of between $7 million and $9 million this year.

Mr Mitchell added: "We have a very close relationship with the Ministry of Mines, and we always have had. They have supported us as much as possible in this".

The MTD copper costs $1 600 per tonne to produce but sells at only $1 000. With the additional gold and silver deposits from that ore the eventual loss is about $280 per tonne.

"At this stage," said Mr Mitchell: "we do not see any prospect of a return to profits without devaluation or improved copper prices. But we are not a major producer so we cannot affect the market by stockpiling, for example."

MTD's sales of gold and silver have also been adversely affected by very depressed prices worldwide.

A large part of the $6 million loans is expected to be allocated very soon and the total amount will keep the company alive this year, even if there are no improvements.

Said a concerned Mr Mitchell: "It is very difficult to forecast what will happen to prices but I cannot forsee any improvement over the financial year. The world is going through a recession that some people predict will last until 1986.

"A couple of years ago prices were high and wages and costs kept down. Sanctions protected industry in this country to a certain extent.

"Now that we are on the open market we are being influenced by all these external factors. It's worrying for the entire industry but it's all up to tenacity at the moment. The world just cannot going on paying so little for its copper eventually something will have to break."

But it is all a question of how long companies like MTD can hold on — if they do not get Goverment backing in the form of devaluation.

EMIGRATION

The group, which consists of three Zimbabwe companies, has been severely hit by the emigration of skilled workers and MTD (Mangula) has been forced to recruit from overseas. There are 17 already working at the mine — and more are likely to come.

This overseas recruitment has been approved by the Government. Said Mr Mitchell: "Mangula employs or supports over 9,000 people in that town. The Government certainly does not want that to disappear overnight.

"That can be seen in the way the Government has assisted us with the guarantee and in getting the needed skilled workers."

COLLAPSE

A second MTD company, Lomagundi Smelting and Mining (Pvt) Ltd, also near Chinhoyi, is also losing money and, if Mangula collapsed, this would follow suit. The group itself, which includes MTD Management Services and which is a member of the Messina Group in South Africa, would survive.

(See Page 11 for MTD (Mangula) Ltd's interim report).

● The copper industry worldwide has been severely hit by declining world prices and some producers, faced with losses, have cut back production and even closed.

Major producers in the USA have cut output in varying degrees in anticipation of an improved market. Developing countries dependant on copper production for economic activity and foreign exchange earnings remain reluctant to formalise production cutbacks.

NEW VENTURES

The commodity review of the Standard Chartered Bank has put world mine output last year at 6,4m tonnes (1980: 6m t). The increase was largely due to improved US production on the strike affected 1980 level.

The closures and cutbacks have not, however, stopped new ventures from being undertaken. Despite some closures in the Philippines, a special compensatory fund has been established to offset losses while progress continues on a new smelter and fabrication plant funded by Japan.

Chile and Peru are making fresh assessments of proposed expansion plans. In Zambia, the merger of the two mining corporations into Zambia consolidated mines has been completed. Finance for the K206m projects to re-process the tailings dumps at Nchanga has been arranged.

As closures and cutbacks are unlikely to be reinstated until prices are sustained at a profitable level, a combination of physical shortages, an economic upturn and lower interest rates could boost copper later in the year.

BRIEFS

GWERU WHITES RAPPED--White people should not segregate themselves and Gweru City Council's white councillors should encourage other whites to mix freely with blacks, Councillor S. Munamba told the establishments and health committee recently. Councillor Munamba said it was the wish of the council to promote racial harmony and that white councillors were expected to play their part.--Midlands Representative [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 4]

NEW COMPANY B--The State House and the Prime Minister's residence are "attractive targets for the enemy," President Banana said yesterday. Addressing members of the new B Company of the Presidential Guard in Harare yesterday he said: "The enemy will not rest until it has destabilised this country. It is therefore important that adequate security be provided for the Prime Minister and the President." Although some of the troops had abandoned their education during the war, they should not regret the sacrifices they made. He told the new company--five officers and 123 soldiers of other ranks--at their passing out parade at Cranborne Barracks, that he had been delighted with the performance of A Company and hoped members of B Company would do the same. The men, all volunteers, completed an intensive six-week training course under British military instructors. Dr Sidney Sekeramayi, Minister of State for Defence in the Prime Minister's Office, Major-General Josiah Tungamirayi, the Acting Army Commander, and Major-General Shortis, head of the British military advisory team, were among the dignitaries at the parade. Private G. Meda received an award for the best record on the course. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 1]

RF TOLD TO MOVE--The Republican Front has been given three months' notice to vacate their offices in the Fourth Street car park in Harare as the city council wants the site for a bus terminus. The director of works, Mr Les Mitchell, said yesterday that the council had given the statutory period of notice. The chairman of the RF, Mr Geoff Kluckow, said the party had found alternative offices in a Harare suburg, but declined to give any further information as the estate agents had not finalised the deal. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 1 May 82 p 1]

TRADE FAIR ATTENDANCE--Bulawayo--A total of 107 630 people visited this year's Trade Fair--about 30 000 down on the 1981 event. Mr Graham Rowe, general manager of the fair, said yesterday that Saturday's attendance had been affected by the rain. A really good crowd had been expected as it was a public holiday. In the end, 19 000 people came compared with the record 24 000 on the public holiday during last year's fair. Considering that the fair ended a day early on Saturday night and that two extra days were assigned for traders only, the overall figures were not bad at all, Mr Rowe said. PILOT TRAINING IN GREECE--Six black Air Zimbabwe pilots last night left Harare for Greece and another six will follow them next week. The Minister of Transport, Mr Farai Masango, and the Greek Charge d'Affaires, Mr Yannis Azarias, were at Harare airport to see them off. A spokesman for Air Zimbabwe said the pilots would be engaged to Olympic Airways, the Greek national airline, to increase their flying hours to 1 000, which is the minimum requirement for a pilot to fly an Air Zimbabwe Viscount. He said the pilots were trained in Ethiopia, Pakistan and Romania and had graduated with about 230 to 250 flying hours. Speaking at a farewell party for the pilots, Mr Azarias said the training programme would cost about $1 million and the Greek government would be responsible for all their expenses. Mr Masange said he hoped the offer by the Greek government was the beginning of increased cooperation between Zimbabwe and Greece. "This development will hopefully facilitate our future understanding of each other in the various fields of social, economic and political co-operation. "The Government of Zimbabwe is grateful for the assistance the Greek government has extended to our country in accepting and offering to provide further flying experience to our black Zimbabwean pilots." NAME CHANGE--Nyanda Town Council has not formally approved or rejected the town's name change, the Mayor, Councillor Thomas Zawaira, said yesterday. He could not say when the council would meet to discuss the name change or whether it would appeal to the Cabinet committee to have the name changed from Nyanda to Masvingo. "I think it would be premature for me to pre-empt the decision of the council." The Nyanda council has passed a resolution enabling the Mucheke Hawkers Co-operative to establish five "corner shops" as a move towards realising socialist objectives, achieving growth with equity and eradicating individual hawking in the town. Opposing an 11-point protest letter written by the Nyanda branch of the Zimbabwe Chambers of Commerce slamming the concept of "neighbourhood shops" as "retrogressive," Councillor Munyaradzi Vudzijena said setting up corner shops was a step towards labour collectivisation and "a socialisation of produce arising therefrom."--Ziana [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 3]

SAUDI CATTLE PLAN--Prospects of turning the drought-affected livestock into foreign currency firmed yesterday when an application for a cattle-export permit lodged by a visiting Saudi Arabian tycoon was received by Government. A Ministry of Agriculture source said: "We have just received a letter from him on the subject. You will have to give us time to see what transpires."

Efforts to contact the businessmen for comment failed, but on Friday he assured our correspondent at the International Trade Fair in Bulawayo that he could airlift 100 cattle at a time, twice a week. The entrepreneur, who is interested in young slaughter stock, was quoted as having said: "You have cattle dying on the hoof, so what better way is there of easing the situation than selling them for hard foreign currency?" The Government spokesman would not say how long it could take to process the application until he had seen the businessman and had had a word with the Cold Storage Commission. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 4 May 82 p 1]

FOOD COST SUBSIDIES--Food subsidies will cost the Government more than $120 million in the 1981/82 financial year. This figure includes both the Ministry of Trade and Commerce and Ministry of Agriculture subsidy votes. Food subsidies have two elements, the "consumer" subsidy and "producer" subsidy. The Ministry of Trade and Commerce picks up the tab for consumer subsidies, the heaviest of which is on maize meal, a massive $64,8 million. The consumer maize price is subsidised to the tune of nearly $40 per tonne; the producer price for maize is currently $120 per tonne while the price to the consumer is only $89 per tonne. The consumer subsidy on flour is $8,5 million, and the total bill is just short of $80 million. The "producer" subsidies, financed by the Ministry of Agriculture, are losses incurred by the various parastatal bodies concerned with the marketing of agricultural produce, the DMB, Grain Marketing Board and Cold Storage Commission. These subsidies are estimated at $49,7 million for the current year, an increase of 64,5 percent over last year's figures. The subsidy on beef alone is estimated at $25,7 million, a 164 percent rise over the figure for the 1980/81 financial year. The estimated milk subsidy, too, has soared to $10,4 million, a 153 percent rise on last year. Informed sources in the city report that the Government may soon announce a phased removal of some of the food subsidies. The subsidy on opaque beer has already been removed. PAYMENTS DEFICIT--Harare-Zimbabwe's balance of payments slid into a ZD139,6-million deficit in 1981, the first loss recorded in 13 years, according to the latest monthly Digest of Statistics. Exports accounted for ZD888-million of foreign earnings, while imports cost the country ZD1,03-billion.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 14 May 82 p 23]

WARNING SHOTS--Harare--Political disturbances in the eastern Zimbabwean town of Rusape on Wednesday ended with police firing warning shots to disperse hundreds of demonstrators demanding the release of a number of people in custody. Earlier some 1 000 demonstrators invaded the town's police station and forced the release of a political commissar of the ruling Zanu (PF) party. The unrest followed weekend criticism by a Government Minister of an Opposition party, former Prime Minister Bishop Abel Muzorewa's United African National Council (UANC). On Tuesday UANC supporters were beaten and the possessions of four families were set alight. Disturbances continued and after an altercation with police, Mr Joseph Matoro, the district commissar was arrested among other Zanu (PF) demonstrators. Police reported that after Mr Matoro's release the situation calmed. There is hostility towards the UANC within Zanu (PF) due to claims by Mr Robert Mugabe that 5 000 Muzorewa supporters are being trained in South Africa to destabilise Zimbabwe. SIERRA LEONE PRESIDENT RECEIVES KENYA'S OUKO, OTHERS

AB111150 Freetown Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] The president, Dr Siaka Stevens, yesterday received at State House Kenya's minister of foreign affairs, Dr Robert Ouko, who is here as special envoy of Kenya's president and current chairman of the OAU, Dr Daniel Arap Moi. Dr Ouko delivered brotherly greetings from President Moi and a special message which, among other things, sought the views of President Stevens on the new Kenyan proposals in the solving of the problem of Western Sahara. Dr Ouko visited recently other African elder statesmen on the issue with a view to making progress toward the Western Sahara problem. President Stevens said that positive response was (?given) to the proposals. Dr Ouko was presented to the president by Foreign Minister Dr Abdulai Conteh.

President Stevens, who is also the current chairman of the ECOWAS, was yesterday formally invited to the next summit of the organization which takes place in Cotonou, Benin, at the end of this month. Benin's trade and industry minister, Ayayi Manasse, extended the invitation to Dr Stevens with the (?friendship) and a personal message from Benin's president, Mathieu Kerekou. Mr Manasse, who is here as a special envoy, also underscored Sierra Leone's international image under President Stevens' leadership and pointed out the mutual maximum cooperation among ECOWAS member states.

Accepting the invitation, President Stevens remarked that African leaders must always try to close their ranks for the advancement of the African continent. At the meeting was the foreign minister, Dr Abdulai Conteh; his permanent secretary, Mr Charles (Wise); and the director of external trade in Benin, Mr (Devidi Aldetto).

ECOWAS OFFICIAL SEES SUMMIT AS TURNING POINT

AB110641 Paris AFP in English 0409 GMT 11 May 82

[Text] Cotonou, 11 May (AFP)--The next summit of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) being held here in Benin's capital at the end of this month should mark a decisive turning-point in the 16 member regional grouping's development, its executive secretary Boubakar Uuatara said here Monday.

He hoped the May 27-28 conference, the seventh of its kind, would see thought given to how to enable ECOWAS to achieve lift-off.

One of its big problems was inertia in member states regarding the implementation of supposedly joint decisions, Mr Ouatara told a press conference. That was due to the period of adaptation the organisation was experiencing and to an absence of circulation of relevant information in member countries, he said.

But Mr Ouatara thought that the diversity of socio-political regimes among ECOWAS members gave it strength and richness--"ECOWAS had no adversaries, we are our own adversaries," he commented.

One of the body's guidelines had to be the need to adapt its general programme in a long-term perspective so as to give members a chance to achieve together what they were unable to manage alone, Mr Ouatara said.

ECOWAS represented 45 per cent of the population of black Africa, and its future lay in mobilising all the energies of its component societies to ensure them a place in the science and technology of the beginning of the 21st century, the executive secretary urged.

INCREASED SALES OF FRENCH ARMS TO AFRICA REPORTED

Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Mar 82 p 38

[Text] In 1981, exports of French arms to foreign countries totaled 33.8 billion francs, a figure which in terms of the present value of the franc represents a 10-percent decline from the previous year. This is what Charles Hernu told the members of the National Assembly's Defense Commission on the morning of Thursday 11 March. It was the first time that a minister of defense had given members of the parliament official, albeit provisional, statistics on French arms sales abroad.

In November 1981, during the parliamentary vote on the 1982 defense budget, Charles Hernu announced that he would regularly give the chairman, recorder, and members of the Defense Commission the total figures on France's arms contracts with foreign customers and the destination of these military supplies.

In 1981, exports to the Maghreb and Middle Eastern countries totaled 24.2 billion francs, or 71.6 percent of France's total military exports. The countries of the Far East received 1.7 billion francs worth of French arms (for 5 percent of the total); Western Europe and North America placed orders for 3.2 billion francs; Latin America for 2.5 billion francs; black Africa for 1.8 billion francs; and Eastern Europe (and various countries) for 0.4 billion francs.

It must be noted that the percentage of exports to black Africa registers a significant increase, climbing from 1.6 percent in 1980 to 5.3 percent of the total exports in 1981.

Mr. Hernu recalled on this occasion that since his appointment as minister of defense, he has tried to reorient the policy regarding French arms sales abroad so as to bring it into line with France's foreign policy--more particularly in the matter of industrial and technical assistance to the Third World countries, which will thus benefit from a transfer of technology and from France's industrial know-how.

HOPES RISE FOR RELEASE OF FOREIGN PRISONERS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3378, 3 May 82 pp 1224-1225

[Excerpt] An Angolan promise to free its three remaining Portuguese political prisoners has raised the hopes of Western diplomats in Luanda that other Westerners held in Angolan jails, including nine mercenaries, might also be freed, writes Richard Wallis of Reuters.

The mercenaries — two Americans, six Britons and an Irishman — were sentenced to long prison terms in 1976 for fighting with one of the two losing movements in the three-sided civil war which erupted in Angola after Portugal decided to grant independence to the biggest of its former African colonies.

Angolan authorities are also holding a US pilot who was arrested last year.

This would not be the first time that Angola has freed Portuguese political prisoners, but those released in the past were Leftists. The three who have been promised release include a lieutenant-colonel in the Portuguese army.

"It would be very difficult for the Angolans to justify any discrimination against the other nationalities," a Western diplomat said when asked whether the freeing of the Portuguese could affect the fate of the others.

The issue of the two American mercenaries and the US pilot has figured in delicate negotiations on the establishment of diplomatic relations between Washington and Luanda.

Angolan television, which, like the rest of the media, is under tight state control, let slip recently the phrase "the future diplomatic relations between the United States of America and the People's Republic of Angola" in its main news bulletin.

Angolan officials were quick to point out the significance of the phrase, to which no qualifications were attached.

If talks which the Angolan Foreign Minister, Sr. Paulo Jorde, and the US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Mr. Chester Crocker, have been holding in Paris this year lead to US recognition of the Luanda administration, it is likely that Angola would release the three Americans as a goodwill gesture.

If that were to happen, Britain and Ireland would be certain to press for the release of the seven remaining mercenaries, the diplomatic sources said.

Western press reports earlier this year said the Americans would be exchanged for two Soviet airmen held by the main Angolan guerrilla movement, The National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA).

The UNITA leader, Sr. Jonas Savimbi, said in a recent Portuguese state television interview that he would release the Soviet airmen, whose plane was shot down by his guerrillas, only if an International Red Cross plane took off from Luanda to fetch them and landed in UNITA-controlled territory.

This would amount to the Luanda government admitting the division of the country and it seems politically an impossible condition to fulfil. Western diplomats said that in any case the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had not been asked to arrange such an exchange.

PERSONAL CONFLICT BETWEEN GOUKOUNI, HABRE RUINS NATION

Brussels LE SOIR in French 22-24 Mar 82

[Series of articles by Colette Braeckman]

["Hissein Habre's Partisans Scour the Black Market for Gasoline"]

[Excerpts] El Geneina, Sudan--Today, ER Geneina [a city in western Sudan near the Chadian frontier] has fallen back into its customary torpor. Water is delivered by donkeys loaded with leather waterskins, and only those who have a generator have electricity.

Clearly, however, the generator operates on gasoline. And gasoline, which is almost impossible to find, costs 600 Sudanese pounds (2,400 Belgian francs) per barrel. So people light their homes with storm lanterns and with candles, and radio communications, the only contact between the city and the capital, are brief and often impossible to understand.

No doubt that is why General Bachir and Colonel Jellal (one of them fat, the other one thin, but both of them equally debonair), who guard this strategic frontier, are philosophers.

They know the limits of their power and laugh heartily when you ask them if they are able to close the frontier to the supporters of Hissein Habre, who come to obtain provisions in El Geneina.

Mamoun, the chief of the Sudanese security service, is more careful. Keeping a nomad waiting who is trying to sell him an ostrich egg decorated with complicated arabesque designs, he measures out before a map the extent of his powerlessness: he must watch over 250 km of border!

His watching brief should extent to the Libyan border, but his vehicles are almost completely paralyzed.

That is why the Sudanese Army now resembles the Canadian Mounted Police. And his reconnaissance expeditions are limited to a few trips toward the Chadian frontier.

Everyone here knows Hissein Habre personally. When he arrived in Quibres, on the border, after having been expelled from Ndjamena by the Libyans in December 1980, they housed him, fed him, and welcomed him like a brother. And today his successes do not astonish them. They know the determination of the Northern Armed Forces [FAN] and close their eyes when these soldiers scour the black market trying to obtain gasoline.

Perplexity of Colonel Issam

Colonel Issam is officially the counselor of the Sudanese Army, and each day he tries to establish radio contact with Cairo and with Hissein Habre. At times he succeeds in establishing contact and at other times not. The other day, just before the cease-fire, he gave us a personal message for the leader of the FAN: What did he need in order to take Ndjamena? A question which angered Hissein Habre: "He knows perfectly well what I need; it is gasoline. And he also knows that he has nothing to give me but useless advice."

Poor Colonel Issam! When we saw him again, his vehicle was out of action, and he was negotiating the purchase of a horse belonging to the Red Cross team.

"Belgian Rifle"

When we tried to reach Chad from El Geneina, we learned the virtues of the "IBM System": "Insha'allah" (God willing), "Bukra" (Tomorrow), "Ma'alaysh" (Too bad). The first day, we had permission to leave but there was no vehicle available--and no gasoline. The second day, we found a place in a truck which seemed to have gasoline, but the necessary permission had disappeared. Chadian trucks are not permitted to cross the frontier, and all supplies (barrels of gasoline, food, equipment) are carried on camelback from El Geneina to Adre, the first Chadian town, 40 km away. The third day, Hassan and Baal, two soldiers who had traveled from Khartoum, found a small Peugeot "pickup" truck ready to make the trip. Finally, on the fourth day, everything was ready: truck, gasoline, and permission. Everything was in order, except the truck, which was loaded with 2 tons of various kinds of food and 15 passengers crowded together on sacks of millet and the baggage. Thus was a vehicle which broke down every 20 minutes, which had to be pulled, pushed, taken apart, and repaired at each sand dune, at every pothole in the road. Not to mention the detours across the grassy plains when it was necessary to avoid the landmines which had been buried under the road by the Libyan Army and which had killed a number of cattle whose carcasses were drying in the sun.

Fortunately, once past the frontier, and having gone through the numerous Sudanese control points, the atmosphere changed. The vehicle stopped once again. The driver and his mechanics were burrowing in the motor. However, the passengers were changing their clothes in the bushes. The jeans, the cloaks [djellabas], the white tunics were replaced by turbans and camouflage uniforms. We squeezed together a little more to make room for the Kalachnikov [AK-47's] and the "Belgian rifles"--considered the best assault weapon, provided it was cleaned meticulously.

And when we reached Adre, night had long since fallen. In the distance we could hear the laughter of the women who carry water in large earthen jars, and everyone assembled around the "ball," a large lump of millet dough which you knead with your right hand and then dip into a torrid sauce.

["The Lybians Have Left Behind Some Very Bad Memories"]

[Excerpts] Abeche is no more than 180 km away, but it took us a whole day to reach the second largest city in Chad, passing along the road the wrecks of tanks and jeeps abandoned by the Libyan Army.

Here, as in the vicinity of Gulbus, on the frontier, and as at the cemetery, where the Libyans buried about 30 officers just outside Abeche, you realize that the hasty departure of Qadhdhafi's troops was due not only to the injunctions of the OAU or to international pressure. The Libyan Army was thoroughly defeated by the FAN. Even before the order to evacuate Chad was given, the Libyan troops had been pushed back into the towns by the troops of Hissein Habre and had suffered heavy losses in men and equipment.

The Pistachio Green of the Libyans

However, Abeche, a beautiful desert city, gold and rose-colored in the setting sun, is still marked by the passage of the Libyans through it. The minaret of the principal mosque was painted green, and all public buildings, the banks (long closed), the post office, the courthouse, were daubed with the same pistachio green, as was the bandstand, where once, no doubt, the French Army used to play "Aupres de ma blonde."

And on all the walls the Libyans had posted their credo of long quotations from the little green book of Qadhdhafi, which proclaim in particular "the indivisible unity of Chad and of Libya" and "the future superiority of the black race over all others." The Chadians, who don't laugh at this, consider such professions of faith to be at the very limits of racism.

In the rooms of the subprefecture office, the Libyans had left an enormous video tape recorder and a pile of cassettes. In the evening, when the generator is functioning, the FAN troops again and again look at the pictures of an extraordinary meeting held by the Libyans in the principal square. You see there an impassive crowd, held in order by the machineguns of the soldiers of Ahmat Acyl (now minister of foreign affairs of the GUNT [Transitional National Union Government], the ally of the Libyans), while a colonel who bears an astonishing resemblance to Qadhdhafi makes an interminable speech celebrating, it seems, the indissoluble union of the two countries.

However, the Libyans left more bitter memories of their stay: the lycee was closed, the teaching of French was prohibited and Arabic was promoted, Islamic justice eliminated modern laws, and above all many civilians were executed, including the prefect of the city who, it is said, had been imprudent enough to intercede in favor of certain prisoners. Residents of Abeche told us that when they left, some of the Libyans took with them some women who they considered pretty.

Hissein Habre has installed himself in the subprefecturate office, a white building which, with its two stories, dominates Abeche. Almost invisible, he leads a spartan existence there, guarded on the ground floor by young soldiers armed to the teeth.

From the "general staff" offices in a large, smelly building where we preferred to sleep on the terrace, the advisers and the military leaders go to and from the "Presidency"; vehicles overloaded with soldiers who have adopted the driving speed of their leader leave from there for the front. The soldiers wear helmets with the visors resting on their "Afro" haircuts, sunglasses, cartridge belts around their waist, and a knife bound around their biceps. Other soldiers have kept the traditional uniform of the warriors of the North: narrow pants, long tunic, and turban; but they look no less fierce.

However, despite the omnipresent weapons (the soldiers keep them close by, even when sleeping), Abeche is remarkably calm. You hear practically no gunshots, and when there is an explosion, a patrol quickly moves out to punish those who dare to waste ammunition.

Radio France and Prayer

At the general staff offices, the day begins with morning prayer at sunrise, immediately followed by the first broadcast from the international service of Radio France, which is listened to with deep interest and sharply commented on. The FAN troops accuse the "voice of France" of presenting a truncated version of events and of conferring on Goukouni Oueddei more authority than he really has.

An astonishing personality presides over the "general staff": Jean d'Abezac. A tall, blond man with blue eyes, he could be mistaken for a German mercenary. However, cloaked in his white djellaba, he prays conscientiously five times a day, with his forehead in the dust. His father, we are told, was a French officer from the Dordogne; his mother was a Toubou nomad. And he considers himself fully a Chadian, adviser to Hissein Habre and occasional negotiator. Somewhat of a boaster, as some French from the Midi can be, he brags of having been sent to France to meet Jean-Pierre Cot, minister delegate for cooperation. The interview went off badly, he says; he treated Cot as a "leftist," and Cot called him a "reactionary." To this he retorted: "Yes, I am a reactionary, and proud of it."

If Hissein Habre wishes to place himself beyond East-West differences (even though he derives some benefit as the number one opponent of the Libyans), his entourage does not hide its "pro-Western" sympathies. However, this is a particularly gratitous sympathy, for if Saudi Arabia seems to support the FAN, American encouragement is purely moral. "If Washington helped us, at least we would have Land Rovers and gasoline," the soldiers say.

Paradoxically, through their education the FAN leaders are culturally very close close to France, no doubt more so than their adversaries. However, they bear a tenacious hatred toward Paris, an old hatred which finds new motives for its existence each day.

[24 Mar 82 p 5 Part III]

["A Country Ruined by Two Men's Struggle to the Death"]

[Text] A few days ago, Abeche shook with unaccustomed activity. Less sparing with gasoline than usual, the soldiers came and went aboard brandnew armored cars, displayed artillery and heavy weapons, and left on the road to Sudan, while tank trucks still bore the label, "Integrated National Army." Through the dust you could see one or two white men in the more sophisticated vehicles. They waved to us as they went by, but very discreetly. At the same time, wounded began to flow into the hospital, hands shot off, wounded in the lungs, and with less serious wounds. The most seriously wounded could not be moved from Oum Hadjer.

It was there, in this little subprefectural town located 140 km from Abeche, that the FAN won an important victory, after having suffered the beginnings of a defeat. For several weeks the FAN had occupied the city in as casual a manner as at Abeche and had relaxed their vigilance, in the belief that the government forces would attack elsewhere. One Sunday morning, moving in almost unnoticed, the soldiers of President Goukouni entered the outskirst of the city, near the hospital.

According to those who escaped, there soon was carnage. The wounded were shot in their beds, and a Chadian nurse had her throat cut. The following night, having mobilized all their units stationed in Abeche, the FAN decided to move in. They retook the city at dawn, encircling the government troops who came mainly from the South--men of Vice President Kamougue. There were heavy losses for the forces of the government coalition: nearly 400 killed; 310 prisoners whom the FAN forces released very quickly, since they were too heavy a burden to take care of; and abundant amounts of equipment that had just been delivered by France and Algeria captured in excellent condition. The FAN even obtained some cash: the Goukouni troops had just been paid, and the FAN troops found good money in the pockets of their new uniforms (Hissein Habre's troops are volunteers and are not paid).

After the battle of Oum Hadjer, the hospital in Abeche was filled with wounded, with prisoners and FAN soldiers being treated equally. This is a beautiful hospital constructed by the French, well equipped, with an operating room, x-ray equipment, etc. However, today it has no water (a donkey brings two containers of water, and that's all). Two nurses from the [charitable French] organization "Doctors Without Frontiers," Annick and Brigitte, have total responsibility for the patients. The reinforcement promised by the Doctors Without Frontiers organization are awaited with impatience, since Annick and Brigitte, who for months have dealt only with the most urgent cases, are overwhelmed by the flow of wounded.

The city of Abeche is in the image of this hospital. With ridiculously limited resources and underqualified personnel full of good will, the FAN is trying to make the public services operate. The hospital more or less functions, but everything is lacking. The courts have been reopened, and certain members of the FAN who have juridicial knowledge are trying to reintroduce modern law alongside Islamic justice. The lycee was reopened after the city was recaptured. The 500 students, who for 3 years had vegetated in the same class, have again begun to take courses in French, English, and mathematics.

Many of the teachers, who have not been paid for years, have gone to the countryside with their families. Others have come back and are working out of the goodness of their hearts. Among the FAN troops, those who have special qualifications (former ministers, former diplomats) have become teachers of English, geography, and French for 4 hours per day. On the blackboard at the school you see written out, "Chad is the crisis point of Africa." Mokhtar Mustapha, the general supervisor of the lycee, explains that the students must make up for lost time, and that the first concern of the FAN, despite the lack of equipment and qualified personnel, was to reopen the lycees and the elementary schools in the city.

Wornout Efforts

Despite their military power, their capacity for organization, and the numerous officials who have rejoined them, the FAN remains isolated politically and diplomatically. Hissein Habre is considered a rebel, although he clearly has the substance (and the qualifications) of a statesman. And meanwhile, his troops are trying to normalize the situation in the regions which they occupy, to make the cities function, to reorganize commercial distribution networks, to make public transportation function. The FAN, whose discipline is very tight, is visibly trying to win the support of the civilian population, which is tired of the war and of the successive occupations when the various Chadian factions behaved like "warlords" and lived off the country.

However, the people of Abeche follow the evolution of the political and military situation with relative indifference. "Only one thing interests me, and that is for the war to come to an end," a teacher explains. And one student, on the verge of tears, recalls that "200 members of my family have died on one side or the other."

"I'm fed up with it, I'm fed up with it," he ceaselessly repeats, emphasizing: "If France wanted to do so, it could put an end to this war in 48 hours. Instead of that, it continues to provide arms and munitions."

Why War?

After several days living alongside the FAN troops, as was the case during the first hour of our visit, a single question remains. Why does this war go on--this fratricidal struggle which divides families, decimates the people, ruins the country, and threatens to cross Chad off the map? As for the Libyans, whose presence explained the struggle undertaken by Hissein Habre--haven't they left? Why is reconciliation impossible when the FAN have in their ranks many people whom the country needs so much?

In fact (and at the end of the conversations we had, this wish seemed evident) the FAN wants negotiations. After having been driven out of Ndjamena by the Libyan Army in December 1980 and having gone into the countryside in the East, they want to reenter their capital with their heads high and to participate in the government.

Aware of his military strength and of the unfailing dominance which he exercises over his men (beyond any ideology or any political belief), Hissein Habre supports the resolution adopted by the Permanent Committee of the OAU on 11 February 1982, which provides for the beginning of negotiations between the GUNT and the FAN by 15 March, the holding of legislative and presidential elections between 1 May and 30 June, and the withdrawal of the Inter-African Force by 30 June.

"If we made war, it was in order to end up with negotiations," says Hissein Habre, "and to free our country once and for all from all foreign interference—the Libyans yesterday, the French and Algerians today."

However, despite his conciliatory tone, it is clear that Hissein Habre will not be satisfied with a folding chair or even with a seat in the government. Between him and Goukouni Wedeye there is an implacable struggle for power which has begun and which can end only with the total disappearance of one of the two adversaries.

The gap between the two men cannot be bridged. Everything which once united them now separates them. Both of them were born in the North and were founders of the Northern Armed Forces, of which Hissein Habre was president and Goukouni, the son of Derdei, the spiritual leader of the Toubou tribe, was vice president. They fought together against the Southern-dominated government of President Tombalbaye, of General Malloum, against the French Army. They were both responsible for the famous Claustre affair [the kidnapping of a French nurse).

The evenings are long in Abeche, and as the hours pass by, tongues wag freely. Thus we were told that it was Goukouni, then vice president of the FAN, who had decided to execute the French representative Galopin, who in fact was the agent of Tombalbaye, and whom the Toubou tribe would not pardon for having tried to divide them.

However, one learns above all (and perhaps this is one of the reasons for such tenacious hatred on the part of former comrades in arms) that the colossal ransom paid by France to obtain the release of Francoise Claustre (13 billion CFA francs, or 250 million French francs) was reportedly taken entirely by Coukouni. Hissein Habre kept only a few weapons and a bad reputation from this affair.

Complex intrigues in which France, Libya, various secret services, and the many Chadian factions were involved form the warp and woof of the personal conflict between Goukouni Wedeye and Hissein Habre--this struggle between leaders which is ruining Chad.

At El Geneina, the Egyptian colonel, who does not have many resources but has immense good will, clearly summarized the position of those who support Hissein Habre: "He is against the Libyans, and he is the most intelligent. It is he who should be the leader."

'LE FIGARO' VIEWS 'DELICATE' CHAD SITUATION

PM100813 Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 May 82 p 3

[Y.B. report: "Chad: Hissein Habre Resumes Offensive"]

[Text] In Chad everything is learned indirectly and by word of mouth. Thus yesterday it was learned with some certainty that last week the "Northern Armed Forces," [FAN], as Hissein Habre's group is still called, took Salal, an important location 470 km north of N'djamena.

So FAN has resumed the offensive after 4 weeks of calm. It seems that the fighting at Salal was very violent and that troops of President Goukouni's "People's Armed Forces" suffered "substantial losses." The vise is closing inexorably on N'djamena and, still according to rumors, the Chadian Government now holds only a belt of land around the capital and a strip of land near Ati, from whence the Niger blue helmets departed a few days ago.

Meanwhile the N'djamena population lives in fear of another civil war due to the deterioration in the political climate and the splits within the government. For the past month a "neither war nor peace" atmosphere has prevailed and the civilian population's anxiety has spread. Several high-ranking officials of humanitarian organizations are, at their own request, being protected in their travels by troops of the African peace-keeping force. Some diplomats have sought the same kind of protection. Supervision of the military police is out of the authorities' hands, and the French manager of an oil company suffered bullet wounds in the corridor of a police station in N'djamena where he had been summoned from his home.

Last, though the high commissioner for refugees sees to the daily feeding of 200,000 people, beggars have made their appearance after over 2 years' absence. N'djamena has become a dirty city despite the commissioner's allocation of 50 million African financial units for improving the capital.

The government is being hampered by "profound divergences" in its formation of a new government, 8 days after the official announcement of a ministerial reshuffle.

Colonel Kamougue apparently refused to accept head of state Goukouni Weddeye's "fait accompli." Monday evening, on his return from a month's stay in the south, it seems he categorically opposed the appointment of the proposed prime minister (apparently former President Maloum).

The Council of State, which will comprise political and military leaders, and the government, which will be composed of high-ranking officials, will have well-defined roles. The former will be responsible for the political aspect of the conduct of affairs and the latter for "government." But the situation is very delicate.

CONDITIONS IN EASTERN PART OF COUNTRY NOTED

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 22 Mar 82 pp 1, 2

[Article: "Goukouni Oueddei Fights as a Combattant Among Many Others"]

[Text] It will soon be a month since President Goukouni Oueddei went to the front. The presence in the east of the Chadian head of state is proof that the struggle going on in Batha is a very decisive one for Chad's future. There is a rather special climate holding sway in Ati where our reporter, Matha Ben Matha, saw the number one Chadian once again become a fighting soldier among so many others.

"Battle dress," turbaned head, kalashnikov slung across his shoulder. Goukouni Oueddei, the head of state, has rediscovered the limitations and constraints of the "bush," so forgetting the rosy life of the capital. He has been at the front lines nearly a month (and is there still). Ati, Mongo, Salal, Goss. Then an endless sojourn at the garrison town of Ati, which has become home base for the units which have withdrawn from geographical Quaddai, as well as for those which have left other military zones; their goal is the eradication of the rebellion and of the Zairian and Nigerian detachments of the Pan-African Force.

It is this overarmed universe, where the combattants unlimger their heavy weapons to strut about, that the president of the Transitional National Union Government has chosen as a field of application for the military solution theory. Evidently, there is nothing to prevent the crushing of the Northern Armed Forces (FAN). There is an impressive war arsenal and thousands of men capable of saving Chad. But victory is slow in coming, and with just reason. President Toukouni provided us the answer during a meeting with the combattants at Batoualfil (35 km from Ati): "The political group spirit is annihilating our efforts and hindering our actions in the field." So what can be done? The head of state is working for the "detrendization" of the army....

At each stage of his tour, Mr Goukouni Oueddei received notables, civil servants, offers of the Pan-African Force, etc.... To all his questioners, the president of GUNT explained the deep-seated reasons why he refuses to negotiate with Hissein Habre. Everyone understood him, except perhaps those who have contacts in the rebellion. And God alone knows there are many of them within the ranks of government. But still a lull reigns on the front which is lilely to engender demobilization, especially as our combat soldiers have no "flair for leadership."

Besides the military concerns, lethargy has taken hold upon the regions we visited: almost non-existent government, medical centers suffering from lack of medicines, schools opening their doors only at the whim of the teachers. In the area of schooling, the development of the teaching of Arabic is to be noted. Mongo gives proof of this. And to all this, famine has pitilessly added its woe. Green Ati (where the Libyans have left their mark) has seen its population grow; refugees who have come from surrounding areas must deal with problems of lodging and hunger. Before the end of war, the eastern part of Chad is dying inch by inch. (A.T.P.)

SUGAR PLANT'S REOPENING

[Article: "Official Reopening of the Farcha SONASUT Plants"]

[Text] The activities of the SONASUT [National Sugar Company of Chad] plants in Farcha resumed two weeks ago. A cocktail party given by the authorities of the sugar corporation officially marked the reopening. SONASUT's Chairman of the Board, Mr Ahmed Ngakoutou Valentin, took this occasion to present a brief overview of the corporation.

The three years of war and instability that Chad has known have caused SONASUT considerable delays as regards their forecasts. According to Mr Ngakoutou, SONASUT had a 46,000-ton delay as compared to its initial program and an 11,000-ton loss as compared to its 1979 program. But the corporation still intends to continue its operations and consolidate its foundations. A five year plan will thus be submitted to the bakers so as to obtain new aid, allowing the complete and permanent restructuring of the corporation's financial situation. The new operations director of the Farcha plants is Mr Idriss Koura. (A.T.P.)

TIGRE SPOKESMAN MEETS PRESS PEOPLE

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 9 Apr 82 p 2

[Text]

Mogadishu, Thurday-Mr. Yamani Kidani a Spokesman of the Tigre Liberation Front (T.P.L.F.) now visiting the Somali Democratic Republic disclosed at a press conference held at the Somali Ministry of Information Conference Hall here, that the Tigre Liberation forces have killed several thousands of Abyssinian forces during this month.

He told the press conference that his front, side by side with the EPLF of Eritrea, have scored tremendous victories over the invading Russian, Abyssinian Libian and South Yemeni forces in Eritrea.

«The Tigre Liberation forces have not consolidated their positions in Tigre only but are now in Wallo Region, central Ethiopia, and we have killed over 200 Abyssinian forces there and seized arms and amunitions wich helped to train the malitia forces and more Tigre freedom fighters opposing the fascist regime of Haile Mariam» the spokesman said.

Speaking about the co-operation with other Liberation forces in the Horn, Mr. Kidani said that his front has excellent co-ordination with the other forces in the Horn fighting against Abyssinia black colonialism.

Accompanied by the Regional Representetive in Mogadishu Mr. Said Ali, the spokesman indicated that they received very little arms aid and that they are engaged in a relentless liberation war against a world power, like Soviet Union with Libya and Yemen.

He concluded that their ultimate goal is to bring about freedom and peace for their people who have been fighting in a guerilla war for several years.

BONGO CALLS FOR PAN-AFRICAN FORCE FOR ANGOLA

AB121655 Luanda ANGOP in French 1414 GMT 12 May 82

[Text] Luanda, 12 May (ANGOP)--Gabonese President Omar Bongo has stated that his projected visit to Angola will be a familiarization one during which the two countries will have the opportunity to expand areas of cooperation within the framework of the excellent relations existing between them.

In an interview with a team of Angolan newsmen in Libreville, the Gabonese head of state also indicated with regard to the acts of aggression against Angola that it was necessary to send a pan-African force to Angola to ensure Angola's defense rather than to send one to Chad.

The pan-African peacekeeping force stationed in Chad should be sent to Angola and be replaced in Chad by the UN blue helmets, he said.

On the silence of some African countries on racist South Africa's attacks on the People's Republic of Angola, President Bongo stressed that it is painful to note that when the Africans meet at OAU summits resolutions are adopted, the problem is discussed, speeches are made and yet when they return home these resolutions and declarations remain dead letters. With regard to the same issue he said that within the OAU we must speak the same language, that is the language of firmness, sincerity and the defense of Angola.

On the aggressive attitude of the North American administration toward Angola, the Gabonese head of state said this problem was due to the lack of understanding on the part of the American Government. The American Government does not know our problems well and moreover, it does not know that it is not by helping an opponent of the Angolan regime that one can accomplish something, he stressed.

As far as Gabon is concerned, if there is an Angolan element in Gabon preaching against his country and Angola's policy, we will put him on a plane and expell him from our national territory, the Gabonese head of state said in reference to the expulsion of puppet Angolan elements from Gabon.

With regard to the Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa [UDEAC], President Bongo thinks that Angola's contribution to this organization will be a multiple one. He added that as the UDEAC is a purely economic organization which deals with economics and as Angola is an important country, Angola's contribution will be highly appreciated.

It will be recalled that relations between Angola and Gabon have developed spectacularly since the brief visit to Gabon by the Angolan president, Jose Eduardo do Santos, during the UDEAC summit which was held in Libreville in December 1981. During his stay, the Angolan head of state held talks with his Gabonese counterpart, Omar Bongo, in the presence of the Congolese president, Denis Sassou-Nguesso. Also within the framework of bilateral relations, an Angolan delegation from the state secretariat for cooperation went to Libreville last January to draft with Gabonese officials the first economic agreements which will be signed shortly in Luanda.

BONGO COMMENTS ON SDAR ADMISSION TO OAU

AB121745 Luanda ANGOP in French 1435 GMT 12 May 82

[Text] Luanda, 12 May (ANGOP)--Gabonese head of state Omar Bongo, talking about the admission of the SDAR to the OAU, admitted that OAU Secretary General Edem Kodjo has the right to sometimes ask African heads of state to assume their responsibilities.

In an interview granted to ANGOP in Libreville, Omar Bongo added that Edem Kodjo should have informed the heads of state beforehand that during the ministerial session he intended to admit the SDAR. He, however, felt that that was not the appropriate time to do it.

He also indicated that there is still a resolution in force: the African heads of state may hold an extraordinary summit on this matter at any time and at any place if the current chairman so decides and the parties concerned agreed.

Talking about the link between the admission of the SDAR into the OAU and the next holding of its summit in Tripoli, Omar Bongo said he did not think that summit would be compromised by the POLISARIO affair.

The Gabonese president hoped that wisdom and realism would guide Africans and African heads of state in particular so that they could come together before the Tripoli summit to find ways and means of holding that summit in the right atmosphere.

It would be sad and even disastrous if the OAU does not survive and it would be very unfortunate that Africans, who with a certain level of maturity set up the OAU, should allow it to die or break up, he concluded.

BONGO OUTLINES DEVELOPMENT PROSPECTS--Luanda, 12 May (ANGOP)--Gabonese President Omar Bongo has in an interview outlined Gabon's socioeconomic development prospects in the coming years. Priority areas for these prospects are the trans-Gabon railroad, agriculture, health and education. Talking to Angolan reporters in Libreville, President Bongo stated that a special emphasis will be laid on the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as the training of the youth and national political unity. He also indicated that his country is currently implementing a provisional plan which will end in 1983, and a 5-year plan will be drawn up in 1984. In this context, he stressed the need for Gabonese to be conscientious and united for, he stressed, without national unity no government, however strong it may be, can do anything concrete. Finally, President Omar Bongo said during the 14 years of renovation, the Gabonese have shown political maturity. [Text] [AB121901 Luanda ANGOP in French 1801 GMT 12 May 82]

MALAISE OVER POTENTIAL LOSSES, GAINS AFFECTS SOCIETY

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3378, 3 May 82 p 1180

[Text] THERE IS every indication that the struggle over state power continues in Ghana. After four months of government by the Provisional National Defence Council, there is still no doubt that the prevailing view is in favour of participatory democracy of a decidedly popular nature. Naturally, the struggle has continued to be over the practical details which determine the old question of in whose hands power lies.

Perhaps the most important observation to make is that increasing numbers of people have realised that kalabule is not an isolated phenomenon which can therefore be dealt with in isolation, but that it is an operative part of an economic and political system. By the force of circumstances, people were first forced to ask themselves why, for instance, chiefs and moneylenders, as well as managers, could not join or form defence committees. In some cases, the same question had to be asked time and time again until it was decided that management personnel could only participate if they had the approval of 95 per cent of the workforce. This is an example of the preliminary stages of class consciousness in action.

However, there are those Ghanaians who fear distinct class perceptions on the part of ordinary Ghanaians. This anxious category is not limited to some managers (bank and otherwise), business executives and senior civil servants. There are very anxious senior officers in the armed forces, and other people of similarly high status. Their general problem is that since December 31, the original basis of their status has been challenged, mostly indirectly.

Anxiety over an uncharted, and potentially revolutionary, future is not limited only to those who know what they have to lose. It also affects those who cannot see clearly what they will gain, and are more comfortable with the little that they know they would get out of the present system. Such a group is students in general. Big politics have been played in recent weeks over the question of whether students should return to campus immediately or stay out on task force duties until October. Much more was at stake than just the fate of the school year, or whether patriotic lecturers would pick up their credentials and movable assets and run abroad, for want of students.

The stakes involved the uses to which the most easily organised section of the most dynamic portion of the population would be put in the present situation. Would they continue with the task force programme — which, it is said, has achieved great things in cocoa evacuation, community health, tax collection, and has also shown a great number of students the way in which much of Ghana's wealth is produced and in what conditions — with its beneficial effects on both students and the population at large, or would they settle back into the academic routine of the old university system, a form which is contested in industrial societies much more than in places like Ghana, which inherited this model from Oxbridge.

One side of opinion feels that a harmful political vacuum has been created, at a stroke, by removing students from a direct involvement in these initial stages of transforming Ghana. By the same token, another opinion is comforted because another brick has fallen into place to make Ghana, May, 1982, more like December, 1981, only a little harder to live in.

What is certain is that apart from magnificent advances in tax collection, the pace of reform appears to be slow in Ghana, though not for a lack of intentions. The old order has been overthrown but not defeated; it is resilient and well-connected locally and internationally. It would be wrong to blame the PNDC for a lack of direction because it has pointed the way forward to a national democratic revolution. Those who support genuine democratisation in Ghana need to identify the "bottlenecks" and act in consequence. When momentum dies down, the result can be stagnation and putrefaction.

REPORTED MOVES TO CLOSE WEEKLY DAILY PAPERS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3378, 3 May 82 p 1229

[Text] Workers of the New Times Corporation have petitioned the PNDC to stop moves in certain quarters aimed at stopping the publication of the Ghanaian Times and the Weekly Spectator. At a People's Assembly called by the PDC in the corporation's premises in Accra, the workers noted that a committee had been set up to work out the plan of closing down the only national papers with authentic Ghanaian origin, having been established by the late Dr. Kwame Nkrumah in 1958 to propogate the people's struggle for true freedom.

In the view of the workers, such a move to close down one of the two national dailies and weeklies at the height of the Revolution could only be inspired by counter-revolutionary manouvres to bring about unemployment and other consequences which would discredit the PNDC. The resolution noted that the proposal was made at a meeting of representatives of the Graphic Corporation, the GBC, and the Ministry of Information without proper representation of the New Times Corporation.

The workers were surprised that although the Secretary for Information, Mr. Ato Austin, promised some time ago to take immediate action on certain recommendations made by the workers nothing had since been done. The workers felt that the delay in implementing the recommendations was aimed at shielding some management staff. They pointed out that when PDC-inspired workers' reports and resolutions to government were not followed up, the PDCs not only lost the confidence of the workers but also lost faith in the government.

REGISTRATION OF PRIVATELY-OWNED TRACTORS--The Upper Regional Administration has started registering all privately owned tractors in the region with the view to supplying adequate diesel oil and lubricant for the operation of the tractors during this farming season. This exercise is also designed to ensure easy mobilisation of all tractors in the region for the benefit of small-scale farmers. Dr. Abdulai Issaka Tinorgah, Regional Secretary, said the main objective of the exercise was to ensure that tractor owners did not monopolise the use of tractors as was the case in the past. YOUTH ORGANIZING COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP--The National Youth Organising Commission has been reconstituted to streamline direct and control the activities of the commission. A statement signed by PNDC Secretary for the Ministry of Youth and Sports, Mr. Zaya Yeebo, said the reconstitution has been necessary to ensure the smooth administration of the entire set-up of the former national youth council. This is to save the Ministry from embarrassment emanating from pronouncements made by members of the commission. The members of the commission are: Dr. Kwesi Botchway, chairman; Mr. Shaibo Ahmed Gariba, Mr. Twiritwi Opoku and Mr. Philip Gardiner. The rest are Mr. O. Akwetey, Miss B. Ago and Miss C. Nuamah. The statement hoped that the members would attach some seriousness, revolutionary views and enthusiasm to their assignment. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3378, 3 May 82 pp 1227-1228]

TARKWA MINES GOLD PRODUCTION--Workers of Tarkwa Gold Mines have steadily raised production since January this year. According to Mr. Acheampong, mines manager, production had risen from the very low 1,800 fine ounces in December last year to 2,120 ounces in January, 2,760 in February and 3,238 ounces in March. However, current production was only a quarter of the mines maximum monthly capacity of 12,000 fine ounces. Mr. Acheampong said the Limann Administration's campaign to attract foreign investment in the gold mining sector was aimed at handing over the mines to Lonrho. He added that there was no need to import foreign personnel before maximum production could be achieved. "What is needed is a new plant and equipment and an improvement in the conditions of service of the miners." Mr. Acheampong felt that with competent management by Ghanaians the mines could operate for the next 200 years. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3378, 3 May 82 p 1230]

SEKOU TOURE SPEECH FOLLOWING REELECTION AS PRESIDENT

AB171859 Conakry Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 15 May 82

[Speech by Guinean President Ahmed Sekou Toure to the members of the Political Bureau, the Central Committee and the government when they presented him with goodwill wishes following his reelection as president of the People's Republic of Guinea and on the occasion of the celebration of the 35th anniversary of the Guinean Democratic Party in Conakry on 14 May--recorded]

[Excerpts] Comrades members of the Political Bureau [applause], comrade members of the Central Committee and of the government [applause], comrade cadres of the party state [applause], once again I thank you--thank you very much. The message addressed to me on your behalf by our companion and friend, El Hajj Lansana Beavogui, the prime minister, [applause] is a message of the renewal of your confidence and of your esteem, as well as of the affirmation of your readiness to cooperate in our revolutionary process not only to the service of the people of Guinea and the peoples of Africa but also that of all the peoples of the world, and to humanity as a whole. I therefore say thank you for this message.

The Guinean Democratic Party [PDG] is 35 years old, and has marked the existence of our people; a people with confidence and willingness who had to fight against the phenomenon of evil and avoid every negative influence in order to fully achieve their aims. As these people showed their willingness and their capacity, the fight began. And it is this fight that began the history of the country. It is the effort of all the people to obey continuity--that is to say [word indistinct], rupture and poverty. This simply means that the PDG is a part of the achievements of all the men and women who rose up against evil and wanted to establish their existence through what they consider to be the element of their wellbeing, and of their equilibrium. The PDG therefore delves into the past of the people--of the people of Guinea and of the peoples of Africa. [applause]

I mean to say that the explosions of popular joy, the intense, total and integral mobilization of all the people on 9 May 1982 have a deep significance; it is the unanimous expression of confidence in the popular Guinean regime [applause], and if a tree needs ecological conditions to enable its seed to germinate, grow and produce for the wellbeing of man, the same ecological conditions are needed equally by man--these conditions are the way of life of the people themselves.

The quality of intrasocial relations, the nature of behavior and the objectives towards which the efforts of everyone are geared constitute the ecological conditions of man. If the most gifted, the most intelligent and the most sensitive man should be placed in conditions that do not allow his capacities to blossom, his potentialities will never show. [applause] But naturally, if the least gifted man finds himself in the best of political and social conditions and is in perfect contact with the people, benefitting everyday from the teachings of the people and receiving needed knowledge and skill from the best of the people and if he is ready to be reproached at any moment of his life when he is on the wrong path and encouraged whenever he is on the right path --under such conditions he has the best opportunities for integral development of his faculties and for the continuous growth of his productivity, because he is linked with the people and enriches himself through the people. He does not take from the people what he must give to the people. He becomes useful to the people because, first of all, the people were useful to him. [applause]

Let us therefore say that everything now depends on the leadership of the party at all levels. The people have demonstrated their vigor and rigor of deliberated faith, as well as demonstrations of their active quality of unity, but do they have the leadership they deserve? This is the question that I ask myself. Whereas, throughout the demonstration people were very happy and very proud, let me tell you that I have wept from fear. Has the PDG the leadership that it deserves? I want to answer for myself. My duty is to speak the truth, but not to speak to please people. [applause] Yesterday, I would also have liked to be as happy as all other militants by responding affirmatively to this question. That is why I am asking all of you to make an effort, beginning with myself. We have spoken of political revolution, cultural revolution and we have engaged our youth in the work sites for the repersonalization of the culture of Africa--the revalorization of all the moral riches of our continent. But although the people believe, there are some cadres who do not believe in the cultural revolution and who cheat with the implications of decisions made by the party state. We have to draw lessons and we have to adapt ourselves to the exigences of our functions. Our dignity demands that while we undertake engagements in the interest of the people, we should respect the terms if we do not want to or cannot respect them, the same dignity demands that we resign so that our people can put another son there who will be true to them. [applause] How can we enforce on others a decision that we have made and then fail to obey this decision ourselves? What is eternal is the function for life--that is the people and their representatives should create condtions in the renewal process, so that no one should regret the death of such and such a person because the said person might have shown more ability; and that will depend on today's deliberations, today's discipline and today's training that everyone of us will impose on himself today and on total adhesion to the irreversible character of the fight engaged in on behalf of the party state, Guinea, Africa and the world as a whole. POLITICAL BUREAU CREATES NEW PARTY INSTITUTIONS

[Excerpt] The National Political Bureau held a working session on Friday, 7 May 1982, from 1000 to 1500 under the chairmanship of President Ahmed Sekou Toure, secretary general of the Democratic Party of Guinea and supreme leader of the revolution. During this session, the National Political Bureau devoted its work to the smooth running, strict regularity and high morality of operations concerning the presidential elections, the solemnity of the proclamation of the results of the polls as well as the proper organization of popular celebration of the inauguration of the new presidential mandate.

During the session, the National Political Bureau was informed of the decision of the People's National Assembly creating two high institutions of the party. First, a Constitutional Council composed of five members will be charged with expressing its opinions on the regularity of the electoral operations concerning the election by universal suffrage of the president of the Revolutionary People's Republic of Guinea. The Constitutional Council will give a ruling on any claims and complaints concerning the smooth running of the elections. It will make a detailed report to be submitted to the Supreme Constitutional Assembly.

Secondly, the Supreme Constitutional Assembly is created to be the supreme body of the party. It is composed of 600 members, including all members of the Central Committee, all members of government, all 210 members of the People's National Assembly; all members of the National Electorate of the National Confederation of Guinean Workers, the Revolutionary Union of Guinean Women, the Youth of the Democratic African Revolution, and the joint chiefs of staff; as well as the managing staff of the General Commissioners of the Revolution and the 35 federations of the Democratic Party of Guinea.

The Supreme Constitutional Assembly will be entrusted with proclaiming the final results of the elections, and it is before it that the head of state will take the oath of fidelity to the Guinean people and their revolution.

SDAR ISSUE--Conakry, 17 May (AFP)--The Organization of African Unity (OAU) will remain paralysed and may even split if the dispute over admission of Western Sahara is not solved soon, Guinea President Ahmed Sekou Toure said yesterday. He told French reporters he was confident however that the OAU would rescind the controversial and "illegal" decision in February by OAU Secretary-General Kodjo to admit the (Western) Saharan Arab Republic to de facto membership of the OAU. Such a decision was only for African heads of state to make, he said. The problem of Western Sahara was not admission to the OAU but how to organize the self-determination referendum agreed on by both the OAU and Morocco, whose troops have occupied Western Sahara since Spain withdrew as colonial power in 1975. President Sekou Toure said that despite his quarrel with France's ruling Socialist Party after it criticised human rights violations in Guinea in 1977, he still hoped for good relations with the government of President Francois Mitterrand. FOREIGN MINISTER INDICATED PROGRESS ON NAMIBIA TOO SLOW

AB061642 Paris AFP in English 1533 GMT 6 May 82

[Text] Nairobi, 6 May (AFP)--The Western proposals for Namibian independence have been rejected by the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) and the southern African frontline states because they were taking "an inordinately long time," Kenyan Foreign Minister Robert Ouko said here today.

In a comment on Tuesday's meeting in Dar es Salaam by foreign ministers of the frontline states--Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe--along with Nigeria and Kenya, Mr Ouko said there was "dissatisfaction with the speed of progress" towards a solution to the Namibian question.

After six months no solution was in sight, even on the first phase of the proposals put forward by the United Nations contact group--Britain, Canada, France, the United States and West Germany--covering the electoral system to choose a Namibian constitutional assembly, Mr Ouko said. "Even after agreement on phase one, phases two and three will take a similarly long time," he added.

Recalling that the Dar es Salaam meeting backed SWAPO's call for new round-table all-party talks on Namibia, Mr Ouko said the time had come for more positive progress. "We believe that a discussion around the conference table will speed up the progress," he added.

Mr Ouko, who had been informing the ambassadors of contact group and African nations in Nairobi of the result of the meeting, said that the frontline states had welcomed both SWAPO's "intensification of armed struggle" and its "desire to continue on the peaceful path" toward a Namibian settlement.

CURRENCY DEVALUATION ANNOUNCED--Antananarivo, 17 May (AFP)--Madagascar is devaluing its currency by 15 percent, as against an original proposal of 30 percent put forward by the International Monetary Fund, President Didier Ratsiraka said here today. The devaluation would be formally signed with the IMF shortly, he said. The move has been expected for some weeks, and follows Madagascar's early April decision to let its franc float freely. Madagascar withdrew from the "franc zone" in 1973 but its currency remained tied to the French franc and other currencies. This is now no longer so. MACHEL CONTRASTS BEHAVIOR OF PROTESTANT, CATHOLIC RELIGIONS

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 11 Apr 82 pp 26-45

[Speech by President Samora Machel in Xai-Xai; date not specified]

> [Excerpts] On the last day of his visit to Gaza Province, President Samora Machel presided over a rally which lasted about 3 hours and which was attended by approximately 30,000 persons. During that meeting, the chief of state delivered a speech that we are publishing here in its entirety. A large portion of his speech was extemporaneous.

First of all, we want to apologize.

You have been here since this morning despite the cold and the rain. I didn't know it was cold in Gaza. But cold is better than heat.

I left here--Xai-Xai--in 1952, so it has been 30 years since I last visited Xai-Xai. This is my first visit, so I wanted to visit all the places in this city that I would speak to you about.

That was why I made you wait. But again, we apologize. Thank you.

I don't know which language I can use in speaking to you. If I use Changane, I will not get deeply into what I have to say to you. On the other hand, if I address you in Portuguese, you will not understand me very well. I ask your permission to speak to you in both languages.

The Portuguese taught me Portuguese. I write in Portuguese. Some of you understand Portuguese but do not write it.

Those of you who understand Portuguese but do not write it, raise your hands. (A number of those present raised their hands.)

Now those who write and speak Portuguese. (A few raised their hands.) Now those who do not write Portuguese but speak it. (Many people raised their hands.) And those who neither understand nor speak it. (A few raised their hands.) And those who neither understand nor speak it [repetition as published]. (Very few raised their hands.)

All right. So many of you here do not write Portuguese, but you understand it. In the old days, how did you buy sugar at the trading post? Didn't you speak Portuguese at the trading post? And how did you buy meat at the butcher shop? And how did the prostitutes get along in their business? Do you understand? ("Yes.") How did the prostitutes take money from the hands of the men? They did it by speaking Portuguese, didn't they? ("Yes.") So we are going to speak Portuguese. Thank you.

What We Saw in the Province

As soon as we arrived, we visited the Manjacaze, Chibuto, and Chokwe Districts and the capital city itself, Xai-Xai. We were greeted on all sides in an atmosphere of warmth and enthusiasm--in an atmosphere of confidence and of certainty of victory. When we see your eyes, your foreheads, your faces, and your bodies when you are dancing, this shows us that you are lions who will overcome poverty. You will be winners.

We noted that the great availability of the masses--the readiness with which they have answered the party's call to eliminate underdevelopment--does not always encounter a correct response on the part of the government's local structures. We saw stagnation--the communal villages and the structures are not being developed, the sense of responsibility is not growing, and interest, enthusiasm, and dynamism do not exist.

We saw negligence and the spirit of carelessness. We saw it in the weeds and dirt in the city's streets, in the towns, and in the district capitals. A dirty city infested with snakes and rats. Is that the way for people to live? If the city is dirty and full of weeds, it becomes a shelter for rats and snakes, millipedes, cockroaches, and lizards. If the city is dirty, it is because the people who live in that city have dirty heads. It is because the city's inhabitants have trash inside their heads.

We visited the districts and saw that there are no flowers on your porches or sidewalks and no whitewash on our walls. There are no gardens and swings--no benches and grass where children play and adults relax.

On the roads, we saw telephone poles or wires that have been broken for weeks or even months, with no concern on the part of the government departments to repair them immediately, even though it is their duty to do so.

And then there are the profiteers. When they are tried and convicted, they must work. Thieves who are tried and convicted must go to work. They must not stay in prison, where we have to feed them for nothing. What is this?

Look at those things of the state--of the people--that required sacrifices--that required the lives of people in jails, in the trenches at Gwevani, in Xinavane, in the mines of South Africa, and everywhere. Those buildings were built at the cost of our blood and sweat, and we do not know how to treat them as they deserve.

Our property--the assets of the government, the assets of the people, and the wealth of the people--is being destroyed. There are those who occupy houses without paying rent. Where will we find the money to build more houses for all of you? Where will we find the money to buy factories for Gaza so that we will have two or three textile factories producing loincloth, kerchiefs, and blouses?

Where will we find the money if we have these loafers--these bandits--who occupy houses without paying rent and who destroy the government's houses? Are they real people?

In the Chibuto District, we visited the Eduardo Chivambo Mondlane communal village. There we saw in the flesh the high degree of political awareness which the inhabitants carry in themselves, but which we are not yet capable of transforming into a force that will socialize the rural area and develop and diversify production. We were the object of a great people's demonstration--of great happiness and elation. Those virtues of initiative by the people are not being accompanied by appropriate political work by the party and the democratic mass organizations.

We went to Chokwe.

When we speak of Chokwe, we are speaking of the Limpopo River Basin and its dam. We are speaking of the residents of that part of the country: of the quarters of Generalissimo Maguigwana, and of the Limpopo Valley, the country's granary.

There are great and fantastic achievements there.

Teams consisting entirely of Mozambicans are developing and have already developed additional thousands of hectares of irrigated land. But parallel with that, there are tremendous inadequacies in management of the work, and there is negligence and indifference: there is a lack of pride in getting the work done.

The machinery at the branches was an example of that. Hundreds of machines worth many hundreds of thousands of contos were standing in the middle of weeds, exposed to sun and rain, covered with dirt that had been collecting for months, and rusting away, with parts and spares scattered all around. The country's efforts are being frittered away in neglect.

We must say, however, that the effect of the offensive launched a short time ago is already making itself felt as far as the machinery is concerned.

There is also the matter of hygiene and cleanliness. The workers now cut their fingernails, the workers now rinse their mouths, they have their hair cut, and they shave.

They wear uniforms and they are people. They are no longer the same people who used to be destroying the people's property--your property.

Value of Our Independence and Our Civilization

Today, my brothers, we are living as free men, with our heads held very high and lifted up--we are proud of our own history. Why? Because no one freed us. We freed ourselves. It was we ourselves who liberated the fatherland and chose the path leading to the elimination of underdevelopment.

It was we ourselves who imposed the unconditional and complete destruction of Portuguese colonialism in Mozambique. It was we who expelled oppression from our land so that finally, after so many years of suffering and death, we could build our life in peace and quiet.

We are the survivors of history. We have this responsibility to bear the weight of the memory of our forefathers and to make that inheritance an active force in the building of the new society.

When they tried to kill the spirit of resistance against the invader: when they tried to transform our culture into a caricature--into "customs and usages" that we were supposed to be ashamed of--we resisted.

Our culture did not die. It lived.

It took on richer forms: it developed clandestinely and became a powerful instrument in the struggle for national independence.

FRELIMO gave the people back their culture.

For the colonists, culture and civilization meant:

1. The elimination of the family and the promotion of prostitution--the transformation of women into merchandise.

2. The destruction of honest work and the promotion of lawlessness, crime, and banditry.

3. The killing of the spirit to resist the invader and the development of servility and the spirit of lackeys, which is what the administrators of traditional settlements, the native policemen, and some of the "assimilated" Africans were.

Our culture and our civilization cannot take their inspiration from those values, which are based on the exploitation of man by man--on racism, tribalism, regionalism, and the destruction of the most elementary dignity of human beings.

Because of that, we must eliminate a few marks of colonial culture which still persist in resisting the winds of change.

We cannot permit disguised prostitution--semiprostitution. Did you hear that? ("We heard it.") "Oh, let's do it, but don't pay me a lot of money." That is what they say. There is no room here for such people. Religious people say that however secretly one practices a bad act far from everyone and everything, it will come to light sooner or later. It will be known.

We cannot allow our daughters and our women--Mozambican women--to be violated in this manner.

It is not only a dishonor for Mozambican women but a blemish on Mozambican society itself.

We cannot allow girls who are still children to become pregnant through unions which are due to circumstance and which we ourselves do not control. It is intolerable that in our society, there should be children--innocent young ones--who are children without a father: "children of the forest."

Such a child "comes out of the forest": it is born in the forest, and we do not know who its father is. It is born like a goat. Such a child is unclean, but its father and mother are even less clean. The child is not guilty. If we all had children in that manner, where would the monkeys, gazelles, and goats go, since we would be taking their place? If we go about it in such a manner, the country will be infested with second-class citizens within 10 or 15 years.

They will have no moral or material support. A woman who has five children by five different men--is she a person?

We cannot allow our children to run around poorly dressed, disheveled, dirty, and with long fingernails.

Our child must be our pride.

Our child is the fruit of our flesh.

Individual and collective hygiene must be an integral part of our nature.

We cannot allow the practice of adultery, which still exists, to continue. It is a crime against the family and against society: it means disrespect for the laws of social life and for the dignity of the family.

We have our culture, our civilization, and our own personality--the personality of Mozambican man. We must cultivate those values, because they are ours--they are the reason for our freedom.

We must be aware of the meaning of our existence as a free people--the meaning of our dignity as a people that has always rejected servitude and never bowed to the invader.

We must cultivate our moral integrity, and that means:

1. We must be honorable and keep the respect of society.

2. We must be faithful to the responsibility and commitments of matrimony and the family.

3. We must not dishonor the memory of those in whose debt we stand for what we are today.

4. We must have an organized life and reject the indecent burden carried by capitalist society, meaning vagrancy, alcoholism, prostitution, and lawlessness.

5. We must break with the morals of the dominators and adopt socialist ethics.

We must establish correct relationships between men and women--relationships that lead to mutual respect, affection, and love.

Beating one's wife, which is a habit among many people here, and coming home drunk after receiving one's pay are characteristic of unconscious and unthinking animals. They are characteristic of those who make no distinction between the man who lives on feelings, emotions, and intelligence and the animal that is guided only by instinct.

We do not pile up drunken sprees; we do not collect vices and shameful diseases.

Because of that, marriage must be the most serious and solemn act for the family.

Men and women base their relationship on love.

Marriage must therefore be a worthy and profound act.

We celebrate marriage with happiness and solemnity, conferring on the act the dignity and value it deserves in our society of honest men and women.

That is why we are building family palaces: to show the dignity of marriage and the family--a dignity that colonialism and polygamy take away.

That is our civilization and our culture.

It was not built from nothing. Those were also the values of our forefathers: values that we have inherited and enriched.

Right here in Gaza Province, the Protestant Church, which was a center of resistance against colonialism, used to cultivate some of those values. We want to acknowledge publicly the contribution which the Protestant Church made to the Mozambican people.

The Protestants helped us a lot.

They educated us so that we would know the value of man. As soon as the Portuguese had achieved complete domination of our country, the Protestants began building churches where they taught us our history, our worth, and our own identity. They taught us that we were Mozambicans--Africans and not Portuguese. They never betrayed our people as the Catholics did. The Catholics tried to convince us that we were Portuguese. Thank you for that, Protestants.

When colonial violence smothered the sound of weapons--of national resistance--when Gungunhana was imprisoned and Maguigwana killed, and when the Catholic Church appeared as the ally of Portuguese colonialism, making an alliance between the cross and the sword and turning religious instruction into an instrument for consolidating foreign oppression, it was, to a large extent, within the Protestant churches that the spirit of resistance and struggle against the invader took refuge and reorganized.

Because of that, the Protestant Church was a target for repression by the colonial government and the latter's ally, the Catholic Church.

And its influence was felt in the social area as well:

1. In individual hygiene.

2. In collective hygiene.

3. In the struggle against intrigue and hypocrisy.

It was a Protestant--Ngazane Kambako--who introduced the plow in the years between 1910 and 1920, and that act brought about a profound transformation of economic life in this region.

We acknowledge that contribution by the Protestant churches because we are honest.

Our policy toward religion is clear: we respect everyone's religion. It is a constitutional right, because we see every religious person primarily as a Mozambican--a patriot. FRELIMO does not view people in terms of their religious beliefs; it does not view a person as being Catholic, Moslem, or Protestant. FRELIMO sees only Mozambicans. It is the citizen alone who sees himself as a Catholic, Protestant, or Moslem.

We respect their religious convictions, and that is why our constitution provides freedom of religion.

The Mozambican socialist fatherland is for everyone.

The difference between us party members and religion is that we believe in the strength of man: in his creative capacity and ability to transform the world. For religious people, everything is done by God, who lives above men.

In the north, the Catholics opened their churches to allow Portuguese soldiers to sleep there. You used to pray and ask God to give the Portuguese more strength. They quoted the Bible: "From those who have little, more will be taken and given to those who have more. One must be poor to enter the kingdom of heaven." But they built great houses, fine cars, and wide roads, and at the same time, they were preaching to you that you must humbly accept suffering so that you can enter heaven. And you used to accept that.

We have the same ideas concerning the fight against alcoholism and prostitution, but when it comes to interpreting the world's phenomena, we differ.

The Portuguese soldiers were blessed before going out to massacre the inhabitants, and when they returned from the massacres, they were blessed again.

What kind of God is that, who permits such criminal acts? Here your land is the victim of floods every year, and you die of hunger. God does not help you; he is not sorry for you. My brothers, pray all you want, but we have different opinions when it comes to a world view.

It is written in the Bible that the rich will not enter heaven. It is easier for a camel to pass through a needle than it is for a rich man to enter heaven. But the people who used to preach that wanted to be rich, not poor. They wore good shoes, slept in fine houses, and ate the best there was. They rode around in luxurious cars, had over 500 workers on their farms, got rich, and said that it was easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Do you agree with that?

Those who agree should not live in fine houses. The government is going to build very poor houses for them--where the cold and the rain come in--so that they can suffer and thus see the gates of heaven opened to them. We are going to give them arid land where they will be able to produce nothing, so that they can go hungry and thus merit heaven.

Listen carefully, believers. That is what contradicts FRELIMO's objectives. I don't want heaven. That is the point of disagreement between me and you. I only want to govern. I want to wear clothes, eat well, and study. That is where we disagree, but there are other ideas that we share. So we must not fight among ourselves. Let us study ways of cooperating with each other. I don't want to forbid you to pray. You can continue to pray, but pray that the country will be strong and that people will have food. Don't pray for people to be poor so that they can enter heaven. If that is what you pray for, you must not pray.

This is the situation, my brothers. You believed that all those things were the work of God. God does not grow old; He does not die. He protected the French, Portuguese, and British so that they could dominate other peoples.

Did you ever see God do anything?

You say: "Give to Caesar what is Caesar's and to God what is God's." I cannot go to church because I am Caesar. It is not possible to carry out orders from two kings. That is the difference between us in FRELIMO and you.

You have some positive teachings, however. You grow crops and clean your places, but you say that God did it. I believe that by what I have said to you, I have made myself understood. Someday I will return to visit you to see how you are praying--whether you are praying to make our country rich and fertile. Don't be afraid to go to church, and don't hide. Pray all you want. If you hide, we will suspect your activities. You can go to church on Sundays and be seen by everyone.

That is written in the Bible. But you must not entice children outside the church and talk to them about the existence of an imaginary God who protects people. You must pray in church and not outside church. Isn't it better that way? ("Yes.") Pray that your God will give us the strength to produce more and to eliminate hunger in this country. I am not the child of a pagan: I know how religious people think. I see what your eyes are saying.

To free the fatherland, and honoring the example set by our forefathers--Gungunhana, Maguigwana, and others--we established FRELIMO in 1962 and began fighting in 1964. It was we, not God, who did it.

We believe in our strength and in our abilities.

Who plants the cashew?

Who plants the mango?

Who opens the channel?

Who is going to build the country's granary?

Is it God or men?

For us, the answer is clear.

But we want to say that this does not mean that there is disagreement between us. We have common objectives.

That is why, as free citizens, as consistent patriots, and as honest, worthy, and proven workers, you have a place in our structures.

In the ranks of the fatherland and in the army combating poverty, there is a place for all those who love the fatherland, all those who are honest and worthy, and all those who love progress and peace.

We must have the spirit of the Mozambican fatherland and cultivate patriotism.

Armed Bandits

To transform Gaza--to make Gaza what we want it to be--it is necessary for the people to work in peace and tranquillity.

Disturbing their activity--their work--means delaying our development and the progress and well-being of the people.

There is no development without peace.

In the districts and localities we visited, we saw the people crying out their hatred of the armed bandits, the agents of imperialism, who have been causing disquiet and insecurity among the inhabitants.

The people want to fight the bandits, and that is why they asked us for weapons with which to eliminate the bandits.

Those bandits act without any principles: their action is not based on any principle or idea.

Incidentally, their conduct has consisted of the following:

1. Following the orders of the racists--Ian Smith's yesterday and Pretoria's today. They are lackeys of foreigners and are selling out the fatherland.

2. Kidnapping, mutilating, and killing party members, deputies, and members of cooperatives.

3. Kidnapping, mutilating, and killing teachers, students, nurses, and the population in general.

4. Attacking, looting, and destroying stores, homes, cooperatives, hospitals, and schools.

5. Raping women and killing children.

What kind of policy is that? Whom does it serve? Are those acts virtues or crimes? What punishment do the criminals deserve?

The Mozambican people are proud and combative. In Gaza Province, many glorious pages of our history have been written. Our pride, our patriotism, and our deep feeling for peace cannot allow [the bandits] to:

1. Dishonor the memory of our forefathers.

2. Insult the dignity of those who made the struggle against exploitation their reason for being.

3. Minimize the internationalist heroism of Gaza Province, which was the secure rear base for Zimbabwe's struggle and an overwhelming force in the destruction of the Smith regime.

Because of what we sense here in connection with the general feeling of the population of Gaza, we are confident that the days of those bandits--recruited, trained, equipped, financed, and armed by the regime of apartheid: the regime of the racist and illegal minority in South Africa--are numbered.

We will also win this battle.

We will win because the people are stronger than the strongest army of imperialism.

We will tell all our structures in Maputo that everywhere we went, we spoke of the bandits who attack parts of the Chibuto and Guija Districts. And we will tell them that all the inhabitants requested weapons with which to kill the bandits.

Thank you.

The struggle continues!

Independence or death! ("We will win.")

Many thanks to everyone.

SWAPO COMMUNIQUE DENOUNCES WESTERN CONTACT GROUP'S EFFORTS

EA051348 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0500 GMT 5 May 82

[Text] The Western contact group on Namibia is blocking the efforts of the international community to attain independence for the territory, which is illegally occupied by South Africa. This denunciation was contained in a SWAPO communique issued in Luanda yesterday.

The communique, issued on the occasion of the fourth anniversary of the Cassinga massacre in southern Angola, perpetrated on 4 May 1978 by South African troops against defenseless Angolan citizens and Namibian refugees, stated that the contact group had refrained from putting pressure on the Pretoria regime to accept the UN decolonization plan on Namibia.

The SWAPO communique stated that the contact group had said that SWAPO should accept its proposals in order to stop South Africa from committing more massacres and that nobody had said the South African troops should withdraw from Namibia, in accordance with UN Security Council Revolution No 375 of 1976 and No 435 of 1978. On this matter, the communique emphasized that the five Western countries that comprise the contact group had impeded the withdrawal of South African troops, which were the cause of violence in the territory.

SWAPO stated in the communique that the proposals made by the five had a certain number of defects which gave South Africa broad powers in the proposed process of transition for Namibia's independence. The communique emphasized that the names of hundreds of Namibian patriots who had been barbarously murdered in the Cassinga massacre would always be remembered in Namibia's history as heroes and martyrs of our freedom and human dignity.

SWAPO INCURSIONS AS FROM 1976

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 May 82 p 4

[Text] AT least 110 Swapo terrorists have died since 1976 in limited incursions into White farming areas south of Namibia's so-called Red Line, according to Defence Headquarters in Pretoria.

About 14 Security Force members have lost their lives in operations south of the Red Line, which have also claimed the lives of several civilians, including an old woman and two small children who were bayoneted to death.

During their first raid into the central parts of Namibia in 1976, Swapo terrorists succeeded in reaching Windhoek.

During a running battle lasting three weeks eight insurgents were killed.

A month later another Swapo group numbering about 21, infiltrated the Erongo mountains area. During the ensuing six weeks 17 of them were killed by Security Forces in hot pursuit operations.

Two SA soldiers were killed by enemy fire during the raid.

In March 1979 14 Swapo terrorists penetrated the farming zones in the vicinity of Tsumeb, Otavi, Outjo and Otjiwarongo, managing to keep on the run for almost three months in the dense bush.

According to Defence Headquarters two terrorists and two Security Force members died in the battle.

Two months later, in what was regarded as an extension of the previous terrorist offensive, Security Forces came to grips with a group of about 40 terrorists, killing four of them.

A smaller group, numbering about 12 infiltrated the same area about two months later, the Security Forces killed four but lost two of their own men in the six weeks that followed. The next major Swapo offensive south of the Red Line was in February 1980 when a group of 44 terrorists infiltrated the Tsumeb-Grootfontein-Waterberg triangle. Sixteen of them never made it back to southern Angola.

Security Forces killed a further eight of an original group of 18 terrorists who infiltrated the Otjikoto area in October that year.

In April last year only one of a group of 22 terrorists who penetrated the Tsumeb-Otavi area managed to escape being killed in a security force mop-up operation lasting two weeks.

SWAPO INTRANSIGENCE ON ETHNICITY RAPPED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 7 May 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

Admittedly there is considerable confusion at present as to where the international initiative on Namibia is heading.

But two pointers are recognisable in the tangled loose ends flapping about in Geneva, Washington and Dar-Es-Salaam, as well as amongst the threads of the Gordian Knot within which Namibia and SA are inextricably fastened.

● Swapo is not prepared to concede in the slightest to ethnicity in the political or contitutional spheres, whereas the interim government in Namibia is based on an ethnic foundation.

● The Western Five's shuttle diplomacy is not paying dividends, because it is unable to bridge the gaps that separate the opposing forces through indirect consultation. The series of time lags that result, from such a method only serve to exacerbate the issues.

The latter points the way to another try at direct international negotiations, and the former points towards an amended interim constitution for the country – away from the ethnic base of AG 8.

There are many obstacles in the way of both those developments, the reasons for which are known to us by now.

A major part of the whole problem up till and including now is that all diplomatic efforts are geared to removing obstacles out of the way.

Come the day when all efforts are directed towards solving the real problems facing us, instead of bickering about the obstacles.

Especially when those obstacles are party ideological phantom and selfish national pride.

SWAPO'S REJECTION OF PROPOSALS LABELED SETBACK

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 5 May 82 p 6

[Text]

SWAPO is losing not only the military but also the diplomatic battle for Namibia.

By rejecting the Western Contact Group's proposal for a 'one man, two votes' system the movement's leader Sam Nujoma, has betrayed apparent fears that its hold on the population is not as secure as has been claimed.

He has made Swapo, instead of South Africa, responsible for holding up progress towards independence.

The 'one man, two votes' proposal was intended as a workable compromise between Swapo's insistence on a universal franchise election with no constitutional guarantees of representation for minorities, and South Africa's insistence on assurances that, not only would fair and free elections be held, but also that they would continue to be held.

That may not have been how the issue was presented for world consumption, but it was the impasse that the negotiators had to get around somehow.

By offering to give every Namibian one vote for his party and one vote for a constituency MP, the Western Contact Group sought to ensure that the party with majority support would rule — but that its powers would be held sufficiently in check by the elected local (in practice, probably ethnic) spokesmen to discourage any attempts to impose a one-party regime.

SATISFIED

South Africa was satisfied that this way a way of preventing Swapo, whether or not it won the first independence election, from forthwith setting up a permanent dictatorship on the common 'one man, one vote, one election' pattern, so it had no hesitation in going along with the Western scheme.

Swapo just as promptly rejected it. The inevitable assumption was that it did so for the same reason.

This was the first time that Swapo had displayed any doubt about its ability to command majority support in any free Namibian election, and the effect on the course of the independence negotiations could be far-reaching.

From Swapo's previous declarations it would have been expected to claim that if every Namibian were given ten votes, let alone two, most of them by far would still go to the 'liberation' movement.

Instead it gave the impression that, although it has ways and means of getting a majority to vote for it as a party, it is much less convinced of its ability to stop a majority from also seizing such a chance of electing their own ethnic or neighbourhood representatives not committed to Swapo.

UNWISE

Diplomatically, Swapo was unwise to convey such doubts, and justifying its stand by saying that the population of Namibia was 'too unsophisticated' to grasp the 'one man, two votes' system compounded the impression of discomposure.

You cannot describe people as too backward to exercise a franchise no more complicated than South Africa's system of electing an MP together with a provincial councillor, and in the same breath maintain that they are on the point of rising against their oppressors because they are denied a vote.

NO ONE BELIEVES IN 435 ANYMORE, ASSERTS MUDGE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 10 May 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Western Five's Namibia independence initiative received a further setback at the weekend when Mr Dirk Mudge, Chairman of the Ministers' Council and the DTA all but rejected UN Resolution 435 as a basis for settlement.

Mr Mudge was addressing over 4 000 enthusiastic Alliance supporters in Katutura and Windhoek on his return from the US and UK where he met diplomatic leaders "directly involved" in the current phased negotiations on the Territory's future.

Hinting at the prospects of going ahead with pre-independence election plans without Swapo who had rejected the Contact Group's voting system for a constituent assembly, Mr Mudge stopped short of rejecting Resolution 435 out of hand, however.

Western diplomats were becoming disillusioned with 435, he stated.

Mr Mudge said he had travelled to the US and UK to become acquainted with attitudes there concerning Resolution 435 and its present chances of succeeding as a basis for a settlement.

"As one of the DTA's leaders and Chairman of the interim government, it was necessary for me to find out if I should prepare for a sudden election or for an interim situation lasting longer than expected," he said.

"We must know where we stand. We cannot continue to live in a vacuum."

His meetings with diplomatic leaders abroad had led him to conclude: "Out of my heart's conviction, I found no enthusiasm that 435 is going to succeed."

OBVIOUS PESSIMISM

He added: "No matter how hard they tried to convince me that they would succeed in bringing Swapo and the Frontline states back on the road, their pessimism was so obvious, they could not hide it.

"It is time that somebody stands up to pronounce the death sentence on that resolution. No-one believes it is going to work anymore."

Mr Mudge went on to say that "a lot of nonsense was being spoken in diplomatic circles recently, while we are waiting for a dream to become reality. We are tired of this now."

After having walked the road of international negotiations "step by step as far as the acceptance of Phase One, the DTA is not prepared to be kept on a line by half-hearted African frontline and Swapo negotiators any longer," he continued.

"If the West leaders want to talk to us, they know what our address is, and if they think they can achieve a settlement without the DTA, they are welcome to try," challenged Mr Mudge.

Being a democrat, he was not against elections, Mr Mudge said, but added: "An election date for SWA must be announced now and the best measure of agreement reached, and those who do not want to take part must be left behind."

According to Mr Mudge, Swapo was following "a delaying tactic characteristic of the communists", keeping the negotiating process just barely alive in order to undermine the morale of the people, and create the climate for increasing frustration and disillusionment.

"If Swapo is as strong as it says, why does it not fight an election instead of blocking an election which will give all parties an equal chance?" he asked.

MORE IMPORTANT

Uniting the inhabitants of SWA with their diverse ethnic and cultural traditions was more important for him than the holding of elections, continued Mr Mudge.

However, the unity which had been achieved during the 1978 elections was now being undermined by delay and frustration.

If the people of SWA stood together as they should and shake off many unecessary differences, there would be no need to fear "those outside the country trying to frighten us with Russian weapons."

Mr Mudge rejected the possibility of negotiating with Swapo, saying "There are only two ways: to finish off terrorist leaders: take away their support amongst the people, or negotiate with them. I am not prepared to do the second."

Mr Mudge urged those "who want to cling to that which is not yours and who grab that which you do not deserve, leave it."

If unity could be achieved on that reasonable basis, then he would not be scared of Swapo, because "then we are one," Mr Mudge concluded.

DIPLOMATIC POSTURING SEEN HURTING COUNTRY MOST

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 5 May 82 pp 1, 3

[Editorial]

[Text]

It remains for the Western Five to show whether the latest impasse brought onto its settlement initiative for Namibia by Swapo is in fact a stalemate or only a checkmate.

Certainly there is very little room for manoeuvring between the two opposing sides.

In view of the original undertaking by the Contact Group that no party would be permitted to exercise a veto during any phase of the negotiation, its next move is being awaited with interest.

Swapo's rejection of Phase One appears at fact value to be motivated by little else than ideological motives.

Its rejection was announced to coincide with Cassinga Day when SA Security Forces dealt the movement a severe blow inside its Angolan stronghold.

By rejecting Phase One Swapo has exercised its veto at a time when, ideological considerations aside, it had little to lose by allowing the Contact Group to move into Phase Two.

We all know that the real problems lie in store in Phase Two. By accepting the first phase, SA has scored a moral victory, and by rejecting it, Swapo has lost a point.

It would be interesting to see if the Western Five goes ahead with their current initiative without Swapo, and what the consequences would be.

But for the people inside Namibia, interest is waning fast and frustration is mounting by the week.

The playball of international and regional games for almost the entire history of our people, we have once more become the victims of diplomatic posturing.

The eternal diplomatic games and the unending war are being waged at the expense of the country and its people themselves.

Must we all be maimed or dead, and the country totally bankrupt before it is given to those to whom it rightfully belongs?

WAR SHIFTS TO NEW FRONT IN KAOKOVELD

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Apr 82 p 4

[Text] NAMIBIA's bush war is intensifying with the opening up of a new front in the Kaokoveld.

Local sources last week disclosed that incidents in the region had skyrocketed in the first few months of this year. Whereas an estimated 44 guerrillas were active in the area during the whole of last year, so far this year 126 guerrillas were active. This does not include the 210 who lost their lives in Operation Super. These were clearly also poised to move into Kaokoland.

A month ago, two platoons of Battalion 32 launched a devastating surprise attack on a new forward base set up by Swapo as Cambeno, 22 km north of the Cunene.

In Kaokoveld, 7 incidents involving guerrillas were recorded by Security Forces last month alone. In response, new bases are being built in the region to counter the new offensive. At the same time, Police sources have indicated that it has left them understaffed.

Meanwhile, enquiries revealed that the grisly practice of displaying the bodies of dead guerrillas continues in Kaokoland. Police sources at Opuwo confirmed that killed guerrillas were displayed at the Police camp, and said this had been done "because the local population requested it."

According to the source, the local population had repeatedly asked that this be done "so as to make the war more real" for the people. The Police had given in to the request in the end, also because emotions could not be agitated by the practice, "because they belong to a different tribe", the source claimed.

The Army, which used to take dead guerrillas around town to display them, stopped the practice some time ago. It was found to be counterproductive, since it agitated people's emotions.

The source also said that nobody was forced to look at the bodies, since they were displayed out of town at the Pulice camp.

SECRECY SURROUNDING MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT CHANGES LASHED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] THE crisis over third tier government in Namibia has been suspended above our heads for many years now.

The process of constitutional reform set loose with the Turnhalle Conference has steadily brought the day nearer when policy decisions and changes would have to be effected in our municipal government system.

One can hardly debate the merits and demerits of the famous Arnold Commission's findings fruitfully until that document is made public.

The fact that a crisis has developed threatening open confrontation amongst the various instances involved, can be ascribed to at least two things:

- an unending official silence which keeps the public in the dark and
- the lack of any clearly worked out policy of reform and programme of transition linked to it.

At the root of it all lies the question of municipal franchise and the devolution of political power through municipal government.

This central question staring us in the face must first be answered before any progress can be made.

Secret commissions and procrastinating silences are only making it worse.

In a democratic society which the rulers purport ours to be, vital issues such as these must be openly and publicly debated.

The dragging out of the local government question is simply the logical outflow of the lack of clear direction in a number of national questions facing the Central Government.

NEGOTIATIONS IMPASSE STYMIES LOCAL LEADERS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 6 May 82 p 2

[Text] LATEST developments in the SWA independence dispute have raised the question in Windhoek: "What will be the West's next move?"

Swapo's rejection of a Western-drafted election formula for a settlement and suggestions for a new negotiating process to win independence have been received with varied response by political leaders in the Territory's capital.

"Swapo's rejection of Phase One did not come as a surprise," said the leader of the Swapo-Democrats, Mr Andreas Shipanga.

"But we are taken aback by the support given by the Frontline states," he added.

It was thought earlier that members of the African Frontline states concerned with the SWA dispute would influence Swapo to accept Phase One of the West's three-stage initiative.

The hopes were dashed at a meeting in Dar Es Salaam on Tuesday when Foreign Ministers of the Frontline states gave their backing to Swapo's stance on the Phase One proposal by the Western Contact Group.

The five-nation Contact Group had suggested a "one vote counted twice" system for the election of a constitution-drafting assembly in the Territory.

The proposal had been accepted by South Africa, but Swapo's consistent rejection of the formula has now produced a stalemate situation.

The acting Chairman of the SWA Ministers' Council, Dr Ben Africa, said that undertakings had been given by the West at the outset of its initiative, that no interested party would be allowed to veto any stage of the three-part plan.

He urged the west to go on to Phase Two of the peace negotiations and not to be dictated to by Swapo.

At the same time, political sources in Windhoek have reported that undertakings were similarly given that the Contact Group would not move to Phase Two of its settlement effort until outstanding issues in Phase One had been concluded.

Political observers in Windhoek pointed out that the West now faced the extremely difficult decision of having either to go back to South Africa to regnegotiate the terms of the electoral procedure — a move that would be seen as pandering to Swapo's demands — or to pass over the objections by Swapo and the Frontline states, and carry on with Phase Two negotiations.

If further efforts to persuade Swapo should fail, a third alternative was the holding of a multi-party conference to resolve the outstanding issues.

Swapo, supported by the Frontline states, had suggested the shelving of the phase-to-phase negotiating process. Instead, the movement called for an "international conference" to be convened as "a viable alternative way out of the present stalemate."

In Windhoek, the concept encountered mixed political reception.

"We do not see the possibility of a possible outcome at such a conference," said Mr Shipanga.

"We are against it, because we know it will not work."

Mr Shipanga said no political movement or government should be allowed to veto the independence process of the Territory.

Swapo's refusal to accept the first stage of the peace effort was "a tragedy because of the civilian loss of lives here and elsewhere."

He added that Swapo's "professed difficulties with the one man two vote system are not the true reasons for the rejections. It is just fear to get into an election."

The leader of the SWA National Party, Mr Kosie Pretorius, earlier said a one man, one vote election should be discarded as an instrument to a negotiated settlement.

New alternatives had to be explored and the SWA NP was in favour of seeking agreement on the contitutional future among elected and traditionally accepted leaders.

Mr Pretorius said his party did not view the holding of a multi-party conference as the best method to resolve outstanding differences. — Sapa

LOCAL LEADERS IMPATIENT AT STALLED TALKS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] POLITICAL leaders approached in Windhoek have expressed concern at the lack of movement in the Western settlement initiative on SWA and predicted serious consequences unless the present deadlock was broken soon.

"We are in a hurry, we want to get on with the job," said the leader of the Swapo Democrats, Mr Andreas Shipanga.

The Western diplomatic effort to bring independence to the territory has fallen almost four months behind a loosely-framed time scale for completion of the three-stage initiative.

Phase One, dealing with constitutional proposals, has reached an impasse after South Africa's agreement was obtained and resistance encountered from Swapo, backed by the African frontline states, to a proposed twin election procedure.

Swapo has argued that the combined proportional and constituency representation in a constitution-making body would prove too complex for the relatively inexperienced electorate of SWA.

The first phase was designed as a confidence-building measure and it had been generally acknowledged that phase two, dealing with issues concerning the supervisory capacity of the united nations, was most likely to produce problems.

"I would have expected the iniative to falter on questions in Phase Two, and not at this early stage," Mr Shipanga said.

The leader of the Federal Party, Mr Bryan O' Linn, said: "It is absurd that there should be a stalemate at this point."

Most political parties would not oppose substitution of the present electoral proposals by staight proportional representation in the constituent assembly, he added.

Mr Shipanga said parties to the dispute had to bear in mind that no proposal could be perfect when hammered out among so many parties.

Unless the present deadlock was resolved soon, the Western effort could head for collapse with disastrous consequences for all concerned in southern Africa.

"This thing can escalate into something most unpleasant for everyone living not only in Namibia but the entire subcontinent," Mr Shipanga said.

Mr O' Linn said his party believed there was still hope the West would somehow break the impasse.

"I do not think South Africa and the West, and Swapo, can afford to let the matter come to a dead end," he said.

Both political leaders, as well as a spokesman for the Namibian Independence Party, said they had already replied to revised Phase One proposals when representatives of the Western Contact Group visited Windhoek last month.

The possibility was not excluded that political leaders could still be summoned by the Administrator-General of SWA to sound out latest political opinion of Phase One proposals.

The outcome of such meetings could be used by South Africa to formulate its attitude, a political source said.

COUNCILLORS DIVIDED ON MUNICIPAL ISSUE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Apr 82 p 3

[Text] IN A dramatic turnabout yesterday, the City Council decided to opt for negotiation rather than confrontation with the Ministers' Council.

After a stormy debate lasting over an hour and which had the Council split down the middle, it was decided to drop the motion under discussion and move on to the next point on the agenda.

The strongly-worded motion under discussion called on the AG not to approve the takeover of municipalities by the Ministers' Council, and called for steps to be taken to implement the recommendations of the Arnold Commission. It also demanded that the status quo be maintained and that municipalities remain under the White second-tier Authority.

Mr Fanie Spies, Chairman of the Management Committee proposed a motion that the matter be dropped and that the Council move on to the next point on the agenda.

Mr J H Greeff, proposer of the original motion, objected violently, saying it was "undemocratic" and "unfair" to attempt to prevent other councillors from speaking.

Mr Spies pointed out, however, that if members were keen to carry on with the debate, they could simply vote against the order motion, and then the debate would continue.

ELECTRIC

The atmosphere was electric as the votes were counted. The final tally was three to six in favour of dropping the matter. Mr Günther Kashick abstained from voting.

However, the tension was clearly not over, and erupted again when a disappointed Mr Greeff commented under his breath: "Is this how you represent your voters? What a shame!" Mr Spies rose immediately to object to Mr Greeff making "snide remarks," and appealed to Mr Beukes to call him to order.

Mr Beukes ruled that Mr Greeff should in future say things more diplomatically, which brought another objection from Mr Koos Nel. The last word, however, was spoken by Dr A B May, who told Mr Greeff: "When I was already a councillor, you were still playing with marbles."

Earlier, Mr Greeff had quoted extensively from newspaper reports and other documents in motivating his motion. He dealt in detail with the municipal swimming pool, since "the whole matter seems to centre on the swimming pool."

Citing figures, he said the Municipality was experiencing heavy losses because of the swimming pool.

"If this takeover is about the swimming pool, then I say to the Ministers' Council take it, take the pool from the Municipality with all its losses.", he said.

DISCORD

"If Messrs Africa and Riruako want to do their work, then they can concern themselves with the project to build a pool in Katutura. But no, the other one has to be forced open, discord has to be sown and the peace existing at the moment has to be disturbed."

He also claimed that the motivation for the takeover was "purely political, without any regard to the interests of the taxpayer." Few officials would go to the first tier if it took over the functions so far taken care of the White Administration, and the quality of municipal government would suffer.

Dr May, in opposing the motion called it "useless". He said approval for the takeover had already been given.

"The status quo cannot be maintained, because other decisions have already been taken."

Mr Spies also spoke in opposition to the motion, before proposing that the matter be dropped. He said he was opposed to any kind of outside control of municipal affairs.

"If the motion had aimed at the removal of control, then I would have seconded it. But as it stands, I cannot support it."

He said he could see the "other side", he could understand that "Black and Brown politicans are not prepared to accept continued control by Whites." On the implementation of the Arnold Commission, he said "to demand immediate decisions can only lead to rejection. We have to convince the Ministers' Council of the merits of the system proposed by the Arnold Commission, even if it takes a while.

"To make demands now could close doors to us that should not be closed. We have to talk and talk as long as we can." At this point he proposed that the matter be dropped. The original motion of Mr Greeff's was seconded by Col M J van Taak, who did not speak, however.

LIMOUSINE STORY SAID TO DAMAGE COUNCIL'S IMAGE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] THE Ministers' Council has issued a press statement expressing its concern about the dissatisfaction unchained by an article in the Windhoek Observer last Saturday, concerning the alleged ordering of eight luxury limousines by the Council.

"This report is devoid of all truth", the statement, signed by Dr Ben Africa, says.

The statement, which was issued yesterday, adds: "Seeing that the report appeared at a time when the country is experiencing serious economic problems, the Ministers' Council wishes to register its serious objections to the placement of the report.

"The image of the Ministers' Council can be done irreparable harm through reporting which creates the impression that it acts in a reckless and irresponsible manner with public money."

The statement goes on to give the assurance that the utlilisation of public funds is being done with utmost responsibility.

It concludes by calling upon all Government bodies, including second-tier authorities, to exercise the necessary discipline regarding State funds.

This appeal was repeated yesterday by Dr Africa during a lengthy meeting between the Windhoek Observer's Editor Mr Hannes "Smithy" Smith, and members of the Ministers' Council who were accompanied by senior members of the Department of Finance.

Secretary of Finance, Dr Johan Jones said during the meeting that the Central Government had no control over the allocation of State funds by the ethnic authorities.

It has been learned that the Owambo second-tier authority had placed an order for the eight Mercedes Benzes. A report to this effect was carried in the official DTA organ Die Republikein earlier this week.

Dr Jones also said it was not possible to discern whether purchases by an ethnic authority were made from its own revenue or from funds allocated to it by the Central Government as part of its share in the national estimates of expenditure.

Commenting on the meeting, Mr Smith told The Advertiser late yesterday afternoon that he was wrong in saying that the cars would go to the Ministers' Council.

"But this does not alter the fact that Government money is being used for luxury cars, which is not a priority at a time of financial starvation."

Mr Smith described the meeting as "off-the cuff" and "to the point".

CUTBACK IN BUILDING PROJECTS INCREASES UNEMPLOYMENT

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 5 May 82 pp 1, 3

[Article by Franz Krueger]

[Text]

THOUSANDS of workers will join the ranks of Namibia's unemployed because of the State cutback on building projects.

At present, conservative estimates put the unemployment figure in the territory at 75 000. A snap survey this week revealed that thousands of construction workers will lose their jobs in the next few months, unless the Government resumes its building programme. Hardest hit will be unskilled workers.

The Advertiser spoke to a number of the larger firms involved in the building industry, and discovered that well over a thousand workers are expected to be retrenched in a few months time when current contracts are completed. However, some of the larger firms such as LTA and Murray and Stewart would not reveal figures, and smaller firms were not surveyed, so the total could run into the thousands.

Meanwhile, organisations within the industry are engaged on surveys to determine the extent of the problem.

Mr Bill Nelson, Secretary of the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors of SWA, confirmed that the Federation was engaged in a survey to determine the likely extent of layoffs, which would be discussed at a meeting of the Federation early next week.

In a parallel move, the Master Buildings and Allied Trades Association is engaged in a similar survey. This was confirmed by Mr Peter von Hase, a member of the Association's Executive. He also said negotiations with the Government were continuing "with a view to gain clarity in the issue and hopefully attain some sort of improvement to the situation."

The Advertiser also spoke to Mr David Vermeulen, General Manager of Herma Brothers, and asked him whether he could confirm a report that 540 workers were to be laid off by the company by June. He said the figure was "not correct", but that "hundreds of people" had been laid off already.

"We have completed our current contract, the road between Otjiwarongo and Okakarara, and we have no work at present." He added the situation was "critical, most critical."

A spokesperson for Levon Construction said that "about 500 people" would be laid off when the company's current contract at Ruacana was completed. This would be towards the end of September.

Mr A Williams, GM of Supercola said the company was engaged in working on longterm contracts, but that about 50 percent of the firm's staff would have to be retrenched in June. Supercola is a manufacturer of pipes. He would not say how many workers would be affected, but there have been unconfirmed reports that about 200 workers stand to be retrenched.

Mr E E Ferger, of Lafrenz Holdings, said his company had applied for two contracts, one at Gobabis and one for the construction of a railwayline near Mariental.

"If we are warded these contracts, we are all right. If not, we will have to lay about 200 people in about a month's time," he said.

Attempts to reach Mr Dale Norton, of Murray and Stewart, were not successful. The Advertiser was informed he was "not taking any calls, particularly no calls about the building stop." It was impossible to obtain information on the situation at LTA, since a company spokesman referred the Advertiser to the survey being conducted by the Master Builders Association.

Reliable industry sources have indicated that companies are seeking contracts in South Africa, because of the poor prospects in Namibia. The development follows an announcement by the Ministers' Council that all building projects still in the planning stages are to be frozen because of lack of funds.

Current projects are to be continued with, and the effect of the building stop on the industry is therefore slightly delayed.

DROUGHT-STRICKEN KAOKOVELD NEEDS MORE AID

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Apr 82 pp 6-7

[Text] LACK OF funds is delaying long term aid to the drought-stricken areas of the Kaokoveld.

The population of the area needs long-term assistance to recover from the drought, even though good rains have fallen this season. This year, about 250 mm of rain fell at Opuwo, and the whole area is lush and green.

Nevertheless, problems persist, chiefly because the cattle in the area have severely declined in numbers. The area's economy rests on cattle, and this decline has caused serious problems.

According to Mr Ben van Zyl, Secretary of the Herero Administration, stock numbers have declined to about a third of what they were before the drought.

"There were about 120 000 head of cattle in the area in 1980, and at a conservative estimate there are now only between 40 and 45 000 left. He also said a third of the small-stock had died.

Other experts have put the figure even lower, saying that only about 12 percent of the original herd is left in the area. Accurate figures are difficult to come by, because of the lack of veterinary services in the area. Local officials expressed the need for an accurate count of existing stock.

According to Mr Kaimbire Tjamuaha, Chairman of the Herero Executive, his government had applied for about R2 million to buy cattle to restock the area. This would be enough to provide each family with five head of cattle.

PESSIMISTIC

But officials seemed pessimistic about whether the request would be granted, because of the lack of funds.

"There is no money for extra expenses. There is only enough for the running costs of the administration", Mr Tjamuaha said.

Asked what had been done with drought aid granted in the administration's last budget, Mr Tjamuaha said it had been used to buy farms for the benefit of people in other drought-stricken areas of the country.

"It is impossible to buy farms for the people of Kaokoland, however, because of veterinary regulations." These prevent stock from the area from being transported across the Red Line, because of the prevalence of stock disease in the northern areas.

Mr Tjamuaha said the Administration had established an aid programme for people wanting to sell off existing stock. A feeding station had been set up at Opuwo, and people could bring cattle there for fattening up at the Administration's expense.

The cattle was then transported to Oshakati for sale on the market there, also at the expense of the Administration. Observers have noted, however, that only those people living close to Opuwo have been able to take advantage of the scheme.

The R2 million of drought aid in the budget had been used to buy a total of 16 farms, in the Otjiwarongo, Otjimbingwe and Gobabis areas. People in other drought-stricken areas of Hereroland were able to move their stock to these farms to make use of the grazing there.

PROBLEM AREAS

Another big problem in Kaokoland has been the lack of medical services. There is only one hospital serving the entire region, the State Hospital at Opuwo, which has two clinics at other posts. The hospital, however, is experiencing a serious shortage of staff, and has to rely entirely on national servicemen as doctors.

At the same time, the coming of the rains has led to an increase in diseases such as malaria and gastro-enteritis amongst people already weakened through lack of food.

Attempts to train local people in basic medical skills and post them out to outlying areas had to be abandoned because of the escalating war in the area. As a result, most people out of reach of the hospital or its clinics are without any medical care at all.

Another great need is for technical services. For the beginning, a veterinary and agricultural survey of the region is urgently needed, on which the provision of assistance and advice could be based. But the distances involved make this a huge and costly undertaking, a project unlikely to be taken up in these times of scarce funds. Even by Namibian standards, Kaokoland is vast and sparsely populated.

Nevertheless, short-term aid seems to be assured for the people of the area. There is enough money for food for the near future, but problems may arise later on in the year.

"For the moment we have the situation under control", said Mr Van Zyl. "We have been able to feed the people well, also with the help of the Red Cross and other donations, but we don't know what the position will be in August or September."

PASTOR URGES SOCIETAL CHANGE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 May 82 p 11

[Excerpt]

"DEAR TEACHERS, your task is hopeless unless society is changed, because society cancels everything you do."

This was said last night in Rehoboth by Pastor Z Kameta, Vice-Präses of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. He was addressing about 250 people in the Community Hall at Rehoboth on "Education and the child". The occasion was the opening of the cultural week organised by the Rehoboth High School.

"As teachers and parents we have to stand together to remove all these stumbling blocks in society", Pastor Kameta said.

During question time, he said: "The SA Government and its allies are busy contributing to the downfall of the Black people in this country, in education, society, the economy and even in the church."

In his talk, Pastor Kameta sought to find the reason for the "retrogression of the youth" by tracing the influences which shaped the child. He said parents and teachers should look for the reasons for the youth being what it is.

God, the family, the school and society all helped to educate the child, he said.

Society was an important influence on the child, and "the society we live in es a society based on colour, where you are only a person once you have a certain skin colour. The child goes into a society that is schizophrenic, where some people are regarded as miscreations"

Pastor Kameta said parents and teachers had the duty to work hard at removing these ugly things in society.

"You can't close your eyes to the injustice which grows by the day in the world and particularly in this society. If we talk of the youth of tomorrow we must begin to prepare that tomorrow."

Also addressing the meeting was Mr Keith Gottschalk, a lecturer in African Studies at UCT.

Speaking on the history of Namibia, Mr Gottschalk said the mandate given SA to rule Namibia had failed to protect the indigenous people of the country.

"The mandate was supposed to protect the indigenous people from the disadvantages of colonialism", he said. "In the case of Namibia, General Smuts and the SA Government was allowed to write the mandate that was designed to protect the people from General Smuts."

NOT HAPPY

Only in Palestine and Namibia were settlers allowed to buy land in mandated territories, he said, "and in neither case was it a happy experience for the indigenous people."

In Namibia, half of the land had been given to 3000 settler estates, a quarter of the land to wild animals and a quarter to 300000 Namibians.

"South Africa also imposed on Namibia a carbon copy of SA racist and other laws", he added.

Mr Gottschalk said this had been the main reason for resistance to SA developing among Namibians.

"The government tried to suppress the rise of Namibian opposition, by instituting neo tribalism. As this failed, it moved from the Odendaal to the Turnhall plan."

It had set up the DTA to become an opposition to Swapo, while suppressing that organisation. The DTA was something of a prototype for what the President's Council could become in SA, he claimed.

BRIEFS

IMPROVED FACILITIES AT WALVIS HARBOUR--Work is progressing with the reconstruction of the Hofmeyr Quay at the Walvis Bay Harbour which will allow for the dredging of the channel next to the wharf down to 12,8m. The present depth of the channel is only 10 meter. The 7,5 million project on berths Number One, Two and Three comprises the renewal of the concrete deck over the quay. When completed, the deck will reach six metres out from the quay and the greater depth will allow for the average size container ships to come alongside. At present cargo for Walvis Bay is handled by the Ro-Ro Ships and specially designed coasters--and transferred at Cape Town harbour. The work is expected to take another 24 months to complete. REASONS FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF BREAD NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 11 Mar 82 p 5

[Article by J. A. B.]

[Excerpts] The price of bread has risen since Monday. The price of a small loaf has risen from 60 to 70 francs and that of a large loaf from 90 to 110 francs. This increase has been expected since January following the increase in international wheat prices. The subsequent reduction of the wheat subsidy rate in the Common Market countries thus could only have adverse effects in Senegal, since almost all our imports come from the 10 EEC countries. But these factors alone do not explain the increase. Domestic freight rates have also risen. Customs duties for wheat rose from 0 percent in 1980 to 15 percent at the present time. To this must be added the increase in production costs (wages, energy, bags, maintenance equipment, etc.).

The consequences of all these factors were thus the cause of the 42-percent increase in the cost of bakery flour. In the case of the bread itself, there has also been an adjustment of the costs of other raw materials involved in making bread (yeast, salt, etc.).

However, it must be remembered that wheat is subject to price adjustments, which have been nil for several years. Each year, the Office of Price Adjustment and Stabilization has paid out nearly 1 billion francs to subsidize this grain. So that this price adjustment did not become oppressive, the government was forced to accept this increase as part of the economic and financial recovery plan.

These new prices also apply to Cape Verde. In the case of other regions, prices will have to take into account transportation costs. In other words, they will be slightly higher than those for Cape Verde. However, any new price will be duly recorded by Economic Control.

A few years ago, the increase in bread prices was comparable to that which has just occurred. But due to the slump in sales (according to some people), bakers had to lower their prices. The representative of the bakery owners' association, Mr Sidibe, stated during a meeting at the governor's office that it was the "underground" bakers (those who don't pay taxes) who were the cause of "that so-called reduction." For in his opinion, it was not a matter of lowering prices. It was actually the weight of the bread which was reduced and not the price. During the meeting, Mr Sidibe complained bitterly of "underground" bakers.

According to him, the members of the bakery owners' association were penalized because they paid a lot of taxes. He estimated that even now, many law-abiding bakers were having serious problems. He said he was therefore in favor of the increase in bread prices. In other words, some bakers may well have to close their shops. According to a bakery owner with whom we met, law-abiding bakers will continue to have serious problems even with this increase.

With the new price of wheat bread, the matter of millet-wheat bread is again a prominent issue. It appears that Senegal has no alternative except to encourage the consumption of millet-wheat bread. Until now, millet-wheat bread has had nothing but problems because of eating habits and the unwillingness of some people. Perhaps with this increase, Senegalese will understand that it is possible to change their eating habits. Would a significant difference in price (between wheat and millet-wheat bread) be the right solution?

SOLAR POWERED DISPENSARY OPENED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 9 Mar 82 p 8

[Excerpts] Thies (APS [Senegalese Press Agency])--The minister of public health, Mr Mamadou Diop, officially opened the first solar-powered dispensary at Mont-Rolland, in the Thies region, in the presence of the state secretary for scientific and technical research, Mr Jacques Diouf.

The minister and his retinue were welcomed by the region's governor, Mr Tidiane Ly, who was accompanied by regional health officials, and by the residents of Mont-Rolland, which is located about 12 km from Thies in the district of Pampal, in the department of Tivaouane.

The project, whose total cost is 7 million CFA francs, was financed by the French Solar Energy Commission and built by the "Leroy Somer West Africa" Company in cooperation with the Center for Studies and Research on Renewable Energy Sources (CEREER). Operating entirely by means of a photovoltaic cell which receives solar radiation and channels it into an electric transformer, its equipment includes a 200-liter refrigerator with reinforced insulation, a ventilator for the treatment room, 15 light fixtures and 2 sets of batteries for storing electric power.

A large delegation representing the French agency, the operation's project director, participated in the public reception held by Mont-Rolland residents, who, through their representatives, expressed their satisfaction with this dispensary, which will be electrically self-sufficient and the only one of its kind in Senegal and West Africa.

As the minister of public health noted in his speech, the use of solar energy in rural health units will really constitute an important feature of our policy for developing the health care sector, since it will substantially reduce the operating costs of health units.

According to the minister, the government's efforts, which consist of providing our cities and especially our rural areas with health care infrastructures, will be better perceived by our people as a result of this possibility, which will make it possible for solar energy to be used in most basic units in the near future.

Mr Mamadou Diop added that Senegal has great solar energy potential, which is why this project's continuation will, in the intermediate and long term, make it possible to reduce our oil bill, which is seriously hurting our balance of trade.

STRENGTHENING LINKS WITH PROGRESSIVE STATES REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 26 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Back in Seychelles after a brief working visit in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, the Minister of Youth and Defence, Mr. Ogilvy Berlouis, has expressed satisfaction with the result of his talks in Tripoli.

Mr Berlouis returned yesterday morning after a series of talks with the Commander of the Armed Forces of Libya, Mr. Younes Jabel, on topics of mutual interest to the two countries.

Minister Berlouis was met on arrival at the International Airport by representatives of the Defence Council and the Secretary of the Libyan People's Bureau in Victoria, Mr. Habib Deeb.

Also returning yesterday was the Minister of Labour and Social Security, Mr Philibert Loizeau, from a three-nation tour which took him to Zimbabwe, India and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Minister Loizeau left Seychelles early this month for Zimbabwe to attend the Organisation of African Unity's sixth ministerial labour conference in Salisbury. He then flew to the Indian capital of New Delhi for a three-day international conference on the Juche idea--the guiding ideological force promoting self-reliance in the success of the socialist revolution of the DPRK.

In Pyongyang, the Korean capital to which he flew from New Delhi, Minister Loizeau was one of the guests at the 70th birthday celebrations of President Kim Il Sung.

Mr Loizeau had a meeting with the Korean leader and some of his ministers and also made contact with many of the large number of progressive militants present at the celebrations.

Minister Loizeau is one more Seychellois who has returned from Korea with great impressions of a hard-working and happy society.

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHINA VISIT CALLED FRUITFUL

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 23 Apr 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Fruitful Visit"]

[Text] Vice-President Hussein Kulmie Afrah is in China on an official visit. He has held talks with Chinese Government officials, including the Prime Minister and the Vice-Premier, on bilateral relations and international issues. Held in an atmosphere of cordiality and mutual understanding. There is no doubt that the discussions between the officials of the two countries will bear fruit.

The Somali Democratic Republic and the People's Republic of China have long-standing and many-sided relation which have been developing over the years, particularly since the birth or our revolution. It is no exaggeration to say that a full-pledged Somali Embassy in Peking has come into existence only after the October Revolution. For its part, China has contributed to the strengthening of the existing ties at both the diplomatic and economic level, extending her aid to the Somali people without any strings. Just a couple of days ago the Chinese Government gave a gift of musical instruments to the General Federation of Trade Unions.

The SDR and PRC have many things in Common. Both countries and People have suffered at the hands of colonialism and now dedicated to building a state free of exploitation in which their nations can live in full political and economic freedom fully enjoying the benefits of social justice. In the international arena they both strive for the right of self-determination for people still fighting to achieve it. They also work for peaceful co-existence among all nations of the world, and they therefore loathe hegemonism and imperialism. It was in this context that Vice-president Kulmiye and the Chinese government officials reviewed conditions in the present world and especially the Horn issue.

we look forward to still better relations between the Somali and Chinese peoples. May they live in freedom and prosperity.

KUWAIT DAILY INTERVIEWS FOREIGN MINISTER

GF071640 Kuwait AL-SIYASAH in Arabic 6 May 82 p 2

[Excerpts] Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre has stressed that the Gulf region states play an honest and important role in restoring Arab solidarity and resolving crises and disagreements that are now threatening Arab security.

In a statement to AL-SIYASAH prior to his departure from Kuwait the day before yesterday, the Somali foreign minister said that the strategic position of the Gulf region and its closeness to events and threats encircling the Arab world and its comprehension of the questions of Arab-Israeli, African and international conflicts endows it with a distinct role in the achievement of Arab and international stability in these regions which are considered the most tense regions of the world, the Middle East, the Indian Ocean and the Horn of Africa. He added that by virtue of his country's interest in this Gulf role, President Siad Barre has maintained continuous contacts and consultations with the leaders of the Gulf states in order to brief them on the development of events in the regions of the Horn of Africa and the Red Sea, exchange opinions with them on the various issues of interest to Arab solidarity and discuss the best means to resolve Arab disputes and the crises the region is experiencing and suffering.

The Somali minister indicated that this was the main goal of the messages he is delivering to the leaders of the Gulf states which, in addition, deal with the means to bolster bilateral relations and review issues which are of mutual interest.

When asked about reports that the Somali president's visit to the United States has failed, Mr Abdurahman Jama denied these predictions and said that the visit was completely successful. He said that President Siad Barre explained to President Reagan the stand of Somalia on developments in the Horn of Africa and the necessity to increase economic cooperation between the two countries.

Talking about the nature of the military relationship between Somalia and the United States, the Somali foreign minister said there is an economic and technical cooperation treaty between the two countries, and that it is within the framework of this treaty that the United States offers some military assistance to Somalia. He said that following the Somali president's visit to the United States, Washington agreed to increase this assistance noticeably.

Talking about the Somali-Soviet relationship, the foreign minister said relations are ordinary but do not grow. He said that the exchange of trade is almost frozen.

Asked whether Somali-Soviet relations are expected to return to what they were prior to the stage of discord in view of reports that the United States may restore relations with Ethiopia, the Somali foreign minister said that Somali always looks after its national and patriotic interests and the interests of its people and the peoples of the region.

Asked about the most important threats to Somali security at the present time, the Somali minister said that the problem of the Horn of Africa seems to be the most important issue in view of its threat to the Somali national security. He explained: "We have now before us foreign forces from the Warsaw Pact. These forces reinforce the Ethiopian and Cuban forces. Thus, we are continuously being threatened and our people are subject to daily threats of being killed by these forces."

He added that Somalia does not trespass the limits of its rights when it calls for and demands the right to self-determination for the people of western Somalia (Ogaden) and the right to self-determination for the Eritrean people in order to rescue them from the fist of Ethiopian expansion in the region.

MOGADISHU RADIO ON MOSCOW'S 'CHEAP, BASELESS PROPAGANDA'

EA302136 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 30 Apr 82

[Commentary by 'Abd al-Rahman Fidow Abdi]

[Text] Since the Somali Democratic Republic announced on 13 November 1977 its historic decision to review the political relationship between the USSR and Somalia, the Somali section of Radio Moscow has been spreading cheap and baseless propaganda about Somalia. The latest example of such propaganda about the situation in and policies of the Somali Democratic Republic was broadcast by Radio Moscow on 22 April at 1900 and alleged that the situation in northern Somalia is unstable and that refugees in Somalia have returned to Ethiopia.

Cheap propaganda and fabrications by the Soviet media about Somalia will not pressure it into changing its just policy of giving moral and material support to people struggling for their legitimate right to self-determination. Somalia's policy on liberation movements was an international basis: the principles of the UN Charter, the nonaligned movement, Islamic organizations, the Arab League and the OAU.

The Soviet policy of naked provocation and expansionism has recently been observed with interest by the rest of the world. Ever since the naked aggression by the USSR in the Horn of Africa, Kampuchea, Afghanistan and Central America, the world has been taking a keen interest in the Kremlin's expansionist policy. The Somali people are united behind their leaders and vigilant in the defense of their hard-won sovereignty and independence.

Continued baseless fabrications by the Moscow media, the most recent being Radio Moscow's report of 22 April claiming that northern Somalia is unstable and that refugees in Somalia have returned to Ethiopia are clear evidence of Moscow's plan to deceive world opinion. The plain truth is that northern Somalia is the least unstable of our regions; the situation there is normal and furthermore, no refugees have gone back to Ethiopia. They are in their camps and being cared for by the Somali Government and representatives of the international relief organizations. The problems that forced the refugees to leave their homelands still persist.

(KAMPRI), the self-styled news agency which quotes Radio Moscow, is confusing the refugee question with the movement of nomadic peoples. This deliberate confusion of two separate issues is aimed at misleading world opinion. This is why people everywhere have been wondering what benefits or advantages the Soviet media have for the Third World in general and the Horn of Africa, Kampuchea, Afghanistan and Central America in particular.

The aim of the Kremlin's expansionism is to create an empire in the Third World, and history will prove us right on this. The first step toward that goal was the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and continued Soviet interference in the internal affairs of the countries in the Horn of Africa, Kampuchea and Central America.

If we turn to the internal affairs of the USSR itself, the world is fully aware of the grave crimes, violations of human rights and inhuman acts against the general public being committed by the Moscow regime against the Russian people.

The Soviet economy is also in a bad way because of Soviet interference in the internal affairs of Third World countries. In order to conceal the internal problems facing the leaders in the Kremlin, the media have taken to a campaign of baseless lies so as to confuse world and Soviet opinion.

The world in general and the developing countries in particular know what is going on and exercise caution in their political relations with the USSR. Furthermore, Somalia is a stable and united country where the people give their full support to their leaders and cherish peaceful cooperation with all their neighbors. Such are the basic principles of our national development.

Somalia has made its position on the Horn of Africa quite clear and will strive for a lasting peace based on the just and legitimate right to self-determination of Somali people under Abyssinian black colonial rule.

MILITARY FORCES REPEL ETHIOPIAN ATTACKS

EA031730 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 3 May 82

[Commentary by (Abdullahi Haji Fadhal)]

[Text] Provocation by Abyssinia and its backers who include the USSR, Libya and South Yemen, of whose intentions and strategies the world is aware, is aimed only at continuing the stalemate and tension in the Horn of Africa.

The Somali Air Defense Force bravely repulsed an Abyssinian air raid on (Goladey) in Hargeisa District on 30 April. On the afternoon of that day two Abyssinian war planes violated Somali air space and attacked the village, killing one innocent person and wounding 10 others.

The constant Abyssinian attacks on the Somali Democratic Republic, dictated by its backers, have in the last few years always ended in shame and humiliation for the Abyssinians on the battlefields. The large quantities of Abyssinian military equipment destroyed by the Somali army and still to be seen are a constant reminder of the attacks on the districts of Iet, (Galdogob), Dogo, Borama and (Eel Badle).

In these battles many Abyssinian soldiers were also killed. This naked aggression as seen in the attack on the village of (Goladey) shows that the Abyssinians are suffering irreparable damage at the hands of the Western Somalis, Somali Abos, Eritreans and Tigreans. The Abyssinians are being attacked on all sides and are currently meeting stiff opposition from the Eritreans, who have refused to be colonized by Mengistu.

The Mengistu regime will never win any battle against peoples fighting for a just cause and it is imperative that the forces of the unholy withdraw from these territories. The strategies of the USSR, Libya, Cuba and South Yemen are aimed at destabilizing the Horn and at distorting the truth about their actions.

Finally, any battle against an occupied territory and a colonized people always ends in victory for those fighting for their legitimate rights. Somalia has always given and will continue to give its unwavering support to such peoples and at the same time it will not forgive Abyssinia for its naked aggression against innocent Somalis.

SECOND BOTHA-KAUNDA MEETING LIKELY

MB100850 Johannesburg SUNDAY EXPRESS in English 9 May 82 p 9

[By Kitt Katzin]

[Text] The historic border meeting between Mr P. W. Botha and Dr Kenneth Kaunda was so successful they may meet again.

Unimpeachable sources said the meeting produced more than either side had expected--and fresh initiatives were being considered to set up further meetings.

The sources said that after their four-hour Indaba on the South African-Botswana border last week, both statesmen reacted positively to a suggestion of a second round of talks later this year.

Mr Botha and Dr Kaunda struck up a spontaneous friendship and were encouraged in this spirit to discuss wide-ranging issues with enthusiasm and on a personal level.

"Plenty of scope was initiated for further contacts--the door has been left wide open," an informed source said.

Both the South African and Zambian delegations said the extent of the talks exceeded expectations and felt that tangible results could be achieved sooner than expected.

Meanwhile, sources in Lusaka said President Kaunda had undertaken to give a detailed briefing to frontline heads of state on "practical" results that were likely to follow.

Some black leaders in Southern Africa, such as Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, condemned President Kaunda for meeting Mr Botha.

But observers said it was significant that the Indaba won the blessing of the Organization of African Unity's ambassador to the United Nations, Mr Oumarou Youssoufou.

On the other hand, President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania called for the unconditional release of Nelson Mendela, the jailed African National Congress leader, and reminded President Kaunda that no leader outside South Africa could speak on behalf of blacks in South Africa.

But most black leaders are hoping that the Kaunda-Botha friendship will break the log-jam in Namibia.

And it is in this respect, said informed observers, that a second meeting was on the cards.

They said President Kaunda would convey Mr Botha's views on the subject to the front-line states.

This was the first time black Africa and South Africa have initiated "backup" discussions on the thorny issue outside the existing negotiations between SWAPO and the Western contact group.

This was seen as a significant breakthrough.

At last week's Indaba, President Kaunda is understood to have expressed himself in surprisingly moderate terms, and indicated that Zambia was ready to assist directly in trying to find a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem.

Other topics discussed included the increasing involvement of "liberation" movements and possible technical and investment programmes in the agricultural and mining fields.

POLISH JOURNALIST COMMENTS ON KUANDA-BOTHA MEETING

Warsaw SZTANDAR MLODYCH in Polish 3 May 82 p 5

[Article by Wiktor Weggi: "A Meeting With Implied Meanings"]

[Text] On the border between Botswana and the Republic of South Africa there was a meeting on Friday [30 April 1982] between the president of Zambia, Kenneth Kaunda, and the head of the government in Pretoria, Pieter Botha. As noted by the Western [press] agencies, the subject of the one-day "summit" was, primarily, the problems concerning Namibia and race discrimination in the Republic of South Africa.

The lack of further reporting, permits only the making of a hypothesis. There is no doubt that this was an event of great importance even if because of the fact that such a meeting took place at all. Zambia belongs to the group of so-called frontline states (consisting also of Angola, Mozambique, Botswana, Tanzania and Zimbabwe), which for years have been demanding a just solution of the Namibian question. Until now, the frontline states have not had direct talks with Pretoria since they do not have diplomatic relations with it [Pretoria]. Therefore, if President Kaunda agreed to meet personally with Premier Botha this can mean that perhaps either he received the agreement of the other African states for this step or else he is acting on his own.

The first variant, which seems to me the most probable, can then mean that the frontline states are prepared to enter into a certain compromise on the Namibian question with Pretoria, for it is difficult to believe that Botha has written off Namibia. On the other hand, if that is the way things are, this signifies a very dangerous evolution of events in South Africa, and, above all, departure from the assumption that the only legal representative of the Namibian nation is the Southwest African Peoples' Organization [SWAPO]. Such an approach to the problems, as a result, would be tantamount to a toning down of the demands of the frontline states with regard to Pretoria on holding universal and democratic elections under the supervision of the United Nations, and, as a result, a government of future, independent Namibia would be formed.

The second variant, which has many grounds, suggests in turn that among the frontline states a split has occurred. Though they all demand the independence of Namibia, they see this independence differently. And that view is conditioned by the political situation in each of them, as well as by their external ties. Angola would like to see an independent Namibia at its side for the danger of the aggression of the Republic of South Africa against the young republic has not vanished. Mozambique holds the same position. But Tanzania, Zimbabwe and Zambia have different calculations. Zambia is too strongly economically and politically tied to the West for it to be able to support the socialist road of development of future independent Namibia proposed by the leader of SWAPO, Sam Nujoma. What is worse, it is also to a large degree dependent economically on Pretoria and must reckon with the fact that its radicalism would result in economic countermeasures on the part of the Republic of South Africa. There is then, therefore, such an interpretation of the Kaunda-Botha meeting which assumes a certain softening of the demands of Lusaka in exchange for certain economic benefits on the part of Pretoria, all the more desirable since Zambia at present is experiencing tremendous economic difficulties.

Nevertheless, I do not believe that Kaunda betrayed the Namibian issue. This would bring him more harm than benefit. Divided by territorial disputes and different political orientations, Africa is homogeneous with regard to the problem of Namibia and racial discrimination in the Republic of South Africa. An express severance from this community of views would have to end for Zambia with its isolation from the African community, which it certainly does not desire.

OPINION POLL SHOWS P. W. BOTHA STILL TOP CHOICE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 May 82 p 11

[Text] Mr P W Botha is still first choice for Prime Minister among white South Africans, while second choice is the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Pik Botha.

This is according to a recent opinion poll conducted by Marketing and Opinion Surveys.

According to the poll, Mr P W Botha is still firm favourite for the premiership with 39,3 percent support — despite the recent formation of Dr Andries Treurnicht's Concervative Party.

Mr Pik Botha is second choice with 17,1 percent, Dr Fred van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the Opposition, third with 15 percent and Dr Treurnicht fourth with 10,1 percent.

Dr T rating

The same question was asked in a similar opinion poll last September and then the Prime Minister received 46,9 percent support.

In the Transvaal, Dr Treurnicht's stronghold, Mr P W Botha also tops the popularity poll among Afrikaners with 34,9 support while Dr Treurnicht drew 21,3 percent.

In the Cape, the Prime Minister has the overwhelming support of 56,8 percent among Afrikaners, while Dr Treurnicht has only 6,6 percent.

Rise

Overall, according to the poll, Mr Pik Botha re-established himself as second favourite with his 17,1 percent. In the previous survey he received 15 percent.

Dr Fred van Zyl Slabbert also improved his position from nine to 15 percent. Dr Treurnicht advanced from 4,3 percent to 10,1 percent.

A break-up of individual support for these four political leaders among the English and Afrikaans speaking Whites is:

English: Mr P W Botha — 34,2 percent; Dr van Zyl Slabbert 30,2; Mr Pik Botha 14,4; Dr Treurnicht 2,1.

Afrikaans: Mr P W Botha — 43,1 percent; Mr Pik Botha 19; Dr Treurnicht —15,9: Dr van Zyl Slabbert — 30,3.

The survey also tested White opinion on the manner in which Mr P W Botha handled the suspension of Dr Treurnicht and his followers from the National Party. Here, 65,8 percent replied that he had done it good. A total of 18,2 percent said he had handled it poorly and 16 percent were undecided.

English support for the Prime Minister in this regard was 72,4 percent and the Afrikaans backing 61,1 percent.

He received most support from the Cape and Natal with 75,9 and 75,0 percent respectively.

In the Transvaal he was backed by 58,8 percent and 62,1 percent in the Free State.

There are four main contenders, according to the survey, to succeed Mr Botha as Prime Minister, with Mr Pik Botha heading the field as firm favourite with 44,4 percent. The other three contenders are Dr van Zyl Slabbert (9 percent), Mr F W de Klerk (8,1 percent) and Dr Treurnicht (7,6 percent).

'ANC RADIO' SCORES PROPOSED PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL IN COUNTRY

EA141328 Addis Ababa Radio Freedom in English to South Africa 1930 GMT 13 May 82

[ANC program]

[Text] Prominent black political and community leaders in South Africa have strongly denounced and rejected the apartheid regime's proposals of the so-called president's council.

The fundamental aim of the president's council, whose principles were clearly defined yesterday in the all-white parliament, is to consolidate political power into the hands of the white minority and give the Indian and coloured peoples direct say only at a local government level.

The proposals also totally exclude the African majorities even from that so-called direct local government level and relegate them to the puppet Bantustan administrations.

Reacting to the proposals, the general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, Bishop Desmond Tutu, said that anyone who was confused by the proposed new decisions was more gullible than he believed possible. Bishop Tutu added that the move to draw the Indian and so-called coloured people into the white (?laager) was another tactic in the divide-and-rule concept. Another leader of the people who reacted sharply to the proposal was Dr [name indistinct] (Muthano), chairman fo the Soweto Committee of Ten. Dr (Muthano) expressed the hope that the people of the two groups will not be pressed into accepting the proposals of the president's council as this would lead to the breakdown of black unity.

Black unity, Dr (Muthano) said, was the only weapon against oppression, and it should not be jeopardized.

Meanwhile, the president's council has also been condemned by leaders of the coloured people themselves. Leader of the powerful Coloured Labor Party, Dr (Allen) Hendrickse, has said that the president's council can only be judged by its providing participation for the majority of the black people inside the country. And the deputy leader of the Labor Party (Norman Milton) added that the new proposals will dress the same old evil, apartheid, in a new guise. There would be no peace in southern Africa, (Norman Milton) said, until the majority of its peoples were included in any political participation at the highest level.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON NEW CONSTITUTIONAL SYSTEM

President's Council Hears Recommendations

MB130858 Umtata Transkei Capital Radio in English 1300 GMT 12 May 82

[Text] The first recommendations for a new political system in South Africa were tabled in the President's Council half an hour ago. The recommendations of the joint committee of planning and economics focus on local and regional government. Nigel Rench reports:

[Begin recording] The commissions' brief was to make recommendations concerning whites, Asians and people of mixed race, but it does touch on the position of blacks. The recommendations envisage a totally new system of local representation. The three race groups would be represented together on the local authorities. The maximum possible power would be given to these local bodies. The report recommends the abolition of the existing racial, management and local affairs committees, with, as an interim measure, a nominated member of these committees sitting on white local bodies. This nominee would have full voting rights.

Each region will have a metropolitan body which will decide on issues such as provision of water and electricity, which affect several local bodies. It is on this metropolitan body that the report envisages blacks as sitting in as well. It says the government's policy means blacks exercises political rights within the homelands, but it says community councils give urban blacks local power. Community council representatives would sit on the metropolitan body.

On the second tier, the committee was divided. One proposal is that the present provincial councils be abolished and that white, mixed-race and Asian people from local executive committees be appointed as central government representatives. For purposes of regional administration, the country would then be divided up into eight units: three for the Transvaal and the Cape, and one each for Natal and the Orange Free State.

The other possibility would be that the present provincial system be retained but with whites, Asians and mixed-race people being elected to the provincial council. The franchise system will be equal for each race group, excluding blacks. It's a very complicated system with up to three votes per person being possible, depending on ownership of property.

The recommendations are not final. The report will be debated in the full President's Council, and alterations can be made. The final proposals would then be submitted to the state president and will be debated in parliament. Two more reports on central government and the group areas act will be published next week.

Nigel Rench, Capital News, Johannesburg. [End recording]

Proposed Government Restructuring

LD131034 Johannesburg International Service in English 0630 GMT 13 May 82

[Excerpt] The South African President's Council has recommended a comprehensive restructuring of the political structure in South Africa. The constitutional committee of the President's Council says in its first report that it proposes a complete break from the Westminister system of government which is in force in South Africa. It envisages an executive system of government with a state president at the head of the cabinet. Whites, coloreds and Asians must be involved as equals in executive authority. The system must rest on the principle that population groups have control over their own affairs.

The committee recommends that the president, at the head of the nonparliamentary executive power, should be elected by an electoral college of the legislative authority for a period of 7 years. It is recommended that the first president should be elected by the present parliament and the government is asked to find a way in which coloreds and Asians may also play a part in (?this) election. On his election the president will appoint a prime minister and, after consultation with him, the members of the cabinet. The ministers would report to the legislative authority regarding their portfolios but would not belong to it or have a right to vote.

The committee has not given details of how the South African legislative authority will be composed or how it will function. This will be its next task. With regard to the legislative authority the committee says the existing organization must be changed. With the involvement of the colored and Asians in the new political dispensation it means that the basis on which groups are represented in the legislative authority will have to be widened. Again, no details have been given of how this is to be done.

The committee is of the opinion that the demands of a democracy in which the elite of the various population groups are involved in the cabinet must be met as soon as possible. For the implementation of such a system it is essential that the South African Government must make a declaration of intent because this will make the progress of change much easier. In the proposed declaration it must be stated that the envisaged dispensation willbe accepted and that provision will be made for the removal of discrimination. It must also contain standpoints on the position of the black people.

As an interim measure, until the new dispensation is applied and the coloreds and Indians can take part in executive and legislative authority, it is recommended that the President's Council should deal with draft legislation (?on) matters affecting these groups. In addition, committees consisting of members of the President's Council and the House of Assembly must be appointed to deal with policy matters involved.

Further on President's Council Proposals

MB131423 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL 13 May 82 p 1

[By John Battersby, political correspondent]

[Excerpts] The creation of an executive president with sweeping powers to appoint and dismiss the prime minister and cabinet, and to dissolve parliament, is the major recommendation among far-reaching constitutional changes proposed by the President's Council.

The constitutional committee report, released unexpectedly last night, also recommends the inclusion of coloureds and Indians in an executive cabinet and comes out in favour of a single legislature for the three race groups.

Earlier yesterday, the council set out proposals for a decentralised system of local and regional government.

A third joint report, by the planning and community relations committees of the council, endorses the principle of enforced residential separation and rejects the repeal of the group areas act "at this stage."

The report concedes, however, that this and related laws need to be reviewed and consolidated.

However, the report on local and regional government says that while ethnicity will continue to be a factor around which local government will be organized, the process of reform should not be accompanied by enforced racial separation or enforced integration.

Under the constitutional committee's proposed system, the president, who will be elected for a seven-year term of office, will appoint the prime minister and the cabinet.

The president would be eligible for re-election.

The committee said that under a non-parliamentary system, the president as chief executive "would be more easily able to control the strong divisive tendencies in South African society and at the same time gain broad support for measures of reform that would greatly improve community relations without endangering stability".

"The committee believes that a non-parliamentary executive is best suited to the needs of South Africa, since a strong president intent on reform would be able to supply a sense of basic security and thereby increase support for this reformist measures."

The committee said that "a supra-ethnic president and his cabinet provide the most effective means of accommodating the different communities, while at the same time preventing paralysis of government due to deep division or deadlock in the legislature."

The election of the executive president would have to be as broadly representative as possible of the communities involved.

And it would have to be seen as not posing a threat to the vital interests of the present dominant group, whose leaders would have to make final decisions about constitutional change, the committee said.

Further Comment on Council Recommendations

MB140713 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 13 May 82 p 6

[Text] Sharp criticism from a broad spectrum greeted the proposals tabled yesterday by the president for moderate reforms in local and regional government. [as published]

There was little support for the recommendations among civic leaders, with representatives of the Reef's black, coloured and Indian communities being particularly critical.

And two top Johannesburg city councillors expressed their disappointment with the proposals, adding that major municipalities would have to give up major portions of their meagre financial income to establish emergent local authorities.

Johannesburg management chief, Mr Francois Oberholzer, said the proposals were "most disappointing", and he believed that as they stood now, they were neither politically nor financially acceptable.

The PFP [Progressive Federal Party] leader in Johannesburg, Mr Sam Moss, said he was filled with "apprehension", and added that municipalites would have to receive guarantees that they would acquire alternative sources of revenue. This was because, in terms of the proposals, a large portion of the profits of municipal trading departments would go to the local metropolitan authority.

The chairman of Johannesburg's CBD [Central Business District] Association, Mr Nigel Mandy, was among the few to praise the recommendations.

He felt the President's Council had done an "excellent job", and he welcomed the proposals for a local multiple vote system, the formation of metropolitan authorities, and the division of responsibilities between municipalities and the metropolitan bodies.

The recommendations were "a small step in the right direction" as a basis for radical future change, the president of the Transvaal Indian and Coloured Management Association, Mr Boetie Abramjee, said.

Mr Abramjee, who is also an executive member of the SA Indian Council, said the recommendations could be a foothold in the corridors of power.

"But how much influence will be wielded by the coloured and Indian representatives in either of the two proposed schemes remains to be seen."

Dr Ntatho Motlana, chairman of the Soweto Committee of 10, said details of the proposals did not interest him.

"The basic objection to this whole exercise is that it does not come to terms with the problem--and that is how to cater for 70 percent of the population. As long as you are ignored, you are playing games," Dr Motlana said.

Dr Rashid Salojee, vice-chairman of the Transvaal Anti-South African Indian Council Committee and chairman of the Federation of Residents' Associations of Lenasia, said the proposals amounted to a "sophisticated form of racial segregation".

Overall, one cannot really see coresponsibility and power-sharing being transferred into a practical system," Dr Salojee said.

A member of Johannesburg's Coloured management Committee, Mr Ralph Peffer, dismissed the proposals and said that as long as the government maintained statutory apartheid, "there could be no reform outside the statute".

Mr Jaison Jhina, of the Johannesburg Lenasia Management Committee, said he believed the proposals would increase racial tension because the President's Council had not come up with "something worthwhile to fight and die for".

He found the proposals "totally unacceptable because the loaded vote in favour of whites" would perpetuate white domination over blacks.

The leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, Mr Jaap Marais, said his party rejected the proposals for the same reasons that the HNP had rejected the 1977 constitutional proposals.

"This is clear that the President's Council have chosen the road to power-sharing between white and non-white, and it is probably the beginning of a process of increasing racial mixing on a political level.

"Nowhere in the world had this sort of attempt at racial peace been successful," he said.

Mr S. Abraham Mayet, speaking in Cape Town at a motion moving acceptance of the joint report of the economic affairs and constitutional committees of the President's Counil, said the proposals were not utopian, but were a good basis for negotiation.

He called on the "communities of colour" to use the proposals as a basis for further negotiation with the authorities.

Mr M Rajab, speaking at the plenary session today of the President's Council, said black people should be included with whites, coloureds and Indians in the new local and regional government system.

He said that although he had signed the report, he could not support it without qualification.

"Despite the limitations, the report is a sincere and genuine point of departure for realistic reform which could point the way for the direction in which the country should be governed," he said.

Despite the fact that the committee's assignment was restricted to whites, coloureds and Indians, the chairman, Dr Schalk van der Merwe, had adopted a "colour blind" approach.

'MAIL' Comments on President's Council Proposals

MB140811 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 13 May 82 p 10

[Editorial: "Now--Time for Cool Thinking"]

[Text] There are immense implications--good and ominous--in the proposals for reform of central government released suddenly last night under extraordinary circumstances. They require thought and cool debate.

The avowed aim of the proposals is to bring the coloured and Asian communities into the decision-making process right up to the highest-level--the cabinet itself. That is a fundamental departure from nationalist doctrine thus far, a reversal of brutal policies this newspaper has consistently denounced and, if it were assessed in a political vacuum, a development calling for wholehearted support.

Surely no men of goodwill could or would have doubts about a move that so palpably gives a better deal to people so long deprived of it?

And yet things are not as simple as that. There is not a political vacuum in this country. There are other factors to be weighed.

Blacks are excluded from the proposed dispensation, though the President's Council report exceeds its mandate and urges that--if its plan is accepted--there should be a "statement of intention" from the government regarding their future. That certainly acknowledges that blacks need to be considered.

Will that be enough? Will urban black people be more ready to accept an existing status they have consistently rejected simply because coloureds and Asians are better off? Will they argue that it is a hopeful move for them, opening a door? There is a hint of such possible developments in the report. Or will blacks see it as a ganging-up against them?

These are questions of grave moment. They must be carefully considered, carefully answered and that is why debate is necessary.

Having accepted the principle that the future cannot simply be imposed on any of South Africa's peoples, much must depend on how the people themselves react. It would obviously be disturbing if, say, a majority of whites supported the new plan, the coloured and Indian communities were divided by it and the black community was hostile to it. It is hard to see how that would advance the cause of peaceful co-existence.

At the same time we readily recognise that overnight, all-purpose miracle solutions to South Africa's problems are not exactly abundant and that successful reform will, of necessity, be a slow business and has to start somewhere.

There is another immediate anxiety: the proposed first step to reform.

This is to create an executive state president or awesome power. He would be in office for seven years. He would run the country, appointed the prime minister, control the cabinet. He would initiate legislation and have the right to dissolve the legislature if he felt the need. He could, if he wished, be little less than a dictator.

His would be the task of ensuring that the Indian and coloured communities are represented in the cabinet.

The report argues that it is necessary to arm the state president as a first step so that he can create an executive that transcends sectional interest and so that he is strong enough to implement necessary reforms.

The argument may appeal to some but we lack the necessary blind faith. There is no plan for an entrenched bill of rights; nothing except a proposed government "declaration of intent" to ensure that the executive president does what the President's Council would have him do.

We view that prospect with grave misgiving. To put it mildly.

Proposals for Blacks in Local Affairs

MB140815 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 13 May 82 p 10

[Text] Surprise recommendations for the inclusion of urban blacks into a new system of local authorities have been made by the joint economic and constitutional committee of the President's Council.

While the council was directed to seek a new constitutional dispensation for whites, coloureds and Asians, the committee says that the involvement of urban Africans in the supply of large scale services "is logical and unavoidable."

An important aspect of the committee's proposals is a recommendation for metropolitan authorities whose members will be nominated from the local authorities in the area, including blacks.

The report says: "The economic realities obtaining in the republic and the rapid process of urbanisation have, however, compelled the committee to take due note of the question of blacks outside the national states, more particularly because of the complexity of their involvement in, and their inseparability from local and regional economies."

Later it says: In formulating its proposals for reform, the committee has taken account of the carefully considered stand of the board of chairmen of administration boards."

This was that "a model for local authorities that takes the white, coloured and Asian population groups only into account without looking at the blacks in the RSA will find that the preponderance of the blacks will very soon turn this problem into a topical one".

The committee has called for a more equitable spread of finances for the provision of services in municipal areas and that there should be greater co-ordination between local authorities.

It points out that it is government policy at present to elevate existing black community councils to full municipal status.

Greater co-ordination will be supplied through the metropolitan boards in the larger city complexes.

"The co-operation of all local authorities, including blacks, with regard to large-scale services is logical and unavoidable," says the report.

"Participation by all population groups at the level of large-scale services by representatives nominated from the primary level will not adversely affect the particular interests of communities.

"The committee notes that in terms of government policy, the blacks at local government level outside of the national states will liaise with their national state units or confederal units with regard to their political rights over and above the local authority level."

Dealing with the need for metropolitan authorities, which will involve all race groups, the report says that with the industrialisation and economic development in and around the metropolitan areas largely bypassing the rest of the country, the South African economy had taken on a "dualistic character".

It accommodated modern economic characteristics and advantages at the one extreme and "Third World subsistence at the other extreme".

Proposals Avoid Change in Sensitive Areas

MB140820 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 13 May 82 p 11

[Text] The government will not have to give way on its bottom-line of separate residential areas, schools and community facilities if it accepts the President's Council report on local and regional government.

These holy cows of Afrikanerdom have been catered for in the report by an elaborate division of functions normally exercised by local authorities into "hard" and "soft" functions.

In effect this will mean that in the country's seven major urban industrial complexes, where the report recommends the establishment of metropolitan authorities, "culturally sensitive" issues will remain in the hands of the largely ethnically pure local authorities.

Only "hard" functions will be delegated to the inter-racial metropolitan authorities where nominated members of the four main race groups will meet to tkae decisions over matters of common interest.

In the report "soft functions" are defined as community-sensitive or culturally-sensitive services such as community halls, residential areas, schools, swimming pools, pavements, streets in suburbs, parks, playgrounds, recreation centres, libraries, and beaches.

"Hard functions", on the other hand, are defined as welfare functions and business-oriented services that can be provided on a large scale at lower unit costs.

These include such services as fire prevention, drainage, electricity, highways, streets, water supply, town planning, abattoirs, computer services, professional staff services, transportation, sewerage purification and reticulation, and the disposal of solid and toxic wastes.

While the report acknowledges the need for urgent adjustment to the present system to provide for joint decision-making between the various population groups it emphasises that account must be taken of historical institutions, inter-ethnic relations, the right to self-determination, and protection of minorities and homogenous groups. The report suggests further technical investigation to establish a precise division of functions into soft or hard, and recommends that an ad hoc working committee or permanent liaison committee could lay down guidelines for the division of such functions.

In terms of the report elected members of primary local authorities would nominate at least one representative to a metropolitan authority which would coordinate services falling into the category of "hard functions".

Services could be provided by private enterprise such as public utility companies where this could be done at a lower unit cost.

The report recommends a "flexible approach" in the allocation of soft and hard functions particularly in urban and densely-populated areas.

The number of representatives on a metropolitan authority would be determined in accordance with either the rateable value of property or the use of services.

The report emphasises that it does not envisage the establishment of metropolitan authorities as the creation of an extra tier of government.

PAPER GIVES DETAILS ON BROEDERBOND REPORTS

MB170825 Johannesburg SUNDAY EXPRESS in English 17 May 82 p 21

[Excerpts] The chief of the Broederbond, Professor Carel Boshoff, conceded this week that the purpose of the secret Broederbond report--published by the SUNDAY EXPRESS last week--was to draw attention to the fact that the self-determination of whites could not be assured indefinitely on the basis of discriminatory laws.

He also admitted that the report, which condemned all major laws underpinning apartheid and called on the government to issue a "declaration of intent" to demonstrate its earnestness in moving away from racial discrimination, had been circulated to members of the secret organisation.

Commenting on the SUNDAY EXPRESS report, Prof Boshoff said he interpreted the AB document as an appeal to expedite--and not abolish--the government's homeland policy.

He said he disagreed with the SUNDAY EXPRESS interpretation that the report called for the abolition of nine major apartheid laws.

Prof Boshoff also admitted that the Broederbond had launched a careful study into the implication of any revision of these laws and that alternatives were proposed to include guarantees that whites would be able to decide on their future but did not say what they were.

Prof Boshoff said there could only be movement away from certain laws if the policy of separate development was carried to its conclusion.

Yet a second secret Broederbond document--disclosed on these pages today--has this to say about apartheid:

"The Afrikaner has not succeeded in selling the 'comprehensive apartheid concept' as a mechanism for a meaningful social and political arrangement to other population groups and the outside world."

The SUNDAY EXPRESS did not imply last week, as Prof Boshoff said, that the Broederbond had issued new directives on racial laws. It reported the findings of a special tasks force assigned to study the question of whether legalised protections was a necessary prerequisite for the survival of the Afrikaner nation and the whites.

However, this issue was dealt with again--and in greater detail--in a second secret Broederbond report which has come into the possession of the SUNDAY EXPRESS.

Yesterday Prof Boshoff admitted this report was an AB document, that it had been circulated to AB members, and that it was part of a Broeders-bond study project.

"But it wasn't intended to be published," he said.

He was aware of the findings in the report but said they did not necessarily reflect the Broederbond's official standpoint.

He declined to disclose what the final outcome of the report was as "this information is never disclosed".

The report was compiled by a senior member of the AB, but Prof Boshoff declined to name him. It was a "voluntary" study.

He conceded the AB's all-powerful executive committee was aware of the report.

BROEDERBOND REPORT CALLS FOR HIGHER EDUCATION REFORMS

MB170818 Johannesburg SUNDAY EXPRESS in English 17 May 82 pp 20-21

[Excerpt] A secret report circulated as part of a study project by the Broederbond said Afrikaans universities should open their doors to "non-white" students.

And the report, circulated to Broeders throughout South Africa, warned that by excluding blacks from their campuses, Afrikaans universities were sacrificing "important opportunities" to influence black leaders--to the English universities.

The report, drawn up by a senior Broeder in January last year and circulated as an official Broederbond document, was entitled "The Maintenance of Particular Norms in a Multiracial Society".

It was issued with a second report on racial discrimination, drawn up by a Broederbond study group and disclosed in the SUNDAY EXPRESS last week. That report asked Broeders to comment on whether legalized protection was still necessary to ensure the survival of Afrikaners.

In January this year--a year after both Broederbond reports were circulated--Dr Ferdi Hartzenberg, then minister of education and training, disclosed some of the key recommendations of the relief committee of inquiry into higher education for urban blacks.

The recommendations, [word illegible] could completely change univerity education, if accepted by the government, include a proposal to allow blacks to be admitted to white universities on a quota system--not by permit as at present--and that autonomous university councils should determine their own admissions policy.

The report on education circulated by the Broederbond criticised the permit system which compels blacks to apply to the minister for authority to enroll at white universities and said blacks regarded the system as "humiliating".

Afrikaans universities could not continue withholding facilities from blacks--and the report noted that English universities had accepted a substantial number of black students since 1960.

By doing so, these universities and the prescribed language (English) used on their campuses, had exerted tremendous influence and status among black intellectuals, including many who today occupied influential positions in neighbouring states.

Afrikaans universities, by closing their doors to black, had lost an important opportunity of influencing blacks and seeking their friendship.

However, Afrikaans universities had realised that academic contact with black leaders and intellectuals served the long-term interests of Afrikaners.

OPPOSITION LEADER DISCUSSES NEED FOR REFORM

MB110650 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 10 May 82 p 7

[Article by Dr Frederik Van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the South African Progressive Federal Party]

[Text] I hear some people say: "The PFP must help Mr P. W. Botha"; "There must be a blurring of the ideological lines in order to facilitate debate"; "For the sake of political realignment, the PFP will have to shed itself of some of its members."

This is the kind of talk I hear while moving around the country and read in the political columns of some English-language newspapers.

Last Sunday, a newspaper published the results of a survey which shows that the PFP stands to lose some of its support if the prime minister introduces reform now.

There lies the rub of course, with the word "if."

Two questions immediately arise: Firstly, whether and when the prime minister intends introducing reforms, and, secondly, what is meant by the term "reform."

Until there is clarity on these two issues--and we are nowhere near clarity--any talk of "toenadering" [coming together], reconciliation or coalition politics is purely academic and entirely irrelevant.

As a matter of straightforward fact, this government has not come with a clear and understandable declaration of intent as to what reforms it has in mind, when it wishes to introduce them and at what tempo.

For the prime minister or cabinet ministers to say a few nice things about coloureds and Indians and a few nasty things about Dr A. P. Treurnicht and the Conservative Party, does not constitute reform or give any reason for the PFP to start making cooing noises and rush into an artificial white solidarity because the prime minister "is in trouble" with his right wing.

This country needs reform, reform and reform and only on that basis can bargains be struck, deals negotiated and realignment brought about.

Any white voter who believes that a black man should not be a citizen of South Africa, that he cannot own property like anyone else, that he cannot move around as freely as anyone else to look for work, that there must be laws which force a person to belong to a race or ethnic group even if the individual does not want to, and that this must be backed up by other laws that blatantly discriminate against the person on the basis of race or ethnicity--such a voter does not understand what "reform" means and does not appreciate the potential for conflict in our land.

All these aspects are part and parcel of official government policy and as yet not indication has been given of any intention to change this.

I have no intention of making a virtue out of being bloody-minded or being deliberately uncompromising and obstinate.

I desire nothing more than to see a determined and united government move systematically away from white domination and discrimination towards a non-racial and shared South Africa.

That this is going to be extremely difficult to achieve I also do not doubt, and I do have appreciation and sympathy for tentative steps in this direction even from the government.

But I and the PFP dare not allow ourselves and our supporters to bluff ourselves that things are happening when they are not.

We dare not offer up whatever bargaining position we have for half measures and ineffectual attempts at reform. What is involved is not the future of the PFP or the careers of its public representatives, but the possibility of relatively peaceful progress and the future of us all.

Surely this demands serious consideration when issues of policy, prinicple and strategy arise.

There is a tendency of late to compare "step-in-the-right-direction" politics with an "all-or-nothing" position and then to argue as if the one is the same as a willingness to compromise and the other as being implacably committed to principle.

This is a totally false distinction. To be committed to principle does not mean that you are not willing to negotiate or compromise. On the contrary, How can you recognise a step in the right direction if you do not even know what the right direction is?

If two parties differ on the "right direction" and they reach a compromise, then it either means the compromise does not pose a threat to their respective principles or it means a sacrifice of a fundamental principle in favor of the "right direction" of the other party.

A step in the right direction towards reform in South Africa means that the NP is going to have to sacrifice some of its principles to bring this about. How will the PFP judge whether this is actually taking place? The following could serve as guidelines. Does it:

Increase or decrease racial polarisation between black and white?

Move towards recognising the rights of citizenship and effective franchise of all South Africans irrespective of race or ethnicity?

Clearly show a move away from discrimination on the basis of race or ethnicity?

I mention these guidelines not in a spirit of arrogance or moral superiority or as if the PFP has all the answers and the NP none.

These guidelines, I believe, provide a basis for negotiation and bargaining in terms of our respective commitments to different principles. If no agreement can be reached, the determined opposition and not the "blurring of lines" or "being kind to the NP in difficult times" is called for.

It is true that the style of white politics has changed in South Africa since the break-away of the CP. To use a metaphor: Politics has changed from being a straight-forward contact-confrontation sport between a vastly stronger team and a weaker opponent to a tug-of-war.

After all, a government that wishes to hold a successful referendum with only 43 percent of the electoral support needs to seriously concentrate its mind about where and how to get additional support.

In this tug-of-war, on the one side one has the CP and its support clearly against reform and on the other side the PFP and its support clearly for reform with the NP government in the middle. What should the PFP's strategy be? (Remember the tug-of-war is already under way!) Does it slacken now and join the middle? This simply means the right wing pulls it all in their direction.

So this kind of strategy is obviously out. The PFP must go for the balance of power so that the tug-of-war moves in the "right direction" towards reform.

It is the NP, not the PFP, nor the CP, that has to make up its mind about where it wants to go.

We are moving towards challenging and interesting time in South Africa. Already there are those who would wish to pressurise the PFP towards adopting a position on, for example, the president's council recommendations, irrespective of merit.

Whatever those recommendations are, they need to be considered seriously, patiently and in depth before we or anybody else adopts final public postures on them.

There will be various opportunities in the coming weeks and months to do so. They will be judged against our commitment to our principles and the guidelines in terms of which they represent a step in the "right direction."

I emphasised two points at our federal congress on this: The one being the central position of blacks in any relevant constitutional change in the future; the other being the drift towards unfettered executive control--the so-called "De Gaulle option."

I do not know what the president's council recommendations are going to be or how the government is going to react to them. But I have to give clear warning that the PFP is strongly committed to the creation of checks and balances against the abuse of power and any development towards an executive-style president with no, or very little, constitutional checks on his power will be strongly resisted by us.

I mention this simply to illustrate the kinds of challenges and problems all parties will have to face up to. To the PFP and its supporters I say: "Now that we are in the tug-of-war for power to be used for or against reform--for heaven's sake don't slacken now, keep tugging! All of us may some day look back with pride and gratitude that we did so when South Africa needed it most."

COUNTRY FACES 'WATERSHED IN ITS HISTORY'

MB100930 Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 May 82 p 26

[Editorial: "It Could Be a Watershed Week"]

[Text] South Africa this week faces a watershed in its history: The publication of proposals from the president's council which could lead to the comrestructuring of the way in which this country is governed.

Comment on those proposals must obviously await their publication, but South Africans should be in no doubt about the importance of the week that lies ahead nor of the demands which the new era it could introduce will make on both them and their public representatives of all colours and persuasions.

Government, for one, should be left in no doubt that the age of schlenter [footdragging] is past, that any dispensation which does not at least allow for full and equal political participation by coloured and Indian South Africans will be more than yet another dismal and cowardly failure to come to grips with reality.

It could also plunge the government into a crisis of credibility from which neither it, nor white South Africa as a whole, could recover.

Neither must the structure which emerges from this week's proposals close the door permanently on the overwhelming majority of this country's citizens--its urban blacks. The president's council was flawed--from the outset and almost fatally--by the limits of its brief which excluded urban blacks from its deliberations. But if that exclusion is set forever in the concrete of white fear or government timidity, then the brave new world could rest on shaky foundations indeed.

It is therefore essential, as government unveils its new future for "non-black" South Africa, that it states clearly and unequivocally where it is going.

That essential public trust on which all constitutions depend for their legitimacy has been eroded in a South Africa which excluded citizens of a different hue from many of its rights and privileges. Faith in any new dispensation will only be regained if the government can show that the road into the future is indeed paved with good intentions.

That said, it is equally important that the politicians, who in the next few weeks will engage in debate on the new proposals, remember that only revolutionaries believe the myth that the world can be remade in a day. The saner course of reform is far more difficult and tortuous, with one incremental gain leading inevitably to another as the momentum of change picks up speed.

It is a path which will demand an innovative and creative reponse from politicians of all colours and creeds and the sometimes painful scrapping of old tactics and strategies which a new era could yet make irrelevant.

Utopian solutions beloved of extremists of the right and the left are a marvellous refuge for those who believe that the system cannot be improved and only scrapped. But if any workable solution is to be found to South Africa's horrendous problems, a desperate desire to demand the best should not be allowed to drive out any good which the president's council's proposals might contain.

On Wednesday this week, South Africa will write a new page in its history. That page should start without unsightly blots from the past.

VILJOEN URGES NEW NAVAL STRATEGY IN SOUTHERN ATLANTIC, INDIAN OCEANS

AB071202 Paris AFP in English 1145 GMT 7 May 82

[Excerpt] Pretoria, 7 May (AFP)--South African Armed Forces Chief Constand Viljoen today called for revision of Western naval policy toward South Africa because of what he said was a deteriorating strategic situation in the Indian and Atlantic oceans.

This was the only way that serious deficiencies in the West's maritime strategy could be repaired, General Viljoen said in a speech read on his behalf at a conference on maritime strategy presented here by the Institute of Strategic Studies.

General Viljoen said that the Falklands crisis indicated that the struggle for control of the world's sea lanes and naval bases was the same struggle that would ultimately decide the outcome of the East-West struggle worldwide.

His appeal for a revision of Western naval policy was not one-sided and designed to benefit South Africa only, he said in the speech to the conference, which is being held at the University of Pretoria.

The chief of staff of the South African defense force said that South Africa would gain precious little for itself materially by resuming what he called the thankless task of patrolling the waters of the Cape sea route.

He said that his appeal was based on a belief that, if the free world continued to ignore the maritime strategic realities with which it was faced, it would be placing its own security and very future in jeopardy.

Apart from the question of Western military ties with South Africa, there exists an enormous security vacuum in the Southern Atlantic and Indian oceans, and this was being visibly filled by the Soviet Union and its allies, General Viljoen said.

He added that several prominent Western military strategists had recently argued openly for some sort of South Atlantic naval alliance. Although those voices were at first heard only faintly, it was gratifying, he said, to note that these voices were growing louder and more insistent.

SECURITY HEAD DENIES ASKING FOR SECRET TRIALS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 May 82 pp 13, 14

[Text]

SECURITY Police chief Gen Coetzee, has laid a formal charge with the Press Council.

Gen Coetzee said in a statement in Pretoria last night that the complaint followed the failure of Sapa-Reuter, despite repeated requests to correct a report. General Coetzee said he had been wrongly quoted in certain newspapers, following a television interview.

CAPE TOWN. — The head of the Security Police, Lieutenant-General Johan Coetzee, yesterday denied that he was in favour of holding secret political trials.

Gen Coetzee was reacting to criticism of his remarks in a TV interview last week.

Also in Cape Town, the Minister of Justice Mr Kobie Coetsee said yesterday he was not aware of any official proposal to hold trials under security legislation in camera.

Gen Coetzee said incorrect deductions had been made from what he had said.

In the interview he had stated there were people who maintained that so-called political trials could be exploited and turned into political forums.

These allegations could be looked into to see if other methods or techniques could be found to prevent such trials being misused in this way.

He had in mind a commission of inquiry or an investigation by the Department of Justice.

He had not stated that he was in favour of secret trials, and he had never been in favour of such secrecy, Gen Coetzee said.

He pointed out that there was provision in the law at present to have parts of a trial held in camera.

In his talk to the students of the Rand Afrikaans University, he had emphasised that, at present, there were some special circumstances in South Africa, and that some security measures should be regarded as being of a temporary nature.

The Minister of Justice pointed out that the Rabie Commission which investigated security legislation had dealt with the question of trials in camera.

Security Police Chief Demands an Apology

LIEUTENANT-General Johan Coetzee, the chief of the Security Police was not happy with a Sapa correction regarding his alleged statements on secret political trials, the Minister of Justice, Mr Kobie Coetsee said.

Speaking in reply to debate on his Vote, Mr Coetsee said that there were no such things as political trials in South Africa.

Gen Coetzee had denied that he had proposed secret political trials. He had also authorised the Minister to say that he refused to accept a correction put out by Sapa saying that he denied being in favour of secret political trials.

"The correction was not categorical enough and did not say that Gen Coetzee was incorrectly reported," Mr Coetsee said.

The general demanded an apology and would use other channels to obtain the correction he sought, the Minister said.

Mr Coetsee was criticised by Mr Dave Dalling (PFP Sandton) for his response to the alleged statements by Gen Coetzee in the Argus yesterday afternoon. He should have had more to say than one line, Mr Dalling said.

Mr Coetsee said that he had responded to a reporter who asked him to react an alleged statement made by Gen Coetzee and he had pointed out that there were no political trials in South Africa.

The reporter had rephrased his question and referred instead to trials held under security legislation. Mr Coetsee then referred him to the recommendations of the Rabie Commission.

"I told him I was not aware of any official proposal in this regard except for the recommendations of the Rabie Commission which dealt with trials in camera," Mr Coetsee said.

The commission had refused to consider changing the present situation where court proceedings were held in open court except in extreme cases, particulary provided for in the Criminal Procedure Act.

"That is all that is on the table and there is nothing sinister lurking on this issue," he said.

He wanted to counter any impression that might have been created that plans for secret political trials were being made.

"I totally deny that we hold political trials," Mr Coetsee said.

"I deny categorically that there are any plans to arrange or plan any secret political trials."

He was sure that the statements attributed to Gen Coetzee would have been ignored if they had been said by anyone else. The fact that he was the chief of the Security Branch and a senior police officer had given newsworthiness to his remarks.

When he was asked to explain his alleged statement, he had immediately requested Sapa to correct the original report as he denied having said it.

A Sapa story was issued saying that the general had denied having said he was in favour of secret political trials.

"The general has authorised me to say that is not happy with this correction," Mr Coetsee said. — Sapa.

HNP LEADER IN COURT OVER FUEL SECRETS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 May 82 p 2

[Text] The leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, Mr Jaap Marais (59) from Rietondale, Pretoria, appeared in the Pretoria Regional Court yesterday on a charge of contravening the Petroleum Products Act.

Mr Marais pleaded not guilty to the charge. The State alleged that Mr Marais had disclosed information about the supply of petrol to Black states in a speech he made in Pretoria on April 27 last year. It was also alleged that the Afrikaner, the HNP's mouthpiece published similar information on April 10, 16 and 24 last year.

Mr Marais allegedly obtained information from a telex message, a copy of which was delivered in the offices of the HNP a few days before the general election last year.

The first witness, Lieutenant Colonel G.J. Jacobs, who was the investigating officer in the case, told the court he attended a speech in the Pretoria City Hall.

He took notes and alleged that during the five days between March 22 and March 26 last year information concerning 129 railway tankers containing five million tons of fuel sent to Zimbabwe was made available at the meeting.

Fotostats of the telex were also made available in the foyer of the city hall to the general public. Lt Col Jacobs later went to Mr Marais' house in Rietondale where he confiscated copies of the pamphlets issued by the HNP.

Another witness, Mr M.J. Brits from the Bloemfontein office of the SA Railways said a telex message which was sent to senior railway officials asking their co-operation in the speedy delivery of petrol to Zimbabwe had fallen into the hands of one Piet Vermeulen who was working in the telex office at the time. He had no right to take it home.

After the State had closed its case, the general secretary of the HNP, Mr Louis Stofberg told the court that a copy of the telex message was brought to him and he realised it was political dynamite which could be used in the HNP political campaign.

He ordered thousands of copies to be made and used one during a political meeting at George to "shock" the audience.

It was at a time when the Government claimed that petrol was in short supply and the fact that it was exported to neighbouring Black states was kept away from the public.

Mr Stofberg thought it was a golden opportunity to give his political campaign a boost.

Questioned by the regional magistrate, Mr A.C. Klopper, he admitted that he knew the Petroleum Products Act prohibited the disclosure of information on the sale and transport of petrol.

He said he understood the law to mean that only the origin of petroleum products had to be kept secret. He claimed the National Party had published information about the sale of petrol to Zambia and he thought this provided justification for his party to disclose information about the transport of petrol to neighbouring Black states.

Mr Klopper reserved judgment.

Mr I.W.B. Villiers,SC, assisted by Mr B de Vos appeared for Mr Marais and Mr J.J. de Jager prosecuted.

HUNGER STRIKE BY BLACKS IN CAPE TOWN EMBARRASSES REGIME

Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Mar 32 p 6

[Article by Patrice Claude: "The Tragedy of the 'Bush People'"]

[Text] Johannesburg--Rather dead than constantly on the run. This is, to put it succinctly, the belief of the women and men who, since 9 March, have taken refuge in Saint George's Cathedral in Cape Town to starve themselves to death there. One day, 57 "bush people" reached the point where they got tired of the freezing nights spent in the bush, of the early morning thick with the fumes of teargas, of bites from police dogs, of arrests, imprisonment, heavy fines, daily humiliations, and forced deportation to the poverty-stricken homelands. By seeking asylum in the cathedral, located within a stone's throw of Parliament, by going on a hunger strike now in its 21st day--with the only ones who are spared being the 15 children and 2 pregnant women who are sharing the adventure--the outcasts of Saint George's Cathedral have made a move which is risky, as far as their fate is concerned, but also highly embarrassing for the government.

Most of the hunger strikers, who somehow have managed to survive for 15 or 20 years in Cape Province--a "whites only" zone where all "non-Europeans" are required to have a residence permit, which they do not have--came from the "camp without a name," the most famous one in the world, the Nyanga Camp in the suburbs of Cape Town (see LE MONDE of 20 Apr 81). All of them have been deported at least once to the Bantu homeland of Transkei from which they returned, as did 100 or so of their compatriots who are hiding in the surrounding bush. Man Many of them have permanent, though illegal, jobs in the area. All they ask is to be allowed to keep their jobs, to walk the streets of Cape Town without fear, and to live at least united as a family. In other words, they demand to have their situation legalized and to get residence permits for themselves and their children.*

The minister in charge, Dr Piet Koornhof, who holds the portfolio of cooperation and development, has already explained that the peninsula is an employment zone restricted to the Colored, who are very numerous in the region and who themselves are victims of growing unemployment. The Blacks have their Bantu homelands, and the "privileged ones" have the "townships" in the outskirts of the white towns where they hold jobs according to the qualification stamped on their "passes" (identity papers specifically for Blacks, on which their place of residence and employment must be noted).

*In most cases, workers assigned to the "independent" homelands are given, if they have a job, a residence permit for themselves only. Their families must remain in the Bantu homeland.

Embarrassment for the Government

Last week, however, Mr Koornhof agreed to meet with the squatters, on condition that they first leave the cathedral. To bring an end to their suffering, the "57" were on the verge of accepting, but they changed their minds when they remembered that the minister's nickname is Doctor "Piet Promises." They remained safe in their sanctuary, supported by the churches of the country--with the exception of the Dutch Reformed Church, to which most Afrikaners belong--encouraged by all those who want to see apartheid disappear, and assailed by people who are bold as long as they are anonymous.

Tne days ago, a pregnant woman had to be evacuated to a neighboring hospital, where it was found that she had had a miscarriage. She has since rejoined her people. Ten or so weakened men are practically unable to stand up and show alarming symptoms (headaches, partial and temporary paralysis...). But with the comfort given to them by a Colored Anglican nun who decided to join them, they are standing firm and are finding strength and hope through faith and meditation.

Now, unless the entire legislation dealing with "control over the influx of blacks into towns" is challenged, it is hard to see how the minister could grant the 57 strikers the same concessions he refuses to make for several hundreds of thousands of illegals in the country. Unless, of course, in keeping with the policy of "exceptions" which it has followed in the past 2 or 3 years, the government decides to extricate itself from this predicament by resorting to the usual argument of "the special nature of the present case."

ZION CHRISTIAN CHURCH ASSEMBLY HELD IN NORTHERN TRANSVAAL

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 30 Apr 82

[Article by Allister Sparks: "Apartheid's Victims Find Pride in Hot-Gospelling"]

[Text] For four days a dusty hillside in the Northern Transvaal swarmed with more than a million African pilgrims come for their annual spiritual recharge in the presence of their own black bishop.

This was the Easter conference of the Zion Christian Church, biggest of the religious sects which are springing up almost daily in South Africa's black community as people who are denied political activity turn to religion for an outlet.

It was a huge emotional affair, half modern Christian hot-gospelling with divine healing, baptisms by immersion and speaking in tongues, and half traditional Africa revelling in its ancestor worship and smelling out of evil spirits.

The scene was a farm at Moria, 200 miles north of Johannesburg, bought by the sect's founder, Engenas Lekganyane, in 1912. Today, as Zion City, it is presided over by Engenas's grandson, 27-year-old Bishop Barnabas Lekganyane.

The ZCC is a movement of exploding growth that exerts a profound influence over its followers. Yet such is the insularity of South Africa's segregated society that the whites know hardly anything about it, except that it causes a traffic problem on the road north every Easter.

They see people in flowing white robes walking about the streets on Sundays. They know that the Africans who wear a little silver star on their lapels don't drink and are good workers. That is about the extent of their knowledge.

In fact, the rapid growth of the black sects is one of the more remarkable and revealing phenomena of the apartheid society.

These sects began appearing all over Africa towards the end of the last century as a reaction against what is now being called the ecclesiastical colonialism of Western Christian missionaries. In South Africa they began multiplying at an astonishing rate when Afrikaner nationalism came to power in 1948 with its oppressive policy of apartheid.

There were 800 South African sects in 1948. Now there are 3,700 with 30 percent of the total African population of 20 million as followers. That makes the sects collectively by far the biggest organised African movement in the country. They obviously have the potential to go over to political action but so far there is no sign of this. They are in fact a substitute for politics which has become too dangerous and unproductive for blacks under the white man's proscriptive laws.

We have no time for politics, says the ZCC's liaison officer, Lesetja Mabe evasively. We have too much other work to do.

Indeed the ZCC seems almost obsequious. Shouting guards cleared a path through the milling crowd for me--a white reporter--when I drove into Zion City.

The walls of the visitors reception room are hung with portraits of the country's white political leaders and dead Afrikaner heroes. There is a replica of the Voortrekker monument on a table, to black radicals probably the most hated symbol of white domination.

When the Minister of Bantu Administration visited Moria in 1965, Barnabas's father Bishop Edward Lekganyane thanked him for leading the black man to orderly freedom and added: "In our church there is no room for people who undermine national security and break the law."

Yet the situation is loaded with ambiguity. The sects represent a revolt against white domination in the ecclesiastical domain, a massive independence movement.

In some cases there is certainly a spiritual, if not a political, militancy. The pale white Christ has been downgraded by some sects and almost replaced by a black Messiah. One such is the Nazarite Church in Natal whose founder, Isaiah Shembe, has been deified.

The Nazarites have reversed the colour bar in heaven. Their black Messiah guards the heavenly gate and on the basis of the parable of Lazarus and the rich man refuses entry to whites and admits only blacks.

Broadly, the sects can be divided into two main categories, the Ethiopian churches and Zionist churches.

The Ethiopian churches began in the 1890s as a reaction against white spiritual conquest.

The Zionist sects have nothing in common with modern Jewish Zionism. They have their roots in the United States.

All have one thing in common: an enveloping warmth at their gatherings, a collective psychology of mutual support and protection.--'P.T. Observer' Service

THE average income per household in Ciskei is estimated at R2 561 and income per person at R453 a year for 1981, despite the fact that about 14 percent of the labour force in the country is unemployed.

This is disclosed in a survey done by the Bureau of Market Research at the University of Pretoria.

The survey reveals that the income of all inhabitants of Ciskei amounted to R293,4-million. Income was derived mainly from salaries and wages (66 percent), with contributions from family (mostly migratory workers) and friends making up 9 percent and farming activities 8 percent of the total.

What is alarming is that about 14 percent of the country's work force is unemployed.

Thirteen percent of these unemployed people out of a total of 28 500 males between the ages of 18 and 65 years of age are, however, not interested in work.

Several interesting facts emerge when the survey results are compared with those obtained in other independant Black states.

Estimates of total income of the people are highest in Transkei with R809,7-million in 1981, compared with R588,9-million for Bophuthatswana, R293,4-million for Ciskei and only R75,1-million for Venda.

The relatively higher figure in Transkei may be ascribed mainly to its larger population.

As far as income per person is concerned, the people in Bophuthatswana and Ciskei are much better off.

The estimated income in Bophuthatswana and Ciskei was in the region of R430 per year for 1981, compared with R300 in Transkei and R230 in Venda.

The inhabitants of Bophuthatswana spend only 55 percent of their money within the borders.

This figure is also fairly low for Ciskei — 58 percent.

SASOL THREE SWINGS INTO PRODUCTION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 May 82 p 11

[Text]

SASOL Three produced crude oil from coal for the first time at the plant yesterday.

Sasol has been producing crude oil from coal since 1955 when the process was first employed commercially at Sasol One in Sasolburg. The main producer at present is Sasol Two, which will be in full production at the end of this year. Sasol Three will be in full production in 1985.

The Sasol Three fuel-from-coal plant which is almost a duplicate of Sasol Two, is now 96 percent constructed and has remained within its R3,28-billion budget.

Refined petroleum products will be marketed in August this year. The plant is already producing industrial gas, ammonia and other co-products.

The chairman of Sasol, Mr Dirk de Villiers, said yesterday when Sasol Two and Three were in full production, South Africa would have considerably reduced its dependance on imported energy.

Meanwhile, South African Mineral and Energy Affairs Minister, Mr Frederik de Klerk, told Parliament that the building of a Sasol Four plant should be considered soon. According to a Sasol spokesman, a fourth plant will not be constructed before 1985 because of a manpower shortage.

JUSTICE FOR ALL WITHIN OUR GRASP, SAYS ASSOCOM CHIEF

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 May 82 p 18

[Text] BLOEMFONTEIN. — From an economic point of view, the chances of survival with justice in South Africa have never been better than at present and this chance should not be squandered, Mr Raymond Parsons, chief executive of the Association of Chambers of Commerce (Assocom), said in Bloemfontein at the weekend.

Mr Parsons was addressing the Suidelike Aktualiteitskonferensie of the Afrikaans Studentebond on "The Role of Survival in Justice Within the Economic System in South Africa."

He said on the economic front, the "key to survival and justice lies in our ability to meet the challenge of improving the capitalist system in South Africa."

This could be achieved by:

- Maintaining adequate economic growth to create jobs and improve incomes;
- Undertaking manpower training and development for all races, on a vast scale, to meet the demand for skilled and managerial personnel;
- Reforming the educational and training system to achieve parity for all races;
- Removing racial discrimination in employment;
- Promoting sound regional economic development;
- Developing a strong Black entrepreneurial and middle class;
- Encouraging the development of a responsible Black trade union movement;
- Providing for labour mobility and solving the problems of urbanisation with the new policy initiatives that have been created by the government.

Mr Parsons said the achievement of political and economic goals required the active participation of private initiative in the widest sense.

"All racial groups should be given a stake in the system to uphold and defend," he said.

South Africa could survive through the extension and reform of the free enterprise system, while at the same time doing justice to the aspirations of other groups. Economic interests were basically interdependent.

He added that there would be short-term sacrifices. "Change is not a friend to everyone. We must seek to build a society in the future which has the right proportion of ladders and safety nets," he said. — Sapa.

DOMINEE CLARIFIES SATANIST ALLEGATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 May 82 p 2

[Text] THE Paarl Dutch Reformed Church dominee, who said in a sermon last Sunday that there was a Satanist in the cabinet, yesterday repeated the remarks before more than 700 people packed into his church.

But Rev Roelie Maree insisted that the remarks were not his own allegations but those of other people who had made them in writing and verbally for several years. He appealed to members of his congregation who do not feel he has explained the remarks and cleared úp the misunderstanding to direct written objections to the church council.

If, when the church council meets on May 19, no objections are received, Mr Maree said he would consider the matter closed.

After the sermon last week, when Mr Maree made the controversial remarks about the Satanist cabinet minister, Mr Pik Botha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, asked him to explain the allegations.

Mr Maree told Mr Botha that he had mentioned no names and that he was merely repeating allegations that had become common knowledge.

Yesterday he told the packed congregation that he had frequently heard people say that a cabinet minister considered the foundation of religion was no longer important and that therefore he was not living out his religious beliefs.

If this was true, the minister was ambiguous in his faith because one could not worship two gods.

If the allegations were true, the minister was worshipping none other than the Devil, said Mr Maree.

"People are starting to believe that I mentioned Mr Botha when I made the remarks, which is simply not true," he said.

An a elder, Mr Van Zyl Nieuwoudt, said members of the congregation had told him that they were satisfied with Mr Maree's explanation. He did not expect any written objections would be sent to the church council.

SOUTH AFRICAN SOLDIER EXCHANGED FOR KGB AGENT

MB121240 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 12 May 82 p 1

[By John Battersby, political correspondent]

[Text] Cape Town--Sapper Johan van der Mescht, the South African held by SWAPO since 1978, has been freed in a top-secret spy swop following direct negotiations between S.A. intelligence and the Soviet intelligence service, the KGB.

South Africa's only prisoner-of-war was released "somewhere in Europe yesterday" along with eight "very important" Western intelligence agents in exchange for the top KGB spy, Major Aleksey Koslov.

An obviously delighted prime minister, Mr P.W. Botha, broke the sensational news to a hushed House of Assembly last night.

Mr Botha said that 27-year-old Sapper van der Mescht would arrive in South Africa "shortly" and would be reunited with his family "as soon as possible."

Sapper van der Mescht was captured by SWAPO in February 1978--a month after he went into the army--and left behind his young wife and seven-month-old daugher.

"I have great pleasure in announcing that an exchange took place in Europe today, involving the South African national serviceman, Sapper Johan van der Mescht..." the prime minister began.

The dramatic East-West spy-swop is clearly a major diplomatic coup for South Africa and a personal triumph for Mr Botha, who announced the caputre of Major Koslov in January last year.

Mr Botha said that the release of the eight high-ranking Western agents, who had been held behind the Iron Curtain "for some considerable time," provided clear proof of South Africa's good will towards Western countries and its contribution to the free world's struggle for survival against communist domination.

"I trust that this approach of South Africa will not go unnoticed with these governments."

"I refer especially to those who have recently displayed a sharply hostile attitude towards our country," Mr Botha said.

Mr Botha indicated that the negotiations leading to the release of Sapper van der Mescht had been conducted by Mr Niel Barnard, director-general of the National Intelligence Service, and had involved direct contact between South Africa and the KGB.

"I feel compelled, by way of exception, to violate my personal public approach to matters pertaining to the actions of the National Intelligence Service.

"In giving credit where credit is so patently due, I would therefore like to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the director-general and his personnel of the National Intelligence Service, on the capable manner and with the measure of success with which they conducted the difficult and direct negotiations with the Russian intelligence service, the KGB.

"The successful conclusion of this matter can be ascribed largely to the fact that it was handled professionally and under conditions of the utmost secrecy.

"The ethics of intelligence work demand that it be performed without fanfare, and I would like to emphasise that no further information about the negotiations will be supplied to this house or to any of the media," Mr Botha said.

The prime minister also disclosed that unsuccessful efforts had been made to secure the release of Russian dissident Anatoliy Viktor Shcharanskiy in exchange for Major Koslov.

Mr Botha said the efforts had failed due to factors beyond South Africa's control but had not gone unnoticed. He quoted a debt of gratitude expressed by Rabbi Rabinowitz of Israel in the JEWISH HERALD of November 3, 1981.

"Incredible though it may sound, South Africa offered to exchange a high-ranking Soviet spy, a Colonel Koslov, for Viktor Shcharanskiy, one of the prisoners of Zion held by Russia, to enable him to proceed to Israel.

"For that noble and unparalleled gesture on the part of South Africa I am prepared to forgive her all her failings."

Sapper van der Mescht is expected to arrive at Jan Smuts airport today, where he is likely to be reunited briefly with the 21-year-old wife, Cheryl, and five-year-old daughter, Chantal, before undergoing an intensive debriefing session.

Most of his four years in captivity have been spent in Luanda.

The Van der Mescht swop for a Russian superspy is the second exchange involving a Soviet agent captured in South Africa in recent times.

Following his arrest in September, 1967, Soviet spy Yuriy Loginov was exchanged for 10 West German hostages in an international deal.

Yesterday's news was greeted by open jubilation in the assembly and the leader of the opposition, Dr van Zyl Slabbert, and other opposition parties welcomed the announcement and congratulated all concerned.

Major Koslov was picked up by the NIS on his third visit to South Africa, where his main task was to act as an eyewitness to the effects of Russian interference in Southern Africa.

CITY OFFICIALS DISCUSS REVENUE PROPOSALS

MB170802 Johannesburg SUNDAY EXPRESS in English 16 May 82 pp 1, 2

[By Martin Welz]

[Excerpt] Proposals for sweeping reform of local government have thrown PFP [Progressive Federal Party] city councillors in Johannesburg, Randburg and Sandton into a crisis.

Progressive Federal Party councillors from all three municipalities will meet the deputy leader of the party, Mr Colin Eglin, in Johannesburg tomorrow to thrash out a common response to proposals by the president's council.

"The position is very fluid, one PFP council source said.

The councillors fear the revenue-sharing proposals, believing that Johannesburg and other municipalities can hardly afford to run themselves now.

Under the proposed new system blacks would conceivably acquire the power, for example, to divert Johannesburg's money to meet Soweto's needs.

Commenting on their anxieties, the leader of the opposition, Dr Fredrik van Zyl Slabbert, said:

"One of the very real dangers of creating separate local government institutions for the various racial groups--even if they are an improvement of the present inadequate situation--is that there can be an increase in racial hostility if attempts at cooperation simply underline the inequalities between these communities.

"That is why it is vitally important to look at the financing and systems of raising revenue when considering the acceptability and viability of such a scheme."

PFP councillors fear the president's council plan to link white municipalities with neighbouring coloured, Indian and black local authorities will put a crushing burden on white ratepayers.

But they know that if they baulk at proposals to share income more equitably among local authorities they will be accused of failing to "put their money where their mouth is".

The leader of the PFP in the Johannesburg city council, Mr Sam Moss, told the SUNDAY EXPRESS:

"My main fear is that acceptance of the proposals will mean downgrading the Johannesburg city council to the status of a village council, and that it will undermine our financial base and lead to economic stagnation in the city.

"Clearly, depending on just how the voting system works, blacks might be able to outvote whites in a metropolitan authority, and can be expected to want to divert funds to other priorities.

"There are vast gaps in the standard of service provided in the various racial areas and we will obviously have to divert funds from Johannesburg to close them if we wish for racial peace.

"My initial observations are based on financial and administrative considerations, not political considerations. We must still weigh up all the issues."

BRIEFS

BISHOP'S CONFERENCE REPORT ON NAMIBIA--The South African bishop's conference has issued a hard-hitting report on South-West Africa/Namibia, Adam Cuchani reports from the bishop's headquarters in Pretoria. [Begin recording] The report runs close to 40 pages. It paints the picture of conditions in the territory very different to what is usually presented in South African media. It refers to accounts of atrocities perpertrated by members of the South African security forces. According to the president of the bishop's conference, Archbishop Dennish Hurley, even Major-General Charles Lloyd of the territory's forces, admitted to atrocities from both sides of the conflict. The bishop's report says that in conversations with black Namibians in Owambo they found that the people do not fear SWAPO guerrillas but the South African seucrity forces. In their conclusion, the bishops take a stand that there is a universal consensus that South Africa has no right to be in Namibia. He said that they conclude that whatever the Marxist tendencies of SWAPO, it seems the movement has powerful popular support and seems certain to win any free and fair elections under UN supervision. N. NATAL POLICE STATION ATTACKED--Unknown gunmen have attacked a police station in Northern Natal. Two policemen were injured in the attack, and it is believed the gunmen got away with a quantity of firearms. Didi Moyle: [begin recording] The attack on the [word indistinct] police station took place after 9:30 last night. According to reports, three men walked into the charge office and began a discussion. One man then pulled out a gun and started firing at the two policemen on duty. The policemen were later taken to a hospital, where the condition of one is described as serious. One was hit in the head and shoulder, and the other in his right side and leg. A spokesperson for the Kaw-Zulu police headquarters in Ulundi said that there were no indications at this stage that the work has been that of politically-motivated guerrillas. After the attack, the gunmen fled, taking firearms. Police are scouring the district today. Didi Moyle in Durban for Capital Radio News. [end recording]. BROEDERBOND URGES END OF APARTHEID--Johannesburg, 9 May (AFP)--The exclusive Afrikaner organization the Broederbond, whose members hold key positions at government level in South Africa, has reportedly called for the scrapping of major apartheid laws, according to the local SUNDAY EXPRESS. The paper said the Bond had prepared a report condemning racial discrimination andwarning that the present political order of white supremacy in South Africa could not be maintained. It was said to have called on the government to issue a declaration of intent to demonstrate its earnestness in moving away from racial discrimination. The EXPRESS said the brotherhood had recommended the removing from the statutes of the main pillars of apartheid policies--the mixed marriages act banning sex between people of different races, the group areas act which stipuates white and non-white residential zones, the population registration act, [words indistinct], and the electoral act, under which only white currently have the vote for the all-white parliament. The government's "confederation of states" concept was the only alternative for South Africa and the only way in which racial discrimination could be totally eliminated, the Bond report said. SECRET TRIALS SUGGESTION--Cape Town.--The head of the security police, Lieutenant-General Johan Coetzee, has proposed the holding of secret political trials in South Africa. His proposal, made in an interview on SABC-TV this week. was described as "horrendous" by the opposition's chief spokesman on human rights, Mrs Helen Suzman. "This would be a giant step closer to a totalitarian regime in South Africa. It should be opposed strenuously, not only by law societies and bar councils, but by ordinary citizens too," she said in an interview. Gen Coetzee told SABC-TV that some political trials should not take place in open court, because they were exploited as political forums by the accused. He said some people believed the court system for political trials should be replaced by an alternative closed system. The suggestion follows the tabling in Parliament of the Protection of Information Bill, which would prohibit the Press or any other organisation or individual from disclosing the detention of any person under security laws. In effect, the bill would give the Government the right secretly to detain and interrogate any person and would even prohibit public disclosure of the death of a detainee. If Gen Coetzee's proposal were translated into law, it would mean that the Government could detain, interrogate, prosecute, convict and even execute a person under the country's security laws entirely in secret. Legal experts said there was no known instance of South African courts having been abused for political ends, and any presiding judge or magistrate already had the power to prevent such abuse.--Sapa. INDUSTRY URGES CHANGES--South African industry had to convince the Government of the need for accelerated change and to convince people that change was for their own good. This was one of the general observations made by foreign guests to a major international conference organised by Barlow Rand. In addition, it was felt that South Africa needed an effective information programme to communicate the changes taking place--and to put right the adverse perceptions about it held by the West. The 1982 Barlow Rand International Conference was attended by a cross-section of influential people including brokers, businessmen, investment experts and a newspaper editor from the United Kingdom and the United States. The conference was aimed at giving the visitors an insight into Barlow Rand and the current South African socio-economic situation and was held at Barlow Park during the first week in March. It was the third such conference hosted by the group in recent years, the last being in 1978. Briefings were given to the conference by top Government officials, investment experts from outside the group, newspaper editors, trade unionists and prominent figures from the private and public sectors. An input was also given by Barlow Rand executives on the group and its philosophies which included a review of the group's views on industrial relations, especially the implementation of the Barlow Rand Code of Employment Practice. ZAIRE, COUNTRY START UP SHIPPING LINE

Lome NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 15 Apr 82 pp 5, 12

[Article by Dodji Aougah]

[Text] Togo and Zaire will henceforth have a regular ocean shipping line. The startup of this maritime cooperation was marked on Tuesday by the stopoff of a Zairian merchant ship, the "M/V Kananga," which docked at the Autonomous Port of Lome for the first time.

The "M/V Kananga" is a multipurpose vessel able to carry 73 passengers, containerized cargo and various types of freight. It will make the connection between its home port (Matadi) and the ports of Africa and Northern and Southern Europe and will be in Lome every month.

It is represented in Togo by SOAEM [West African Ocean Shipping Company], which will handle all reservations for passengers and goods to be shipped.

In order to celebrate the startup of this maritime cooperation, Bomolo Lokoka Ikukele, Zairian ambassador to Togo and head of the diplomatic corps, gave a reception on board the ship Tuesday evening.

Attending the reception were a number of prominent officials, including Barry Moussa Barque, member of the Political Bureau and minister of public works, mining, energy and hydraulic resources; Koffi Walla, member of the Central Committee and minister of commerce and transport, Manasse Aquereburu, director of SOAEM, Soumon Tchamdja, director of SOTONAM (Togolese Maritime Shipping Company), members of the diplomatic corps and officials from the various maritime transport departments.

Actually, the ministerial conference of West and Central African nations on ocean shipping, of which Togo and Zaire are members, has always emphasized in its recommendations the need for such cooperation between countries in the subregion in order to have increased control of their maritime activities, an indispensable base for control of their international trade.

For the Zairian ambassador, this ceremony once more demonstrates the good relations of friendship and cooperation existing between our two countries, sincere friendship and cooperation woven by our two chiefs of state:

Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, president and founder of the Rally of the Togolese People (RPT), and his brother and friend, Mobutu Sese Seko, president of the Republic of Zaire.

In order to promote Togolese imports and exports, the Zairian diplomat said, the Zairian Shipping Company (CMZ) is willing to grant Togolese shippers preferential conditions because these will be commercial transactions between two brother countries.

On behalf of the board of directors of the Zairian Shipping Company, Bomolo expressed hope for open cooperation between the company that operates these lines with eight ships, whose deadweight varies between 12,000 and 15,000 tons, and Togolese shipping companies.

LOME PAPER STRESSES NEED FOR HONESTY, UNITY

Lome NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 8 Apr 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial by Dadja Wiyao Pouwi: "Reflection"]

[Text] Enough can never be said about the recent measures taken by the Central Committee of our party, the Rally of the Togolese People.

A continuing search for the possibilities of an optimum and fair distribution of the national income: This is now the measures could be summed up. Togo's resources must benefit all its sons. The questioning of such a profession of faith and the dishonest, even fraudulent, practices of some individuals aimed at monopolizing the national patrimony must be eliminated.

After freeing us on that day of 13 January 1967, President Eyadema worked tooth and nail to achieve our economic liberation 7 years later.

Since that time, we have agreed to fight alongside him for other victories.

We all agreed to make sacrifices and sustained efforts aimed at warding off once and for all the spectre of underdevelopment and its corollaries: hunger, ignorance and illiteracy.

How can we overcome all these evils? We had in our hands a formidable weapon which the white settlers damaged. Our leaders rapidly understood that that weapon had to be put in top form. Consequently, the president and founder of the RPT issued an urgent appeal to all the Togolese people in 1977 for a return to the land, "which never deceives."

Spontaneously, as on other occasions, the people (wage earners and peasants) answered the call and undertook the green revolution recommended by the chief of state. Today, at home and abroad, we are all unanimous in hailing the positive and satisfactory results obtained in such a short time.

Undeniably, such an undertaking is a long-range task. But the awareness, determination and thrust of the Togolese people have made it possible to take the bull by the horns and arrive at such results.

On our farms and in our regions and villages, the peasants have assumed their responsibilities, encouraged by the successive exemptions from civic taxes and the trust placed in them by the president and founder of the RPT, Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema.

However, some of our fellow citizens are undermining the efforts of the courageous farmers by speculative practices. Here again, the chief of state has intervened in time to take appropriate measures.

He took advantage of the opportunity to start agricultural awareness campaigns throughout the country. He will not abandon this undertaking. In order that our grain, which constitutes our basic food, does not go to foreign markets, it must be stored and kept so that the expression "tiding us over between seasons" will no longer be heard in Togo, whence the establishment of the National Solidarity Fund.

The many subscriptions recorded to date prove that the president and founder of the RPT was correct in what he did. Further proof is furnished by the purchasing campaigns. The price of 7,000 francs to be charged by Togograin for a 100-kilogram bag of corn or millet-sorghum during the off season also proves that the subscribers are right.

The same quantity of these commodities now cost between 11,000 and 12,000 francs from private individuals. Our voluntary subscriptions will enable us to get through the off-season period without difficulty.

This will be an asset for the entire community. United and solidary, we shall have overcome hunger, an affliction characteristic of underdeveloped nations.

We shall then say that if unity makes strength and solidarity, it can move mountains.

The concern of every individual is to be able to meet his basic, primordial needs: housing, clothing, basic food.

Just as we reacted positively in setting up a national solidarity fund for self-sufficiency in food, we must practice that solidarity in all our daily activities, whether such activities are profitable or not.

In our offices, on job sites and in the fields, active solidarity must reign between all social partners.

At the markets and in the stores, our fellow merchants must abstain from illegal price increases, as is often the case whenever the salaries of civil servants rise.

The homeowner who charges a reasonable rent demonstrates national solidarity.

The taxi driver who follows the set rates is also moved by nationalism. Whatever our place, we must all subordinate personal interest to the collective interest.

With regard to food, therefore, our feeling of solidarity must extend to all sectors of social life. In this way, we shall aid the government of General Eyadema in its emancipation struggle for real independence: economic independence. Each one of us must make his contribution to the construction of this country, the chief of state tirelessly repeats. No one must remain or feel on the outside.

This explains the policy of dialogue and concertation that we have had in Togo since 1967. It is that policy which prevailed in the recent measures concerning the problem of exorbitant prices for loincloth fabric. Importers and retailers selling such fabric must be brought around. Our hand is out to them.

They must take it. At any rate, at stake -s their interest and the interest of the entire national community, for it is in peace and harmony that we shall build our dear country: Togo.

Peace is a reality in Togo. The unity of all Togolese people is a fact.

This commands us to support one another. In that way, not only will our motto "Unity-Peace-Solidarity" find meaning, but our country will also force the esteem of foreign nations.

At all times, we must manifest total solidarity in order not to make the noble ideals of our party and the president and founder of the RPT, General Eyadema, empty words. Otherwise, our efforts will serve no purpose. In such a case, as with water through a sieve, our sacrifices will have no results and our economic take off, which began so well, will suffer.

FOOD SELF-SUFFICIENCY, RURAL DEVELOPMENT STRESSED

Lome NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 14 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Agbessi Buagbe: "Agriculture: The Basis of Our Socioeconomic Development"]

[Text] Speculation has no place in Togo.

That is the lesson to be learned once more from the measures taken on 31 March by the Central Committee of the Rally of the Togolese People (RPT), meeting under the chairmanship of General Eyadema, president and founder of the RPT, measures concerning the sale price of grain and the increase in the price of fabric for clothing.

It will be recalled that concerning grain, the average reference cost prices were set. These prices are not to exceed 9,500 francs for a 100-kilogram bag of corn, 9,700 francs for a bag of sorghum-millet and 16,500 francs for a bag of beans, anticipating that during the off-season period, Togograin will sell us that grain for 7,000 francs a bag.

For some time, food problems have been discussed by international bodies as the factors constituting the most serious handicap to the socioeconomic development of Third World countries. There are no international conferences on the development of the Third World that does not have on its agenda -- and in a prime spot -- the problem of food self-sufficiency. The economic policies of the Third World, such conferences recommend, must be based on rural development and self-sufficiency in food.

This strategy of development was already known to us in Togo. Through the "green revolution," the Eyadema regime had already made rural development the foundation of its development policy.

We are fortunate in Togo to have political leaders whose exceptional qualities and foresight enable us in many fields to face with great chance of success the diverse effects of an unfavorable international situation that no longer spares any country. In the food domain, the concern that has always been shown by the president of the republic and founder of the RPT, Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, has been expressed in the policy of the green revolution embarked upon since his accesssion to the presidency. This policy aims, through food self-sufficiency, to guarantee us our minimum vital needs, without which any human participation in the development process becomes impossible.
